Work on Partridge Hall Stalled
As Construction Workers Strike

By Susan Dominski
Staff Reporter

Construction of Partridge Hall halted when Passaic County construction employees joined 10,000 co-workers in New Jersey to strike on May 1. "This delay in building is crucial since inflation forces construction costs one per cent higher each month," stated Mr. Vincent Calabrese, director of business services.

If new contract demands such as $3 an hour raise in the Passaic County bricklayer's salary are met, building expenditures will rise above the already one per cent monthly increase.

The proposed student union building will be affected by the rising prices and the delay. If construction is not approved on the May 14-16 referendum, the costs for construction next year will increase by $300-$535,000. The price of one year's amortization will be added for every year of delay.

Although work on Partridge Hall has been stopped by the strike, it will not suffer from rising costs because funds have already been allotted for it and the work is now in progress.

Excavation for the new MSC dormitory will not be postponed because of the construction workers' walkout. Removal of 26,000 cubic yards of rock and soil will continue.

The building delay and skyrocketing construction expenses will influence the number of students admitted to MSC in the future. For example, in the last three months, the cost of lumber rose 22 per cent. "Funds from the bond issue will shrink with inflation," stated Calabrese, "and the number of students will have to be kept down because of the limited construction budget."

Negotiations for a new construction workers contract are now in progress.

S-256 Passes Senate, 35-1

By Rich Kamencik
News Editor

S-256, the legislative bill that would provide a measure of financial local autonomy for the state colleges, has been approved by the New Jersey State Senate.

The bill was passed on April 28 by an overwhelming vote of 35-1, the only dissenting vote being cast by Sen. Willard B. Knowlton, (R-Bergen). The bill will now proceed to the State Assembly for consideration, debate and a vote.

President Thomas H. Richardson said: "I am extremely pleased by the almost unanimous Senate passage of the college autonomy bill. With the backing of the treasurer and almost insurance that the Governor will sign the bill, things look better than they ever have."

Gov. Richard Hughes had called for local autonomy in his annual message to the State Legislature. Mr. John Kerwick, the state treasurer, had indicated support for the bill after his suggested amendments were added to the bill.

The original version of S-256 provided for a general annual appropriation by the Legislature for each of the state colleges. Even though the state colleges' financial structure divides appropriations into seven major accounting divisions (such as construction, salaries, maintenance, etc.), the original S-256 would have given the college administrations a virtually free hand in deciding where to allocate monies.

Since legislators were reluctant to grant such increased financial autonomy to the state colleges, they amended S-256 according to several suggestions offered by Kerwick.

"The Senate-approved version of the bill would empower the legislature to allocate specific sums of money for each of the seven accounting divisions. The colleges can transfer money within the divisions, but if they decide to transfer monies from one division to another, the individual administrations must seek approval from the Budget Bureau in Trenton, which is a division of the Department of the Treasury."

"The vote in the Assembly is expected by May 12, because on that date the Legislature is expected to adjourn. Miss Virginia Saunderson, one of the coordinators of the MSC campaign to spur student support for local autonomy, expressed optimism about the prospects for S-256 in the Assembly. She commented that, "One dissenting vote is a sign that there is no longer the emphatic opposition to the present measure as there was to the original bill.""

Dr. Samuel Pratt, resident planner at MSC, has announced a student-faculty meeting for the proposed School of Humanities. The purpose of this meeting is to plan the formation of approximately 28 subcommittees which will decide the handling of various academic problems such as curriculum, teaching methods and student needs.

All members of the proposed school (English, foreign languages, philosophy and religion) are requested to attend the meeting scheduled for May 12 at 10 a.m. in Memorial Auditorium. A system of cards for distribution will be utilized in order to obtain the preferences of students and faculty of the proposed school as to the committees on which they wish to work. From these cards the organization subcommittees will come from the committees and appoint an organizing chairman for each.

Praht is the chairman of the Central Planning Committee for the proposed School of Humanities. The four subcommittees which comprise this Central Planning Committee are: (1) rational and goals; (2) organization; (3) faculty-student section; (4) communication.

Once the 28 subcommittees have been created and have held meetings they will report back to these main subcommittees for coordination and communication.

January 1, 1970 has tentatively been established by the Central Planning Committee as the target planning date for the Proposed School of Humanities.
Speech Retains Schlanger

By Arlene Dusel
Staff Reporter

The receive four credit semester administration has clarified the status of Mrs. Phoebe Schlanger, a speech pathology teacher. She has been given a position available in the speech department as effective and fundamentals of speech course in the speech arts department.

Schlanger's services were no longer needed because there was insufficient number of pathology teachers. Having taught for only two years at MSC, she could not invoke the protection of tenure.

Upon the announcement of her retention, Mrs. Schlanger stated: "The speech department has been very understanding. I have great deal of regard for my colleagues. I was pleased to find out that they regarded my contributions to the department as effective and meaningful."

Mrs. Schlanger has taught in colleges for 15 years. She received her masters and post-masters degrees from the University of Wisconsin. She also has headed speech clinics throughout the country and has published works in the speech journal.

Although a specialist in pathology, she is also qualified to teach in the arts field. Prior to MSC, Mrs. Schlanger taught acting and oral interpretation at Marietta College in Ohio. Next semester she will be teaching the fundamentals of speech course in the speech arts department.

connection with the meeting, he stated: "As far as I could see, Holster was satisfied that Montclair was doing everything it could to prevent flooding or erosion. I have heard nothing more concerning the issue since the meeting."

