SGA Legislature Reviews Student Unrest Bill After Martinez Veto

Robert Martinez
The Power of Veto.

The authors of 68108 proceed to criticize the actions of students (who often take it upon themselves to be the arbiters of student opinion and move outside of the law and established channels of communication to dramatize and express their views.)

They believe: "As concerned as we are with individual, as well as majority rights, the wanton destruction of the academic community cannot be tolerated or be permitted to happen."

Two proposals for maintaining "a high level of proficiency" in this "academic community" have been presented by the 10 authors of the bill. First, a board of student relations will be established for student grievances involving faculty and/or administration of MSC.

Secondly, disorderly student demonstrators will be handled in the following ways:

(a) The president or legislature can order such activities to cease; (b) Suspension will result for those who refuse to comply with this order; (c) The local police will be called upon to put an end to such activities if campus resources are insufficient; (d) Filed charges and prosecution in the law courts will result for those participants involved with activities that imperil either life, property, or the normal function of the academic community.

As yet, no definite time or place has been set for public student discussion of this bill besides next week's SGA meeting at 4 p.m. in the Music Building Auditorium (M15). Copies of the bill are available in the SGA office in Life Hall.

As representatives of student thought, the following 10 SGA representatives and composer of the "student unrest" bill can be approached on this matter of student concern: Bob Cece, Richard Warren, industrial arts; Al Panelli, Ron Green, foreign language; Ward Nelson, chemistry; Frank Cripps, Bonnie Miller, social science; Bob Stickey, English; James Wynne, physics-earth science; Ruth Goldstein, 1970.

Cohen: Reorganizing of Majors, Ciniglio: 'A Shoddy Situation'

By George Gonas
Staff Reporter

The department of social sciences has decided not to renew the contract of Mr. Vincent Ciniglio for the next school term. Ciniglio is an instructor in Western Civilization in his first year at Montclair State.

Dr. Philip Cohen, chairman of the department, said that the reason for Ciniglio's removal lies in the reorganization of the social science curriculum. Rather than historians, the department is hiring specialists in such fields as anthropology, geography and economics.

Ciniglio believes the Vietnam conflict is a "trainwreck" and in the best interest of those involved. He said that he had no way of knowing if his political views had anything to do with his release.

"Instead of wasting so much energy on how Montclair is to become a university," Ciniglio stated, "we should concentrate on making it an exciting small college." He would welcome some student political activity, above all.
The SGA legislature for 1969-70 has been chosen along with the class officers. The elections were held on April 11. Referring to the legislative makeup, SGA president-elect Ken Traynor said, "I'm pleased to see that the new legislature introduce his programs for next year.

State Colleges Unite in Marine Science Studies

By Jane Confortii

The New Jersey Marine Sciences Consortium has been established by a group of colleges in the state for the advancement of education and research. This organization will obtain a field station and a vessel and sponsor summer courses in the marine aspect of earth science.

Preliminary plans for the consortium were made at Trenton Technical College, MSC science professors, Frank S. Kelland, Ben Minor and Robert C. Ramadell, attended.

The courses which will be offered this summer by the consortium include: Marine Biology, Independent Study in Marine Sciences, Historical Geology and Marine Geology. All of these are at the undergraduate level. However, the consortium plans to add graduate and research programs in the future.

Regarding the point that the consortium "will not be just for science people. The facilities can also be used by students of other disciplines. For example, the art students can use them for painting seascapes.

Minor said that the courses are a good way for students to pick up credits during the summer. He said, "You can take a course and have an enjoyable time."

As one of the nine trustees to supervise the first year of the Marine Sciences Consortium, Ramadell said: "The program is something which was much needed. There's been a void and it will fill that void."

Minor is on the budget committee and is also chairman of the boats and equipment committee. He will be "captain" of the vessel used by the organization.

Kelland, geographer, is an expert scuba diver and, if he plans to help with the scuba diving part of the program.

Some recently abandoned Coast Guard stations in New Jersey are under consideration for a site for a field station. "The Coast Guard has been very, co-operative with us," Minor said.

The consortium will include all of the New Jersey state colleges as soon as the make their contributions. Each must pay $7,000 per year. Junior colleges will join for half this fee. Some other institutions have also expressed an interest in becoming members. They are: Rider, Rutgers and the University of Pennsylvania.

NEWARK—"A need to show some type of struggle," was the cause of the recent campus disturbances at Essex County College (ECC) in Newark. According to Omar Rashadi, a student involved in the incidents, the struggle and the desire to show extensive and unified student support were more vital to the students of ECC than the success of the demands.

