Justice Lecture: Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas addresses a crowded Student Center ballroom Tuesday night.

Douglas Lecture Leaves Unanswered Questions

By Peter Fischl

"You have the right to organize and march on the state house or on the Congrass," lectured Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas on Tuesday night in the Student Center.

"Law and the quality of life today" was the topic discussed at length by the 82 year old justice.

Somehow, the champion of the liberalist movement fell short of his reputation. Conservatively dressed in a white shirt, tie and grey suit, Douglas urged the people to organize. "Be militant," he said;

"You CAN'T just write letters," he explained, gesturing often with his hands. "You've got to get down to Washington and bang on a few doors." However Douglas failed to say whose door should be banged on.

The only specific criticism expounded by the elderly justice involved ITT's payment of one million dollars to the CIA for the subversion of the late Dr. Allende's Marxist government in Chile.

An ardent conservationist, Douglas devoted much of the time to the ecology issue citing Vermont and Oregon as leaders in "classifying" land use for industrialization and non-industrialization purposes.

"What did it cost us to get where we are today in terms of other values?" he asked. He defined "other values" as pure air, water and wildlife.

"ORGANIZATION" SEEMED to be Douglas' key word. "People all back and say, let the experts handle it," commented the justice who sees the conglomerates as an enemy of the people, "but then the corporations get it by default."

Speaking of corporations, he mentioned that "only 18 nations in the world today have a gross national product equal to the sales of General Motors."

Turning for a moment to the energy crisis, Douglas explained plans presently under investigation to erect a solar energy plant in Arizona that could produce enough power to light every school in the United States. "But," he injected with a note of sarcasm, "the reason nobody likes solar energy is because nobody owns the sun."

Following the speech, there was a question and answer period during which the Justice evaded questions, answered them in an effort to circumvent the issue, or ignored them.

The Council of New Jersey State College Locals has begun movement towards a strike action that could prove "highly detrimental to the student body of MSC," according to SGA president Mike Messina.

Council president Marcoantonio Lacatena stated that the individual state college locals will meet next week to write to the council to "call a strike when we feel it is necessary. Unfortunately, I think a strike is a bigger possibility now than it was last February," he said, referring to the faculty strike narrowly averted last winter.

At a bargaining session between the state and the union on Oct. 23, the union presented a package of demands that include a salary increase and job security.

MESSINA STATED "A faculty strike is not to our benefit...we should be concerned with getting the education we paid for." He expressed his desire that the SGA's of the state colleges "remain a third party in the strike situation. That decision -- whether or not we should support the strike on a statewide level -- has to come from the New Jersey Students' Association (NJSA)."

President of the NJSA Angelo Genova said that the matter is at the present time "subject to discussion," and will be finalized at a meeting on Saturday. "All the member colleges have to be in agreement as to whether or not they want to support the faculty strike," said Genova. If a unanimous decision cannot be reached, he explained, then it will be up to the individual SGA's to support or oppose the strike, without the backing of the NJSA.

Genova expressed his concern that the faculty strike may have an adverse affect on a unified fight against the tuition hike pending for the state colleges. Genova concurred, noting that the state could use the faculty demands to justify a tuition hike.

LACATENA ARGUED that the faculty demands for job security will "probably help organize the tuition fight." The union leader explained that a tuition hike will serve to reduce enrollments at the state colleges. Smaller enrollments would necessitate smaller faculties, hence massive faculty layoffs.

Frank Mason, the state's negotiator, has informed the Council that the state needs time to "assess its position" in the Union package. He has stated that no further action will be taken on the issue before Dec. 1.

Lacatena and Messina agreed that data is unreasonable because the state's budget will be completed by that time, and negotiations after that time will be virtually impossible.

Soffer Exhibition Removed from MSC

By Donald Scaroni

Over half a dozen of Saison Soffer's metal sculptures were vandalized last Wednesday evening resulting in removal of the exhibit from campus, according to Harry Rosenzweig, cultural programming director.

In a meeting with Vincent Calabresi, vice president of administration and finance, the insurance company and the sculptor, it was decided the exhibit would be taken down and removed from MSC.

The work is presently being stored in Life Hall and will remain until further plans are made, said William J. Kervick, director of business services.