Calabrese made it clear that construction was not discontinued as a result of the Clifton protest. He said: "Construction was halted for a few days, but this was due to an outcropping of rock that did not show up on the survey."

Gripe Fine Arts Students

By Rich Lupo
Staff Reporter

Students in the fine arts department have expressed disgust with the credit changes being made “in secrecy.” As one student phrased it, the student must submit himself to a “treadmill of red tape” to find out what’s going on.

The students complained to be treated unfairly during the last fall, fine arts majors had received two awards for journalistic excellence from the Intercollegiate Press Association and Columbia University’s Scholastic Press Association.

In the area of photography, MONTCLARION photographer Roger Brown received a first place award for his full-page picture of gymnast Rick Schwarz appearing in the March 12 issue. QUARTERLY photographers Maury Leser and Arthur Platt also received certificates of merit.

LEVINE ELECTED
VICE-PRESIDENT

M. Brown, publisher and managing editor of the MONTCLARION, was elected vice-president of the New Jersey Collegiate Press Association during the election meeting. Levine, a sophomore history major, succeeds Caldwell College junior Alice Muller, who was elected to the position of president last Sunday.

The New Jersey Collegiate Press Association meets four times yearly and membership includes all college publications in the state.

Clifton, MSC Resolve Dorm Nuisance Charge

By Chris MacMurray
Staff Reporter

CLIFTON — The dispute over construction of Montclair's 16-story dormitory has been resolved according to Clifton City Manager William Clifton. Oral or written charges would result in a potential danger of flooding and soil erosion in the Clifton area surrounding Valley road.

However, a meeting between Holster, President Thomas H. Richardson and Mr. Vincent Calabrese, director of business services, settled the issue. Holster commented: "As far as I am concerned, the problem is resolved. Some people are not completely satisfied and the matter is still before the city council, but there is no dispute in progress. All is clear at both ends."

Calabrese also stated that he felt relieved of the conflict. In Delegating Responsibility

After two years of preparation and consideration, local autonomy for the state colleges has achieved semi-approval. With a 35 to one vote in the State Senate, fiscal autonomy for the state colleges may see reality in the near future as it approaches the Assembly for the final vote.

The bill's supporters and state college administrators see S-256 as a major item to free the state colleges from the hampering State control of college funds. A smoother functioning of the individual colleges will obviously take place when the purse strings of the state of New Jersey are cut. However, as the colleges have aspirations of receiving local control, the State still has plans for overtaking local administrations through the local Boards of Trustees. Although lying dormant at present, S-511 is a bill designed to take the power of the Board of Higher Education to appoint the Boards of Trustees of the individual colleges and place this appointment power in the hands of the Governor with the approval of the Senate.

An obvious political move, this bill voids the appointment rights of the Board of Higher Education granted by the Higher Education Act of 1966. With the power delegated to the Governor, the trend toward local control is destroyed. Ralph Dungan, chancellor of higher education, has stated that the Legislature has overstretched its bounds with its attempt to control the decisions which should be made on a local level.

Here again, the state colleges are more aware of their own specific needs, and, as in the case of local autonomy, can fully handle the responsibility for their own individual institutions.

Commanding the Teacher Corps

In response to the urgent need of urban centers for qualified teachers, Montclair State College, in conjunction with the Newark Board of Education, will conduct a two-year National Teacher Corps program in the slum schools of Newark. With a $720,000 federal grant, this project is one of the first undergraduate training programs of its kind in the country. Montclair State, in conjunction with the Newark Board of Education, will conduct a two-year National Teacher Corps program in the slum schools of Newark.

With the students it serves and to the children of Newark in the Fall. But these volunteers will also be required to take part in community activities to gain a fuller view of urban problems which occur not only in the classroom but in the home and in the community.

The educational needs of the center city are great. But they are needs which can partially be met by these volunteers who will begin attacking the problem from the elementary schools upward. Montclair State College should be proud to begin this worthwhile and beneficial project both to the students it serves and to the children of Newark.

If you're a girl looking for a job this summer, the "Help Wanted—Female" section of your local newspaper may not be the best place to find your "dream occupation." According to a ruling handed down by the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, women are not required to confine themselves to superficial sex headings in employment columns unless "sex is a bona fide occupational qualification."

Of course one might reason that there are certain job positions that are normally granted to women—typists, secretaries and nurses. But logically there's no reason why males couldn't fill these jobs also. Unfortunately I can't picture myself becoming a "go-go" dancer at Joe's Bar & Grill in Passaic this summer, so here's a case where sex is a "bona fide occupational qualification."

BREAKING BARRIERS

The idea for breaking down the sexual barriers which occur not only in the work of a group calling itself The National Organization of Women Inc. Working with the federal commission, NOW has ordered American newspapers to do away with separate job headings in all publications. The heading NOW suggested to publishers in "Help Wanted—Male & Female" over employment offerings in the classified.

Many American newspapers, including the grand old New York Times, have reluctantly yielded to this form of progress. But classified advertising managers of many newspapers (nearly all males) feel there is no real need to change some of the archaic prejudices of employers.

