WELCOME TO MSC — Incoming freshmen were greeted by lines which seemed to stretch into infinity during the change-of-program period. A computer malfunction caused the delays.

In an interview with the MONTCLARION yesterday, a faculty strike would only be a "last resort" if negotiations with the state reached an impasse which could not be settled through mediation.

Lacatena explained that the AFT has been bargaining with the state for the past five months on key issues:

- reduced class size
- more autonomy for the individual state colleges
- tenure: elimination of present state quotas on the number of tenured faculty members
- tenure and faculty status for professionals such as librarians and counselors; tenure for all members of the bargaining unit
- increased state funding of state college expenses
- binding arbitration of grievances
- increased in salary and medical benefits
- security against arbitrary dismissal and denial of tenure or promotion

The previous contract, for two years with a one-year extension, expired June 30. But Lacatena warned of a faculty strike in November by the AFT bargaining unit. Lacatena said. However, not all of the faculty members represented by the unit are members of the AFT, he explained. For those who do not belong to the union, striking would be "a matter of conscience."

Lacatena explained that the AFT will attempt mediation. Then, according to the AFT Newsletter, "If no agreement is reached through efforts by Nov. 17, the Council of Local offices from the state colleges will recommend to the members of the bargaining unit that they vote to strike. The vote will be taken at a special meeting which will be called for the purpose of either ratifying an equitable agreement or voting to strike."

If a walkout would probably involve the 550-600 teachers, librarians, counselors and other personnel represented by the AFT bargaining unit, Lacatena said. However, a final decision on whether or not to strike, and when, is up to the Council, Lacatena said.

"We hope to do better next semester," said MSC President David W.D. Dickson in reference to the many registration difficulties caused by computer problems this week. Dickson explained that a major reason for the delays during the change-of-program period was the fact that the off-campus computer used by MSC did not print out class lists. The Office of the Registrar had to compile the lists by hand, causing the delays, he said.

In an interview with the student body, Dickson stated, "Because of state policy, we are obliged to use an off-campus, centralized computer system which is unfortunately not yet reliable. This has been a continuing trouble which has affected other aspects of college administration and despite our best efforts has handicapped the production of the central registration materials."

Dickson concluded by assuring students that the college staff will "continue to seek remediation of our computer problems."

MSC registrar Marshall Butler commended the students for their "patience and understanding" during the change-of-program period. Interviewed in Panzer gym yesterday, Butler said, "In view of all the problems, delays and difficulties, the student body has responded in a most positive fashion. They've been absolutely tremendous."

Butler said that only 50% of MSC students received full schedules. He estimated that 4000 of MSC's 7600 undergraduates adjusted their schedules in some way.

"I'VE TRIED with my staff to convey an attitude of understanding and solving student's problems, as opposed to shuffling students from place to place," Butler said.

Butler added that computer problems also caused a two-week delay in mailing out bills and schedules this summer. He pointed out that schedules did not reach the registrar's office until 3:30 am, Aug. 29. By the end of the following morning, over 1500 schedules had been mailed to students.

According to Butler, the registration problems will be resolved. "We are much better organized and prepared to deal with the problems than ever before."

The REGISTRAR added that part of the solution is to provide more sections of courses in demand. This will mean, he said, that "students must be willing to take classes at 8 am and 4 pm" since during other hours on Mondays and Wednesdays every classroom is already in use.

After a series of delays, the Drop-In Center will open today, according to center director Michael King.

Last semester the student-run problem clinic had been allocated the recreation lodge which formerly housed Dr. Donald Mintz dean of the School of Fine and Performing Arts.

Mintz has moved to the former faculty dining room and lounge in Life Hall, stated Jerome Quinn, institutional planning director. These two moves have forced a number of groups to play a game of musical offices.

The faculty dining room was formerly the location of a fine arts lab which was moved to the second floor of Life Hall to an office which formerly housed the Jewish Student Union and the Human Relations Lab.

Those organizations are scheduled to be moved to the north section of the snack bar. Quinn said that work will not start of the new offices of the JSU and HRL until Sept. 10. They have been assigned temporary quarters in the Alumni Lounge in Life Hall in the meantime, he continued.

King complained that the JSU and HRL were moved into the Drop-In Center’s Life Hall offices for a temporary stay in July without notification to the center’s staff. He said that the center’s furniture was moved out into the hall.

QUINN EXPLAINED that they were moved out because contractors had to remodel the office for the fine arts lab.