ACCORDING TO Kervick, the artist claims four pieces with a total value of $22,000 were completely destroyed, and two pieces valued totally at $7000 require repair.

Soffer, said Rosenzweig, was hurt personally by the news. He explained, "Something like this is a very personal thing to a sculptor, it's like someone hitting your own child."

Rosenzweig views the incident as a tragedy for MSC. He said the tragedy isn't in the damaged sculptures alone, but in the blow it caused to the morale of those who worked so hard to bring them here in the first place.

Kervick said he attributes the vandalism to the fragility of the sculptures and their location in "a bad spot." He said if the insurance company saw the exhibit before they accepted it, they would probably have dropped the coverage.

KERVICK REMARKED the art is easily destroyed. When you think of metal, he explained, you think of something almost indestructible; but that is not the case with this work. "It is done in such a way that the pieces are balanced and welded in very fine tangents," Kervick assessed.

As a result of the damage, Kervick said he is "reluctant to ask the state to display that kind of item again unless it is under a 24 hour guard."

James Lockhart, director of security, said he would not be able to offer a full time security guard to watch the sculptures because there is no room in his budget for one.

Rosenzweig agrees that people should be made aware of the expense, time and difficulties of a public art exhibit. If people know other people are watching and care what happens on campus, maybe incidents like this would never happen, the programmer director added.

SOFFER MIGHT consider other college campuses for his work, said Rosenzweig. He noted that the artist has pieces at NYU and Harvard which have been "reasonably secure."

In regard to the insurance money, Kervick said Soffer would have to submit a formal claim in writing stating exactly what he should expect to get.

Kervick said if the artist puts in the claim of $20,000 to $25,000 as he is expected to, he would have to justify the value and show that he has actually sold things in this price range before.

Winter Session Secure for This January

By Lillian A. French

MSC's Winter Session will proceed as planned according to Dr. Irwin Gawley, vice-president for academic affairs. Its future was in serious doubt until October 25 when MSC administrators decided it would be financially possible.

Winter Session's demise was being considered because of MSC's fixed budget and additional budgetary cuts to other state colleges.

MSC's budget is presently $20 million, Gawley noted. Previously when salary, fuel and utility costs arose, the state absorbed the additional increases that the college's budget could not absorb. This year, however, "the governor has said you will get no additional money for salary increases and fuel and utility increases," declared Gawley.

THE VICE-PRESIDENT for academic affairs then indicated that out of MSC's $20 million fixed budget, $1.6 million must be allotted for salary, fuel and utility hikes.

Gawley also indicated that other state colleges have incurred greater budgetary cuts than MSC. The state department of higher education has "axed" MSC, therefore, to provide $139,000 to aid its sister institutions, he related.

After taking the total additional expense into account Vincent Calebree, the vice-president of administration and finance, was of the opinion that Winter Session could be run. Winter Session's costs consist of the admitted open-to-the-faculty (which is an increase to their regular salary) and also the normal fixed costs of running the college.

One of Gawley's concerns about Winter Session is that two years ago the program had an enrollment of 2400 students at no tuition charge. Last year, however, when tuition was levied, enrollment dropped to 900 students. Gawley sees no decrease in both the amount of courses offered and the number of students enrolling this year.

The expansion of Summer Session was not luck enough to escape the financial chopping block. Scheduled to begin on May 27, the session was to increase the number of courses offered between the end of spring semester and the start of the summer session. Gawley indicated that no curtailment of what is usually offered but he added, "we don't have the funds to extend the program to a large series of course offerings."

Registration for Winter Session will proceed as planned with materials being distributed between Nov. 1 and Nov. 27.

Blood Drive to Aid Bloomfield Resident

By Michael Droppa

Unpredictable is the only way to describe Frank Nann's day. Nann is a hemophiliac. His major problem in battling this disease is internal bleeding at the shoulder and elbow joints.

Nann's life is unpredictable because the bleeding can start at any time, anywhere, accompanied by excruciating pain and swelling of the joints. When this happens, Nann must go immediately to a hospital to receive a clear liquid called konyene, the clotting agent in blood.

Two pints of blood give Nann the amount of konyene necessary to stop the bleeding and he is able to continue his normal activities.

