Dorm Retained

By Joan Mietkuz

Chapin Hall will be retained as a dormitory building and will not be converted to offices. MSCP President Dr. David W. Dickson decided on Tuesday "after consultation with many other people."

Dickson said that he had conferred with students, faculty and deans before coming to the decision that the "justifications in keeping the dorm outweighed the need for the two schools" that would have utilized the space, the Schools of Professional Arts and Sciences, Education and Community Services. Lawton W. Blanton, dean of students, claimed that the decision would stand "for the time being" but added that if additional housing became available the building might be converted to offices and administrative space.

Dickson cited the delay in the construction of the proposed Clove Road housing complex in Little Falls as being instrumental in effecting his decision.

He also made reference to a telephone interview Tuesday evening to the energy crisis and fuel shortage which prompt an increasing number of students to seek housing on or near campus.

Dickson added that he had some "very persuasive meetings" with students including "the Chapin Hall Benevolent Protective Society," residents of Chapin Hall who actively worked on the issue.

He said that he heard "some very good things" about the coed dorm and that, according to Dr. Raymond Stover, director of housing, the Chapin residents had a "very fine spirit."

BLANTON, WHO expressed pleasure at Dickson's decision, said it was the president's receptive attitude to the students combined with strong student efforts which affected the saving of the building as a dormitory.

Tom Barrett, SGA vice president, stated that he and SGA president Angelo Genova had several meetings with Stover, Dickson and other administrators. He also remarked that the SGA resolution to retain Chapin as a dorm had been presented to Dickson.

Two years ago, Chapin's future as a dormitory was in doubt when it became necessary to seek extra office space. President Thomas H. Richardson decided to delay any action on the transformation and none had been taken until Tuesday.

Dickson cited the "great thrust in offices" and the "inadequate housing of the two schools of Professional Arts and Sciences and Education and Community Services" as reasons for considering the change.

As a result of his decision, Dickson remarked, "The faculty are deprived and I hope that the students appreciate the building."

For the present, the faculty of the two schools in question will remain in their present location, Professional Arts and Sciences in College Hall and Education and Community Services in College High. Dickson said. Attempts will be made to make "the situation as comfortable as possible" for the faculty and administrators in those offices, he related.

Eighty students currently reside in Chapin Hall. There is a possibility that four classrooms will be developed in the building, Dickson related.

AFT Members to Vote On Ratification Today

By John Picinich

Teachers voted yesterday for three hours and will continue to vote today on ratification of the negotiated settlement between the Council of New Jersey State College Locals (CNJSCL) and the state Department of Higher Education.

According to an American Federation of Teachers (AFT) source, a simple majority of affirmative votes will ratify the contract.

The entire faculty of the eight state colleges is participating in the ratification vote.

"If it is a good contract," said Marconantonio Lacatena, the council's acting president, "the council made a wise choice in accepting the settlement."

Instructors will attend a three-hour meeting in Memorial Auditorium today. At this time teachers may question Lacatena on the provisions of the contract. Lacatena added that a ballot box will be open during the meeting.

The votes will be tabulated tonight and certified tomorrow. This will be by day the one-year deadline for which the AFT was certified a bargaining agent to come up with a new contract.

Should the contract not be ratified, any rival organization could present petitions signed by at least 30% of the state colleges' faculty and call for an election to determine a new faculty bargaining representative.

AFT SOURCES indicate that one of the major provisions of the contract is binding arbitration of all disputes and grievances.

"This is the first time in New Jersey," said Lacatena, "that public employees have binding arbitration of all disputes."

Another first in the contract is the provision of college administration/faculty negotiation on issues concerned with an individual campus, claimed an AFT spokesman.

When resolved, according to the contract, these issues will become part of the local college's policy.

Binding arbitration is a form of due process that the faculty did not have before, Lacatena said.

RECENTLY THE agreement has been criticized by some faculty members because of a provision that calls for a commission to be set up.

The commission will be composed of an equal number of AFT and state representatives with a governor-appointed arbitrator acceptable to both parties. According to the AFT source, the commission will be primarily concerned with working conditions that are conflicts between existing Higher Education policy and statutes.

In addition to binding arbitration and the formation of a commission, according to a rough draft of the contract, the agreement calls for a 6% pay increase, additional medical benefits, and increase in overtime pay, tuition reimbursements for graduate study and the restoration of sabatical leaves which the department abolished three years ago.

The piece of legislation had proposed that Galumph be dissolved and the magazine turned over to the professional arts magazine. The amendment was defeated by the legislature.

TOM BARRETT, SGA vice president, said that in order for the bill to be considered again, it would have to be resubmitted by its author.

Angelo Genova, SGA president, who sponsored the bill two weeks ago, declined to say if he would propose dissolving Galumph again.

Gas Rationing Cards Available on Monday

MSC students can pick up gas allocation cards permitting them to purchase fuel at the campus Gulf Station starting Monday in the general store on the first floor of the Student Center, adjacent to the automatic teller machine. The cards, numbered one through 15,000, will be available from 8 am to 10 pm Monday through Thursday and 8 am to 6 pm on Friday. Students may also get their rationing cards from 8 am to 10 pm Saturday, according to Betty Ann O’Keefe, Center Policy Board chairwoman.

The cards will be available to students with or without a parking decal, O’Keefe said.

The cards will go into effect in two weeks, on Mon., March 12, and will not be required for gas purchases until then, she related.

APO members complained that students expected constant service. "We became furious when the stacks of books, the APO treasurer said, "students forget that this is a service," Shapiro explained. Some of the problems the service fraternity has encountered while running the semi-annual used bookstore.

APO: Students Abuse Used Bookstore

By Susan Cunningham

"People don’t remember that we’re students too. We don’t get paid for running the bookstore," said Bernie Shapiro, APO treasurer and past president.

Shapiro explained that some of the problems the service fraternity has encountered while running the semi-annual used bookstore.

"Our purpose in running the operation is to help students get back to the books they have put into books. But some MSC students forget that this is a service," Shapiro commented.

Surrounded by neatly organized stacks of books, the APO treasurer recalled times when "irate customers" became furious when the bookstore was unexpectedly closed during normal operating hours.