But with a little training and some minor adjustments, humor has it that women are just as good as men. Personally, I wouldn't mind if my wife were to become an auto-mechanic, provided she knew how to cook, take care of kids, clean the house and, most importantly, bring home a fat paycheck. After all, I wouldn't want her to be a "pesky woman", would I? Of course not, and neither do you.

COLLEGE ROUNDUP

State Senate Investigates Lit Course

WAYNE State Senate investigation of the use of "lewd and obscene literature" was ordered as the result of reading material distributed for study and discussion in a Paterson State College composition class.

Sen. Garrett W. Hagedorn (R-Bergen) called for the investigation for the Senate education committee after "an state father" showed him the material which his daughter said was an English assignment. Hagedorn said the material was "so obscene I was unable to read it before the Legislature."

Dr. John P. Rudden, acting chairman of the literature department at PSC, said the story was distributed as a study in what is obscene and what is evil. He said that no pressure was placed upon any study to complete the assignment.

To the Editor:

I think some of your editorial writers are really missing the point. I wonder if they realize what it is that the student government is really pressing for? And I don't think you do, for that matter.

The students, many of whom are not yet as fully educated as you, are not looking for a $10 union fee. They are tired of paying for student activities that aren't really necessary. They want to contribute to activities that they feel are important and which they are willing to contribute to.

For example, they want to contribute to activities that are part of the theatre group. This group has been working hard to produce a new play, and they are willing to contribute to it. They want to contribute to activities that are part of the music department. This department has been working hard to produce a new concert, and they are willing to contribute to it.

The students want to contribute to activities that are part of the sports department. This department has been working hard to produce a new athletic event, and they are willing to contribute to it.

The students want to contribute to activities that are part of the art department. This department has been working hard to produce a new art event, and they are willing to contribute to it.

In short, the students want to contribute to activities that they feel are important and which they are willing to contribute to. They are not looking for a $10 union fee.

Recently I was asked by one of my friends to comment on the Women's Liberation Movement. I suppose the extension of the early suffragists is exemplified today in the Resistance by Linda LeClair. Linda caused the disturbance at Barnard last year by living with her boyfriend.

Women's liberation means more than premarital sex and communal living; these are minor points. Women's liberation means the equalization of decision making within the movement and the end of subservience to men. Speaking to the men assembled at the draft card turn-in on Nov. 14, 1968, Linda LeClair said that if the Movement were to succeed there are more important things for women to do than "running the offices, keeping your pads clean, and . . . ing."

GREATEST IMPACT

Women in the Movement have achieved much that women in the general society have not. They openly live with their boyfriends, even here it faces problems. At the national Resistance conference last month, this issue caused the most debate. But women like Linda in each of the Resistance offices and other groups throughout the country will keep the pressure on. The question is whether the men will give in. It seems that the minor decisions made in each local office are often made by the women, but when it comes to the coordination of the national movement and membership on such boards as the National Mobilization Committee, you will find no women, unless representing all-women's organizations.

Women in the Movement have achieved much that women in the general society have not. They openly live with their boyfriends. The radical left has given women their greatest impetus. But it is assumed, sometimes erroneously, that every woman in the left takes the pill. Their opinions are respected, and sometimes become policy. The recent draft card and draft file burnings by woman have raised their stature considerably, since there is certainty of prosecution. But women in the movement are often taken for granted. It is assumed that they will work in the office, work part-time, cook and house clean. These are the social changes that women in the Movement now desire, an equalization of responsibility, work and major decisions. If these changes are attainable, and I believe they are, it will be women like Linda LeClair who achieve them for our generation.

Women's liberation means the equalization of decision making within the movement and the end of subservience to men. Speaking to the men assembled at the draft card turn-in on Nov. 14, 1968, Linda LeClair said that if the Movement were to succeed there are more important things for women to do than "running the offices, keeping your pads clean, and . . . ing."

How would you like a new union building?

By Jane Conforth

QUESTION: What is your opinion of the proposal for a $10 increase in tuition for the construction of the student union building?

Richard de Santa, freshman, English major: "Since it's a place students can use, it's worth it. Ten dollars isn't too much."

Joanne Jacobs, sophomore, speech major: "The money should be used for better facilities for cleaning, parking lots of snow in the winter."

Anthony Viscido, sophomore, physics major: "I'm in favor of it because the student union building will broaden the whole atmosphere of Montclair and be used for better facilities for the students." Dr. Gladys Falenbogen, economics professor: "Without knowing the details, I would say, if a student pays the $10 for four years and then obtains life membership to use the facilities it is a good idea. Some universities follow this procedure."

Al Edwards, senior French major: "Absolutely not. We pay out too much money for too little recompense."

Mart Nelson, junior, social science major: "I think it's perfectly understandable. This is something that is not of an educative nature so the students should pay for it if they want it badly enough."

Dr. Richard Tews, physical education chairman: "It's a shame the state cannot provide the funds because student union programs are very worthwhile for students."

Brendetta Iliagno, sophomore, psychology major: "A student union building is needed, and if that's the only way to obtain money, then it's necessary."

Bernadette Dlugosz, sophomore, uncommitted: "I don't think that another fee should be added now because most of the students don't use all the facilities."

John DeFrezza, sophomore, industrial arts major: "We do need more buildings, so it's a good idea." Dave Etterbeek, freshman, business major: "I'm not in favor of the increase because I'm a commuter, and I'm not here enough to use the facilities. But it is good for dorm students."

