The youthful Edel told how he was contacted to volunteer for his country’s freedom. He was sent to Guatemala where training was conducted by ex-army officers who “never told us where they were.” The cold, rainy, snake-infested jungle 3000 feet above sea level was very similar to Cuban conditions. He and his fellow outside forces were taken to planes, disguised as tourists, flown to Guatemala, and flown to 3500 feet above sea level. The Robinson loaded him in a truck with the other prisoners and took them to a coal yard to be executed. Ten men died in the accident. After being captured, Edel and his fellow prisoners were held for 5 months in overcrowded, unsanitary conditions without food and with no chance of obtaining soup or macaroni. The prisoners’ only meal was bread, and those who were weak received only a slice. The Russian loaded them in trucks and drove them to different sections, each of which was armed with limited ammunition, lost 2 of their 5 ships, 17 pilots and 9 planes. The total casualties were 2300 Castro fighters and only 150 invaders.

At home with Edel Fernandez

Edel Fernandez, a member of the Cuban Bay of Pigs invasion, spoke on February 20, 1963, in two of Mr. Benton Pintor’s social studies classes.

The majority of MSC students thought it was a most enlightening and memorable event. Mr. Fernandez first explained how Fidel Castro came to power. Edel speaks of the previous Batista ruler and how the dissatisfied people turned to Castro for leadership. Giving first hand reports of the Impoverished States, he compared them to the conditions in Cuba.

Dear Editor:

In the February 14th issue of the "Montclairian," it was shocking to see a so-called "The Poet's Corner." First of all, in "The Love Song of J. Alfred Prufrock" by T. S. Eliot, it's a very beautiful poem. I was very upset to see this poem imitated and ridiculed. Eliot's poem is so deep, significant meaning; the poem in the last verse was lost through these.

I would also like to point out that whatever is written in "The Poet's Corner" consisted of poems treated in a rather hackneyed manner. The selection of original, literary contributions is the purpose of the "Poet's Corner." I don't think this feature of the MONTC-CLARON for one issue be subjected to some pretense of poetry.

Author's Comment:

In reply to the above letter from a Montclairian editor, I wish to criticize the shallowness of poets appearing in the "Poetry." In "The Poet's Corner," the subject matter of these poems is so barefaced in the upper classes. The student body seems to be a natural tie-in between his subject and the upper classes. The latter's form is to stress his own subject matter, but the former's knowledge of "Prufrock" was as much as "Wasteland" was assumed.

Dear Editor:

I am one of the 557 members of the Student Education Association at Montclair (SEA). Last week you printed an article about our officer's election and our plans for the coming year. However, each one of those plans was merely touched upon, and all seven plans together were allowed to be total lack of one sentence. I implore you to print the information given to the MONTC-CLARON and found that it was only a part of what was written. It was not lack of information that was responsible for this, but having the wrong-sized item. Students at Montclair have always been a common goal--to teach.
