Trustees Delay Decision

by Shari Kirkup and Mary Ann DeFlere

MSC's decision on its proposed structural reorganization has been postponed until November in a move by the college's Board of Trustees.

Last night, the board members decided to delay this decision in order to give further consideration to the "vexing issues," according to Dr. David W. Dickson, MSC president.

"The board will have to thrash out and judge the various controversial proposals which the board has been reviewing. Dickson explained.

A public hearing was recently held with the board. At this time faculty and student representatives from different departments voiced their opposition and support to the five proposed plans.

"I feel that general education is of enormous importance. All students should be able to read, write, and speak competently," Dickson said in an opening statement.

According to Dickson the first reason for the revision is that every student that graduates with a BA should have a good liberal education. Dickson explained that the second reason is that since most of the students don't go on to graduate school, they must develop professional skills at MSC in order for employment.

"MSC is the most excellent college in liberal arts. We have the responsibility that all students obtain appropriate courses in general education," Dickson stated.

Dickson feels that our present general education courses are not the most stimulating and exciting. He feels that the courses could be improved.

"I feel that we have a respectable general education program. But I also feel that nothing is more important than a fresh imaginative and precise study of our present requirement," Dickson said.

Speaking on behalf of the Faculty Senate, Dr. Mary E. Bredemeier said that the majority of senate members favored Plans D and E, with a small majority favoring Plan C.

Plan D would consist of six schools which are the School of Humanities, School of Fine and Performing Arts, School of Math and Science, School of Social and Behavioral Sciences, School of Professional Studies, and the School of Business Administration.

Plan E would include the schools mentioned in Plan D, along with the School of Educational and Community Services.

Of the 19 speakers at the public hearing, there was overwhelming support for Plan D. Among the reasons cited were that Plan D was a more "decentralized" system as opposed to Plan C which Dr. Joanne Englebert, of the Spanish/Italian department, feels would "stifle faculty initiative."

In Plan C are the four Schools of Liberal Studies, Fine and Performing Arts, Professional Studies, and Management Studies.

Many speakers opposed Plan C because they felt that the large school of Liberal Studies would create "anonymity" in communications between faculty members and their dean.

Spokesmen for the biology and chemistry departments felt that the combination of these departments into the vast School of Liberal Studies would be detrimental to these science programs.

Dr. Norman Fulton, of the Spanish/Italian department, expressed his opposition by simply saying that the School of Liberal Studies should be renamed the "School of Potpourri." He felt that it was an "administrative monstrosity."

At last night's board meeting, Dickson said that several issues needed further discussion, such as the placement of certain departments in designated schools. Also in debate is the placement of the NJ School of Conservation in the college's structural reorganization.

There is still controversy over the composition of the School of Liberal Studies since it would combine the present Schools of Humanities, Math/Science, and Social and Behavioral Sciences. The board is presently undecided whether to form one or two schools out of the present three school structure.

Dickson feels that the strength of the college's arts and sciences programs will be a valued asset in the future. "I don't look to make Montclair equal to William Paterson or Trenton State - rather comparable to Swarthmores and Harvards," Dickson stated emphatically.

GER to change

Students at MSC are soon to be hit with a big surprise. A proposal is now being drawn up to revise the present general education requirements.

According to David W. D. Dickson, MSC president, the proposal has not yet been made. He thinks the proposal will be ready in a few weeks.

Dickson views the issue as having great importance. He feels that there are two major reasons for the revision of the general education requirement.

"I feel that general education is of enormous importance. All students should be able to read, write, and speak competently," Dickson said in an opening statement.

According to Dickson the first reason for the revision is that every student that graduates with a BA should have a good liberal education. Dickson explained that the second reason is that since most of the students don't go on to graduate school, they must develop professional skills at MSC in order for employment.

"MSC is the most excellent college in liberal arts. We have the responsibility that all students obtain appropriate courses in general education," Dickson stated.

Dickson feels that our present general education courses are not the most stimulating and exciting. He feels that the courses could be improved.

"I feel that we have a respectable general education program. But I also feel that nothing is more important than a fresh imaginative and precise study of our present requirement," Dickson said.

Dean Blanton to retire

Serving students for 22 years

by Colleen Quinn

"There are so many new things going on right now that I think the most exciting years MSC has to face are in the future. And it's getting better all the time. I really hate to retire because there are so many good things going on. I want to stick around and see what's going to happen," Lawton W. Blanton, retiring dean of students, remarked during an interview conducted in his home.

Blanton, a warm and congenial man, is retiring after 22 years of service at MSC. In those 22 years he has seen quite a few changes. "When I came to MSC, there were only two minority students and no minority professors and no minority administrators. MSC, at that time, was a teacher training institution and was very, very, small," Blanton stated.

He is a powerful-looking man, with a round face and gray-rimmed glasses. He has blue eyes that crinkle up and smile whenever he laughs, which is often. Seated in his dining room, one looks out of full-length glass windows upon a wooded area reminiscent of New England. There are numerous plants, shrubs, and trees arranged neatly throughout his manicured lawn. "As you can see, it's very peaceful here. You can't believe we're only 12 miles away from New York City. There are even brown foxes that come across the lawn. One morning while I was eating breakfast, a deer came up across the back steps and jumped across the yard," he added.

A native of Sarasota Springs, Florida, Blanton still speaks with a trace of a Southern accent. He did his undergraduate work at the University of Florida, and immediately after graduation planned to go to South America where a job awaited him. A severe horseback riding accident prevented his going to Rio de Janeiro and his job. Blanton then did some graduate work at the University of Florida and was offered a job teaching mathematics. "From that, I just got interested in students and became an assistant in the dean's office there. I soon got more interested in the students and their problems than I did teaching," he said. He continued his graduate work at the University of Chicago and at Columbia University. Blanton then attained a job as assistant dean of students at City University of New York. From there he came to MSC.

"I really love MSC. I think it's a terrific institution and I think anybody can get as good an undergraduate education at MSC as they would at any larger school. I think it depends on the student. Now of course for graduate programs, MSC does not have great training institution, and was never getting much education, but I don't think that's true at all," Blanton remarked.

When asked what has been the most pressing problem he has faced in his capacity, Blanton paused, and then replied that prejudice is the toughest problem to overcome.

over the world with diverse backgrounds. There are still a lot of prejudices but I had hoped we would be able to overcome many of the prejudices at our colleges and I think we have. Hopefully colleges and universities are the place to start," he said.

He is a cheerful man with a marvelous sense of humor. This was proven when he was "kidnapped" by members of the Fraternity Senate. "For years, I have been picking on senate, and we've been bantering around the idea that they would kidnap me. And everytime they would mention it, I would say I double-dog-dare you to kidnap me.

So last spring, they came in with some water pistols and they had stockings over their eyes so you couldn't tell who they were. They then kidnapped me and took me out to the Primrose Diner and they wanted to buy me a filet mignon. But I pretended that I was mad, so I took only a roll and water," he added laughingly.

Although he loves people, he is at times a very private person who finds his Little Falls home a relaxing refuge. His off-white brick split-level house, which he designed and landscaped himself, "I guess the thing that attracted me to this piece of property was when I came to look at it there were three deer grazing on the lot," Blanton said.

He is an avid birdwatcher. "I love ornithology and there are literally all types of birds here," he added enthusiastically. He also loves music, which is made evident by the fact that there is a stereo in almost every room in the house. "I love German music, symphonic music, and Viennese waltzes. I like some pop but I think the students convinced me that acid rock was beyond me because my eardrums are still pounding after some of it," he replied with a grin.

A divorced and living alone, he hates cooking, even for one. "I hate the kitchen and I try to spend as little time in there as possible. I guess I just like being waited on," he said jokingly.

His target date for retiring is Jan. 1 and he has already started making plans for the future, which include some consulting offers with various schools and firms. He is also thinking about possibly moving to a warmer climate since an accident, which involved pushing a car out of the snow, caused him to tear cartilage in his hip and required an operation that removed his hip and replaced it with an artificial plastic one. This accounts for the slightly stiff-legged limp.

His plans also include traveling and trying to regain his health. "I was hospitalized this summer for internal bleeding and a gallstone and that really took a lot out of me. I'm also trying to lose weight, which my doctor insists on," he replied emphatically.

His plans also include seeing the students. "MSC has made some spectacular improvements but it has been making gradual improvements over the years, and that's the only kind that's sound. And it's getting better all the time," he replied emphatically.
Bond may be awarded

The New Jersey Institute Of Technology (NJIT) may be awarded a $3.8 million bond by the state of NJ if the higher education referendum on the November ballot is passed by the voters, according to Wally Hetrick, business manager of the Vector. This money will be used for new library facilities, installation of a building for professional service, rehabilitation and renovation of other buildings on campus.

Another grant of $2 million was awarded to the school by the state for new equipment and renovations of the Mechanical Engineering Building.

Students evicted

Three students at William Paterson College (WPC) were notified to vacate their rooms at Heritage Hall. This order was made by Gary Hutton, housing director, according to Sue Merchant, news editor of the Beacon.

The night before the order was made the three students, who are currently on the soccer team, held a party in honor of the team. At 11:15 pm Hutton arrived at the party and asked everyone to clear the rooms. He claimed the students were being too loud, and it was an unregistered party.

Security was called by Hutton for assistance. The students told Merchant that they believed the campus police called in the North Haledon police. But Merchant discovered that the complaint about the so-called disturbance was made by Hutton himself.

According to students at the party, Hutton denied ever making the call. When the police arrived at the scene, they found no reason why the party should be broken up.

The three students who were ordered to vacate took their belongings and left the rooms.