"We had to send some of the really violent ones to see Dean Lavon Blanton, dean of students," Shapiro remembered. "The students often forget that we attend classes, too, and if there are no brothers free one hour we have to close the bookstore," he explained.

According to Shapiro, students also complained about APO’s new policy of accepting for sale only those books being used the current semester.

"We just don’t have the space for all those books," he added.

Shapiro went on to say that some students took advantage of the crowded and hectic atmosphere by asking for more than half the original price on the books they sold.

"We also expect to have problems returning unsold books and money. Students come whenever they want to and expect us to have their books and money ready," he commented.

The date set for picking up books and money are Wed., Feb. 20, Thurs., Feb. 21, and Fri., Feb. 22. Another date in March will also be scheduled, Shapiro said.

APO is not only having problems with MSC students but with the SGA as well. History rep Fred Jenny introduced a bill on Feb. 13 asking that the SGA establish a non-profit used bookstore on campus. Jenny claimed the APO bookstore was a profit-making venture.

When asked about these claims, Shapiro replied, "We sell the books for MSC students at half the original price plus a service charge of 25 to 75 cents. The fraternity’s ‘profit’ is usually between $200 and $300, but it costs us over $100 to purchase the receipt slips we hand out to students who sell books."

According to Shapiro, the remaining money is put back into the school and is used to fund publicity, sports equipment to them,” Shapiro explained.

"We also donated over $40 in sports equipment to them,” Shapiro added.

When asked why the bill was introduced, Jenny admitted that it was all the result of a misunderstanding.

"When we found out what the profit money was used for, we withdrew the bill,” he added.

The error was corrected but it served to prove that too many MSC students are unaware of the campus services provided.

Consortial Board to Expand Education

By AnnKaren Miesen

and Patricia Mercorletti

A Consortial Advisory Board, designed to investigate appropriate actions for the establishment of cooperative educational liaisons with other colleges, has recently been established at MSC.

In a consortium members pool their resources to achieve a specific goal. An academic consortium concentrates knowledge to achieve its goals. In other words, a consortium attempts to expand educational opportunities.

BOARD DIRECTOR

Robert Silverman conceived the idea in the hope that its "innovative nature" would help curb the recent decline in college enrollment. History major Silverman described the board's basic concern as "the improvement of educational opportunities for the students at MSC."

The board, according to Silverman, will investigate all possibilities for its use including that of a degree granting consortium.

Silverman commented that such a consortium exists between the University of Maryland and Mt. Holyoke College.

The first meeting of the board, which will report directly to the president's office, is slated for March 12. It will be composed of two student and one faculty representatives from each of MSC's six schools.

MEMBERS WILL be selected for the school senate although they need not be members of the senate. While Silverman listed no specific qualifications for membership, he requested that the senate use discretion in selecting representatives who are "motivated by a desire to improve the educational facilities at MSC as well as at other schools."

A consortium, according to a press release from Silverman, may attempt to increase educational opportunities through several methods. Many consortia allow a student to register for courses at another college which is also a member of the consortium. The student could receive credit toward his degree from any of the colleges involved in the consortium.

Visiting professors also may be arranged through the consortium, the release explained. If a school demonstrates interest in a subject not adequately covered through its own faculty, they may "import" a qualified professor through the consortium.

The release went on to describe a ‘data-sharing’ consortium, such as the one in effect at the University of Michigan, in this consortium a main computer bank is maintained at the university and member colleges contribute data to it. They may then ‘order’ information required to teach a specific course.

Another version of a consortium is already in existence at MSC, the release stated. The college is a member of the New Jersey Marine Sciences Consortium. This allows marine biology students to participate in an off-campus lab and field station in Palermo, NJ, which has access to facilities vital to the marine science program.

Bertie Mae Johnson, 61; Service Supervisor Dies

By John Picinich

Funeral services were held today for Bertie Mae Johnson, assistant service supervisor of Food Service in the Student Center. She died Monday of an apparent heart attack; pronounced dead on arrival at Mountainside Hospital.

Mrs. Johnson, 61, of 23 Appleton Place, Montclair, worked in the Center’s cafeteria since the building’s opening two years ago. Previously, she had worked in Life Hall cafeteria snack bar for eight years.

"She was a very loyal employee," said Harold Ostroff, Center Food Service director. "And got along great with co-workers and students alike."

"She was basically a very fine woman," he added.

Mrs. Johnson was born in Picayune, Miss., and had lived in Houston, Tex., New Orleans, La., and Little Falls before moving to Montclair. She was a member of the Watchung Congregational Church, Montclair.

Ma Bell Lets Professor Do The Talking

A large group of students are seated in a circle in the basement classroom of Montclair State's College Hall, an instructor standing in front of them. A normal classroom situation? Almost, but not quite. What sets this class apart is the addition of a small grey and white box resembling a telephone unit placed on a desk in the front of the room. A female voice is transmitted from this box, speaking to the students and answering questions spoken into two microphones that extend from long wires on either side of the unit.

The voice belongs to Ruth Blanche, the instructor of the course in Human Sexuality. Blanche, a member of the health professions faculty at MSC, recently underwent surgery and was forced to miss the opening weeks of spring semester. She has maintained communication with her classes via a tele-lecture unit that enables her to call the class and talk to them.

Robert Rueinsky, director of the College's Media Service Center, explained that the unit is "similar in its function to a telephone but it makes listening possible to as many as 50-60 people." One or more people can speak into the unit by using the microphones. Rueinsky stated that this is the first time that the unit has ever been used to maintain communication between professor and student. The tele-lecture phone is leased by the college from New Jersey Bell Telephone Company. It's use in the past have included contacting experts in a particular subject area and enabling students to talk to them.

In Blanche's absence, the class is conducted by Dr. Frank Bartholomew, who for the past 16 years has been a school social worker in the Montclair public school system. Bartholomew called the tele-lecture unit "an exciting adventure for both the students and me."

He stated that the main advantage of the tele-lecture unit is that it gives the students contact with Blanche, which will make the transition easier when she returns. Blanche sets the tone for the class via telephone, Bartholomew explained, and she will often break into the discussion with comments.