"If I don't get to a hospital within six to 12 hours, the blood will back up, causing death," he explained.

Because blood costs $50 a pint, and because a state program which paid the costs of the necessary transfusions is being discontinued in December, Nann and his wife and daughter are in a financially perilous situation.

The job at a Bloomfield Pathmark supermarket that the 19-year-old holds yields him $130 a week. However, Nann will be the beneficiary of the Alpha Phi Omegas bi-annual blood drive to be conducted next Wednesday in the Student Center ballrooms from 10 am to 4 pm. Members of the MSC community who donate blood for Nann will also be entered in the Easter Seals and St. John's, East Orange, enabling them to get a pint of blood free for themselves or a member of their families.

"I run up an average monthly bill of $400," Nann remarked, "and with my salary being only $120 a week, the payment is not going to be easy."

HE ADDED, "Although I have received letters from various state officials concerning the state aid, attempts to continue it, they say, are futile because of the program's $500,000 deficit."

"A problem facing all hemophiliacs," Nann noted, "is the possibility of catching hepatitis. If a germ is present in the blood from which the konyene is extracted, the recipient is susceptible to hepatitis and this can lead to bleeding of the liver, which means the need for more blood."

Although the likelihood of a hepatitis-producing germ being in the blood from which the konyene is extracted is slight, every 1000 individuals, once contracted, relapses can occur.

Complicating the situation is a hereditary disease which causes uncontrollable bleeding. Understandably, the disease forces the individual to eliminate all sports and to cut physical activities to a minimum.

CAR Petitions Against Swahili's Cloudy Future

In light of a petition being circulated by the Committee Against Racism (CAR) to "save" the Swahili language courses at MSC, Wolfgang B. Fleischmann, dean of the Humanities School, stated that "We are not intending to terminate" the program.

Dr. Robert Cherry, a professor in the economics department and a member of CAR, explained that the committee has "300 to 400" signatures on petitions protesting the possibility of the cancellation of the Swahili courses.

A rumor that Kean security police were presently equipped with fire arms was dispelled and clarified in phone interviews with Louis Boglen, deputy director of Kean State campus security, and James Logue, editor-in-chief of the Kean student newspaper, "The Independent."

"Our officers do not carry guns at the present time," Boglen said over the phone. "The gun request was proposed by the campus security police. We feel we are ill-equipped to do our job here," he continued.

"THE OFFICERS are not carrying guns now," Logue confirmed over the phone. Further confirmation of the present situation was made after speaking to several Kean College students, who said they had never seen campus police carrying any guns, nor had they ever heard about the gun proposal.

"The Hair Report is definitely a black-white issue," the flyer states. According to Cherry, CAR feels "not making a commitment" about the black-white issue, said that the professor also teaches a course in the economics department and a course that Ngunjiri teaches is also taught by Wa-Njau Mwangi, who is the Swahili courses, said that Ngunjiri remarked that he

UNION — — A request by the Kean College campus security police to carry guns is pending approval by the Board of Trustees of the college. A decision could be reached next month when the trustees reconvene.

Logue went on to say that "No official decision has been reached yet. According to our sources, the request was made by security about a year ago."

Logue commented, "We feel we are fully trained and qualified law officers. We have had several armed robberies on campus, and a shooting incident last semester where an official Newark policeman attending classes here was attacked on campus and shot the assailant in the hand."

The job at a Bloomfield Pathmark supermarket that the 19-year-old holds yields him $130 a week. However, Nann will be the beneficiary of the Alpha Phi Omegas bi-annual blood drive to be conducted next Wednesday in the Student Center ballrooms from 10 am to 4 pm. Dr. Robert Cherry, a professor in the economics department and a member of CAR, explained that the committee has "300 to 400" signatures on petitions protesting the possibility of the cancellation of the Swahili courses. The petitions will continue to be circulated on campus, he added.

"We're concerned about low enrollment," Fleischmann said, adding that the departments have 20 students between them and this is "just about minimal for a course."

NGARI NGUNJIRI, who teaches the Swahili courses, said that Fleischmann had told him the programs would continue for a year and a half. "That's the only thing I know," the professor added yesterday in a phone interview.