Through the negotiations, and the resulting events, many ECC students feel that extensive support had been shown by all factions and ethnic groups at ECC. Many also thought that the struggle received good faculty support. A major demand of the Concerned Students of Essex County College was the appointment of black men to certain positions within the ECC administration. Among these positions was that of dean of student affairs. The dean at that time, Mr. George Barton, had been branded by the Concerned Students as having an "apparently biased attitude which he has displayed in his dealings with students." Although Barton has not been removed from the college, his position has been changed. Thus, stated Rashadi, "a symbolic accomplishment" has been brought about.

The Concerned Students also demanded a black studies program to be set up because of the "growing awareness of the black people in their blackness here in the United States." The social science division is currently assembling a thorough curriculum in black studies.

Financial changes were also ordered by the Concerned Students. The administration of ECC has set up a committee to review cafeteria prices regularly. Also, a tutorial program for the Newark community is in committee. ECC students will receive academic credit and a $2.25 minimum salary for tutoring. The Student Government will also receive $5000 in funds to be released by the Government.

Police should not be used to quell campus disturbances. According to a statement of the National Conference of Christians and Jews, "You can't turn out shots at a campus disturbance. It's a public institution. It's not a sporting event where people are shooting and people are trying to protect the cards." The group emphasized in the program's statement the need for "maximum cooperation between the university officials and the police department in the handling of campus disturbances."

Students may pursue course work which will provide the basis for a career in business, with the option of completing professional requirements for the teaching of business studies. Areas of study emphasized in the program include business organization and management, accounting, business law, finance, marketing and data processing.

Changing Times

The evening division of MSC has expanded its program to include a major in business studies, according to an announcement by Robert E. MacVane, director of the evening division, and Dr. M. Herbert Freeman, chairman of the department of business studies. The business studies program is an extension of the program currently offered in the day-time college. Freeman said, "The program is being offered on a part-time basis in response to the tremendous need for undergraduate evening business programs in the metropolitan area."

Trueblood Gives Quaker Lecture

D. Elton Trueblood, well-known author, lecturer and professor of religion and philosophy, will give a public address entitled "Robert Barclay—Governor of East Jersey and Quaker Thinker," at the Montclair Friends Meeting House on Thurs., April 24 at 8 p.m. A life-long Quaker, Trueblood has held many posts of leadership and responsibility in the Religious Society of Friends and has also been active in ecumenical movements. He is one of the founders of Yokefellow Associates, a organization of Christian laymen and now serves as its president. The Friends Meeting House is located at Park and Gordonhurst avenues in Upper Montclair.
Rising construction costs may be responsible for a state cutback in the allocation of funds for higher educational facilities. Ralph Dungan, chancellor of higher education, said yesterday that the money allotted for higher educational buildings would not go far as had been expected a few months ago.

The local implications are that although the state colleges were promised $7.4 million from the $337.5 million approved through last November's bond issue, drastic plan changes may result, eliminating needed buildings on state college grounds.

Dungan has stated that those projects which are "not felt to be top priority items might have to be cut back or dropped completely." And although studies have not yet been made to determine these priorities, it is obvious that each campus will be hit by the state cutback.

Dungan noted that he was going to examine the "program as a whole -- on a statewide basis," but that the rising costs would doubtless affect individual projects at individual institutions.

Montclair State College is presently slated to receive an extension to Sprague Library and an additional math-science building, accounting for about $8 million from the bond issue. But with the newly discovered building cost increases, the MSC community should not be too disappointed if a campus cutback occurs here. After all, we are dealing with the state of New Jersey.

Giving "the reader a reasonably clear overview of the whole problem in a relatively brief form," the 12-chapter study clearly pinpoints the significant inner-city problems found today.

The key to understanding these problems can best be found in "the vicious circle of education, the painful task of renewal, rehabilitation and realignment."

And while, as President Thomas H. Richardson stated in the preface, there "cannot be complete agreement with all the sentiments expressed, (the book) furnishes insightful assessments of the urban problems which exist."

A finely-written study, the 59-page paperback is available at $1 from the Montclair State College Press.

The Vatican: Replacing Crosses with $$ Signs

By David M. Levine

Whenever the subject turns to religion at a social gathering, the mysteries of the Roman Catholic Church usually find their way into the conversation. So much so that the amateur economists in the crowd usually bring up the traditional conversational gambit that the Vatican has dispensed with its interest in religion and is currently indulging in the sport of capitalism.