"Of course, there is nothing better than an in person professor," Blanche commented. "But some contact is better than no contact at all."

She called the tele-lecture unit "an excellent teaching technique" but added that "you need a meeting of the minds in order for this to be successful." Blanche and Bartholomew have known each other for several years and were classmates in the doctoral program at Teacher's College, Columbia University. They worked together for two weeks prior to the beginning of the semester in setting up the course.

The two professors meet regularly to discuss what took place in the classroom that day. Blanche explained that in addition to "keeping the students on target" during the discussions, Bartholomew also relates to her any "puzzlement or bewilderment" that he observes in class.

The project is the "brainchild" of Michael Puglisi, associate dean of the School of Professional Arts and Sciences. "I knew that such a system existed when individual students are ill," Puglisi explained, having seen it used at Long Island University which has an extensive program for handicapped students.

"If it worked for absent students, why shouldn't it work in the reverse situation?" Puglisi asked. He contacted Rueinsky and Peter Macagne, of the college's business service department and arranged for the telephone to be set up in the classroom.

Puglisi commented on the amount of cooperation between different areas of the college in setting up the project. He praised the "enthusiastic support of the Media Services Center" in which John DiGio and David Fogg assisted Rueinsky in "ironing out the details."

Assistant registrars Richard Davis and Jesse Young arranged some temporary rescheduling resulting from the need to have the tele-lecture unit installed in the basement of the classroom which is wired for this specific type of equipment," according to Puglisi. A new addition to "Operation Blanche," was a use of a video tape to provide visual as well as voice contact. A camera team, supervised by John DiGio of the Media Services Center, went to Blanche's home and taped several 15 minute lectures.

Dr. Harry Hoitsma, chairman of the health professions department, said that response to the project has been good. "People feel that they're involved in something new and innovative," he said.

Hoitsma stated that the system "has brought together in one classroom, the combined strengths of two different instructors."

The use of the tele-lecture unit has not been without problems. Bartholomew complained of a lack of sound fidelity. He also cited the lack of eye contact between Blanche and the class as a disadvantage.

Puglisi said that if the unit is used again for this purpose, more refined equipment will be used as well as increased audio/visual work. Hoitsma raised the possibility of showing photographs and slides of the instructor in the first week of class in order to familiarize the class with him or her.

Both Puglisi and Hoitsma discussed the idea of increased use of the tele-lecture unit to contact experts in various academic areas. Puglisi explained that a telephone call could be prearranged with a person who, either for reasons of time or money, could come to the college. Hoitsma echoed this sentiment, saying that people from government, industry and education could be brought to the classroom via telephone.

Blanche is expected to return to class on February 15. She said that she already "has a feel" for the class.
Women on Campus

Frisbee Strikes Against Discrimination

By Kate Megargee and Barbara Margaritell

"I was always an activist and out-spoken in college and very involved in political things and the anti-war movement. It always seemed like the females were licking the stamps and the guys were making the big decisions. At that point there was some rumbling, I mean I was semi-conscious of it then."

Gloria Steinem on the women's liberation movement?

Not exactly. Shirley Grill, Bohn Hall director, is one woman on the campus who is active in promoting the awareness of women and their problems.

Shirley Grill
Emphasis on Awareness

It was during an all-male frisbee game, an unlikely source of revelation, that Grill said she really felt the blow of discrimination. Many were the protests that the game was too rough and the rules would have to be changed to suit a female player, she related.

"Maybe some of those rules are not so sane and maybe some of the rules we have in society are not so sane. It hit me at that point very clearly," she explained. "I did not like being locked out and it hit me also that it was not just my problem," she added.

Grill believes that the education of women in this pattern of discrimination "starts in the cradle when little girls are dressed in pink and little boys are dressed in blue."

One of her projects toward promoting the awareness of women was instituting a freshman oriented seminar, a program geared toward making young women more comfortable in their new surroundings and more aware of themselves as women.

Grill has also lectured to women's groups and assisted in helping women to organize themselves. She recently served on a panel that reviewed the play "Adam and Even" which is based on the work ethic of women. The panelists and audience discussed how economics affect the social conditioning in general and women in particular.

When one of the male panelists questioned the dependability of women, he was reminded that it is the secretaries who are required to clock in at a certain time and not the male executives. Grill relaxed.

Although no definite conclusions were reached, the majority of people left the meeting with an open mind and a better understanding of women's problems, the Bohn director stated.

For the past three semesters, Grill's activist nature has been apparent at the Women's Center where she teaches Perspectives on Women, a course geared toward awareness. She is also coordinator of the Women's Caucus which is an unstructured women's group consisting of students and staff members.

Hung Up Spurs For Tights

By Angela Podesta

Andy Genitti had no intention of becoming a dance major at MSC, but the computers had their own plans for Andy.

"It was all a mistake," he said. "I signed up for horseback riding and I was scheduled for a modern jazz class." To top it all off, the one credit course was the only course he was scheduled for when he came to MSC as a freshman.

As it turned out, Genitti enjoyed the course so much that he began taking more dance classes and finally decided he would major in dance as well as education, both within the speech and theater department.

ALTHOUGH GENITTI'S dancing career is quite young, his experiences have been broad. This past summer, he worked in a six week dance workshop at MSC that culminated with a performance.

It was during this course that Genitti said that he "really got into dance."

During the past Winter Session, he toured Europe with other MSC dance students. The eight day stay in London featured classes by Mont Maddox, a jazz master, and Fergus Early, a former member of the Royal Ballet.

"I was always a non-conformist, water radical, lefty type person," the six foot, 170 pound sophomore related.

At home, he discusses ballet classes while his brother talks about football games.

"At first, I was a little self-conscious," Genitti explained. However, after being around people who are as serious about dance as he is, Genitti claims he is not the least bit embarrassed about being seen in leotard and tights.

Genitti hopes to go to New York City for professional dance training and perhaps join a theater group or dance company.

Spirit Of '76 Thrives at MSC

By Gene Moore

As 1976 approaches, more is heard about nationwide planning for the monumental celebrations that will mark the 200th anniversary of American independence. A small group of faculty members and students are determined that MSC be no exception to the trend.