Alcohol abused

Tim Evans, news editor of the Whit, reports that in a recent interview Mark M. Chamberlain, Glassboro State College (GSC) president, stated his views on the alcohol abuse on the GSC campus.

Chamberlain feels the students are not aware of their abuse of alcohol, which he considers a drug. He assumes that if more classes are scheduled on Fridays, the students’ weekly Thursday night parties will decrease. At the present time the administration is looking into other ways of reducing the number of parties held on the GSC campus.

Philip Morris sponsors contest

Philip Morris Incorporated has announced its 11th annual Marketing/Communications Competition to provide an opportunity for students to sharpen their marketing and communications skills.

Students are invited to develop a marketing/communications project related to Philip Morris or any of non-tobacco products and operations. The first place award is $2,000, second place is $1,000 and third place is $500. For more information contact Gerry Rizzo at Philip Morris Incorporated, 100 Park Ave., New York, NY, 10017.

Applications are taken by John Redd, a health professions professor at MSC and the deadline for applications is Nov. 1.

Shuttle system improved

by Rick Messina

"Through our observations and survey the shuttle is a good service. Last year's survey showed less than one percent of the total carried was left at a stop."

The above statement was made by Peter R. Macagne, assistant to the vice president of administration and finance, concerning the shuttle bus system.

Macagne added, "The present route of the shuttles is down Carlisle Road up to College Avenue, into Lot 6 at the 60 shelter, and back onto College Avenue. The shuttle then proceeds on its regular circle of the campus. It no longer travels on Normal Avenue or picks up at the security shack. The new route was due to the number 60 bus which now enters campus from Montclair."

According to Macagne, the shuttles get gas at the Student Center Gas Station at 7 am and are on the road by 7:30 am daily. The back up driver, Sam Russo, starts driving at 10 am. He fills in for Ward and Enginger when they take their breaks and lunch. Ward and Enginger finish driving at 3:30 pm. Russo's work day ends at 6:30 pm. From 6:30 pm to 11 pm there is only one driver, James Pansulla.

"There are three shuttles with the idea of more than two in use at a time. This distributes the wear and tear of each bus," Macagne said.

"Each bus is equipped with a CB radio which enables the drivers to keep in touch with headquarters and each other," Macagne said. "There are two CB base stations, one in my office and the other in Campus Police headquarters. "We put a base station in the headquarters because the shuttles are always circling campus and could be of assistance to the police in case of an accident or traffic tie up," Macagne explained.

"The SGA purchased vans which were driven by full-time as well as part-time students," Macagne said. According to Macagne, the shuttle is no longer a service of the SGA but is totally controlled by the state. The system consists of full-time drivers with a Class One School Bus Drivers license. "It's basically a very professional service," Macagne concluded.

Adjuncts are people, too

They say they’re underpaid

by Tracy Bermthal

How many highly skilled professionals do you know who work for less than $5 an hour? You may know more than you think.

Adjuncts at MSC have many complaints: low pay, lack of professional courtesy, no job security, and no benefits.

MSC adjuncts receive $750 a semester for each three credit course they teach. That’s $46.87 per week. A number of teachers estimate that for every three credit course taught, from 10 to 12 hours of work are involved. If the adjunct puts in 10 hours, he’s making roughly $4.69 an hour. If he works 12 hours, he makes about $3.91 an hour. Adjuncts may teach up to six credits a semester.

"My wife and I would like to have a child someday but we can’t afford one. We couldn’t even feed a child on what I can’t afford one. We couldn’t..."

Adjuncts are not in it for the money. If he works 12 hours, he make. We can’t make any plans for the future, that’s no way to live,” said a poor, but energetic, young MSC adjunct.

"Many adjuncts are living on food stamps,” added a charming adjunct who possesses a quiet, inner strength. Both of these highly competent professionals asked to remain anonymous before being interviewed in a cozy corner of a conference room.

“We’re either forced out of teaching or into secondary schools,” an adjunct teaching on the college level, continued the adjunct.

"There are no standards for adjuncts,” one of the adjuncts stated. "I’m lucky, I have an office to work out of. Many don’t. Adjuncts are treated superficially-hired at the last minute; you can’t even prepare for the classes that you might teach in a few days. There’s no guarantee that you even will be hired, it depends on the enrollment for the course which is often determined at registration,” he said.

The other adjunct present stated, "You see this canvas book bag I’m carrying? This is my office. Adjuncts hold office hours just like full-time faculty.

I often end up leaning against a wall talking to a student in the hall. I’m sure that no student would discuss a problem or confide in me while standing in the hall. It’s too public."

"Adjuncts are sort of like migrant workers in that they have to go where the work is, tolerate poor conditions in many cases, and accept low pay," the adjunct responded. Adjuncts haven’t received a raise in 10 years. Adjuncts don’t get workman’s compensation, pensions, or health insurance," the adjunct stated. "I don’t know what would happen if an adjunct fell and hurt himself on campus; I guess he wouldn’t get disability, compensation, or anything."

Then he added that “Maybe he’d lose some pay if he were out for too long,” but no one laughed at the joke.

"As an informed consumer, still I’m sure that no student would know what teacher is going to teach his class before the first class. They should want to have teachers that have been able to prepare for the courses they can get what they pay for. We’re concerned for the students,” an adjunct said.

"Adjuncts would like to be included in department committees and functions. They’d like the same access to office supplies as the full-time faculty, and they want office space. Also they’d like to know their prospective classes in advance so they can prepare adequately, and if the college makes a commit ment to them, they’d like it honored, explained one adjunct.

The national AFT (American Federation of Teachers) policy encourages AFT locals to take adjuncts into their ranks. I think that the state colleges would have to be in the union. We’re just beginning to get organized at MSC. Our impression is that the full-time faculty want adjuncts in the union," an adjunct said.

"Last year during the strike, adjuncts were threatened with the loss of pay if they didn’t show up to teach. If we did teach during the strike, we were afraid of being ostracized by our colleagues. The issues being argued didn’t even concern adjuncts," the adjunct continued.

"Adjuncts are a vital and necessary part of higher education. Adjuncts teach many of the basic courses which are offered as requirements, or are popular. But we also teach specialized courses which are a part of a major’s requirements but not offered every year because of the enrollment. There may not be a full-time faculty member who is qualified to teach that particular topic.

Adjuncts are doing a good job at MSC," an adjunct stated. What can students do to support the adjunct’s efforts for proper and well-deserved recognition? “At this point students probably can’t do anything except be aware of the situation.

Right now adjuncts are just getting organized. If any action ever is taken, and at this point nothing is even being thought of along those lines, we hope that we’d have the students’ support," an adjunct concluded.

by Carolyn Jones

There are adjuncts all over MSC. In the business department alone there are approximately 45 adjuncts. An adjunct is a person who teaches at two or three colleges a day or holds a full-time job and teaches part-time.

"I like to think of it as free lance teaching," E. Plummer, a graduate of MSC turned speech and English adjunct, said. Having taught junior high school and ninth graders, Plummer finds being an adjunct more rewarding. "I’ve always wanted to teach older people, there’s a better atmosphere.

"If you think that you have trouble commuting, last semester she taught at Bergen County Community College, Passaic Community College, and here at MSC. Adjuncts are not in it for the money. By law, they are allowed small class credits and for each three credit course taught, they earn $750."

Despite these drawbacks, Plummer doesn’t think she would be interested in full-time teaching.

"Sometimes it’s a little lonely, you feel removed from the college, isolated, but the course load is lighter."

An adjunct teacher goes through the same procedure as a full-time teacher in applying for a job. It depends on the openings available in their field. There is a one year contract.

"But once you get your foot in the door, they usually call you before they call someone else,“ Plummer said.

Plummer is currently teaching two speech classes here during the day, and speech and English courses at Passaic County Community College at night.

"If I ever get a full-time job, I’ll always teach part-time,” she added.

Dr. Alan Openheim, who was the head of the administrative division of business, handled business adjuncts until recently. “They fill the positions which the full-time teachers can’t because of the budget,” Openheim stated.

Personal experiences of the business adjuncts enhance the learning experience of the students. For example, one adjunct is the vice president-treasurer of Metro Media. Another is the managing vice president of Lee and Perrins, a company that produces sauces, among other things.

"Adjuncts are very dependable people, who teach for the love of teaching. They have a strong nature and on the whole are good teachers,” concluded Openheim.

If MSC students knew about the cash available to them via the state, perhaps lines leading to the Financial Aid Office would resemble the masses of mid-day shoppers outside a Herman's Ski Sale.

According to Ann Patterson, financial aid assistant, there are a variety of state-funded financial aid programs for students of varying economic backgrounds.

Across a desk littered with papers, books, and folders, Paterson cited three such programs offering money to college students.

Four semesters were offered last year which dealt with the understanding and methods of completing the NJ financial aid form.

In addition to state-funded programs, students may also receive social security payments if their parents are retired or deceased.

A brochure entitled "State and Federal Financial Aid Programs for New Jersey Students" may be picked up at the Financial Aid Office. It contains information on grants and loans offered by the state.

Tuition Aid Grants (TAG), are available to needy students who have resided in NJ for at least 12 months.

If a student's family earns less than $10,000 annually, the student can receive money from the Educational Opportunity Fund (EOF).

Recipients of EOF aid must be full-time students and NJ residents for a minimum of 12 months.

Students who are enrolled at least part-time attending four and two-year colleges, graduate, professional, nursing, technical, vocational and business schools are eligible for Guaranteed Student Loans (GSL).

Students must be citizens or permanent residents of the US and reside in NJ at least six months. TAG, EOF and GSL, brochures are available at the office.