The amateur economists, after sides of the street," notes LoBello.

Soon after, he found that the Vatican is currently involved in almost every type of business enterprise, from hotels and power supply works to chemicals and real estate.

In addition, the author set aside a chapter dealing with the innumerable scandals and numbered Swiss bankbooks held by Vatican interests.

In all, LoBello's study on Vatican capitalistic interests proved to be an extremely graphic portrait of the Vatican's obsessions with dollar signs instead of crosses.

Student Involvement In Decision-Making

To the Editor:

The administration is to be commended for its efforts in promulgating a policy of real student involvement in decision-making here at MSC. Now comes the real challenge to the faculty and students -- implementing that policy at the departmental levels, which is "where the action is." Negotiation is sometimes an art -- but most often a learned process. In colleges and universities around the country, where violence and destruction resulted from negative activism, students were harshly criticized for not understanding the process of negotiation. Yet, for years, many of these same students had been denied the very opportunity to participate in such negotiations.

The students can and should be involved in committees on curriculum and educational policy. In some major universities, they are already entering the role of language requirements, criticizing teaching methods, formally evaluating courses, and participating in search committees for new deans.

A college which tries to motivate young people to think analytically and to question assumptions, should certainly not hesitate to allow the students to practice in their own environment.

Kitty Koch, secretary, chemistry department.

Premature Comment

To the Editor:

With reference to my letter of March 26, it now appears that my comments were premature. The physics-earth science department chairman Dr. Kowalski has, prior to publication, set in motion machinery for setting up a student advisory council. Therefore in light of this development I now consider the comments made in error.

The Noise Problem

To the Editor:

On March 18, the library committee met for the first time with student representatives. Our main point of discussion was the noise level in the library.

On our part, we noted the unavailability of sufficient lounge space for off-campus and commuting students. Dr. John Zebediah explained that in his opinion, some of the problems is caused by the ventilation system. He has taken some action on this point but has had no response. But these are long-range solutions.

What of the human noise? We students would remind the student body that there are those using the library for what it is intended -- study. Other facilities are available if chatter seems necessary. The library is for work. We urge that each student makes it his responsibility to keep the noise under control. This is no reason why mature adults should not show common courtesy to their fellow students.

No Justification for Riots

Karyn Sauvigne: Opinion Right

There was nothing spontaneous about the disturbances in Chicago and Memphis last week. Nothing.

And noting shows no respect for a fallen hero whose message was Peace and Justice. None.

The question is where is the movement going and how will it get there?

A goal of brotherhood and equality for all people of all races is being pushed aside and in its place we see a tendency toward apartheid. Student demands for black dorms is not exactly indicative of a desire for brotherhood.

Karyn Sauvigne

Recently Antioch College, in complying with a philosophy, set up a black dormitory and Black Studies only to be ordered by the Federal Government to reintegrate under the provisions of the 1964 Civil Rights Act (remember that?) or have its federal funds cut off.

The Warren court started the move away from separate-but-equal facilities and toward racial unity, and this trend has continued to eliminate prejudices. However, somehow in recent years certain groups have moved backward and away from brotherhood.

And what about the methods? The MOVE's black power advocates do not include unity, and their reliance upon violence is not conducive to the rise of an enlightened concept of race relations.

It is the bigotry and decadance of Eldridge Cleaver and the Black Panthers that breeds the fear that leads to the rise of the bigotry and decadance of George Wallace and his American Freedom Party.

5 Beekman Will Be Missed

An era has ended for many activist this month as the beehive of peace groups -- like the cramped quarters at 5 Beekman St., New York for new offices on Lafayette Street.

Since 1944, when the War Resistance first occupied the loft, 5 Beekman has been the nerve center for the pacifist, antinuclear groups. Many of the big names in the movement have inhabited its myriad of offices including Delinger, Hayden, Rustin, Peck, the Benignis, and until his death, the guiding and unifying spirit of the movement, A.J. Muste. Thousands of young men have taken the elevator to the ninth floor and then up the narrow, ornate stairs to what they hoped would be the salvation from the Selective Service System.

My first visit to 5 Beekman was in September 1966. At that time I was attending a meeting of the Student Peace Union. It is still incomprehensible that any human beings would dare to disorganize! But progress has been made towards our seemingly distant goals of peace and civil liberties. On that first visit, I had the pleasure of meeting A.J. Muste, then 80 years old. He impressed me with his sincerity, love for humanity and the ability to listen to the young.