However, the Humanities School dean emphasized that "there is no firm deadline" or limit on the course's life.

According to Cherry, CAR feels that there might be a movement against Ngunjiri. He explained that the professor also teaches a course in each of the history and English departments, but that these courses may also be cut.

Cherry noted that the history course that Ngunjiri teaches is also taught by Robert Mavungi, who is currently on leave.

He accused the administration of "not making a commitment" about the Swahili courses.

NGUNJIRI REMARKED that he had been told by the foreign languages department that if enrollment continues to drop, the courses may be cut.

The professor stressed that his Swahili course was the only non-European language course taught at MSC. "When I teach Swahili, I teach African culture also," he commented.

"This is no longer an isolated world. People have to stop seeing other countries through the eyes," Ngunjiri concluded.

According to a flyer distributed by CAR, predicts that "the outbreak on Swahili will be followed by other outbreaks."

The flyer also protests the "marginal status" of the course. "We, in CAR, hope that this attack on Swahili will be seen as part of an attack on education and not as a black-white issue," the flyer states.

People" on Tues., Nov. 5 in Russ Hall Lounge at 7:30 pm.

The program, sponsored by Phi Alpha Theta (the history honors society), will stretch over two days. Allen will return Wednesday at 4 pm to present a lecture in Dr. Peter Pastor's contemporary European history class on "Transnational Aspects of Fascism."

"Did the German people support Hitler?" remarked Allen in a telephone interview. "Even in the street to street fighting in the end you would see a number of hanged bodies with the words, 'your traitor,' written on them. All of this had an effect on the German people."

WHY WAS fascism successful between the great wars and not since, why did the coalition of leftist parties collapse after the rise of national socialism, what type of support did the Nazi's receive and what type of person was the average Nazi are questions that will be analyzed during the two lectures.

Following each lecture, Allen will hold a discussion period where students can ask questions or air their views on related subjects.

Allen holds a high opinion of the audiences that he has found at colleges: "My experience is that given the right question, there is more intellectual curiosity than before."

According to Dr. Clarence Pate, advisor to Phi Alpha Theta, Allen receives the same high respect from his colleagues. "He is very involved in research and his work is concrete. He is also very much involved in innovative teaching," Pate said.

Italian Club

By Mary Cuomo

From a group of students lobbying in Trenton in 1968 to the granting of a $1400 scholarship last year, the MSC Italian Club has been anything but immobile.

A Class Two organization, the club was organized when students fought to have a teacher certificate program for an Italian language major and minor approved for MSC.

Today the club sponsors many fund raising events in order to give a freshman majoring in Italian a scholarship.

The members of the group are also engaged in academic pursuits.

They conduct a high school seminar for senior students and promote MSC's Italian department and offer a tutoring service for students of the Italian language. Currently, 20 students are being assisted by seven advanced Italian students under the supervision of a department professor.

MIKE CORBOSIERO, president of the club, stressed that "The Italian Club is open to all people, not just Italians. Our purpose is to keep the Italian culture alive."

In the past, the group has sponsored lectures in both English and Italian, dances, raffles, fashion shows and soccer games.

The organization is also trying to promote public relations for MSC. An indoor soccer game has been scheduled with a community team from Elizabeth.

Because it is a Class Two organization, the group does not get a guideline or budget from the SGA. Members of the club pay a $2 fee per semester which allows them to attend the club's activities free.

Lesson One:
Kids Must Play

The removal of the sculptures of Sasson Soffer from the lawn between College Hall and College High School was accurately termed "a tragedy" by cultural programming director Harry Rosenzweig.

The abstract works, made of metal pieces welded together, had been on display on the lawn when they were bent, taken apart and generally abused.

Perhaps this occurrence is a statement of our society. The damaging of other international prominent works of art such as Michelangelo's "Pietà" and Picasso's "Guernica" has also been a display against and artist's concept and labor.

The theft of other student works that have been displayed in the library or at other points on campus is also a distressing symptom of a disease of disrespect.

We sincerely hope that the vandalism against the sculptures was done by visitors to the campus and not by the college's students. We feel that the students of MSC should be mature enough and have enough respect for the effort of an artist than to purposely destroy a library or at other points on campus is also a distressing symptom of a disease of disrespect.