The seminars, which boasted speakers from the Financial Aid Office and audio-visual presentations, nonetheless attracted a hand full of students. "We tried to make the students understand what the procedure of filing for financial aid was all about," Patterson said.

The process discussed at the seminars explained that the student first completes the financial aid form, and is then mailed to the College Scholarship Service (CSS) in Princeton, NJ. Once there where it is determined how much money the student will get.

The appraisal is forwarded to the student's college, the department of higher education and the Basic Educational Opportunity Grant (BEOG).

These organizations in turn send the student award letters quoting the amount of money to be awarded.

The letters are brought to the college by the student who receives payments when they are processed.

Question: How does the CSS determine the amount of money a student should get?

Patterson said this is done by examining the annual income of the student's parents which is included in the financial aid form. The CSS determines what the parents can offer towards their child's education.

Noting this, and college costs such as tuition, books, and room and board, the CSS offers the student a sum of money which will adequately carry him through the semester.

TAG grants range from $100 to $1000 and are renewable each year based on the student's need.

Undergraduates in the EOF Program are eligible to receive from $200 to $1000 per year and graduate grants up to $3000 a year.

The Financial Aid Office offers further information on statefunded financial aid programs.

A National Student Consumer Card (NSCC) is a very handy thing for a student to have, especially while struggling to make ends meet at college.

This white and blue, wallet-size card is a discount card. The card is good for one full year, courtesy of the SGA.

Discounts are given on your favorite designer jeans at the Depot. A racquet bought at Murph's Sport Shop Inc. may be used at Totowa Racquet Depot. A racquet bought at the U.A. Cinema 46, offers further information on patronage, according to one SGA member.

In addition, in some cases, a valid MSC student ID card must accompany the discount card. In order to avoid misunderstandings, the offers should be read carefully.

Each student may receive his free card in the SGA Office on the forth floor in the Student Center.

Crime up

by Dave Yourish

The Campus Police have been busy during the last two weeks as a wave of crime blanketed MSC. A very serious incident occurred on Sept. 24, when two males in the Clove Road Apartments got into an argument, and one of them stabbed the other with a knife. Details are sketchy, as no report was readily available. However, it is believed that the person stabbed was not seriously hurt.

Also, students have been receiving threatening phone calls at some dormitories. On Sept. 19, this was reported to the police, and on a number of occasions female students have complained about annoying, sexual threatening calls. If you receive a call, or have any information on who may be making these calls, contact investigating officer Debbie Newcomb at 893-5222. Again, the police will keep all calls confidential.

Larcenies also occurred on the campus, when two members of the yearbook staff had some equipment stolen. Larry Morgan and Bob Clifford reported to the police that cameras valuing $2,300 and a tripod were taken from their office, through forced entry (breaking and entering). Witnesses reported seeing a six-foot black male wearing blue jeans and a casual jacket leaving the premises with a brown bag which contained the cameras. He was also seen carrying the tripod. The police are again asking that if anyone saw the suspect at about 6:30 pm on Sept. 24, to please call them, or contact investigating officer Fassnacht at 893-5222. Again, the police will keep all calls confidential.

Rodger Lope reported to the police recently that he parked his 1968 Ford at 11:30 am and went to class. When he returned, the car was gone. The police put the vehicle out on the air, so that it would be put on the "hot sheet." It was located by the Newark Police Department on Sept. 22, with various parts missing. Sgt. Charles Giblin, described this as "car clouting," or stealing to an order. He explained that orders for various cars are taken, and then that car is stolen and used to fill that order.

Ernest Rice was the other unfortunate student to have his stolen. Rice parked his 1972 Chevy in parking lot 14 and when he returned it was gone. The estimated value of his car was $2,300. Also, another $225 was added to the assessment because of four fishing poles that were in the car.

In other cases, certain parts of cars have been stolen. Barbara Monagin parked her car in lot 14 on Sept. 19 at 1:50 pm. When she returned two hours later, she discovered that her trunk had been broken into. Taken from her car was a CB radio, the antenna to the radio, and a spare tire. Total value was placed at $312.

Cathy Mozeli also reported that when she returned to her vehicle, which was parked in lot 14, the four hubcaps were missing from her Mustang. The estimated value of them was $280.

Not even motorcycles are safe. Raymond Boyle of Cranford had his helmet stolen from his bike. The value of the helmet was put at $55.

The little Cushman cart that belongs to the Student Center for its use was overturned by persons unknown.

"The police are coordinating an investigation with other police agencies that have recovered stolen vehicles," according to officer Giblin. This will help in their efforts to collect information and see if recurring crime patterns exist.

Water contract to be drawn up

by Louis Lavelle

Jerome Quinn, director of institutional planning for MSC, stated that the college's fire protection water supply system is operating with a "borderline case" of low volume. However, according to Anthony Ruggierio, superintendent of the Montclair Water Bureau (MWB), the college has "enough water for adequate protection.

"adequate protection" as a flow rate of at least 4,000 gallons per minute (gpm). However, according to Ruggierio, the flow rate as it is measured by the meter located on the corner of Valley Road and Normal Avenue is only 2,500 to 2,800 gpm. This represents a deficit of almost one-third the flow rate required by the state fire marshals.

According to Quinn, the college has been aware of the problem since 1971, when the NJ Division of Buildings and Construction arranged for the John C. Morris Association to perform an engineering study on MSC's water system. Quinn said after an eight year delay, Quinn said that MSC and the town of Montclair are about to enter into a contract designed to correct the situation.

The most important aspect of the new contract is the town's guarantee to the college to provide the required 4,000 gpm flow rate. According to the contract, the additional water will be provided by "a new 16 inch diameter cast-iron main" installed on campus by the town. It will cost the college approximately $250,000.

The contract also stated that the town would renovate its own water system at an additional cost of close to $350,000, payable in $30,000 annual installments. In order to accommodate the new intention, the contract stated that the town will lay a "12 inch diameter sewer pipe" which will cost MSC $100,000. Additionally, the college will also be billed an "annual sewer surcharge" of about $5,000 to pay for the new sewer use generated by the proposed Student Center Annex and dormitory.

According to Quinn, the reason for the delay is a disagreement between MSC and the town concerning the college's free use of the town's sewer system.

Quinn said that up until now, the college's sewer service has been paid for through the homeowner's tax levied on the residence of the town. With the proposal of the new annex and dormitory, Quinn explained that the town insisted on the college paying not only for the new sewer water generated by these facilities, but also for that which it has been receiving without charge all along.

The Clove Road Apartment Council is starting this fall semester off with a couple of carefully planned ideas to get Clove Road residents out of their apartments, and into some group interaction.

The council, advised by Vinnie Tinebra, and headed by Diane McCarthy and Linda Schumann, met Sept. 12 in the Multi-Purpose Room above the office to discuss the future plans of Clove Road residents.

Such plans as the Clove Road party, installment of Wometco Home Theater for sports events and concerts, and the planned for the Attic will cost $2,300. Also, another $225 was added to the assessment because of four fishing poles that were in the car.

"The police are coordinating an investigation with other police agencies that have recovered stolen vehicles," according to officer Giblin. This will help in their efforts to collect information and see if recurring crime patterns exist.

Ski Club going uphill
by Julie Shore
Where can freshmen, sophomores, juniors, and seniors all go to party, dance, make lots of friends, participate in toga parties, and break bones?
According to bubbly Jerry Kalajian, day-trip coordinator for the MSC ski club, members of the club have the time of their lives both on and off their skis.
The club accepts clumsy, beginners, die-hard intermediates, and show off advanced skiers.
They have toga parties in 10 degree icy weather. Major injuries are few, while minor injuries are many and filled with adventurous stories.
Daily and weekly trips are planned by Barbara Palmer, president, and the vivacious Kalajian.
Lively wrestling, dancing, partying, and singing are all a part of the evening's festivities.
The members of the club are more than happy to see new members join. In a pleasant tone of voice Kalajian said, "We don't care how bad or good you ski, just come out and see how much fun it could be."
Chuckling, Kalajian said, "We wrap ourselves up in thin white sheets, put our heavy ski boots on, and go crazy in the snow. When our delirious evening ends at 6 am most of us have had our sheets ripped off and are left freezing in our skimpy underwear."
In the past two years, the only major injuries were a broken leg and a broken thumb. He said, "Of the many minor injuries suffered by members, the most notorious injury for me was Gary's sore and throbbing head. Gary Thompson, one of MSC's intermediate skiers, psyched himself up for the difficult jump, screamed "Banzai!" and attempted the jump, but couldn't understand how he managed to land head first."
Will it be Utah or Colorado this year? Most of the weekly trips are suggested by the president. They include trips to Vermont, New Hampshire, Colorado, and Utah. The trips to Colorado and Utah usually cost about $500. That covers the plane fare, hotel cost about $500. That covers the plane fare, hotel accommodations, and the lift. The daily trips are not comparable in cost; however, members agreed on Utah and are left freezing in our skimpy underwear."
"At the start of our evenings we all achingly sit around the fire-lit lobby complaining about our sore muscles. However, by the end of the night everyone ends up dancing, singing, and wrestling, as a result of our slight intoxication."
At this week's meeting in the Student Center, members of the club voted on a week-long trip to Colorado or Utah. The members agreed on Utah because of the financial crisis faced by everyone. The fact that the trip to Utah would be cheaper had a powerful influence on the decision.

Helms speaks on US-Iranian situation

by Donna Herbert

Despite having to dodge a pie thrown by a disgruntled spectator, Richard Helms, former director of the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA), and former US Ambassador to Iran, gave a timely speech on the current situation in Iran.

