Rememory

Marian Calabro
Rememory
By Marian Calabro

“Rememory … nothing ever dies …. Nothing ever does.”
-- Toni Morrison, Beloved

Yesterday’s magazine, today’s collage.
Your grandmother’s smile on your niece’s face.
On a stage somewhere tonight, every night,
An actor says: To be or not to be.
Horses, once the fastest means of travel,
Still gallop and are loved just for themselves.
A million books in a once-dead language,
Yiddish, live on in Yankee Massachusetts.
Peony bushes bloom for fifty years,
And you can plant another peony
In a different color when the time comes.

This sonnet is compost from one weekend.

Marian Calabro is the author of Perilous Journey of the Donner Party (Clarion/Houghton Mifflin) and 20 other history books. She is a popular creative writing workshop leader at the Adult School of Montclair, NJ. Her poetry and prose have appeared in various journals and her plays have been produced at community theaters in the New York metro area. She is a lifelong New Jerseyan and a graduate of Rutgers College, where she majored in English.