While the forced removal of the artworks puts the college in a bad light, it also slams the efforts of not only the artist but the many people who worked to have the sculptures displayed.

Should future artwork be displayed at MSC, we hope that the campus community will make it their responsibility to protect such pieces of sculpture.

Flyers Litter
MSC Grounds

One of the common practices of communication on campus is the distribution of leaflets: the printing of single-sheet flyers which are passed out in the Student Center or left on automobile windshields in the parking lots.

These flyers, usually mimeographed or dittoed off, then find their way to the garbage can rather than using the Center's steps or parking lot as a receptacle.

Consumers Beware: Fraud Infects Organic Food

By Lillian A. French

The past few years have witnessed an acute concern on the part of American consumers with the content of the foods they eat. This interest explains the birth of the organic food fad boom. The Food and Drug Administration (FDA) is watching this development keenly. The popularity of organic food has prompted the FDA to clarify its meaning, to investigate fraud related to its promotion and to determine its nutritive value.

The "FDA Consumer" specifies that organic food "has been produced under conditions where pesticides and herbicides have not been used, where the fertilization of the soil has been done with natural composting rather than so-called manufactured fertilizers and where the handling of the product following its production has been without the use of any type of food additive."

In most instances the American consumer who purchases organically grown food falls helplessly into the seller's clutches. The FDA proposes to enforce certification. The standard the FDA Consumer stated that a recent regulation by the State of Massachusetts demands certification of the sellers and the distributor must state evidence that the products were in fact grown under conditions that would make them meet the State's definition of organic. The fraud aspect comes into play when products are purposely labeled as organic in order to be sold for higher costs. The price differential between foods designated as organic versus nonorganic has been published by numerous people.

In this light some comparisons are of major interest to the unwary consumer. The editor of the "FDA Consumer," Ogden C. Johnson, PhD, quotes the following statistics in the magazine's Jan., 1974 article.

IS THERE A DIFFERENCE?

"Dried apricots were priced at 59 cents...Products such as cashews - which under most circumstances are produced out of the country under conditions that are completely outside the control of the distributor were sold for $1.10 for 8 ounces when they were labeled organic and yet were available at 59 cents for 6 ounces under the regular label."

The controversy is essentially rooted in other soil. Once reality is acknowledged and it is granted that racism exists, it must further be granted that it is a difficult thing to overcome. The controversy is essentially rooted in other soil. Once reality is acknowledged and it is granted that racism exists, it must further be granted that it is a difficult thing to overcome.

END JUSTIFIES MEANS?

One must have sufficient motivation to engage in a struggle with the monster. Now, if a person assumes that the ultimate goal of the struggle against racism is to pave the way for an integrated coffee-klatches, well then it is no wonder that such a person will not be willing to exert the requisite energy. The results would not seem to justify it, so why bother? But integrated coffee-klatches, however desirable, are not quite the point. First it must be understood that peoples of all colors have a common enemy. This enemy is American monopoly capitalism and imperialism, a system which oppresses people all over the world regardless of color or creed. There is no prejudice in profit. The natural enemies of imperialism are those it exploits. With one unified blow, the workers of the world can and will, bring down this decayed edifice of exploitation.

ULTERIOR MOTIVE

Racism is a major weapon in the hands of the money-lords in their flight to delay the landing of this final blow. To postpone their demise, they spread the lies of race-hatred and finance the pseudo-studies of sideshow "scientists" in order to dupe the gullible into accepting exploitation as a fact of life. No one is born racist. Racism is inoculated in us for the specific purpose of precluding unity among the "slaves." Viewed from this perspective the motivation to overcome racism is unrelenting. Racism, as a stumbling block to unity of the oppressed, must be thoroughly abolished before the still suffering masses of the "free" world can take their first sure step toward freedom through socialism. With this there should be no argument.
Stunning Arena Staging Sparks 'Equus'

By Mike Finnegan

The closed circle - it suggests the arena, sacrifices and rituals - proves a dynamite medium for John Dexter's staging of the new psychological thriller "Equus.

And if playwright Peter Shaffer gets somewhat long-winded, too, too, too meticulous in the study of psychological disturbance and waxes philosophical to excess about the dehumanizing aspects of psychiatry, that's not too vastly bad - the staging's the thing.