John Dereza, sophomore, business major: "We do need more buildings, so it's a good idea. Some universities follow this procedure."

Dr. Richard Tews, physical education chairman: "It's a shame the state cannot provide the funds because student union programs are very worthwhile for students."

If referendum doesn’t pass, student center won’t be built

By Ginny Saunderson

FEATURE EDITOR

"If the referendum doesn’t pass, I’m afraid we won’t build." With these words, Mr. Jon O. McKnight, director of Life Hall, expressed his feelings concerning a referendum which will shortly be presented to the student body for the new student union building.

McKnight pointed out that the referendum is not of an educative nature, but also a question of whether or not MSC students want this new facility.

When questioned as to what will be done if the students reject the new union building, McKnight cited three possibilities. The first and "most likely" is no construction at all which means MSC would have to make do with existing facilities.

Construction could be undertaken without student support, "but only areas of new priority, such as the bookstore and snack bar, would be completed," leaving the balance to be done when money becomes available. This would not only increase the length of time for completion, but also affect a "loss of continuity" within the structure itself.

The third possibility, will be the construction of the union building with the student activity fee doubling upon its completion.

McKnight reiterated, "The college hasn’t decided whether or not there will be a new union building. The decision will be made by the students."

Are you sure that you are just watching TV?

By Donald S. Rosser

Educational researchers are planning a trick on young TV viewers. They are going to show cartoons for the pre-school set - but they'll really be teaching the little tykes something.

Before he starts school, the typical child spends about 4,000 hours watching television. He wants to be entertained but as he watches, listens and concentrates, he can learn a lot of new things, including reading knowledge of high-exposure words.

The Appalachian Educational Laboratory - a federal educational development agency headquartered in Charleston, W.Va., is preparing a cartoon series about SAM THE ELF to deliberately teach reading skills to the toddler TV audience.

"We know that children watch cartoons on television," says Robert L. Canady, a Laboratory coordinator, "so our idea is to entertain them and teach them reading skills at the same time. Small amounts of learning are couched in great amounts of television entertainment."

The unsuspecting viewers will learn approximately four words a week, along with phonics skills needed to decipher unfamiliar words. A trial summer series of 15-minute cartoon programs will be conducted in eastern Tennessee, western Pennsylvania, or eastern Kentucky.

If the summer series proves effective, the Laboratory will seek funds for a full two-year program including 300 animated cartoons and associated reading materials.

In equipped schools, video tapes could be used for the preschool set - but they'll really be teaching the little tykes something.
Dr. Calcia to retire after her dream comes true

By Jane Conforth
Staff Reporter

Dr. Lilian Calcia, chairman of the fine arts department, will retire at the end of this semester, after a long and distinguished career in education.

Founder and past president of the New Jersey Art Education Association, Dr. Calcia is also affiliated with a number of other organizations. She belongs to the Eastern and National Arts Associations, the NJEA (New Jersey Educational Association), the Association for Supervision and Curriculum Development and is a life member of NEA (National Education Association).

Dr. Calcia is listed in four WHO'S WHO publications and in the International Biography.

On May 3 the educator will receive a citation award from the Alumni Association of MSC in recognition of her outstanding service to the college, the community and society.

The first time Dr. Calcia came to MSC was as a student when she was only 16 years-old. Montclair was still a two-year normal school then, and she was graduated in the class of 1925.

Teaching fifth grade in Passaic, she began her studies for a B.A. at Teachers College, Columbia. She took her M.A. degree there also, and her Ed.D. at New York University.

After teaching in Passaic and Paterson for 10 years, Dr. Calcia joined the Newark State faculty in 1935. Recalling those years, she said, "We had 15 art students and two rooms on the third floor of a building. After a few years we were given a basement room. Later we moved into another third floor room and used the auditorium for painting. Then we were transferred from Newark to Montclair, and we first taught there in a tileable car garage by the boiler room."

Dr. Calcia had been chairman of the fine arts depart at Newark, and when she came to Montclair in 1955, she became chairman here. Under her the enrollment of the fine arts majors has grown from 18 to 250. They have moved from a garage to studios scattered all around the campus, and finally, to the new fine arts building.

Speaking with enthusiasm of the new building, the retiring woman said, "It became very apparent that we needed a building of our own, and happily this came true. All of our courses are now housed in here. We have 8 studios, a small auditorium, an audio-visual storage room, a student lounge, a faculty lounge and 22 offices."

Residing in Hawthorne, Dr. Calcia and her husband, Peter, a municipal judge, live in an unusual home Dr. Calcia designed it. The plans took one and a half years to complete. She said, "The major part is one big room with living, dining and kitchen areas around a central fireplace. Two bedrooms and a small hothouse were added to the large room."

The artist's hobby is gardening and besides having land under cultivation, she has 60 azaleas in her hothouse.

Since she and her husband enjoy traveling, Dr. Calcia said they plan to do more of it after she retires. "Probably we'll go to Mexico first because we haven't been there in 20 years."

Dr. Calcia has studied many and varied fields of art, including painting, sculpture, ceramics and weaving. She learned puppetry from a Chinese who studied the art in China. Her specialized study has been at the Art Student League and the Greenwich House in New York City.
Spring is here. It's the biggest worm I've ever seen!

MSC in Texas?