This group, the All College Steering Committee, is busy laying a foundation for MSC bicentennial activities which to a small extent have already begun and will continue into the 1976 school year.

THE STEERING committee, with Dr. Helen E. Royer guiding its development was officially established during the 1973 fall semester.

It is composed of various subcommittees that will deal with specific activities. These include a research and publication subcommittee that hopes to have bicentennial-related material published. There are also six committees that will represent each of the schools at MSC. These will be represented by one student from the school’s senate and one faculty member.

An all-student Bicentennial Club and Alumni Committee also exists within the framework of the steering committee.

The steering committee also hopes that different departments at MSC will be able to contribute to the Bicentennial activities by presenting various programs in their fields. As Royer put it, “We must use the media. For example, the fine arts, music and drama departments could be very effective in helping to reach everyone. But other departments, such as biology, might be able to deal with the more contemporary aspects, such as the ecology problems. We want to maintain pertinence. In an attempt to do so, we have chosen ‘From independence for America to the Interdependence of Americans’ as our Bicentennial theme.”

According to an enthusiastic Royer, the steering committee was designed “to co-ordinate the programs of different departments and schools and also to plan all-college activities.”

Royer also has a very direct aim in mind, “Our goal is to coordinate bicentennial but commemoration. We want programs dealing with arts and heritage that will enrich our academic growth,” she said.

Although activities are still largely in the planning stages, field trips have been made to historic sites such as Dey Mansion, Ringwood Manor and the Van Riper Hopper House. “These hopefully will continue into 1976 on a regular basis, but then again that depends on the gasoline situation,” Royer said.

The bicentennial plans have also affected the curriculum at MSC. The history department is now offering a course on early New Jersey history, taught by Royer.

Under the direction of Royer, whose doctoral dissertation was on the relationship of Pennsylvania and the Continental Congress, the research and publication subcommittee plans to do a study of New Jersey’s relationship with the Continental Congress.

According to Royer, other colleges in the state are also beginning to plan their bicentennial activities. “As a safeguard to avoid overlapping and duplication of activities, there is a statewide Steering Committee. For example, if William Patterson puts on a program, we would not present a similar program but instead send our students over there,” she said.

Prof Tries to Defuse Power Plant

By Susan Koenig

How does one go about stopping the New England Electric Company, from building a $1 billion atomic power plant in Charlestown, Rhode Island? Frank S. Kelland, assistant professor of physical geography, and his wife Marylin Coombs Kelland, teacher of conservation at Keen College, have already begun and will continue into the 1976 school year.

The Kellands are among the citizens of Charlestown aware of the numerous dangers and annoyances associated with atomic power plants.

“Several already existing nuclear plants have been shut down from time to time because of local radiation levels exceeding permissible levels,” Kelland said in a letter stating 10 reasons against a power plant.

Royer, the steering committee was displaying in the Teacher Corps program’s interns. Volunteers, all of whom are MSC students, also help with this aspect, she said.

Lewin remarked, “We don’t always come up with the right job for the right person,” but the effort does show somebody cares. Teaching in prisons is another function of the project, while opportunities for high school and college education for parolees is included, she added.

The project has helped about 12 people get into school, eight of whom attend MSC, Lewin reported. BILL MOULDEN, consultant for the project, related that “MSC was cooperative in helping to secure tuition for the parolees.”

“Four hundred dollars for living expenses was given by the State Manpower Corrections Program from a federal grant,” he added.

Lewin said that another important function of the program is to “get the parolees’ family back together.” The program tries to help the prisoners about three to four months before they get released.

The EX-PRISONERS are encouraged to “give assistance back to the center,” Moulden stated. “One of the prisoners has become an intern,” he revealed.

He explained that the parolees can help others who are going through what they have already experienced.

Lewin declared that from July to November there were a total of 115 cases, 84 male and 31 female. “I have only heard of two cases which I have worked with that have gone back to prison,” she revealed.

Lewin emphasized that while assistance is offered to parolees, they are not obligated to accept it. Moulden feels that it at least gives these people the “same chance as anyone else to survive.”

MSC Re-entry Program Assists Ex-convicts

By Rosanne Rosty

“Give me a fish and I will eat for a day.

Teach me to fish and I will eat for a lifetime.”

These words appear on a poster displayed in the Teacher Corps Corrections Project’s house on 856 Valley Rd. Located on the Montclair State College campus, this building houses a re-entry program to provide parolees with a link to the outside world.

MARTHA LEWIN, the program’s volunteer coordinator, feels that “club hunting” for these ex-prisoners is the major task of the program’s interns. Volunteers, all of which are MSC students, also help with this aspect, she said.

Lewin remarked, “We don’t always come up with the right job for the right person,” but the effort does show somebody cares. Teaching in prisons is another function of the project, while opportunities for high school and college education for parolees is included, she added.

The project has helped about 12 people get into school, eight of whom attend MSC, Lewin reported. BILL MOULDEN, consultant for the project, related that “MSC was cooperative in helping to secure tuition for the parolees.”

“Four hundred dollars for living expenses was given by the State Manpower Corrections Program from a federal grant,” he added.

Lewin said that another important function of the program is to “get the parolee’s family back together.” The program tries to help the prisoners about three to four months before they get released.

The EX-PRISONERS are encouraged to “give assistance back to the center,” Moulden stated. “One of the prisoners has become an intern,” he revealed.

He explained that the parolees can help others who are going through what they have already experienced.

Lewin declared that from July to November there were a total of 115 cases, 84 male and 31 female. “I have only heard of two cases which I have worked with that have gone back to prison,” she revealed.

Lewin emphasized that while assistance is offered to parolees, they are not obligated to accept it. Moulden feels that it at least gives these people the “same chance as anyone else to survive.”

Both Galumph and Chapin Hall won convincing battles this past week to remain alive. But, as with most beings that are near death and make a comeback, the gloom is not entirely gone and the celebration still has chances of being abruptly halted.

In the case of the humor magazine, it is still possible that the bill will come up on the floor of the SGA again. As for Chapin, if more housing projects can be erected, the chances are good that Chapin will become offices as had been planned.

However, before further action is taken, those who have the power to make such decisions should consider what they do.