Renovation was not started on Mintz’s office until that work was done, which added to the delay.

Work on the rec lodge and Mintz’s office is not complete. Peter Macagne, assistant to the vice president of business and finance, stated that phones have not been installed in either office. “I have been hounding the phone company for weeks,” Macagne said, adding that he has not received very good cooperation.

King called the delays “intolerable” and the “result of smothering bureaucracy.” He said that the center staff will be working around the clock to open the center on time.

Student government leaders are forming an organization to act as a safeguard for student rights in college decision-making both on the local and state levels.

According to SGA president Angelo Genovia, the organization will act as a “third party” between the administration and faculty on individual campus colleges as well as between the Board of Higher Education and the American Federation of Teachers (AFT). The first meeting of the student government leaders was held on July 28. Representatives of six of the eight New Jersey state colleges were in attendance. "The meeting was necessary to discuss common issues of the state colleges," Genovia said.

In the second meeting, held Aug. 11, the discussion centered on collective bargaining between the AFT and the board. "No president has been set for a third party seat," the SGA president said. He continued that the organization will be a voice in the negotiations between the AFT and the board will be forthcoming.

"In collective bargaining the outcome is always legal in contracts and the conditions present in those contracts," Genovia said. "The organization would be a voice in decisions such as the board's right to its by-laws are concerned.

The Montclair Athletic Commission (MAC) was restructured by Joan Miketuk

THE SHAPE OF THINGS TO COME? - The semi-annual registration chaos will be "overemphasized." Lacatena expressed the desire to "educate" both the students because they paid for the services of the students and the faculty. The board has to preserve students' rights. Lacatena feels that there are issues, such as class size, in which the student organization and teachers agree. Lacatena expressed concern that possible differences between the administration and the student, including the question of the degree of participation of each group may be "overemphasized." Lacatena labeled these diatribes, should they occur, "minor.

Genovia would like to see a faculty strike avoided. Should the AFT strike, the organization's role would be as a third party, protecting the interests of the faculty. Why the faculty decided to strike would be "overemphasized." Lacatena stated that the purpose and goals of the newly-forming organization have not yet been "defined conceptually" or "arranged in a final set-up.

The SGA president Genovia and vice-president, foresees a problem of manpower in maintaining a lobby. A "lobby" he said. "The power is available for the faculty strike averted. Should the organization have a lobbying office, the organization's programming." Genovia added.

"There is nothing for the administration to be responsive to," Genovia added.

The organization has not yet "been formed" and will be determined by the student organization of each college's government," Genovia said.

SGA Revamps MAC Board

By Joan Miketuk
Staff Writer

The Montclair Athletic Commission (MAC) was restructured and funding procedures altered by the SGA at its first meeting on June 5.

According to a bill proposed by SGA president Angelo Genovia the MAC board will consist of nine voting members and a student chairman.

Seven of the nine members will be students appointed by the SGA president with two of those seven to be the SGA vice president of internal affairs and the president pro tem of the student body.

The board will also have a faculty member designated by the administration and an alumni member to be chosen by the Panzer alumni.

Of the seven students, a minimum of two must be involved in the athletic program and a minimum of two must be women.

The SGA president Genovia and vice-president, Marcoantonio Diuguardi are to serve as advisors to the board in the planning of schedules and budgets, but they will not have a vote on the board.

However, Genovia expressed the desire to have the student appointments made and the board set up by "the end of September."

Genovia expressed the desire to have the student appointments made and the board set up by "the end of September."

He expressed that the MAC board's primary purpose is to be a go-between for the Athletic Department and the SGA and not for the Athletic Department and the NCAA.

According to the bill, the previous financial arrangements for funding the MAC were as follows:

"The athletic department submits vouchers and receipts to the athletic student Co-op at two payments per semester based on when state checks come in. The SGA submits the payments in lump sums with no questions asked regarding athletic expenditures. The Co-op then pays the Athletic Department from the SGA money."

With the passage of the bill, an "exchange account" is set up in the Co-op. By this procedure, a set amount (yet to be determined) will be set aside for the MAC Co-op.

The Athletic Department will submit vouchers and receipts to the Co-op which would then pay all bills. The SGA would receive copies of all vouchers and receipts submitted to the Co-op.

According to the bill, "like any other student financed organization, (this new procedure) will give us knowledge of how student money is spent without direct infringement on the organization's programming."

"Me, Why Worry? - This student has obviously kept his cool in spite of the registration and faculty problems that plague MSC.