Miss Auer is part of an exchange program sponsored by Overseas Neighborhoods of Montclair and its Austrian counterpart, Nachbars in Oberwe. Montclair and Graz will celebrate the 20th anniversary of their sister-city relationship next year.

The people-to-people program affects not only students from both areas, but professional men and cultural groups as well. Doctors from Graz have interned at Mountainside Hospital and professors and scientists have lectured at sister colleges across the sea. Last year, the Vienna Boys Choir and Akademie Kammerchor, the University of Graz orchestra, both visited Montclair.

Recently, the University has been exchanging gifts of books with Harry L. Sprague Library. MSC now boasts volumes on German painting, Viennese cathedrals and Gothic architecture in Austria. In return, the college has forwarded biographies as well as book of printing Indian lore and pioneer history.

An outgrowth of the People-to-People movement started by the late Dwight D. Eisenhower, Overseas Neighborhoods formed to "wipe out the invisible borders that our last war created," according to Dr. Allan B. Creden, president.

A steady correspondence between the towns has developed since 1950. Many members have visited their European counterparts and an annual dinner at Montclair boasts many guests from Graz. The American community maintains Graz Park at the head of Bloomfield Avenue to honor its sister city. In turn, Graz has named one of its park boulevards "Montclairdale."

When the first Telstar broadcast to Europe was planned, the State Department honored the program by permitting the Mayor of Montclair to speak with the Graz Burgemeister.

Miss Auer confessed that her own correspondence is hindered by her confusion of German and English structure. This prompted her to discontinue her French studies.

A serious student, the 19-year-old fraulein expressed a liking for her course of study at MSC. She is considering majoring in English, a definite change of heart as she hated English in high school.

She was also surprised by college life as she expected more of a change from high school. In Europe, she feels, college students are not forced to keep up with their studies as much. Instead of frequent tests and required attendance, they are left to their own devices. Of course, she added, they all go into hiding at exam time. "like cardinals going to vote for a new Pope."

Although not shy, she is a soft-spoken girl who prefers to keep to herself. She is grateful, however, for "some very close friends" she has met during her stay at Freeman Hall.

The most difficult adaptation Miss Auer had to make in her mealtime schedule. Europeans, she explained, are accustomed to eating a very light breakfast and supper, and the main meal at noon. Also, she was surprised that "Americans eat next day every day and sometimes two or three times a day."

On the whole she enjoys American cooking, which she likens to the British variety. She wrinkled her nose as she made an exception: "I still don't like jello."

"Too many people don't know all the things sororities do off campus," states Joan McCafferty, sister of Theta Chi Rho and president of the Inter-Sorority Council (ISC). The ISC represents all 13 Montclair sororities totaling approximately 640 girls.

The Council acts as a central clearing point where on and off-campus organizations can apply for student help. Orphanages, homes for the aged and mentally retarded, and other charitable organizations apply to ISC for aid. Dr. Leonard Bucher, head of psychological services at Montclair, came to ISC and sisters are now working on the Overbrook project.

Various sororities are raising money for the Doreen Delay Fund. This project renders financial assistance to the family of a young girl who was seriously injured in an automobile crash. ISC is currently working on a film which, according to Miss McCafferty, will point out "humanitarian as well as social" aspects of college life.

Social activities sponsored by ISC include the annual coiltion and two open houses. The money obtained from an ISC-ICFC (Inter-Fraternity Council) dance held in September went to Sprague Library for the purchase of English books.

The open houses held by ISC each semester provide girls interested in pledging with an opportunity to meet sorority representatives. The sororities then send their bids (invitations to pledge) to ISC, and ISC transfers the bids to the girls. In this way a girl learns in one notice how many sororities have asked her to pledge. The Council also regulates hazing.

The Inter-Sorority Council serves as a mediating board for all disputes between sororities or between sororities and any on or off-campus group. For example, last semester a large amount of paper was thrown when newly accepted sisters were presented in the cafeteria. Jon O. McKnight, director of Life Hall, went to Miss McCafferty and the IFC and members of both groups cleaned the mess up.

"Sororities are represented in all facets of campus life, but through ISC," states Miss McCafferty. Miss McCafferty is a member of the President's Advisory Committee, the Dean's Council, the Student Advisory Committee and the Committee on Student Affairs. Maryellen McCafferty, vice-president of ISC, is also on the President's Advisory Committee.

Actually, Zuckerkandl is the latest book by Grove Press, the ones who gave us "I Am Curious (Yellow)." It is the invention of former University of Chicago President, Robert Maynard Hutchins. Through his friend Zuckerkandl, Hutchins sets forth the idea that society must become unconscious of guilt, rid itself of the Agenbite of Inwit: the superego; the conscience; the fear of "what people might say."

As a book, not much can be said for Zuckerkandl, since it is the forerunner of a future film. Instead, we must focus on the philosophy within. Aside from a few unforgivable puns (the inhabitants of Adl are All-Acossants), Hutchins gives us his idea of the troubles of modern society. We finally reach "...solid ground. The only true morality therefore is amorality, because amorality eliminates choice." This simple statement, though fictional, may be the starting point for a discussion of which way society is heading.

Don't Get 'Curious.'