The lecture, sponsored by the Council of International and National Affairs (CINA), which was held this past Tuesday in Memorial Auditorium, discussed the situation in Iran and how it affects US foreign policy.

Helms noted that the US and Russia are the two most powerful nations in the world. Russia is already attempting to gain control of Afghanistan, which borders on Iran. If the Russians succeed, they will then have an excellent opportunity to gain control of Iran, Helms said.

Speaking on the energy aspect of the Iranian crisis, Helms stated that the Persian Gulf is the only access route that countries can use to transport their oil from that part of the Middle East. This is done via oil tankers passing through the Straits of Hormuz, at the entrance to the Persian Gulf, every four minutes, 24 hours a day, according to the middle-aged Helms.

He also said that never before has the US become so dependent on an outside country for something as essential as oil, as it has in the last five years.

Helms said that the major problem in Iran lies with Ayatollah Khomeini, the country's Islamic leader. Since the exile of the Shah, Khomeini has attempted to make Iran an Islamic Republic.

At one point during the lecture, a grim-faced, portly man stood up and hurled a pie at Helms. "You murderer!" he shouted and let loose a custard pie. Helms neatly side-stepped. He quickly regained his composure and continued his talk. The angry man stormed out of the auditorium.

The aging, but sturdy former Ambassador continued to talk about the possibility of Russia increasing its influence in the Persian Gulf area which, according to Helms, "will look mighty attractive to them," when in time they run short of oil.

According to Helms, Khomeini feels he has the right to make Iran a religious state—an "Islamic Republic."

Helms chiefly stressed, however, that power is something that can be demonstrated on occasion, but is primarily in the mind of the beholder. Since power depends on perception, the US must therefore be not only powerful in fact, but must also appear that way to the rest of the world.

Students are you looking for fun? You don't have to be Italian to join the Italian Club.

Social activities held are dances, bus trips, lectures, movies, and other activities.

Members of the club give tutoring services to students in Italian classes. Times for the tutoring will be given out in the classes.

The goal of the club is to share Italian culture with students at MSC through various cultural activities.

There are a variety of committees such as social, cultural and publicity.

Mario Di Fiorio, president of the club, stated, "The activities held are for all students, not just students in the club. Not all activities are Italian-oriented. Disco dances are held."

Each member is asked to join a committee. The chairman in each committee works with the members in order to have successful events. "Responsibility of each member is to be an active part of a committee and the club," Di Fiorio said.

The club is a non-profit organization. Di Fiorio concluded, "All profit is used for the club's social events, movies, and lectures. A scholarship is also awarded to Italian majors at the end of the year."

Other officers of the club are Agostina Paglialunga, vice president, Emily De Stefano, treasurer, and Linda Martelli, secretary.

MSC bookstore—there is a better way

by Liz Crann

Had a student purchased his books from the MSC bookstore he would have paid about $34 more. He instead went to a NY bookstore where he found lower prices, and an additional 10 percent student discount.

Many students come out of the MSC bookstore disheartened over the high price of books. Jose Moreno, a Spanish major, presented his price discrepancy to the MSC bookstore. The bookstore, located on the first floor of the Student Center, is managed by Karen Gentilello. She offered an explanation for the price difference of the Spanish books Moreno purchased.

Gentilello explained that foreign language books must be obtained from international publishers. It is because of the special nature of these books, that the price eventually rises on arrival to the MSC bookstore.

Upon calling certain publishers about the Spanish books in question, Gentilello found that the price also depends on which publisher the distributor goes to. One publisher may charge more for the same book.

Gentilello said, "We are trying to provide the service to the students that we are here for." She also felt that if a student can find books cheaper elsewhere it is better for the student. She further explained that this is why the bookstore deals with five wholesalers to obtain as many used books as possible so that the students can save money.

Moreno felt that the price difference was incredible. He explained that foreign language books must be dealt with five wholesalers to obtain as many used books as possible so that the students can save money.

The NY store that Moreno purchased from was separated from the SGA organization, was separated from the SGA through a referendum passed by the student body in 1976. MAC is now comprised of administrators, faculty, and students.

At the meeting, the members of the MAC board discussed the charter and the by-laws of the corporation and the executive board members were elected. MAC comes back

Art for art's sake

Half of a man, shaped from plaster gauze, hangs from heavy wire in Gallery Two. Daniel Silva created the human-like piece.

Another of Silva's "Studies in Confinement" portrays a human crawling under a plaster-gauze blanket.

Peering from underneath a wedge-shaped plywood structure are two feet and two hands, all made from plaster gauze. The art is from Silva's "Studies in Confinement."

Ivy Ellis demonstrates class.

Jennifer deGraaff, sophomore fine arts major, works on her porcelain bowl in "Ceramics."
Passing by the Calcia Fine Arts Building one hears classical music, sees lush plants in the windows, and smells the odors of paint, clay, and wood. But, stepping inside, one finds a world unto itself. Student artists and professors rush back and forth—designing, creating, building.

A recent visit to Calcia uncovered an interesting art show. Gallery Two, located in room 208, is a student-run gallery where all students can display their work. This week Daniel Silva, a graduate student at MSC has his exhibit "Studies in Confinement," on view for the public.

Walking through the building, a myriad of classes, ranging from "Introduction to Visual Arts" to "Color Studies," can be found in session. A person not familiar with the arts will find Calcia to be a place worth looking into.
Welcome back, MAC

Congratulations are in order to the new student members of the Montclair Athletic Commission (MAC) board. The board, which is now responsible for administering the $110,000 that MAC operates on during the academic year, met last Friday for the first time in a year.

The MAC board is composed of students, administrators, and faculty who jointly decide where MAC funds, which are collected from students through their tuition bills, are spent. The board meets throughout the school year, and decides on financial matters and policy.

Recognition is also due Nadar Tavakoli, SGA president, for reactivating the board. After a year of total absence of student input into MAC decisions, Tavakoli made some compromises with the college administration regarding MAC policy in order to reopen the board’s activities.

The “new beginning” that was accomplished was not without some struggle in the SGA legislature. A leading figure in the fight against restoring the MAC board was Charles Sahner, last year’s SGA president. Sahner suspended the board’s meetings last year over a question of student control of future fee hikes. As it stood then, the board, which must consist of a majority of administration and faculty by NCAA regulations, had the final say over what the students fees would be. Sahner believed that a student referendum should have been necessary before the fees could be raised. No agreement was ever reached during Sahner’s administration, and the board met only once.

However, since the administration would not accept the idea of a referendum, Tavakoli made some compromises so that a three-fourths majority of the board was necessary to raise the fees. With this stipulation, at least four student representatives must agree before any hike can be instituted. With this agreement, the board was free to begin their work anew.

The Montclarion applauds the new board’s work, and the fact that the current student representatives hold four executive positions on the MAC board. With this influence on decisions, student MAC fees are safe for at least this year.

Much can be learned from the outcome of this problem. At times, student leaders can be a bit pigheaded—perhaps they feel that this is in the best interest of the students. Being strong-willed can be a valuable asset when an issue is of such great importance as the MAC board is. But at the same time, the lesson rests in appreciating the value of compromise.

Too frequently we complain of bureaucratic red tape and indecision when we speak of the administration. An analysis of student procedures of policy-making may uncover some of the same traits.

For a resolution to the MAC problem to take a whole year must indicate a weak point in student leaders’ priorities. Being a “hero” in standing up for one’s beliefs can give one a great feeling of satisfaction. But when it delays important decisions for too long, is it really in the best interests of the students?

We think not.

The unkindest cut of all

by Elliot I. Mininberg

For the past several years, the budget process in NJ has become not only more and more difficult procedurally, but also a process that has yielded an increasingly limited "bottom line." A good way to describe our current circumstance would be to briefly review our budget process for fiscal year 1980, the year we are now in. Our preliminary budget request was for $26,555,000. That request was reviewed and modified at the campus level and ultimately sent forward to the department of higher education in the amount of $26,477,104. The department reviewed that request along with similar requests from the other state colleges, Rutgers, NJIT, CMDNJ, etc. and ended up recommending to the Board of Higher Education a $25,704,000 request which represented 97.1 percent of MSC's original request. The Board reviewed the departments request and forwarded it to the Governor's Office for review and further modification. The Governor's Office processed our budget request to the legislature for a total of $24,612,929. This represented only 93 percent of what the college had originally indicated as to level of need. The legislature generally reviewed, modified, and approved our budget at a $24,429,929 level which represents 92.3 percent of our statement of needs. It is easy to see that the college is being funded at approximately $2 million less this year than it had indicated it needed to operate effectively and to continue our development of excellence.

In addition to receiving these limited resources, we are further obliged as an institution to absorb a portion of the salary increments agreed to by the State/Union negotiated settlements. In effect, we must further fund $455,000 of our appropriation which means that the monies we had originally asked for and that portion of those monies which were generally received could not be entirely spent on the purposes indicated. We now have reallocated our resources to accommodate this additional burden. Going one step further, we are obliged to absorb in our operating funds costs for a variety of Civil Service title changes which have been made mandated by contract settlement, some expenditures for our basic skills programs, and an anticipated one quarter of a million dollars shortfall in resources available to pay ever-increasing fuel and utility costs. As is all of this were not enough, we are waiting to hear about a possible one to two percent additional cutback in our overall funding level because of a shortfall in state income. Such a two percent cut was taken last year and was extraordinarily difficult to absorb. This year, FY 1980, each one percent cut we are obliged to take is equal to $244,299. All of these layers of cuts and proposed cuts represent limitations in our ability to provide required services and to continue to develop programs of excellence. The "budget crunch" is a very real problem and our survival of these circumstances is dependent upon the entire campus community understanding the nature of the problem and working with one another.