Galumph is a Class One organization. It seems that Class One status is being treated a little too lightly if a group of that status can so easily be tossed aside without any compensations made to keep on with the service that the organization provides.

The actions necessary now do not involve abolishing a delinquent organization that has a good product to offer. Rather, efforts should be concentrated on setting the financial records of the publication straight and restoring it to operating efficiently under a constitution. This involves the workings of both the Galumph staff and the SGA together, not against each other.

In the case of Chapin Hall, however, it does not seem possible that a new dormitory or apartment complex will be making an appearance on campus at least before next September, especially considering the delays with Little Falls in using some of the quarry land.

Thus, Chapin seems quite secure for a while. Hopefully, changing a campus institution that develops such a spirit of comrade-like among its occupants into faculty offices will not come up until there is an alternative provided for the occupants. Such an alternative should provide a similar opportunity as Chapin does, where living in itself is an education.

Congratulations to the students whose efforts the administration realize that Chapin was worth saving. The residents and student representatives of SGA deserve commendation for their consistent, hard-working and efficient efforts which helped to preserve the dorm.

Park Legally

Last semester, an accident involving three cars occurred behind Webster Hall. Those students involved cited illegally parked automobiles as interfering with their ability to see clearly. Immediately after the accident, blue tickets were flying in the breeze, tucked under the windshield wipers of every illegally parked car on campus.

This semester, however, it seems that cars are blocking roadways and inhibiting the free passage of cars abound in the lots. Cars parked along the road leading to the quarry make it difficult for two cars to pass at once. Parking in the lots adjacent to the Fine Arts Building and Partridge Hall is sometimes difficult because cars make spaces where there aren’t and shouldn’t be any.

These cars are not ticketed. Does this mean that such practices which inconvenience others and provide safety hazards are sanctioned?

The fact that these cars are there in the first place shows an inconsiderate attitude on the part of their owners. In essence, what lacks is cooperation. Sure it takes a little more time and effort to walk up from the quarry. But those students who complain that there is no place to park on campus should visit the lower lots where spaces abound.

We hope that it won’t take another accident to spark an effort for safety and consideration at MSC.

The All-College Calendar Committee deliberated on a proposed academic calendar during January. We should really question the outcome of these deliberations and what effect the calendar has on us.

As a member of the committee, my primary concern were the academic, economic and social needs of students. I believe that the major factor in any college’s calendar development should be the convenience of its clientele. I submit that this was not the overriding concern in this group’s discussion.

To the Editor:

I would like to take time out to convey my thank you’s to the inconsiderate professor who blocked his white station wagon bomb in the middle of exiting lots. Since this was the only means of exiting the lot, I ran into some trouble on Wed., Feb. 6, leaving 10:15 a.m. It is ironic that so much is heard of the students’ crazy parking techniques but yet a faculty member cannot use his or her own common sense and judgement to realize that an exit is the worst place to park.

As we students may obstruct traffic at times by parking in an illegal parking space but I know that we at least have enough spaces not to park in the middle of an exit, which makes it impossible for anyone to escape.

I had a 10:45 job interview which I missed because the security guard and I were busy tracking down that professor aware of my hostile feelings.

By the way, I lost all opportunities for the job and I pray that this little incident will give him or her better discretion concerning his or her daily parking.

I indeed hope that he or she exercises more intellectual teaching in the classroom than he or she does parking in the lot. Good luck to him or her.

To the Editor:

"Isn’t the decision to fire a professional, to disapprove of new course offerings or the decision not to invite a speaker a restriction on freedom of speech?... The First Amendment is not some absolute but has restrictions, many of which could be used to justify restricting Shockley’s speaking engagements."

I sincerely disagree that firing a professional, disapproving a new course offering or deciding not to invite someone to speak necessarily involves a violation of the First Amendment. However, even if the above acts did constitute such violations it is disheartening to hear it implied that such violations should be used as a justification for infringing upon another’s constitutional rights. The fundamental point is that those who desire to speak in a constitutional manner should not be arbitrarily restricted by some individual or group no matter how ardently she, he or they believe they have the monopoly on truth.

Although I personally disagree with Shockley’s arguments I doubt that he has exceeded the previously defined limits of freedom of speech. If Dr. Cherry believes Shockley has violated a group’s constitutional rights he should effect an arrest or sue Shockley. If Shockley is to be restrained it should be for violations of law as interpreted by our judicial system not by a random collection of individuals who would usurp for themselves the roles of prosecutor, judge, and executioner.

It is my hope that those who disagree with Shockley will use their efforts to further freedom of speech by repeatedly stating their differing views as opposed to suppressing freedom of speech by advocating the non-judicial restraint of individuals with whom they currently disagree. For even though I disagree with Shockley’s arguments, I wonder who Dr. Cherry will wish to non-judicially restrain next.

To the Editor:

We thank the men of APO. We think that each member deserves special credit and recognition for having helped so many MSC students. Their used book store was a great success and was a really nice break for so many students who are tired of paying outrageously high book bills at the onset of each new semester.

The used book store was very well organized and this avoided long waiting lines and endless questions.

We, along with many others, think APO deserves a lot of credit.

Academic Needs

Revamping Of Its Trends

DATA

The fact that method reigns over substance, that the cost of "relevancy" has often been excellence, that innovation frequently become an end in itself, that academic freedom is defined vaguely and practiced selectively, that mass education has brought with it a general lowering of standards--these are among the salient day's marks academia in the wake of "progressive" education and the great student revolution of the 1960's.

As I have noted before, any redirection in such trends must begin ultimately with the fundamentals and particularly with the recognition that our college and academias in general lack purpose-spiritual, moral and educational.

In trying to analyze why this is so, it seems to me that the rise of today's "quality" and social "relativism" has incited the formulators of educational theory to the point where such theory cannot be put forth in other than purely methodological terms. Who's to say that the classics are more important than the Beatles? Who's to say that our way of life is "better" than that of the communists? It may be for you, but who is to say it is for me?