THE ACTING area is a circle bounded by the main audience in the auditorium and by students and young people (the producer's idea) sitting on rounded upstage benches. (The metaphors range from the cold, clinical medical arena witnessing a patient's dissection to the bloody sacrifices of Christians in the Roman Coliseum.) What is the audience watching? Call it dissection or a sacrifice - it's a psychiatrist's (Anthony Hopkins) unravelling of the development of a disturbance in a young stable boy (Peter Firth) which culminated in the commission of a bizarre and repulsive crime - the blinding of six horses.

(The incident, if not the author's probing is based in fact - except the number of blinded horses was 261.)

The psychiatrist narrates the tale which involves a closely knit set of characters, all of which remain on stage for the entire play. In flashback and memory the audience meets the boy's parents, the impassioned magistrate who introduces the doctor to his patient, all of the individuals who might have been instrumental in the boy's fascination for horses.

THE CIRCLE becomes a microscope to examine first the boy Alan, who babbles tv jingles as a defense mechanism, creeps his way into the doctor's conscience and reveals an almost godlike worship of and domination by horses. Then comes the doctor, marriage crumbling, impotent of late, accepting the role of detective as a grueling challenge and becoming more involved than he may have liked.

Alan's mother is a religious fanatic and father is a hidebound Socialist, which creates a tug-of-war situation that leads to the boy's fascination of Christ and horse (The play is cleverly imbued with Biblical references.) A young girl who also works at the stable enacts the role of temptress, serving to reveal Alan's fanaticism, who then realization of his disease, their defense mechanisms and his awkwardness. He gives more physical and emotional energy to his revelation scene than any other actor of late.

GOOD SUPPORTING performances are provided by Frances Sternhagen as the stuck-up, despicable father, Marian Seldes as the cool lady magistrate and Michael Higgins as the easily despicable mother.

Shaffer's twists are sometimes intriguing but, especially in the psychiatrist's speeches he becomes too wordy and some of the lesser characters, the mother, father and stable girl often slip into easy stereotypes. But where there is rambling there are high points as well - low, all intriguing. Whether or not the writing itself is successful, the personal care is evident.

Telerad Provides Professional Experience

By David J. Kane

"What we're doing is revolting our frustrations," said Monroe Oakly in his explanation of the broadcast department. "Last semester-long project called Telerad.

The biannual project was started last year by John Stastheff of the department to give his students a taste of what a professional tv is like. Our students are now producing a show, a game show called "Telerad," that will be shown on the campus-at-large. The screening will be sponsored by the School of Humanities' International Film Festival, for which Dr. David S. Menneke and Prof. Theodore Price of the English department serve as co-directors.

Chaplin not only appears in, but wrote, directed and composed the score for the 1931 film. It features some of his most memorable bits of comedy and pathos, including an actualightning scene as well as the haunting close-up fadeout.

Price judged "City Lights" not only as one of Chaplin's funniest films, but "most poignant" as well. "People should be prepared not to laugh too long," Price advised.

The presentation of the film will be the screen version of the rock musical "Jesus Christ Superstar" on Thurs., Nov. 7, 7:30 and 11 pm, and admission will cost $1.50.

The more than 20 shows in production now (some of which may be shown on tv) were selected by executive board members who were voted into office by the students of the department's "Station Management" course. Each class member is elected or appointed to a position on the Telerad staff.

Besides several original screenplays, both comic and dramatic, the shows will include a show on the Beatles, space as mankind's final frontier, an examination of the history and future of railroads, a talent show and an informative consumer-oriented unit.

Talent, ironing out pre-production problems and working within a schedule that is figured out to the second are some of the problems that Pal listed. The show deals with many important issues and is very interested in the management and end of the show. Pal said that the project was "gives me the experience I wouldn't be able to get anywhere else outside the professional market."

Another problem is that the program must be produced for the public tv, but the equipment is being provided to the students of the department's "Station Management" course. Each class member is elected or appointed to a position on the Telerad staff.

At first glance Brian Eriksen looks as though he would belong on the college grid. His looks lie in a different area though, and five times the burly MSC senior has done his thing better and faster than anyone before him.