While on the subject of morality versus amorality, let us consider the Grove Press release of "I Am Curious (Yellow)." After all, it is about the courts with the film, a film from Sweden and broke all seating records in New York's theaters at $3 per person. And for which? The film is basically an exposition of student activism in Sweden. It features, among other things, interviews with Martin Luther King on nonviolence and with the Prime Minister of Sweden. It is filled with on the street interviews with the ignorant populace of Stockholm. It is also a film about filmmakers making a film about student activism focusing on one student and activism in her "search for identity," the proverbial fun begins.

Blood, sweat and some jazz

Reviewed by John Stankevics

"Blood, Sweat and Tears" is the title of a book by the late Sir Winston Churchill. It has now become the name of the hottest jazz-blues group around. It is made up of nine members, most of whom have had a previous background in jazz or rock. The vocals on their second album, Blood, Sweat and Tears, are handled quite capably by David Clayton-Thomas. The only exception is "Sometimes in Winter," a very beautiful and often overlooked ballad by Steve Katz, lead guitarist.

The group has come a long way since the first album, even with the help of Al Kooper, who left the group to solo. The brass section has particularly improved. On the first album, Child is the Father to the Man, the horns were a separate section. Now they are not as strong, and they blend rather well. One of the best examples of this is the cut which became their hit single, "You've Made Me So Very Happy." In the essence of the great bands of this century, the group flows together at last. They are no longer individuals, but a coordinated effort. The theme song of the late Billie Holiday, "Mood Blows This Child," is expert in the throat of Thomas.

They also go on to explore the realm of the modern classics with the instrumental, "Variations on a Theme by Eric Satie (1st and 2nd movements)."

Clayton-Thomas is an essential part of the "B.S.&T." (to use the simpler form) but he steps aside in "Blues, Part II" to allow the rest of the group to enjoy the fun.

Blood, sweat and tears are very much elements of life itself and this album, this album, this album, is very much alive.
Players Interpret Shaw:

Long, But Creditable

Reviewed By

Maurice J. Morin

Last Spring, Players, MSC’s production group, decided to use George Bernard Shaw’s Major Barbara as this spring’s production. That was asking a lot — of both actors and audience — since Shaw is a well known rhetorician who specializes in keeping people in their seats for hours to hear something that would only take a few minutes under ordinary conditions.

But Players went ahead with plans. Under the direction of Dr. L. Howard Fox and assisted by James Johnson, Major Barbara became a prime example of how actors can aid the playwright. Celeste Sullivan portrayed Barbara, never dropping character, but came across as the prima donna of the established society that Shaw wanted.

Bruce Kabitsky was the nervous, jittery (effeminate?) brother to Barbara who was transformed to the demanding son who desired the power that his father held through the munitions factory. The aging mother, Betty Passafiume, did not have a real character, but came across as the symbol of the established society that Shaw wanted.

“Charley” Lomax was performed by Walt Korb. The inept bumbling personality was excellent to keep the pews in the audience amused. Adolphus Cusins, professor of Greek and tutor for Barbara, was played by Jack Magen. There must be something rich in Magen’s blood because that’s how he comes across in every performance. He did, however, manage to keep Shaw’s rhetoric on the comprehensible level.

Perhaps the most outstanding performance of the evening was Frank Skinner as Bill Walker. He has “had it up to here” with the Salvation Army and proceeds to give a good welt to Sister Jenny Hill, portrayed by Jackie Jasper.

In every instance, the clothing, designed by the Wardrobe Mistress added something to the play. The make-up and performance of Rummy Mitchens, in the hands of Rummy Mitchens herself, was a creditable achievement.

In conclusion, “Major Barbara” is a creditable achievement by Players, even if it did last a little long.
UNION — The Republican Assembly led by William K. Dickey, the majority leader of the House, rejected over-whelmingly a Senate-approved measure to lower the New Jersey voting age to 18.

The proposal had only 14 supporters at the Assembly caucus. Thirteen Assemblymen voted to reject it, and 17 others abstained. Thirty of the 40 Senators had voted the week before in favor of the referendum.

Dickey said there was no discussion of the merits of the proposal within the caucus. His own position on the proposed voting age change had to be approved by three-fifths of the members of each House.

Chris Muzikar, regional chairman of the Voting Age Coalition (VAC) and senior at New Jersey State College, commented: "VAC had received 35 definite endorsements from members of the New Jersey Bill, and we felt that the Republican Assembly caucus would be as favorable towards the bill as the Senate. Assemblyman Dickey's logic in opposing the bill seems ridiculous. He holds almost 170,000 college students responsible for the demonstration at Rutgers which only involved about 100 students."

VAC now plans to push for a compromise in getting an alternate proposal approved, one for an 18-year-old voting age and another for a 20-year-old. The greatest problem is time, since the Assembly will re-con in a month.

HILLSID, N.J. — Absenteeism in government is a root cause of unrest in the high schools and colleges, Ned Parsekian, a Democratic candidate for governor, said in an address before the student body at Hillside High School on May 1. Parsekian said that the youth of today had lost their faith in leaders who weren't present when important decisions were to be made or when important questions had to be faced before their respective legislatures.

"New Jersey has been run by political bosses whose base of operations is the gold coast of Florida," the former State Senator and Director of Motor Vehicles said. "It is no wonder that our state is in the condition that it is in now because the absentee leaders either didn't care or would not take the time or trouble to become involved with problems that should have been solved in the '50s.