"I belong to you and you belong to me in a very special way," expressed Montclair State's new president, Dr. David W. Dickson to an assembly of new students Tuesday afternoon in Memorial Auditorium. The assembly was part of the annual New Student Orientation program designed to introduce freshmen and transfer students to campus, according to the new president.

Dr. Dickson referred to the fact that he was also a newcomer to this campus, then her audience to "master the tools of learning," "acquire generous enthusiasm," "become more cosmopolitan," and "develop a critical intelligence" during their years at Montclair State.

The freshmen seemed impressed with the new president, expressing appreciation during his short welcome address with numerous moments of applause and enthusiasm for new orientations. Representatives of the student government, administration, faculty and religious affiliations also spoke at the general assembly meeting.

During the first day of the orientation program, the new students met with their hosts, upperclassmen who volunteered their help and experience, stood on lines for I.D. photos and schedule changes and finally attended departmental receptions. The hosts commented that the most baffling thing for the newcomers was the change of schedule procedure.

Wednesday's activities featured a student government assembly, open house on the fourth floor of the Student Center, a noon concert in the Student Center Mall and an Activities Fair and picnic on the west lawn.

TONIGHT THE new students may use their free tickets to see the players production of "Butterflies Are Free" at 8:30 pm in Memorial Auditorium. A Dance/concert is scheduled for Friday night in Life Hall Cafe and on Saturday a Film Festival will be shown in the Student Center.

The Orientation Committee, directed by James Harris, assembled then of students and co-chaired by senior Kathy Ragan and junior Maria Oliver, sent out two mailings to the 2700 new students during August, and arranged all the welcome activities. "It was a large crowd to program for, but I think our activities were diverse enough so that everybody could find a point of interest," commented Ragan. They decided to give out red T shirts with white letters this year rather than the traditional dinks. "The dinks were demeaning since they still referred to the old days of hazing and the MSC demeaning since they still referred to the old days of traditional dinks," she said.

This initial article, I’d like to welcome you back to MSC and wish you a successful and rewarding year. After being elected student body president, many questions concerning the role of SGA, its effectiveness and its future crossed my mind. In reviewing these questions, the element of challenge persistently entered the picture. As I think about these challenges I am constantly aware of the commitment necessary to meet them successfully. I view these challenges and commitments in three basic areas: the individual, our community and our society.

CHALLENGE

As individuals we must all face the challenge of our education. In our days here at MSC, we are placed in the academic arena, where competition and realism thrive. Our search for employment is constantly being darkened. Many of us are preparing for a society where security in the future seems minimal. This is a challenge as individuals which we must understand. As enthusiastic people with confidence in ourselves this challenge can be seized and ultimately overcome.

We have a definite challenge in our campus community. Students of today must meet the challenge and commitment to the ideals and rights established and gained by our predecessors. We are entering an era where all the rights obtained and garnered by former students are theoretically, and in some instances, realistically, in jeopardy by collective bargaining and state policies. We as students must confront this challenge to retain those rights which we have become accustomed to.

DIRECTION

We must commit ourselves to our independent role to effectively influence the direction of higher education in New Jersey. We have an obligation to the students before us and to ourselves to meet the challenge of the future of our education. With unity in our commitment, the ultimate success in this area is realistic.

We must also face a challenge that society places on us. Throughout history, the university has acted as a catalyst for social and attitudinal changes. We as students cannot range on this responsibility. Our role should encompass a sincere awareness of our society — its faults and its achievements.

AWARENESS

We must maintain a high level of political and social awareness in order to confront social life and not be fearful of attacking them. As students, we have this responsibility to our society, to our peers and to our children. Let us view this challenge and hold a firm commitment to it.

Next week, I will outline programs and areas that I believe SGA should develop. We will also include a breakdown of this year’s budget, explaining basic policies of SGA in relation to its service branches.

Concern Unlikely

Marcoantonio Lacatena, president of the Montclair State chapter of the American Federation of Teachers, has stated that the faculty will safeguard the rights of students during the negotiations with the state.

However, the existence of faculty concern for student interests is highly questionable in light of the fact that for months faculty union leaders have steadfastly fought any proposal of student input in faculty negotiations with the state.

Students are more than capable of protecting their own rights, and are eager to do so. Areas such as tenure, student/faculty ratio and curriculum are several areas which have a great effect on students. If students have an opinion on subjects of concern to them, they should be heard, not just brushed off.

