“But you can’t show some far off idyllic conception of behavior if you want the kids to come and see the picture. You’ve got to show what it’s really like, and try to reach them on their own grounds.”

What GBL is not...

● Playing actual video games
● Making “educational games”
● Study Island
● Only about competition
What’s Wrong...

The Culture of Fear
Why?

- Teachers only record mistakes.
- Students are only made aware of errors.
- Percentages imply amount of errors made.
- Students who are compliant aren’t necessarily learning.
- Afraid of change?
Gamification is MASTERY LEARNING

Picture this: You have decided to go skydiving for the first time. You are 10,000 ft in the air, in a strange suit. You look to your instructor for guidance. He begins explaining something irrelevant. He discusses the way the plane flies. He describes the aerodynamics of the plane. But before you can calm your nervous stomach with some calming deep breaths, the instructor tosses you out the door. It seems like a nightmare, but it's happening every year to thousands of high school students. They are being taught inapplicable lessons and expected not to crash when they are thrown into the real world. So what aren't schools teaching us? They miss vital topics like how to