Elliot I. Mininberg is the vice president for administration and finance.

On Second Thought

A bore is a bore is a bore...

by Meryl Yourish

One thing you never see in college catalogs—and probably never will—is what to do about boring professors. Boring professors are one of the largest thorns in any college career.

I can handle lunatics, schizophrenics, radicals, liberals, conservatives, and so on, but I am at a total loss when it comes to boring professors. I'm sure you all know the feeling. As Harper Lee so admirably wrote, it's "the sensation of settling to the bottom of the ocean." In slow motion, I might add. Sometimes you can drop the class, but that's only once in a blue moon. Usually, the most boring professors you get teach a course that is required for graduation.

There are several types of boring professors. The worst is the "lecturer," the one who evidently prefers hearing himself speak. This kind is capable of carrying on a 50 minute monologue without seeming to take a breath. The only interesting part of the wholly monotonous lecture is watching the professor's face turn various colors throughout the period. This is also the type of professor who can literally make time stand still. Haven't you noticed that each minute really lasts an hour?

Another type is the professor who talks down to the class. This professor evidently thinks he is teaching grammar school, and that the students of MSC would be shocked to know that most of Shakespeare's puns are sexual. The lectures tend to be so simple that the students stare at one another in disbelief. "He didn't really say 'poopoo,' did he?" a classmate once whispered to me.

Almost as bad as the lecturer is the professor who uses the text, the whole text, and nothing but the text. I always assumed that professors were there not only to teach you the text, but to help you gain insight into it. Of course, I could be wrong.

It is only fair to say that boring classmates go hand-in-hand with boring professors. There is nothing more aggravating to me than getting into a class that refuses to discuss the subject matter. No matter how good a professor is, he can do nothing with a silent class.

I have never been mobbed by my fellow students for answering or raising a question in class; nor have I ever seen anyone else mobbed. I simply cannot understand why three-fourths of the students on this campus grow rippers on their mouths as soon as the professor walks into the classroom.

You can tell the first day whether or not class will be boring, but if the students in the class put their minds to it, it doesn't have to be.

In closing, I'd like my present professors to know that I am not including them in this category (see, I know how to cover my name, year, and major, and be no more than one page long).

Learn abroad
by Bernadette Policastro

How would you like to study abroad? No, that’s not an offer to examine the anatomy of a young lady. It’s an opportunity to spend a semester in another country.

MSC’s Intracollegiate Academic Programs (ICAP) provides an opportunity for undergraduates, to study in England, Australia, Denmark, and Israel. This year, 40 MSC students will be attending seven different schools in England alone.

A student in ICAP is guaranteed the transferable equivalent of 16 credits from his/her host school. These semester hours are usually accredited towards a student’s free electives. Grades are not given or recorded by the host school unless other arrangements have been made in advance. A schedule is completed with the help of a foreign studies coordinator from the school abroad.

Students may be assigned to live in a dormitory, university sponsored housing, or in their own flat. “One Montclair student who went to England,” Curtis Jackson, director of ICAP for MSC said, “lived seven miles away from her school. She went the ‘hitching’ post each morning and lined up with the others, and that’s how she got from her flat to school each day. ‘Hitching in England isn’t like it is here, it’s safer,’ he added.”

Jackson went on to say that students generally have housing easily accessible to their school. If a student is beyond walking distance, there is always public transportation.

For the past year, Jackson has been MSC’s coordinator for ICAP. ICAP was born in 1963, when a few professors in New Jersey, who had communications with England, made arrangements for American students to study there. The organization has grown to accommodate hundreds of students state-wide. England is no longer the only host country, Australia, Israel, and Denmark have been added to the list. Although ICAP in these countries isn’t as extensive. That isn’t to say a student in one of these countries wouldn’t be comfortable. One student who spent spring 1979 in Australia found accommodations pleasing. “I lived in an International House,” Mark Olson said. “It was a converted YMCA. We each had our own room. There was a cafeteria downstairs and places to eat down the street.” Olson found the Australians “friendly and warm.”

The organization is still growing. This winter session, several study abroad classes will be offered. The history department is sponsoring The Emergence of African Nationalism, in Jamaica; the department of counseling, human services, and guidance is offering Personal Values, in Puerto Rico; speech and theater has two. Broadcasting in Britain, and Victorian Architecture in San Francisco. The School of Humanities is also sponsoring two classes. Cuba and Literary England. Field Trips in Art History II is also being offered by the fine arts department.

The only requirements necessary to enter ICAP programs are a good academic standing, and recommendations. Each applicant must be interviewed and must be able to meet the moderate expense of such a trip.

The deadline for applications for spring 1980 is Nov. 1. For fall 1980, from now until March 1. Applications can be picked up at Jackson’s office, room 306, College Hall.

“It’s a wonderful experience,” Jackson commented. “I believe you learn as much, if not more, out of the classroom then in it. This is a great opportunity, and a unique learning experience.”

Drop-in anytime

by Lori McDonough

“If we can’t help you—we know someone who can.” That’s the motto adopted by the students of the Drop-in Center which they feel best describes the work they do.

The Drop-in Center is exactly that, a center where campus students as well as community members can “drop in.” It is run by a handful of students who volunteer their time and energy to help their peers. They prefer to think of it as a three dimensional service providing information, referrals, and peer counseling in a wide area of subjects ranging from sex to transportation problems to consumer complaints.

The center, which at present numbers 19, represents all departments of the campus. According to Dawn Fried, director of the center, “There is no required major or age in order to be a staff member. However, most of the present workers are uperclassmen who have had experiences in interpersonal growth, and who feel a deep need to persons’ fiercely concerning and interest for others.”

Further explained how the information and referral service segment of the center runs, “The staff is divided into five committees: sexual health, general help, and who feel a need to persons’ fiercely concerning and interest for others.”

For other words.

Although the staff handles a wide variety of situations that require other points of view or knowledge, the two most common question areas are transportation and anything dealing with sexual health, such as VD, abortion, rape, and pregnancy. According to Fried, “There is a strict code of confidentiality enforced by all staff members. No student is required to submit his name or age unless he wants to. There are no records kept except for the number of calls received each day.”

Although not trained professionals, the staff members are taught specific techniques used to counsel people. One particular technique, known as the “creative listening and reflective style,” enables the counselors to listen carefully to the caller and reflect back to them the same idea stated in different words. By listening to the caller, the student counselor can determine if the student just wants to talk or if he wants problem-solving. He then asks the caller if he, himself, has any ideas on how to solve his problem. If he doesn’t, the counselor offers possible alternatives, and he asks the caller determine which is the best one for him. Counselors emphasize the fact that they are merely offering alternatives; they cannot and will not accept any responsibility for decisions made by the caller.

The Drop-in Center is open 24 hours, seven days a week. Staff members welcome students to take advantage of their services and to spread the word to members of the neighboring areas.

Fried, summarizing, said “Our belief is that we have a lot to offer the campus community. Students may not realize that they can utilize our services, but they won’t find out until they give us a try.”

Profs research NJ carcinogens

by Wilson Velez

Almost everywhere you look, the environment shows signs of cancer causing agents. Two MSC biology professors are currently doing research on carcinogenic substances in our environment. Their research will deal with cancer causing agents in the coastal waters of New Jersey.

Ann Marie DiLorenzo, assistant professor of biology (genetics, tissue culture), and Leah Koditschek, professor of biology (microbiology), are among the recipients of an Alumni Association award for biological research at MSC.

Asked how they received the grant, DiLorenzo replied, "We applied for the grant last spring. We had to write a proposal which included our objectives, budget, list of materials needed, and approximate cost." The grant was for $450 to be shared by both professors in their research, DiLorenzo explained.

DiLorenzo, clad in her white lab coat, said, "The grant would further my education and in turn create more material for me to share with my students, and create prestige for MSC." The grant was awarded last spring and actual research will start this fall.

The professors are working with short term tests which indicate probable carcinogenic/mutagenic substances faster than the older long term method. The tests are for carcinogenesis—the start of the cancer—and mutagenesis—the change in an organism. Koditschek has already begun research with the Ames Assay, a short term test for mutagenesis of bacteria.

DiLorenzo sat comfortably as she explained the need for a short term test in animal tissue. "In industry for example, business leaders need to know quickly if what they are doing can be detrimental to health. So the short test can provide quicker information and save both time and money!" She continued. "The government is also placing stricter enforcements on products so businesses have to find out in a short span of time if what they are doing might eventually cause cancer in humans."

DiLorenzo shows interest in wanting to educate the public so they can further understand the problems of our environment. "Today it seems that a lot of people are interested in their environment, but more people have to get involved and know what to do about it," she said. DiLorenzo also remarked on how toxicology can be a great help in combating poisons in our lands. She added that toxicologists are in great demand and that in the near future the School of Math and Sciences will develop a major in toxicology.

In spite of her chaotic schedule, DiLorenzo still has time for clubs and organizations. The friendly and talkative professor is active in clubs and organizations. She is the president of the Alumni Association of Trinity College, publicity chairman for the North East Branch of the Tissue Culture Association, and a girl scout leader.

The 36 year old mother of two recalled, "I was always interested in science since elementary school. During my freshman year in college I had an enthusiastic teacher who loved her work and I felt that this was for me." She enjoys teaching at MSC and enjoys the challenge of teaching. "The helpfulness of all fellow professors in the department and our unified attempts to improve the department are wonderful," she said proudly.

Monty Python's
sorrows of young Brian

by Meryl Yourish

MONTY PYTHON'S LIFE OF BRIAN

It is Dec. 25. The Three Wise Men, following a star, find a manger with a woman and a baby. They leave their gifts. Seconds later, they return and take their gifts back. Jesus' manger is further down the street, they have realized.