SUPERIOR

There is some knowledge which is more important to know than other knowledge. There are certain values which are superior to other values. It is known to us what that knowledge is and what those values are and it should be our purpose to teach these and to teach the processes by which we come to recognize them as such. In this way we will be equipping a class of citizens with the roots they will need not only to appreciate the fullness of life but also to make those intelligent decisions upon which our future depends.

Center Services Lacking

By Karen Wangner

Who Is Accountable?

Those days most of us seem to be living without personal responsibility for our lives, living without blame - yet without innocence - in a world without tragedy, per se, but multiple "failures" of multiple "systems" resulting in multiple "crises." Some of these crises may or may not affect us, depending upon our spot on that matrix.

Tragedy requires personal responsibility - which we do not assume. Guilt requires personal choice - which we do not want to make. Choice implies alternatives - have we any? Without choice, we are not responsible, thus without "guilt." Our "crises" becomes not tragedy but tragic farce: triumphal on the metaphysical banana skin of modern life.

LACKING

When I read my article on the fourth floor office moves in the last issue of the MONTCLARION, I would not have implied this statement. Who is it implied? Arthur Berman, writing in The New York Times Magazine section on "American Needs", says: "The Center administrators is another topic which I consider important. It seems that for almost two years many student organizations have been waiting for these administrators to take care of small tasks in and around their offices. Well, it looks like they have finally heard us, but these organizations were asking, You may not believe it, but, by the end of this semester, we have waited all this time to be completed is going to get done. I just hope that it will continue, and that when an organization requests a job to be done, it will not take more then a week or two at most.

Ferguson Excites With High Notes

In an explosive display of talent, Maynard Ferguson and his orchestra treated over 1000 jazz fans to an evening of the best in high note and arrangement of Jim Webb's solo performances. Ferguson did not dominate the music but became a part of it. With the exception of his brief solos where the expert trumpeter displayed his unique talent for hitting the high, almost unattainable notes, the soloists from the orchestra were most frequently in the limelight.

THE FIRST half of the show featured the music of some of the jazz immortals. The themes and music were then improvised and expounded by the various members of the relatively young ensemble, with each section of the orchestra receiving a lengthy exposition in the solo performances.

The orchestra opened the second half of the show with an arrangement of Jim Webb's "MacArthur Park" that transcended the boundaries of jazz and included interpretations of the tune in the classical, pop and rock veins. These intermingled with the jazz to give the listener an abstract rather than concrete musical experience.

For his finale, Ferguson chose his own arrangement of the Beatles' hit "Hey Jude." Besides converting the basic sound into a bright arrangement of brass, Ferguson added a personal touch.

SEVERAL MINUTES into the arrangement, Ferguson's sidemen slowly started to drift off stage and the audience disappeared for Hollander's release, is the most solid, polished performance to date by any of the former foursome.

FOLLOWING close on the heels of his number one single "Photograph," is Ringo's newest effort "You're Sixteen," a remake of an early rock and roll hit. The vitality which he injects into the performance is a breath of fresh air in an atmosphere where musicians take themselves too seriously. The obvious enthusiasm which greeted the release shows that such a fresh breath is more than welcome.

Meanwhile Paul McCartney and Wings have returned to a style with which the group is definitely more at ease. After the tortured "rock" of "Helen Wheels," the group has let McCartney return to the smoother and more electric rock sound which has been his trademark throughout the years. "Jet" while basically a rock and roll song, does serve to remind one that McCartney does have the talent to become a major force in guiding the changes within rock.

Without the tempering force of McCartney, John Lennon's thesis has not been able to capture the sound which will give it the mass acceptance that it deserves. His intense lyrics and music, coupled with his basic forthrightness and personality, has made all of his offerings palatable to the masses. "Mind Games," his newest release, while considered one of his finest efforts to date, is destined to languish in the lower 25 of the top 50 because it is simply too strong for the average listener.
SLEEPER

Allen Evokes Nutty Laughter

By Mike Finneran

In reviewing a Woody Allen film, one need merely ask how long and how loud the laughs were. "Sleeper" provides laughs that are loud and long.

This latest Allen opus tells the tale of Miles Monroe, meek, mild-mannered health food restaurateur and part-time clarinetist, who enters Saint Vincent's Hospital in New York in 1973 for ulcer problems and awakens from a hibernation in tim foil two centuries later to discover a world of computerized humans and humanized computers.

YOU SEE Albert Shanker blew up the world and the survivors developed a society that worships the works and artifacts of Xavier Cugat, eats deep fat and hot fudge sundaes for health, fondles metallic nodules for sexual stimulation and dozens of other things.

One marvels at the nonsensical goings-on and wonders how this guy Allen dreams up these things. But Allen dreams up these things. But one need only recall previous movies involving Allen's impersonation of a robot (robots are gay, frivolous and bumbling to suit their masters), the inept security policemen on his trail with a bazooka that keeps backingfire, and the discovery of a fossilized Volkswagen in good running condition.

Props play an important part in "Sleeper." There are giant vegetables as well as a huge chicken, a giant matching with a huge, unwinding tape, and of course, the "orgasmator," a cylindrical chamber into which two people enter and out of which everyone is well acquainted with the Allen preoccupation with sex.

SLEEPER is on sight gags, a few such as "Take the Money and Run," Allen's favorite performance- a "woodwind quintet" and sex ("I've gone 200 years for health, fondles metallic nodules for sexual stimulation and dozens of others.

Although the emphasis in "Sleeper" is on sight gags, a few ingenious one liners shine through such as ""I wrote my first composition..." ("...he's rated and animated!")
RIDING TIME
The MSC Riding Club attended its first spring show at Four Seasons Farm in Readington. The club co-sponsored the event with William Paterson College.

Montclair State ribbon winners were Carol Hicks, who placed third in the Beginner Walk-Trot-Canter category, Barb Stolarz, with a third in the Beginner Walk-Trot category, and Carol Anderson and Carol Fekete who garnered fourths in Advanced Walk-Trot-Center and Advanced Walk-Trot, respectively.

FENCERS NEEDED

Judges and Mistakes Befall MSC Gymnasts
Pushover judges, along with Montclair State mistakes and the loss of star Eileen Wars (sprained ankle), led to an 86.28-76.71 gymnastics victory for Trenton State College, as they handed the Squaws their first defeat of the season.