Eriksen’s thing is racing motorcycles, and for the past two years, he’s been very successful at it, setting five world’s speed records. Yet he isn’t impressed with another holder of cycle records, Evel Knievel.

“He’s a fool,” laughs Eriksen. “I’m sure he’s one of the greatest promoters around.” Eriksen relates. “But he hoodwinked the public into believing that he was going to jump that canyon on a motorcycle. What he had wasn’t a motorcycle.”

Eriksen did have a motorcycle, a racing Bultaco to be exact, when he left for the Bonneville salt flats with some friends in August of 1973. His hopes were to break a three-year old record of 88.2 mph in the 250 cc modified frame altered gas class. It didn’t take him long to smash the old mark with a blistering 97.0 mph.

Land speed records are decided by running a flying mile in two opposite directions and taking the average speed. According to Eriksen there are a number of variables.

- ALTIMETRE A PROBLEM-

“The problem at Bonneville is the altitude (4200 feet) and the fact that there’s no humidity. This makes carburetor jetting very difficult,” related the 26-year old.

But Eriksen seems to have overcome these difficulties with ease, for three days later he climbed aboard the same bike and made a two-way run of 99.2 mph to break his own record and set the present mark.

“It cost about $3000 over the past two years to prepare the bikes and travel,” said Eriksen. “And it’s all personally financed.” Eriksen’s wife of five years, Diane, an eighth-grade teacher in West Milford, accounts for most of the financing. Eriksen says that she is a big help while he’s racing and performs much of the mechanical work needed in the pits.

“We’ve got some help from Sleger-Forbes motorcycles shop and Tri-City Honda but money is the limiting factor,” he said.

- HIS WIFE HELPS-

The world’s record holder got his start two years ago drag racing motorcycles. “My wife and I would drag race every weekend, winter or summer,” tells Eriksen. “Sometimes it would be 27 degrees out and the racer would tell you to keep to the left because there was ice on the track. It would be very disconcerting,” he said with a smile.

The Vietnam veteran shrugged off the danger of his sport with a grin. “If you know things aren’t just right you worry more,” he says. “But you make allowances. I’m nervous until I get on the bike. After that I just think about the job at hand.”

Lions Claw NJSCAC Laurels

By Lenny Cohen
Trenton State College clinched its first New Jersey State College Athletic Conference championship and simultaneously squashed MSC's last hopes of gaining a post-season playoff berth by overpowering the Indians 4-2, on the dew-laden grass of Sprague Field Tuesday night.

Lion coach Gary Hindley knew it would be "throw away all the records, a break will do it," while Tribe coach Bob Wolfarth was a bit more grim in his forecast. "If we don't win, we are out. A tie doesn't do us any good," he rationalized before the game.

And grim he had a reason to be. The Lions were unbeaten in conference competition and Wolfarth was without Gaytanido Bastidac and Paul Siegel due to injuries and minus Al Pulido after a suspension. The situation forced Wolfarth to substitute sub-varsity players in key positions during the game. Add to that a pulled hamstring suffered by Bob Mykulak with time running out in the half, and the Tribe was in desperate straits.

THINGS FINALLY caught up to the Indians at the 30:20 mark of the second half when Steffan Berg seemed to have the entire MSC side to himself and came in all alone on Indian goalie Chuck Doran. Doran came about 40 yards out of the net to cut down the angle, but the calm Berg slipped a grounder under Doran's sliding figure and watched it roll into the net as Bill Cece gave fruitful chase for MSC. The score gave the Lions a 3-2 lead, but it looked as though MSC had it tied up minutes later. Freshman Ron Boehm hoisted a ball from the corner for what seemed like an inevitable score. But the ball skimmed across the bottom of the cross bar and bounced out.

That was the greatest extent of the Indian pressure, and Trenton State finally led the game with 11:52 remaining. Steve Gorrie picked the ball out of a scramble in front of the net and pushed in a two-foot chippie to establish the final score.

Trenton State came out running against the Tribe right from the opening kickoff. A flurry of sharp passes and two searing shots by Lions' Don Angelini established early domination by the visiting club.

But it was the Indians that capitalized first. Captain Dick Moore took a rebound 15 yards from the Lion goal and pounded it in at the 16:19 mark to give the Indians the only lead they would enjoy the entire night.