Things have not changed drastically since then. Some of the organizations have changed, but much of the movement remains the same. Some are in jail, others have returned, and still others have gone on to other things.

TIME MOVES ON

Time moves on, and so does the movement. 5 Beekman has many pleasures for me, and I've sent out for many a roast beef sandwich, answered telephones, typed diets, addressed thousands of envelopes, talked politics and left with the gang for our favorite Chinese restaurant. This is the nitty-gritty of running an organization. But the experiences and the friends were there too.

Friendships and experiences will continue at Lafayette and will the work. But 5 Beekman holds something special for me; it was my initiation into radicalism.

I will miss you, 5 Beekman. From now, I'll remember 5 Beekman with much fondness, and a little sadness that those days are gone.
Early Classes Aren't Fun

By Jane Conforth
Staff Reporter

Questioned about eight o'clock classes, students and faculty expressed both likes and dislikes among them. But the dislikes far outnumbered the likes.

The advantages to having eight o'clock classes consist in being able to find a parking space at that hour and the possibility of getting out of school earlier. However, the latter advantage turns out to be a disadvantage when a student or teacher does not get out early, and instead has classes to five or six o'clock.

Joseph Molinari, a sophomore English major, has classes from eight to six o'clock. "I wouldn't mind too much except that he has six free hours on each of these days, and then he has to come here on Tuesdays and Thursdays for one class."

Margaret Rinker, a junior chemistry major, said: "I think they're very inconvenient to people who have to commute a great distance. I take the Parkway, and it takes twice as long at that time in the morning."

Various students said they dislike eight o'clock classes because it's difficult to get up early. However, no one wished to be quoted as saying such. Other students said their dislike of these classes stems from the fact that it's hard to pay attention at that hour. Sophomore Bonnie Weiskel, a home economics teacher, said: "They're not bad if the teacher makes the class interesting. Otherwise it's a fall asleep.

Some faculty members admitted that they do not teach as well at 8 a.m. as they do later. However, no one wished to be quoted.

Mr. Percy Johnston of the English department said he is not in favor of eight o'clock classes because he "found that students do better later on." Home economics teacher Mrs. May Sandford said of the early classes she taught: "I had poor class attendance. But we have to accommodate the classes. If it has to be, it has to be, because I know the college is crowded."

Some people offered suggestions to improve the situation of early classes. Two senior industrial arts majors, Vito Margerelli and Jim Aspinall, said that their eight o'clock classes wouldn't bother them so much if their classes were scheduled more consecutively. Margerelli has an eight o'clock class and then a three-hour gap until his class at noon. Three days a week Aspinall comes to MSC for just an hour class.

Judy D'Arminio, a freshman psychology major said: "Commuters should have the eight o'clock classes moved. It's the younger classes and the dorm students, the later ones." Students who have jobs after school said it is hard to arrange working hours when they are at school from early morning to evening.

Mrs. Margaret Feierabend of the English department said that she realizes it's hard for some people to get to college very early, but she feels that both teachers and students are obliged to be on time. She added: "It's not fair to the students who got there on time when some come trudging in late. Perhaps eight-thirty would be more acceptable on the average."

Dr. Marie Sawits of the biology department said: "I have no personal objection. Try getting me here at six in the morning, and I'd be perturbed."

Government Grants Funds To Upward Bound Project

The U.S. Office of Education has authorized a grant of $44,894 for continuation of the Upward Bound program at Montclair State College during the coming summer, according to an announcement by Congressmen Peter W. Rodino Jr. (D. 10th Dist.).

The college has sponsored the project for the past three years in cooperation with Jersey City Can-Do, Jersey City State College and St. Peter's College. It brings to the campus approximately 60 students from Jersey City high schools who spend six weeks living in the dormitories.

Participants come from disadvantaged areas and are selected because of their college potential. A varied program including studies, sports, arts and crafts and field trips - is offered to help prepare them for college.

Each student receives a stipend to compensate for money he might have otherwise had to earn at a summer job.

A follow-up program is held on Saturdays during the winter to continue the work begun with the students in the summer. This program has been conducted by members of Lambda Chi Delta fraternity and Theta Chi Rho and Delta Chi Rho chapters.

Dr. John G. Redd, a professor of health and physical education at Montclair State, will again direct the Upward Bound program. Assisting him will be: David Scott, Jersey City State College; Charles Larkin of Essex County College and Miss Janet Allen, acting principal of West Side High School, Newark.