The need for student input is especially important now that the college is faced with a possible faculty strike. If such a strike should occur, no one would be more affected than the students who have paid for their education and, in the case of seniors, might have to postpone their graduation in event of a strike.

An ideal situation would be one in which faculty and student leaders work together to ensure that the rights of both groups are not infringed upon. Students are willing to do this and it may be possible if faculty leaders drop their "we know best"/"mind your business" attitude.

During the late 1960's and very early 70's, the atmosphere of the nation's college campuses was charged with the force of student activism. Students around the nation took issue with the American government, particularly in Southeast Asia and reacted on their campuses - sometimes, as at Kent State, violently.

For the incoming freshmen, a few steps that the American government was taking, particularly in Southeast Asia and reacted to their campuses - sometimes, as at Kent State, violently.

During the last 20 years, there have been an air of tranquility around the college campuses. Tranquility - when the Huipong harbor was mined. Tranquility - when bombs exploded over North Vietnam.

When the last tuition hike was being considered by the state legislature, it took a massive effort to get even a handful of students to work against the proposed increase. Had more people participated, their efforts might have been successful. Any attempt in the past two years to get students involved in any major issue, both on the national or state level has failed.

With the beginning of fall semester, students are returning from a summer which saw the unraveling of the now infamous Watergate scandal. The public viewed a panorama of corruption and the attempts of power-hungry men to manipulate and thwart the democratic process.

If there is any lesson to be learned from that mess, it is that problems do not go away if no attempt is made to deal with them - issues are often not resolved to the benefit of the public if citizens do not take an active part in their solution. The spirit of activism and involvement that existed in the country, particularly on the college campuses, must return and must remain.

Involvement is possible if it is not constant.

The pendulum must return from apathy to protest - against the corruption and misuse of American potential. If the public combines this protest with a struggle towards positive goals within the nation's capability, public opinion can again become a forceful power.

Want ed...Activism

The worth of communication is perhaps more axiomatic these days than the essential goodness of God, mother or country. Most civic and business leaders, and certainly college administrators, will grasp at straws "to develop better communication" with their constituencies.

Yet to go beyond affirmation of that cliche to consideration of what honest, thoughtful, informed communication should mean in a college is sobering. Communication may well define the basic function of a college. Those in the foolish disciplines try to enhance understanding of humanity through the communication of the works across cultures, times and space.

SYMBOLS

This is the place where the natural and, increasingly, the social sciences try to define the natural world and social relationships through communication by mathematical and statistical symbols. The arts have always acknowledged man's profound feelings that are otherwise beyond comprehension by communicating through gesture, movement, color, shape and sound.

Very recently, more and more of us are communicating through Foreign or other languages with computers, while other electronic marvels like the radio, the phonograph and television are increasingly important vehicles of communication.

MISUNDERSTANDINGS

Yet, despite all this new technology, communication can do so easily as it can do well. Otherwise, misunderstandings in families or among the residents of cities, college, and the nation would not be so frequent.

Therefore, in this brief, bi-weekly column, I mean to talk honestly to the readers of the MONTCLARION. This will be worthwhile only if it is done without the facile and tiresome discussion about mutual concern. Let us begin to reason together.

I'M A VACATIONING NATURAL FOOD FREAK—"GIVE ME SOMETHING THAT'S LOW IN NUTRITION, HIGH IN PRESERVATIVES, AND PREFERABLY MADE BY A SUBSIDIARY OF ITT!"

Is College the Best Thing for You?

For the incoming freshmen, a few words of caution are in order: you are entering an institution that is in trouble. American higher education, of which our college is only a small part, is operating in a vast spiritual void, having lost its sense of direction and purpose. As a result both students and faculty are suffering.

As you have become oriented to your college, you have been exposed to the serious problems that the American government was taking, particularly in Southeast Asia and reacted on their campuses - sometimes, as at Kent State, violently.

However, by the end of 1970 the pendulum had begun its swing from protest to apathy, and the past several years have seen an air of tranquility around the college campuses. Tranquility - when the Humpshong harbor was mined. Tranquility - when bombs exploded over North Vietnam.

When the last tuition hike was being considered by the state legislature, it took a massive effort to get even a handful of students to work against the proposed increase. There've Been Some Changes Made

This column is dedicated to the vain and empty cause of trying to straighten out (in laymen's terms) the things that have happened at the gym over this summer. But we're going to try, anyway. Before moving further, jump down to the guide before and study it. Failure to do this now will result in confusion.