In the first event of the meet, TSC’s coach, Phyllis Cooper, protested a two of her gymnasts scores, complaining that in her opinion, the scores were too low.

THE RULE book on gymnastics states that, with any individual score under 8.0, the judges evaluations can not vary more than 1.0 point. For example, if there were three judges and the scores that they gave were 7.5, 7.0, 6.1 (a difference of .7), a coach shouldn’t protest but if the scores were 7.5, 7.0, 6.1 (a difference of 1.4), then the coach could conceivably protest. Unfortunately, the rule isn’t clear, because it doesn’t say that a coach definitely should or shouldn’t protest scores that are less than 1.0 apart.

This rule was brought to the judges attention by MSC, only to have officials go along with the latter interpretation (the coach may protest).

What this all comes down to is the fact that the Trenton State coach complained; holding up the meet for approximately 15 minutes; eventually bullying the judges into increasing each of the two protested scores by 3 points even though the judges scores were less than 1.0 apart.

WHEN THE Squaw's mentor, the soft spoken Linda Monaco, filed a protest to possibly raise an MSC vaulting score, she was refused.

The whole protest issue will be brought to the attention of the International Federation of Gymnasts, who will decide whether a coach can or cannot protest scores less than 1.0 points apart.

Gas Shortage May Thwart Weightlifting

By Len Guida

"People have misconceptions about weightlifters. They're not uncoordinated. They're quick, explosive, agile, and flexible. They're probably the best conditioned athletes around...more so than wrestlers, gymnasts or even swimmers."

Faculty advisor Berry Hennis can expound for hours on the skill, stamina and speed weightlifters possess. His energies are being consumed by securing accommodations for the weightlifters for the 13th National Collegiate Weightlifting Championship to be held March 9-10 in Panzer Gym.

YET HENNIS is more concerned over the consummation of previous plans. "The first time the championship has been held at Montclair State...and still more coming in, the only problem seems to be in the gas shortage. Hopefully, most of the teams will make it."

Hennis was not impressed in emphasizing the importance of the championship. "People around here don't realize the importance of this championship. This is the first time the championship has been held at Montclair State, and this is only the 13th championship. Last year we took fourth. This year we're hoping for first."

According to Hennis, the preparation and publicity has been phenomenal. "We've sent out 10,000 letters. We've sold hundreds of shirts and have ordered 500 more. The New York Times and the Newark Star-Ledger are going to run articles on the meet that could possibly be televised by ABC's Wide World of Sports or CBS Sports Spectacular."

ROBERTA VASCO, the student director, has been Hennis' right-hand woman. She's handling the accommodations for the visiting teams and has been a tremendous help with publicity.

Defending champs, Penn State, along with LSU and Western Michigan, are the stiffest obstacles in the path of an MSC title. MSC Olympian-Phil Grippolzi, who owns every collegiate record at the 198 lb. weightclass, will be shooting for an American record.

Other MSC potential firsts are Bob Giordano, the National Collegiate record holder in the 281 lb. snatch, Mike McNeil, the National Teenage record holder in the 242 lb. snatch, and super-heavyweight Terry Manon, who tips the scales at 320 pounds. The lifts in the competition are the snatch and the two-hand clean and jerk. Danis Drehr, sidelined with a leg injury, will serve as MSC team trainer.

HENNIS FURTHER added that Brendal Byrne, NJ governor, has been invited and Bob Hoffman, the father of American weightlifting, will definitely attend. Big-name athletes and world weightlifting record holders will also be on hand to view the musclemen in action.

Tickets are on sale until March 6 in the Student Center and the Panzer Gym lobby. Hennis is most confident that Panzer will be packed for both days of the competition.

Knick's Spouse Shuns Celebrity Mystique

By Renee Novelli

When one thinks of a celebrity's wife, visions of a chic, aloof beauty come to mind. This is not true of Dr. Ernestine Schiant, the newly-wedded Mrs. Bill Bradley. The wife of the New York Knicks forward is a down-to-earth, unpretentious individual.

SHE ADMITS of not wanting to stay in her husband's shadow. "I do not want to be known simply as the wife of Bill Bradley. I want to have my own identity."

This is also the basis of her relationship with her maid name while teaching. When asked if she finds her students concentrating more on the Knicks than on work, Schiant replied, "My students have been wonderful. They simply congratulated me and remained very tactful."

Born in Passau, Germany, Schiant received her BA, MA, and Ph D from Emory University. She is currently an Associate Professor of German here at MSC.

SCHIANT'S ENJOYMENT for teaching is emphasized by her fondness of literature and the arts. "There isn't any difference between my work and hobbies. They are one in the same."

She frequently the tennis courts and attributes her love for swimming to the fact of being born in the summer. Schiant feels she is athletic to a point; she steers clear of competition.

Schiant first met her husband three years ago while working on a film about the late poet Marianne Moore. "He's a very likable and enthusiastic individual who should motivate and excite Montclair State," says Brown, who expects exceptional strength from his midfield. Even though the team's experience is of "low caliber," the new head mentor expects the most from every player.

False Alarms Stymie Swimmers' Efforts

Everyone out of the pool!" Montclair State's security guards have a nasty habit of scaring the daddy out of people. This did to the women's swim squad last week in the form of two false alarm fires.

Coach Kay Meyer asserted that it interfered with two practices. With arms outstretched, she exclaimed, "One of the security guards came in and told the girls to get out of the pool and get dressed!"

ACCORDING TO MEYER, the team can't afford to be distracted with the rough schedule of two meets a week and only three days of practice. Besides that, premier swimmer Diane Jaglofski had a sore back. In sitting out a day of practice, and Denise Killeen had a cold.

These minor hindrances did not stop the MSC team from being fired up against Trenton State. The final score was 34-22. The Swimmers' final score does not do justice to the spirit and atmosphere of the defending champions. The meet was held last week in Pecos Pool.

Third Time Up. Montclair State swimmer Nancy Relling gaps for a breath during the running of the 100 yard breast stroke in MSC's loss to Trenton State. The meet was held last week in Pecos Pool.