Montclair State is one of six Upward Bound sites in New Jersey.

Montclair State College's wrestling team registered its 10th straight winning season during the 1968-69 campaign taking nine of 11 matches. Jim Grieco, a senior from Brick with an overall record of 22 wins and only 5 losses. The Indians captain set a new career win mark with 78 victories and only 19 defeats during his four year varsity career. The Indians dropped the first dual match of the 1968-69 season to powerful East Stroudsburg (Pa.), and then captured the next 11 conference matches to close out the season.

Metropolitan Intercollegiate taking nine of 11 matches. Roy Genatt, a sophomore from Secaucus, had the third best overall record winning 13 and losing 4. He placed third in the Metropolitan Intercollegiate championships at 130 pounds.

The Indians other four starters captured the national Collegiate Athletic Association College Division East Area championship at Syracuse, New York by downing LeMoyne and Wagner. It was only the third time in the last six years that the Indians won the NCAA championship ever won by a Montclair State team.

Montclair State was named as the winner of the Eastern College Athletic Conference Division III Trophy for its outstanding play during 1968-69.

The Indians other season defeat came in a road contest to Central Connecticut State, 85-76. Following the defeat by the Blue Devils, MSC won 14 straight tilts including the wins in the East Area tourney over LeMoyne and Wagner.

The Indians east coast trip was a sure cause of eye irritation and allowing the lens to float more freely in sterilized, self-sanitizing, and antiseptic. Storage between wearings may result in the lenses. And soaking your contacts in solution for complete contact lens care.

In order to keep your contact lenses as comfortable and convenient as they were meant to be, you have to take care of them. But until now you needed two or more separate solutions to properly prepare and maintain your contacts. Not with Lensine. Lensine is the one lens solution for complete contact lens care.

Cleaning your contacts with Lensine redraws the buildup of foreign deposits on the lenses. And soaking your contacts in Lensine overnight assures you of proper lens hygiene. You get a free soaking case on the bottom of every bottle of Lensine. It has been demonstrated that improper storage between wearings may result in the growth of bacteria on the lenses. This is a sure cause of eye irritation and in some cases can endanger your vision. Bacteria cannot grow in Lensine which is sterile, self-sanitizing, and antiseptic.

Just a drop or two of Lensine, before you insert your lens, coats and lubricates it allowing the lens to float more freely in the eye's fluids. That's because Lensine is an "isotonic" solution. Which means that it blends with the natural fluids of the eye.

Let your contacts be the convenience they were meant to be. Get some Lensine, from the Murine Company, Inc.

INDIANS UNBEATEN STRING SNAPPAED AFTER FIVE

By Mike Galos

Special to the Montclairion

EAST ORANGE — Scoring twice in the bottom of the ninth inning, the Vikings of Upsala College gained a come-from-behind 5-4 victory over Montclair State College at Viking Field.

The defeat dropped the Indians from the ranks of the unbeaten after five straight victories. The Upsala victory brings their record to 6-2.

Montclair State had taken the lead in the top of the ninth with a run on an infield hit by Ken Frank, a stolen base by Jim Nunnermacker who came in to run for Frank, and a run scoring single to right field by Rich SanFillipo.

The Indians lead didn’t last long as Upsala scored their two run off loser Ken Inglis without hitting a ball out of the infield.

George Horton led off the ninth with a walk. Wally Czarnota, trying to sacrifice, laid down a perfect bunt toward third base and beat it out for a hit. After Willie Prall forced Horton at third on another bunt attempt, Marc Scholz over walked, loading the bases. With two strikes on the next batter, Paul Liddy, Inglis’ pitch came inside and low and hit Liddy, scoring Czarnota with the tying run.

At this point, Inglis was relieved by John Gryzanko who threw only two pitches. The first was a strike and the second was a ball. The Vikings gained a tie in the bottom of the eighth when Paul Liddy drove a two-run home run over the left fielders head off of Montclair starter Pete Jerald.

Jack Getzen benefited from the two ninth-inning runs and scored the win, his first of the year. He had pitched the ninth and given up the Montclair score. The losing pitcher for Montclair was sophomore lefty Ken Inglis, who was hurt by his own wildness in the ninth, when he walked two and hit one batter. It was his first setback against two victories.

Montclair State’s next game is this afternoon, a New Jersey State College Conference game at Newark State.