Parsekian made it clear that his characterization of "absenteeism" included those leaders who in effect abdicated their powers by refusing to take the strong, positive actions that were needed to plan for the future. "The do-nothings of the '50s has compounded our problems of growth, undermined the faith of the people in the ability of government to solve problems and created a cynicism that has prevented many worthy people from becoming involved in government."

Proper planning, he said, could have started programs in education, in urban redevelopment and in air and water pollution control that would have warded off what he called the stagnation of the '60s. "If we are going to lift New Jersey into the 21st century during the '70s," he said, "we are going to have to have bold, imaginative leadership that will merit the trust of all the people by true devotion to service."

NJEA Urges State Legislature Aid Cities Before Adjourning

TRENTON — The New Jersey Education Association has urged the State Legislature to "fuld its tent" without giving help to those cities that have failed to come up with a five-member board of education that will mer the state to step in and take over the operation of those urban schools.

Every member of the Legislature received a copy of a resolution on "Needs of Urban Education" adopted on April 25 by NJEA's Executive Committee.

The resolution describes bills already introduced in the Legislature to aid urban education, urges adoption "in the strongest terms" and warns that failure could "cripple the hopes of a great many city school children and their parents."

The statewide teacher organization wants the Legislature to begin hearings "immediately" to modify recommendations from a legislative study commission to increase state aid to education by $10 million a year.

NJEA wants greater recognition given to the special needs of disadvantaged children and to the heavy municipal tax loads that cut into city school support. However, NJEA is cautioning legislators not to use this comprehensive proposal "as an excuse for inaction" on measures specifically to help urban education.

With the Legislature planning to adjourn soon until after the November elections, NJEA declares: "The important thing is for the Legislature to begin moving something. Urban schools desperately need special state help. In this time of urban crisis, it is inconceivable that the Legislature could fold its tent without providing some help to cities."

Parsekian Blames 'Absenteeism' For Present Unrest in Schools

During the first Columbia University building takeover last spring, a group of conservative students tried to block food being sent to the rebels. This action, or reaction, was the first step in a movement of protest that is reaching from the White House to Montclair's SGA. Both bills easily passed the Assembly and now await action by the Senate in the internal security committee. Thirteen Assemblymen to su demonstrators who block school buildings. A companion to Thomas' bill is Essex Republican John Dennis' measure which would outlaw firearms in any academic institution in the state.

Both bills passed the Assembly and now await action by the Senate. The mood in New Jersey is being reflected in some unlikely places. Harvard, an institution noted for its liberalism, took the lead in campus crackdowns when it called in police to evict building occupants. The sight of gun-toting students at Cornell University prompted that school to vow to end "disruption and terror tactics." Columbia, in contrast to last spring's slow disciplinary action, threatened "no amnesty" to SDS protestors who occupied two buildings.

Collegè Seeks Guidelines

For Dealing with Demos

NORTHFIELD, Minn. — (I.P.) — The Student Life Committee at St. Olaf College has passed a student demonstration policy statement, out of a lack of a college policy with regard to demonstrations.

According to the statement, "peaceful and non-obstructive demonstrations are among those activities in which members of the college community are free to engage." An obstructive demonstration, which is prohibited, is generally defined as "deliberate and continued impeding or disruption of access to or conduct of institutional activities relevant to the college's educational mission."

Dean Bruce Roberts stated that "St. Olaf needs guidelines in this area to insure the rights of the students." He indicated that without a stated college policy administrative action could become arbitrary on occasion. "This is an effort to assure the freedom of the students."

Roberts also pointed out the section of the joint statement on rights and freedoms of students which refers to off-campus freedom of students. "As citizens, students should enjoy the same freedom of speech, peaceful assembly and right of petition that other citizens enjoy."

Exercising Your "Will" Power

I will switch to Tampax tamppons, the internal sanitary protection that outsells all others combined.
I will ride a bike, swim, play tennis, dance … and do my daily exercises every day of the month if I wish.
I will no longer worry about the discomfort and inconvenience of sanitary napkins, pins and belts.
I will be more relaxed and confident in any situation because Tampax tamppons can't show or cause odor.
I will be completely comfortable because Tampax tamppons can't be felt when they're properly in place.

Students of the fine arts department have been displaying their work on campus this week. Thirteen art majors have contributed to MSC's first outdoor art exhibit; and although this is a small portion of the fine arts department, the variety of the creations has provoked student interest.

Those exhibiting their art work include Michelle Bakay, Vince DeLeo, Genevieve Dobrinski, Elaine Haberberg, Bill Kazamias and Walt Knott. Also participating in the exhibit are Seth Levine, Scott Merritt, Jim O'Dell, Donna Ruggerio, Diane Savona, Nancy Shoemaker and Sam Viscardi.

The exhibit will be held all week (May 5-May 9); and everyone is welcome to view the work and ask the students any questions. The early afternoon is usually when most of the artists have been showing their work. Although Levine and Viscardi are co-organizers, Viscardi said, "Actually, Seth can be credited with the original idea for the outdoor exhibit." It was a take-off on an indoor exhibit previously held in the art building, with some ideas taken from frequent Village art exhibits.

Plans are already being made for the future. Viscardi hopes campus response will be favorable this week, so next spring's exhibition can be bigger and better. There is a chance the exhibit will be held in the amphitheater next year.

Viscardi believes the display will be good experience. "Possibly," he states, "our being out here this week might provide some incentive for more art majors to join us."