Indians String Up Pioneers, Vikings

By John Zawolski

Sophomore Jeff Auerbacher sank a 10-foot jump shot with seven seconds remaining to give Montclair State a 62-61 victory over Princeton, Monday night.

The Vikings trailed 58-57 with 1:23 remaining, but went ahead on a jumper by Al Yoda. The Indians connected from underneath putting the Vikings up by one with 158 seconds remaining. The ball exchanged hands several times before Yoda gunned in a jumper for a 61-60 Vic king advantage. Auerbacher then clinched the game with his jumper. Upsala was unable to get off a final shot, losing the ball on a faulty pass.

Squaws' Height Spurs Princeton's Downfall

By Chris Natoli

A determined but undersized Princeton University women's basketball team struggled against an aggressive MSC five to no avail at Panzer Gym Monday night. It was height along with the consistency and speed of the Squaws that led to a decisive 80-27 victory over Princeton.

CAPTAIN JIM RAKE shot an impressive six for eight in the second half, while teammate Chuck Holland (according to Galen, playing one of his better games), shot eight for 12 in the game. Both had 18 points apiece while Auerbacher chipped in 10. The team shot 47% from the floor and 67% from the line. Yoda paced Upsala with 26.

By winning MSC cut off Upsala's chances for a NCAA tournament bid. Upsala did the same to MSC last year. Gelston feels, "We have a chance to be considered, because we played strong schools in spite of our weak record, the committee may take this into consideration." Jersey City State, the MSC champs have clinched a bid in the tournament.

The Indians can improve their record when they go up against Jersey City away tomorrow with tip off time at 8:15. The Tribe will conclude their regular season action against Hartwick College at Panzer Gym on Tuesday at 8:15 pm.

MSC Shoots For Tournament Crown

Montclair State will play host to the quarter final and semi final rounds of the Fourth Annual New Jersey Invitational Women's International Basketball Tournament this Saturday and Sunday (Feb. 23-24) at Panzer Gymnasium.

The Squaws of Coach Cathy Paskert have gained the second seed in the eight team tourney. Unbeaten William Paterson College (12-0) has been seeded first. The two squads met at the MSC court last week, with WPC coming away with a 52-41 win.

William Paterson will take on Princeton at 2:30 pm.

ACTION WILL continue on Sunday afternoon with the championship game slated for a not yet determined neutral site on March 3.

Ticket prices are $5 for adults and 50 cents for college and high school students with validated I.D.'s.

By John Delery

"Ya Gotta Believe," this catchy phrase used by Mets ace Tug McGraw last fall during his team's fight for the pennant now applies to the MSC wrestlers after their solid victory in the Metropolitan Wrestling Championships held last Friday and Saturday here at Panzer Gym.

The Indians, placing nine men in the finals and amassing 166 points to almost double their closest opponent, move into the nationals they now look like a team to be rendered with.

FRIDAY THE meet opened up with the quarterfinal matches and even though the Indians breezed through them with a minimum of trouble, unforeseen difficulties almost arose that could have turned the match around completely.

Thursday, Craig Spencer and Nabil Guketlov both showed up to warm up with the team. The next day both were sick and it wasn't until the night before the start of the tournament that they were declared fit enough to compete.

"Without them we could've been in real jeopardy of losing, it could've turned the whole tournament around. That would've given us only seven men in the finals and could've made the final outcome a lot closer," related Coach Larry Sciacchetano.

"But that night Guketlov and Spencer made their opponents look a little under the weather when they won with a pin and 17-5 superior decision respectively. All the other MSC wrestlers won or had first round byes so the entire unit moved into Saturday's semi-final round.

Before the tournament Sciacchetano had thought that MSC would have a shot at all 10 weight classes and definitely a shot at eight positions but the Amazing Kraskin couldn't have done a comparable job of predicting as Sciacchetano did. Nine out of a possible 10 Indian wrestlers made the finals but again not without some slight problems that would drive even a slight cardiac patient right up a wall.

Bob Woods (158) waited until the last eight seconds to take down his man in a 3-2 decision and Greg DiPacechino (142), though not waiting quite as long, barely eked out a 3-1 decision to assure himself a place for a chance at a Metropolitan Championship.

SO SATURDAY night came and when the teams lined up to be introduced it looked more like Montclair State against an all-star team than the finals of this big tournament. The only missing MSC wrestler was freshman heavyweight Ed Psota who had lost earlier in the day 5-4 to Don Hart of Seton Hall.

The winning Indians looked like they were going to hog the entire tournament and take home all the first place trophies, as Ed Alber (118) Spencer (134) and Guketlov (126) won successive decisions. But then the streak was stopped as Tony Defendus of Trenton State College beat DiPacechino 8-4 in overtime in what was probably the most exciting match of the entire tournament.

From then on the Indians were able to win only one of the next six matches when Steve Strelka (177) pinned Chris Wolken from King Point.

"NOSE TO THE GRINDSTONE": Bob Woods, Montclair State's 158 pounder, has FDU's Jeff Andressan in a near fall position and pinned his foe at 6:10 of the bout.

I was pleasantly surprised that everyone wrestled well. We pulled some upsets in the semi and that's what you need to win," explained Sciacchetano.

Post, besides taking the 142 crown also captured the 150 pound title as Lou chiodo pinned a second straight runner up tag on Oscar Zavala. Trenton State's Bill Hayes (158) Glenn Carson (190) and Mike Dunnin (167) took home first place trophies in their respective weights and Andy Frick of Wagner College broke through this three team monopoly with a victory at 158 pounds.

So if Montclair State was a little dissatisfied with the competition in the finals they have only to wait until next weekend in Wilkes Barre, Pa., to face what looks like a Who's Who of college wrestling.

"I GOTCHA": Montclair State's Tom Stokes picks up some riding time on Glassboro State's Pete Sanvon during a preliminary bout in the Metropolitan Wrestling Championships, held at Panzer Gym last weekend. Stokes won the bout 5-2, took a second place in the tourney, and MSC won the team title over C.W. Post.

"From what I have heard we will remain second with Wilkes retaining the top spot. But if you're looking for a winner in the nationals you just can't tell. Everyone wrestles their best therefore every team has a chance," concluded Sciacchetano.