The advantage ended 1:07 later. Berg booted through the goal crease to blast a Tim Perrett pass past Doran's shortside to knot the score.

The Lions were quick to knock at the door again. Mike Lyone took a corner kick 20 yards from the net and unleashed a dart that just skimmed over the crossbar.

The Lions came out shooting again at the outset of the second half and the payoff was an Andy Thompson goal that gave the Lions a 2-1 lead at 9:23. But the Tribe tied it eight minutes later when Moore popped the ball over Chris Maagher on a penalty kick following a hand ball in the crease. Then came the pair of Lion tallies and the final outcome.

HINDLEY was in a state of controlled jubilation following the game. "This is my first year, and I tried to change the team into a ball control type squad. I wouldn't say MSC was outclassed but we were more aggressive and controlled the center of the field."

"There's nothing to shoot for," said Wolfarth looking towards next year. "Without sounding like sour grapes we've been getting poor officiating all year long."

Wolfarth pointed to the added depth that this year's 7-1 sub varsity squad will add and the abundance of returning lettermen as the key to next year's team. "We just didn't have the depth this year. We lost almost all of our starting team from last year and that's a pretty tough job to replace. The kids we put in tonight have good basic skills but they just couldn't make their game stick."

Mistakes Aid MSC, 37-20

By Rich Keller
NEW HAVEN, Conn.—A bad snap on a punt and four fumbles by Southern Connecticut State College accompanied by four Indian interceptions was the Owls' downfall as they were crushed by the visiting Tribesmen, 37-20.

The game wasn't as close as the score might indicate. Though SCSC did score 20 points, only seven were scored against MSC's first string defensive unit. The other TD's were tallied versus the second and third defensive teams.

"Our passing game carried us through," admitted MSC head coach Clary Anderson. Evidence of this is the fact that Indian signal caller Craig Hugger went 15 for 21 for 265 yards and end Don Mattucci hauled in six of Hugger's tosses for 172 yards. Three of Mattucci's receptions were good for TD's.

MSC'S RUNNING game? Well, it's a good thing that Hugger was clicking, because the Owl defense really had the Indians number as far as its rushing game was concerned.

Anderson summed up the Indians victory by stating, "We cashed in on their (SCSC's) mistakes." But this Saturday's home game with the Lions of Trenton State could be very different.

TSC, THOUGH only 3-3-1, is coming to Sprague Field off two lopsided victories. The Lions rolled past Johns Hopkins (Md.) University 28-6, only to outdo themselves last week by embarrassing conference foe Jersey City State, 60-0.

TSC uses the I-formation, pro set offense, something similar to the one employed by the Indians, but one thing that could aid the Lions in their attempt to conquer the Tribesmen is their two quarterback system.

Glen Sliker is TSC's passing QB, but when the Lions air attack isn't successful, Eric Dietz brings the quarterback option into the game. Sliker, a six-foot, one-inch senior, has completed 59 of his 129 passes (45%) for 959 yards.

Dietz IS a scrambler, but is also capable of throwing the pigskin, as he has completed 8 of 13 passes.

With the threat of the pass looming over the Indians, the defensive backs could be busy. "They have to be set for the pass," Anderson examined, "but they also have to be ready to move in to cover the run. They can't be caught unaware.

Anderson has an answer. "We'll have to harass the passer, keep him on his guard," Anderson stated.

BLITZ? "WE have been known to blitz on occasion," Anderson said, "but we don't like to over-use it. We blitz as an element of surprise," Anderson explained.

TSC's head mentor Dick Curl, is impressed with the Tribesmen and doesn't plan on taking them lightly.

"HUGGER IS one of the finest quarterbacks that we will see this year," Curl commented. "I'm definitely impressed with Hugger and his quarterbacking ability. The more we stop him, the better we will make out."

Curl continued, "They (MSC) take whatever you give them. When you gear yourself for the run, they'll pass; when you gear yourself for the pass, they'll run."

What must TSC do to stop the Indians? "I've noticed in our game films that Montclair State consistently gains control of the line, both offensively and defensively," Curl analyzed. "We have to control the line, if we want to stay in the game," Curl concluded.