With this introductory exhibit, students will be able to prepare their work in advance for next spring. Viscardi hopes that this will be so, in order "to help make next year a much larger success."

GreeK Studies in Fall

Classics Program Offers

By Roberta Kuehl
Asth. News Editor

Greek courses will be offered for the first time next fall as part of the classics program. Dr. Carolyn E. Bock, Latin professor, explained that the importance of Greek is being realized as the direction of Montclair State has changed from teacher education to a liberal arts institution.

The main purposes for the establishment of Greek studies and eventually a Greek minor are stated in the classics rationale: 1) as part of the required work for majors in classical studies and as a compliment to the Latin language for Latin teacher-prep candidates; 2) as a service course for liberal arts students who wish to fulfill their language requirement through study of Greek; 3) as a free elective for the general student.

Dr. Bock pointed out the necessity for Greek in various graduate studies – English, anthropology, philosophy and medicine. She also stated that beginning Latin course exists with value comparable to Greek. "The student who does not take languages will be handicapped in his future studies," she stated.

Mr. John King, professor of Latin and Greek, noted: "An interest in philosophy grows, so students majoring or minor in philosophy will want to take Greek." He also stated that students majoring in medicine. She also stated that knowledge of Greek is being realized as the direction of Montclair State has changed from teacher education to a liberal arts institution.

The current campus trend is to change the college community, realigning it to the changing time, keeping it abreast with current student needs, updating outmoded curricula and revitalizing its purposes. Many colleges suffer disruption and violence before changes are implemented. At MSC, this has not been the case nor need it be.

There are on campus Central Planning Committees. There is one for Fine and Performing Arts, Social and Behavioral Sciences, and Humanities. Each central committee is charged with the responsibility for the establishment of a separate college in its field, according to the university master plan.

This is where the individual contributes. Each and every student and faculty member can volunteer to work on one of 25 to 29 subcommittees, which are recommended by the central committee. If a person is majoring or wants to major in one of the Humanities (English, foreign languages, philosophy and religion) or in a faculty member of the same, his chance to participate will be on May 12, 1969 from 10 a.m. to noon, which is the time set for the student-faculty session of that department. The Fine Arts and Social Scientists are already set up and if one has missed out there, it may not be too late. Just consult the following list to obtain whatever information you seek.

Montclair Freshman Baseball team built its record to 10-1 by winning its last three games. The wins came over Morris County, FDU, and Wagner with scores of 3-1, 12-3 and 8-1 respectively.

On Thursday Morris County came to MSC, only to be sent home with a tough, hard fought loss. Defense was the name of this game, and MSC's Indians had plenty of it. The left side of the Indian infield was like a wall to opposing hitters. Third baseman Paul Kenney and shortstop Ed Pavlo combined with an errorless performance to give the Braves their win.

The frost were held to just two hits, but made them count with Howie Shaw's double which drove in a run and pitcher Kevin Cooney, who combined his single game, and MSC's Indians had seven-game hitting streak aJive with some good base running to coupled this with a single to drive in three runs, bringing his season total to 11. Kenney continued his torrid pace by belting out a long double to center. Larry Berra, Cardwell and Bob Heck each had a base hit to help the cause. Defensively, Heck was unbeatable in the frosh right field. Dennis Cassidy's relief job was the big story in this game. He replaced in the second Rick Schwarz and Dave Bryer. The Cobra Award, donated by Vincent Calabrese, director of business services, for the outstanding defensive player, was given to guard Harry James. For the third year in a row, Luther Bowen walked off with the Most Valuable Player award, regaining it annually by the phy-s-ed fraternity, Phi Epsilon Kappa.

The evening closed with a special presentation, special, in the sense that it was personal, gratifying and totally unexpected. In recent years the Indians have done extremely well in the New Jersey State Conference, winning the championship for the fourth time in six years the NJSCAC has been operating.

GSC Leads NJ Conference
With Win Over MSC 7-3

The 1969 contest will mark the second annual varsity-alumni contest with the Varsity 26-13. The Profs added a single run in the sixth inning before the loss Saturday.

Busch and Keimel were locked in the scoreless duel until the sixth when GSC exploded for three runs, the big blow being Bush's three-run homer. Mario Gillio led off the inning with a hard double up the alley in left center and Ken Logan followed with an infield single to stop shortstop. Keimel then settled down to retire the next two batters, and seemed on his way out of the jam when he notched the first strike on the pitcher, Bush. However, the next pitch was tagged for a line drive home run to right field.

The Profs added a single run in the seventh inning when, after two were out, John Bush, Phil's brother, singled past third and stole second. He rode home on Gillio's second hit in as many innings, a line single to left.

In the seventh, Glassboro added three more insurance runs. Singles by Jim Grossi and Charlie Atkinson put men on first and second and Phil Keimel for the day, then Phil Busch reached on an error off reliever John Grazynko loading the bases. Pete Jerald replaced Grazynko on the mound and was greeted by Ron Maetha's single to right driving in Grossi and Atkinson. Jim Kovalsky's sacrifice fly produced the third run of the inning.

Busch shut out the Indians until the ninth when Rich San Filippo followed Frank Rozzi's single to right and Frank Cipolla's walk with his third home run of the season over the right field fence.

The loss was Keimel's first this season, and the first of his three year career at MSC. He was 3-0 as a freshman, 4-0 last year and 3-0 before the loss Saturday.