So begins Monty Python's Life of Brian, the story (more or less) of a mistaken messiah. By far the best work yet of these English comics, Life of Brian surpasses their last picture, Monty Python and the Holy Grail, in many ways. Whereas the Holy Grail was a group of skits loosely connected with Arthurian legend, Life of Brian is a complete movie, with only one real digression.

We meet the adult Brian (Graham Chapman) in the year 33 AD, along with his mother, Mandy (Terry Jones), listening to Jesus' Sermon on the Mount. We follow him to his job as a vendor in the coliseum, where as he meets the members of the People's Front of Judea (PFJ)—Reg (John Cleese), Francis (Michael Palin), Stan (Eric Idle), and Judith (Sue Jones-Davies).

Brian, professing his hatred of the Romans (after finding out that his father was a Roman Centurion), pleads to join the movement.

"How much do you hate the Romans?" Reg asks.

"A lot!" is Brian's fervent reply. He is in.

His first assignment is to paint "Romans go home" on the wall of the palace. Caught by a Centurion (Cleese), Brian is forced to correct his poor Latin and conjugate his verbs correctly, on pain of death. The Centurion then orders him to write the phrase 100 times by sunrise as punishment. The next scene shows a squad of soldiers washing the writing off the wall.

It is through the PFJ that Brian is captured by the Romans and ultimately made a reluctant messiah—during his escape from the Romans he jumps out a window, knocking a boring prophet (Palin) off his platform. To avoid the Centurion, Brian espouses philosophy that he has heard from Jesus' sermon, and the cult of Brian begins to form.

After the soldiers leave, Brian tries to make his getaway. Dozens of people, led by Elsie (Carol Cleveland), follow what they believe is the true Messiah. Brian tries to get rid of them, but to no avail. When he wakes the next morning, after spending a cozy evening with Judith, he opens his windows and discovers hundreds of disciples outside, waiting for him to appear. An embarrassing situation, certainly, but even more so because he is nude.

Unable to rid himself of his followers, he is arrested by the Romans and sentenced to crucifixion.

This is definitely not a movie for religious fanatics. Although the three major religions in this country have condemned this film, the only truly tacky scene is the crucifixion. The movie closes with Idle telling Brian to cheer up, that things aren't so bad. Idle then proceeds to sing "Always look on the bright side of life," joined by the crucifixion victims, all waving bound arms and legs.

The versatility of the Python troupe is very evident in this movie. Each member plays five to a dozen parts, with the exception of Chapman. Chapman is wonderful as the straight man to the rest of the troupe. His confused, frustrated "messiah," who seems to always get caught up in circumstances beyond his control, is a perfect foil for Idle's ridiculousness and Cleese's stuffy Centurion. Cleese also portrays the leader of the revolutionaries whose main reaction to emergencies is to call a meeting.

Palin gives a hilarious portrayal as a Pontius Pilate who sounds more like Baba Wawa and causes everyone in hearing distance to go into convulsions of laughter. He also portrays one of the Wise Men, a revolutionary, and an ex-lerper who has been cured by Jesus.

Some of Idle's funnier roles include Stan, a "confused revolutionary," who wants to be called Loretta; a practical joker on the crucifixion line, and Harry the Haggler, a beard and stone salesman.

Gilliam is superb as a jailer who looks, (and acts) like a Neanderthal man. On the whole, the troupe puts together a terrific gestalt, and it shows throughout the movie.

I don't think that the movie should have been so vocally condemned, but then that's for you to decide. As Cleese would say, "This calls for immediate discussion."
Meet the beaters

Blondie
Eat to the Beat

Chrysalis CHE 1225

Considering the overall success of their last album, Blondie could have easily played it safe and recorded Parallel Lines II and satisfied everyone. However, they decided to assemble a taste of everything on Eat to the Beat.

The title song brings to mind the material found on Plastic Letters. The lyrics are full of humor (a fact too often overlooked on Blondie albums) and at times are simply absurd.

One hopes the new LP will not be received on the merits of the total lyric but here's a taste:

How hard can you squeeze?

by Dan Marino

Peter Maas
Made In America
Viking Press, 347 pp. $10.95

Richie Flynn once made a spectacular 93-yard scoring run in his rookie season with the New York Giants. That is his sole claim to fame; the next year knee surgery put an end of any hopes of gridiron immortality. Now, a decade later, a salesman for Goldblatt's Brewery, Flynn sees his chance to score again — this time with a city day care center which, if he can make the initial down payment on the building, will assure him of a year's worth of city and federal funds. The only catch is he has little money, no credit, and no mortgage, so he pursues the only alternative left: a loan shark named Albert "King Kong" Karpestein.

The premise for Peter Maas' first novel is a wry, cynical reversal of the American dream. Flynn is no wide-eyed idealistic youth caught in its morass though; all he wants to do is get ahead. "Isn't that what it's all about, getting ahead?" he says. "Don't they say it in all those Fourth of July speeches?...This is my big chance. The money's just waiting for me. All I have to do is grab it."

It's not that simple, of course; before the plot reaches its sad but inevitable conclusion Flynn finds himself enmeshed in a web of power and indirectly; in this respect it is similar to The Big Sleep or The Maltese Falcon, but adds a uniquely Seventies twist — it is no coincidence that the backdrop of the Watergate scandal.

Maas' characters are real people the book as comic. A host of minor characters people the book as well: topless dancers, football FBI agents, all sketched briefly but vividly in Maas' lean, tight prose.

The Valachi Papers

A hard, funky rocker, "The Hijacking of an Armored car" is the ground by Burke's incredible bass drumming.

Chris Stein's contribution, "Shyflya," is a beautiful ballad about a factory worker fired from her job and forced to live in the lonely, outside world. This is one of the slowest songs on the album, and also the most...

Deborah Harry

One hopes the nonprofit Fp will not be received on the merits of Parallel Lines alone.

"Slow Motion" could easily pass as a Motown original. The song reminds us how much time we had when we were young and fell in love for the first time. "...You can play with time. You can have her today, but tomorrow is fine..." This song will get the same airplay Heart of Glass did.

Speaking of disco, there is, sorry to say, a disco song on the album. It's called "Atomic" and it really has a nice, melodic tune. The song is reminiscent of the theme songs to all those cheap Clint Eastwood westerns.

All in all this album proves that the Blondies (as they prefer to be called collectively) are ready and more than able to create music for the 80's. With groups like The Clash, Talking Heads, and Blondie generating the music for the upcoming decade, the best is yet to come.

Peter Maas

Maas is well known for his non-fiction works Serpico and The Valachi Papers, and he has put his intimate knowledge of New York City and organized crime to good use in Made In America. While fine enough as a straight crime and suspense novel, it is more a tale of greed and corruption and how they affect the average man, directly and indirectly; in this respect it is similar to The Big Sleep or The Maltese Falcon, but adds a uniquely Seventies twist — it is no coincidence that the backdrop of the Watergate scandal.
Broadway berated

by Tim Potter

Scrambled Feet is an original, amusing show that pokes fun at the whole Broadway experience. This off-broadway play succeeds in making the audience laugh at every aspect of the Great White Way; the directors, producers, songwriters—even the ushers in the theaters. It is all portrayed with a playful innocence. The revue even enters into a territory no one dares to criticize, the drama critic himself. Jabs are taken at such notables as Clive Barnes and Stewart Klien.

Satire is an effective form of comedy if handled correctly.

Mondo crappo

by Dirk Bender

Network censorship is a cruelly arbitrary thing; one just never knows before bringing forth a TV production whether the powers that be will deem it entirely unfit for mass consumption, or just hack little bits out of it until its value is dropped to becoming palatable to the lowest possible common denominator.

Michael O'Donohue, a writer and sometime-actor from Saturday Night Live collaborated with several others about a year ago on a late-night TV comedy special. NBC had a look at the script and gave them the go-ahead. The finished product, however, somehow came off as being too raunchy (some nude still shots of women are probably what did it) for TV, and the stuffed-shirt censors yanked the show off the air.

You probably know the rest—undaunted, the creators transferred the videotapes to film and Mondo Video was born again for theatrical release. Not surprisingly, it just doesn’t make it as a part. What had seemed bizarre and sickly funny in its offbeat way on the TV screen can become cinematically broad and slow moving.

The mentality is pure Saturday Night Live—lots of weird ideas in the form of skits, not strung together by any one theme (the only thing that string them together are the “insert commercial” breaks, a periodic reminder of what should have been), but ranging from wild ideas that almost work, like a cat’s swimming program to prevent future drownings, to ones who fall flat, like the bit about government-designed-top-secret-weapon laser bras, shot like an old newreel.

Some of it is really funny—glamorous ladies (Deborah Harry, Lorraine Newman, et al.) explaining what it is in men that gets ‘em hot, like, “I like men who smell their fingers,” and there’s even a clip from The Great Rock and Roll Swindle with Sid Vicious singing “My Way” (who, the announcer informs us, was “a really Mondo kind of guy. We’re gonna miss you, Sid.”)—but for the most part, Mondo Video is about as exciting as cold spaghetti.

I’m Joan,
nuke me

by Julie Andrews

RIDE A RED HORSE. Written and directed by Joan Harvey. At the Trick and Warehouse Theatre, 79 East 4th St., NY.