FIRST AND FOREMOST is the separation of Intramurals from the Athletic Department by both the college and the SGA. Prior to his resignation, President Thomas H. Richardson issued a college policy statement to establish Intramurals separate and apart from the Athletic Department, putting the out through the Athletic Department as they had done previously. Consequently, since the Athletic Department (also known as MAC) will no longer need the extra dough for the Intramural Department, their guideline is in the process of being cut from $18 to $15 per student. The SGA legislature has yet to act on the budget.

Along with the change in the MAC budget, comes an alteration to the SGA methods of financing the board. Instead of tossing the Athletic Department lump sums of student money, the SGA will now receive copies of vouchers and receipts and will be able to keep tabs of how.

Who's Who and What's What

You can't tell the players without a scorecard, so for a casual summary of who's what down at the gym, a listing of who's funding whom and an explanation of the Panzer version of alphabet soup, read on.

ATHLETICS - The Athletic Department is the portion of the campus that deals with intercollegiate athletics: football, baseball and basketball, as well as tennis, lacrosse, fencing, soccer and wrestling. The Athletic Department is in charge of both men's and women's intercollegiate sports and is under the jurisdiction of the Vice President of Business and Finance, Vincent Galbreath. It is headed by the Athletic Director, Bill Dioguardi.

MAC - The Montclair Athletic Commission is a board of students, faculty, alumni and administration that is supposed to exist in policy making and such forever in the realm of the Panzer School and the latter under the vice president for business and finance. The reasoning behind this is that Intramurals is a student service and has an academic value. Athletics on the other hand is a non-academic entity and should be on its own without the academic aspects of the college interfering with it and it interfering with them. The SGA further emphasized this action by deciding to fund the Intramural Department directly and such

McKinley Boston, assistant football coach, was appointed to the position of intramural director by Dr. George Pearson, chairman of the Boston IM Director

McKinley Boston

Tapped for Post

Barry Hennis

Barry Hennis, assistant intramural director under Schmidt and an obvious choice for the position, resigned to serve as Pearson's assistant.

AT AN intramural meeting held on August 24 in Pearson's office, Hennis explained his reasons for resigning: "I would like to advance academically, so this move is for my own self-benefit as well as to have a fresh face in intramurals."

Hennis, who came to MSC last September from the University of Alabama, continued, "I've accomplished just what I thought I would and just what I wanted."

He went on to say that he was "completely agreeable" with the selection of Boston as intramural director and that there were "no conflicts" between them. Hennis added that he would continue to work with the intramural department as an advisor to the program.

DURING HIS tenure in intramurals, Hennis assisted in achieving the separation of the intramural department from the athletic department. He helped organize such competitions as the intramural basketball tournament last year and The Great Race last spring.

This past summer, Hennis went out a questionnaire-survey to 100 colleges across the nation concerning their intramural programs. The returns of this survey are still coming in and results are yet incomplete.

Hennis will be working primarily in the area of academic research in the department of physical education.

In addition to his duties as intramural director, Boston plans to remain in his capacity as assistant football coach.

Working with Boston will be graduate assistants Maria Zubanis and Bruce Smith.

Panzer to Host AAU Weightlifters in March

Weightlifters from across the nation will flock to the MSC campus next spring when the Physical Education Department and the Intramurals Department host the National AAU Intercollegiate Weightlifting Championships.

Barry Hennis predicted that athletes from colleges as "far away as Hawaii and California" would be participating in the event.

Among the athletes will be MSC's Phil Grippaldi, '72 Olympian and American record holder. Grippaldi spent this summer in Russia training with the Soviet squad and will be in Havana, Cuba, this month for the World Games.

Early rounds of the AAU Competition will take place in Panzer Gym on Saturday, March 10, with the finals slated for the following day.

Also scheduled are a "Mr. America" contest (following the finals on Sunday) and a weightlifting clinic. New Jersey high school and college coaches will be able to attend a weightlifting clinic in Panzer Gym on Friday, March 9.

Television Coverage for the event is still pending. However, Hennis said that the Columbia Broadcasting System (CBS-Channel 2) has expressed interest in televising the championships on its CBS Sports Spectacular program.

Hennis, who along with Dr. George Pearson, Panzer School chairman, was the moving force which brought the tournament to MSC, commented that he expects confirmation of the television arrangements sometime in October.

Last year MSC organized a weightlifting club and sent a team to the national competition. The squad, which included Grippaldi, finished fourth of the 55 competing schools.