It’s been said that we’ve gone from the socially active 60’s into the apathetic 70’s. Now it appears we’re headed for a new era of social consciousness in the 80’s. In these last few weeks, the huge Batter Park City “no nukes” rally and the Musicians United for Safe Energy concerts have drafted thousands of people to the antinuclear movement. With impeccable timing, if not impeccable acting, a new off-Broadway play, Ride a Red Horse, opened last Thursday at the Trick and Warehouse Theatre. Performed by the 4th Wall Repertory Company, it’s a strongly anti-nuclear play with its story taking place in the present time.

The play is about radical anti-nuclear organizers. The central characters are a mother, her son, and her daughter. They play an emotion-charged middle class family, who can’t get together on which way to fight the nuclear authorities. The mother, Lee-Ann, advocates careful tactics and non-violence, while Muffy, her daughter, favors civil disobedience and occupying plant sites. The resulting controversy is over-written in the script, and over-acted. Rachel Falk as Muffy is unconvincing in the fights—her temper tantrums become downright tedious.

With such a topical subject, it’s too bad the play isn’t more polished. Joan Harvey tries for the triple-play—writing, directing, starring—and she seems to have taken on more than she can handle. With a different director the play could have been far more successful, but as it is she doesn’t have enough perspective to see what changes are needed.

□ EVELYN WOOD READING DYNAMICS
Boring Bonoff, tedious Tull

by Ilan Strasser

Karla Bonoff
Restless Nights
Columbia JC 35799

The strange, but colorful pastiche that is California's musical scene has led to a community of artists that not only share the same songs, but ideologies as well. In spite of any originality that emanated from these musicians in the past five years or so, much of their music has remained singularly pointed.

Karla Bonoff's debut album in 1977 did not change that direction. However, it did show that some creativity still survived within the tired framework. It was a tribute to Bonoff's creativity that Linda Ronstadt, California's prime entrepreneur, chose to record three of her songs on one album.

Now almost two and a half years later, Bonoff has reemerged with Restless Nights, an album that negates all her previous flash and shows that she is no different form any of her contemporaries. Restless Nights suffers from a sameness in the vocals. Whether the songs are fast or slow, the delivery is constant. In places where roughness would have been appropriate, the vocals are smooth and stream-lined. In instances where a well controlled reading is necessary, they are simply dry and without emotion.

Lyrically, the album is no different from its predecessor. Singing of love and its tribulations, Bonoff hits no new ground. Only "Trouble Again" and "Baby Don't Go" come off above average on an album by an artist whose astute use of the written word gained her her initial reputation. Musically, very little stands out at all.

The only other song worth mentioning is "Never Stop Her Heart," whose melody is fluid and persistent. The song transcends all of the material here, except for "Trouble Again" and "Baby Don't Go" because it relies on its own strengths to carry it through. And it does. It is a good example of what Bonoff is capable of.

After waiting two and one half years for a second release, Bonoff's fans will find Restless Nights an extreme disappointment. Unless of course, they, like her, have become lost in the shuffle of boring California rock.

Jethro Tull
Stormwatch
Chrysalis 1238

Stormwatch is the best Tull album to emerge in the last three years. In spite of that, it has many of the same failings as most of Tull's recent work. What's hardest to take is Ian Anderson's long lyrical forays which in spite of their verbosity still amount to nothing. Musically, the album is far ahead (in concept and execution) of last year's Heavy Horses LP, which itself was not much better than the pitiful Songs From The Wood.

The problem to my ears is that Anderson, gifted with an amazing musical mind, constantly ruins the most breathtaking musical passages with a voice that, though it is skilled, lacks any new energy. When composing, Anderson appears to be obsessed with finding new ways to twist and curve his voice so that even simple words become multisyllabic. Not only is this unnecessary, but it also makes for rough going.

The choruses of "Orion" and "Dark Ages" highlight the problem. Instead of trying to work within the framework of the song, Anderson tries to overpower them.

Most of the other songs are okay. And just this side of mediocre, Ian Anderson is still writing music that Jethro Tull can churn out and play by rote. Know what I'd like to see? An instrumental Jethro Tull album. That would be exciting.

Kinky Times

by Julie Andrews

The Kinks
Low Budget
Arista AB-4240 SA

The Kinks' latest album, Low Budget shows the group at the height of their geni. us. The title song, "Low Budget," beautifully expresses the sentiments of our times. Lines like "Money's rare there's none to be found/ So don't think I'm tight if I don't buy a round." really communicate with a current audience. Another great cut from the album is "A gallon of gas," a sardonic, witty statement about this year's gasoline situation. It's a first-rate rocker set in a blues background, and expresses an ironic joke on our society; illegal drugs are more readily available than fuel.

On the other side of the album is probably the best cut, "Catch me now I'm falling," lead singer-songwriter Ray Davies' talent is at its peak in this strong social message. With a touch of patriotism, "Captain America" reminds us of the dollar's sorry state, asking "citizens from all over the world" to "catch me now I'm falling." The Davies states that we are owed something for all the times we've aided various countries; a sentiment that has been expressed by Americans before, but never so cleverly as this transplanted Britisher's bitter personification of Captain America.

The key to the success of this album is its combination of current lyrics and great rhythm designed to connect with a modern audience in the modern world. Its strong social statements makes it an excellent choice for people concerned about our suffering economy, willing to peer through Davies' half-closed eyelids.
MSC gridders destroy Squires

by Ken Lambert

It just proves how talented a team can be when they have been penalized for 460 yards in four games, and still be 3-1.

MSC had 193 yards in penalties against the Kean College Squires, and was still able to destroy Kean 40-3. It was a game where the offense showed that the defense isn't the only part of the Indian team.

The offense had a total of 367 yards, which included three rushing touchdowns by tailback Mike Horn, one by full-back Chris McGrath, and a 59 yard passing touchdown from quarterback Joe Rebholz to reserve tailback Dennis Senerchia.

MSC scored the only touchdown it needed at the 11:23 mark of the first quarter. McGrath blasted up the middle for 16 yards for the score, and three yards respectively. The Scotch Plains resident has a very impressive 4.3 yards per carry, plus a 116 yard average per game.

Linebacker Mike Schreck played perhaps his best game in his collegiate career. He had 16 tackles. Schreck was all over the field as he led the strong Indian defense which gave up only 115 yards in total offense.

Indian kicker Keith Sahlin made good on a 46 yard field goal. Sahlin holds the season record for kickers with 57 points, and may have a chance to surpass that record this year. A missed extra point following the second MSC score kept Sahlin from tying the record of 30 consecutive extra points, held by Robert Brewster, an alumnus of MSC.

The Tribe scored their second touchdown at the 9:55 mark of the first quarter. Horn took the hand off from quarterback Scott Fischer and ran 12 yards for the score. The point after attempt was not good by Sahlin, making the score 13-0.

Horn's second score was a five yard run at the 4:13 mark of the 10:31 mark of the third quarter, which gave the Indians a 30-0 score, following a Sahlin field goal.

MSC scored its last touchdown on a pass play. Reserve quarterback Joe Rebholz threw a 59 yard pass to Senerachi to give MSC their final points.

The recent rains that have been falling have washed out some of this years fall baseball schedule but, the Tribe is still alive with games coming up against Trenton State College (TSC) tomorrow at 7:30 pm at Trenton. Also, at Pitsers field the Indians play two on Saturday as well as Sunday against Fordham University and Upsala College at noon and 1 pm respectively.

The Indians will end their season on Sun. Oct.7, after their second straight double-header. They will face Fordham University on Saturday, and Upsala on Sunday.

MSC beat Fordham last spring 8-7, in what was probably their best all season. They played Upsala twice, and managed to split with them, losing to them at home and beating them on the road.
Football is a game played by people with physical talents. But in Saturday's game against Kean College (Kean), three men played more than just their physical talents — but also with internal fortitude; something called "heart."

Joe Rebholz started the season as MSC's number one quarterback. He failed to move the offense and he was replaced in the season's second game. He soon was further demoted to the tailback Dennis Senerchia. Hopefully, the pass will be a sign of things to come. Rebholz

The streak had reached 29 in a row when Sahlin trotted onto the field following the first of Mike Horn's three touch downs. This was to be the kick to tie the record but he missed! Undaunted by this temporary setback and the disappointment which had to accompany it, Sahlin went on to start a new streak with three more conversions. He also kicked two field goals (one of which was a career best of 46 yards) and made a solo tackle on Kean's tremendous return on punt. Ray Scott. Sahlin will break some records before he is through.

When Sahlin kicked his 46-yard field goal, he didn't have his usual holder. It seems Dan Kelleher was pre-occupied at the time and so on to the field trotted Tom Devine. Devine, who finished last season as the team's starting left corner back, had averaged 1.3 minutes of playing time over MSC's first three games. His replacement at corner back is Carl Adams. MSC's super freshman, is understandable but his lack of playing time even on special teams is not. But Devine has hung tough, and Saturday night, with MSC in a prevent defense, Devine picked off a Kean pass and raced with the ball some 40 yards. A clipping call reduced Schreck combines with Sam Mills and Dave Brown to give MSC a linebacking corps that would make Joe Paterno envious. . . MSC MEMOS: Mike Schreck was a three sport performer. He earned seven varsity letters in cross country, basketball, and baseball. He was captain of his baseball team during his junior year and was named to the first team on the All-State Teacher's College squad in basketball. He also received the Meritorious Achievement Medal for athletics and was named in the 1943 edition of "Who's Who."

For the second time in a row, MSC will hold its Athletic Hall of Fame ceremonies at Giants Stadium on Sat., Oct. 6. The induction will take place at a "Stadium Club" banquet, following MSC's game against Seton Hall University.

Gametime is slated for 3:30 pm. At halftime the new inductees will be introduced to the fans for the first time along with the present Hall of Fame members. The cocktail, hour starts at 6 pm with dinner at 7 pm.

The 10 new Hall of Famers are Luther Bowen '69 of East Orange; Frank Costa '56 of San Diego, Calif.; Larry Ennis '59 of Emerson; Lew Erber '56 of Orinda, Calif.; Joseph Grosch '43 of Belleville; Ken Miscia '57 of Upper Montclair; Constance Perry '55 of Spring Lake Heights; Robert Plosica '51 of Lavallette; Art Smith '54 of Sussex; and Nathan Weiss '48 of Clifton.

Luther Bowen was a four-year starter in basketball and captain in his junior and senior years. He led the team in scoring for two seasons and was instrumental in leading the Indians to a first place finish in the National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) Eastern Regionals and in two National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics (NAIA) tournaments. Luther was named MVP in the 1967 NCAA regionals and was voted outstanding athlete at MSC in 1969.

Frank Costa was a fine all-round athlete, lettering four times in football, three times in basketball, and three times in track. Few athletes in the school's history have earned as many varsity letters. Costa played quarterback and safety in football and was a member of 1953-54 basketball team that averaged 96.3 points per game and posted a 19-4 record. He holds records in track and field in the low hurdles and javelin and was MSC's outstanding athlete in 1956.

Larry Ennis was the most valuable player of the 1957 baseball team. During that season he posted a 9-5 record with 10 saves and 101 innings pitched. He won 16 games over his career and still holds four MSC career and single season records. He was co-captain of the 1958 team. In addition to his four years in baseball, Ennis also played two years of football. Lew Erber earned eight varsity letters, four in football and four in track. He was the leading scorer during his junior and senior years in track. He held the MSC record for the 220 yard low hurdles. In the NJ Inter-collegiate Athletic Conference (NJIAA) championships meet, he won five different events.

Ken Miscia earned a record five varsity letters in football and four in baseball. He was the most valuable player in football for three seasons and was captain in his final two years. He won the Sandy MacMillan and Montclair Athletic Commission (MAC) awards for outstanding play in 1957. Constance Perry ranks fifth on the MSC all-time basketball scoring list with 1,380 points. He also scored 521 points in one season and 43 points in one game. He lettered in baseball as well and was co-captain of both the basketball and baseball teams during his junior and senior years.

Robert Plosica was an excellent baseball player during his four years at MSC. He had a career batting average of well over .300. His sophomore year was his best with an average of .400. He tied or led the team in most of the hitting categories during his career. He received the A.C. Coder Baseball Alumnus Award in 1979.
WPC nips MSC
by Frank Penotti

The last train chugging through the darkness below Sprague Field whistled a good night tune to a streak that is no more, a streak that had gotten the MSC soccer team off to one of their fastest starts in years. Streaks are made to be ended and for the Indian soccer team, arch rival and traditional nemesis William Paterson College (WPC) stopped the five game win streak with a hard-earned 4-2 victory.

This was a game that pitted two undefeated teams who were primed for the showdown. An intense atmosphere was created by all who were on the field, both players and coaches alike. Unfortunately for the Indians, WPC had a bit more of the luck in this initial showdown. How ever you interpret luck, the facts stand by Frank Penotti

In Division II of co-ed, the Bohners with a record of 3-0-0, lead the second place Mickey Mouse Club with a record of 2-0-1.

The results of league games held last week are the following. Devil's Brigade struggled to a 20-20 tie with Bohn Brewski's. Olga's Outlaws' outstanding defense, led by Bill Nieman's suicide squad, trounced the Weebles 32-13. The Mickey Mouse Club roared over the Pits, 19-0.

Touchdowns by Lisa Dibisceglie, Laura Molinaro, and a key interception by Joseph Currie enabled Tiberi's Territ ors to streak by the Tw ilight Terri tors 28-25. Mike Ritz had an excellent game with a record of 189 and high series (160). Cindy Jancz of Animal House leads all women in the league with high average (153), high game (202), and high series (495).

The men's three-on-three basketball tournament will be held on Oct. 9-10 in Panzer Gym, starting at 8 pm.

The Platform Tennis tournament scheduled for Oct. 6-7, has been canceled due to the homecoming celebration. SILC will sponsor a bonfire Friday night, Oct. 5, for homecoming in the "pit" area of the parking lot. Please bring your own wood.

A roller skating night will be held Mon. Nov. 5 from 10 pm-midnight at United Skates, located at West Belt Mall (next to Willowbrook Mall). Tickets will go on sale on Oct. 23, in the Student Center lobby. Cost of the ticket is $1.25. Skate rental will be an extra dollar payable at the rink.

The Indians will be making their only 1979 appearance at Giants Stadium this Saturday when they take on Seton Hall University (SHU).

The game, scheduled to start at 3:30 pm, is the second game of a doubleheader to be played.

Both MSC as well as the Pirates come off victories last week. In MSC's 40-3 victory over Kean College (Kean), the offense as well as the defense looked impressive. The score was 33-0 before the Squires were able to manage their lone points on the field goal.

For the Pirates, it was a little more difficult. In building up a 17-0 lead at halftime, SHU held off a late Trenton State College (TSC) rally to defeat the Lions 17-8. The win improved SHU's season record to 2-1.

For the Pirates, this game has a great deal of importance. The team is hoping to improve upon its 2-1 mark, which is as quick a start as they have had. A win over MSC would instill a great deal of confidence into Manigan's group.

The Indians' victory over SHU would give them their second victory over the Pirates over the years. Prior to the win last year, the teams had battled in close contests, with one tie and a single-point victory becoming the outcomes.

As important for the Pirates will be a late Trenton State College (TSC) rally to defeat the Pirates over the years. Prior to the win last year, the teams had battled in close contests, with one tie and a single-point victory becoming the outcomes. Another strong Giants Stadium showing for MSC, and they will insure their invitation to 1980 football in East Rutherford.

For SHU football coach Ed Manigan, much attention and scored three more goals by Steve Dempsey, Bob Rento, and Ken DioGuardi, while goalie Brian Ippolito and the Indian Defense held the Hawks to one goal.

In the third period, Monmouth again shut out the Indian offensive squad and scored four more times.

However, the Indians didn't give up easily. In the fourth period, they battled back with goals by Dempsey, Rento, Al Heuer, and Pete Baldridge. With pressure mounting, the Hawks called for time out and regrouped their offense. This proved fatal to the Indians as Monmouth put the game out of reach with three final goals.
MSC impressive in victory

The MSC cross-country team marched off with three more wins last Wednesday afternoon, but not before presenting coach James Harris with several gray hairs. The outcome fully unresolved until the most latent stages of the race, the Indians eked out a 27-29 decision over Kings' College. Neither host Ramapo College (Ramapo) nor St. Peter's were ever in contention and both were subsequently shut out, 15-50. It was Kings' that provided the excitement of the day though.

As coach Harris later mused, "You guys really know how to make a coach sweat. I had no idea what the outcome would be until you emerged from the woods for the final time. He then added, "This was truly an outstanding team effort. Everybody really did their job all the way down the line.

Almost lost in the shuffle of the victory was a record-breaking performance by Ian Gordon. Eclipsing seven seconds off the previous course mark, Gordon led virtually from start to finish. Teammate John Kirchhof was only a few steps behind, as he also bettered the previous standard. After that, it was Tom Schwarz in sixth, Ron Macey in eighth, Pete Guthrie in ninth, and Dan Wiggins in tenth.

Guthrie and Wiggins definitely had to be considered the key to the victory though. Had it not been for the two freshmen running their best race of the season, MSC would not have been able to pull out such a hard-fought victory. Assistant coach John Bernath perhaps summed it up best when he stated, "Pete and Dan both ran a really tough race. At the halfway point, the outcome was too close to call, but that's where they really poured it on and it made all the difference in the world."

On Saturday, the tables were turned however, as the Indians dropped a close decision to Southern Connecticut State College (SCSC), 23-34. Having to compete without the services of one of their top runners, Rich Wallace, MSC turned in an overall 'flat' team effort.

The day did provide some reasons for optimism, however.

Kirchhof ran a typically inspired race, finishing third overall and first for the Indians. Captain Mike Ernst had an interesting observation on the performance, "John always seems to pull through. Today was a perfect example of that."

Another bright spot for MSC was the emergence of transfer Steve Boyle as a highly competitive runner. An outstanding performer in high school, Steve was MSC's third man Saturday, and has tightened the competition within the team for the seven varsity positions.

Harris later commented on his strategy, "We knew that today's meet was one of the lighter ones on the schedule, so we choose to sit out Ian and Ron in hope that they would be ready to go for Saturday's showdown with Trenton State College."

It was this depth one again that provided two lopsided victories on Tuesday. Kirchhof, Wallace and Schwarz tied for first in 26:45, as they led the Indians to a pair of louters over William Paterson College (WPC) and Jersey City State College (JCSC), 15-50 and 16-37 respectively. Wiggins and Steve Boyle continued the parade as MSC eventually wound up with nine of the first ten places.

This accomplishment is even more remarkable, considering coach James Harris chose not rest two of the team's better runners, Ian Gordon and Ron Macey. Harris later commented on his strategy, "We knew that today's meet was one of the lighter ones on the schedule, so we chose to sit out Ian and Ron in the hope that they would be ready to go for Saturday's showdown with Trenton State College (TSC)."

Race time is 11 am at Garret Mountain.

Bill Harkley has been competing in Cross country in order to prepare for the upcoming track season.

Freshman Tom Schwarz, junior John Kirchhof, and senior Rich Wallace tied for first place as MSC romped to a 15-50 decision over William Paterson College.

Transfer Paul Maloney and freshman Dan Wiggins have both been strong performers for this year's squad.
