Students given voice on board of trustees

State college students will have a greater voice in the affairs of their schools, under a bill sponsored by Assemblyman Byron M. Baer, and signed by Governor Thomas Kean on Oct. 23, 1986.

Baer’s bill allows students to be represented on the boards of trustees of state colleges and to participate in most of the boards’ activities.

Assemblyman Baer said student representation on state college boards, “is a concept that I have supported for more than a decade. I’ve introduced numerous bills that would have permitted it, but it was only this year that we were able to get it signed into law.”

Under the new law, one voting student member and one alternate will serve on each state college’s board of trustees. The individual boards will determine whether student representatives should be elected by the student body at large or by members of the student government association.

Student representation on boards of trustees can be traced back to the early 1970’s, when an increased awareness of students rights and responsibilities arose. The struggle began 14 years ago with legislation introduced by Baer.

Since then, there has been a growing understanding that students are not bystanders in or the passive consumers of the educational process; they pay thousands of dollars and give up hundreds of hours of time to go to our state colleges.

They are active participants in the campus community, and they should, through representation on the boards, be accorded a say in the decisions which affect the cost and quality of their education and the terms and conditions of campus life.

“As a result, student trustees provide the board with a direct communication link to the student population that it might not otherwise develop,” he said.

Assemblyman Baer commended the New Jersey Student Association and the student-supported New Jersey Public Interest Research Group (PIRG) for their consistent support and efforts on behalf of the bill.

Baer noted that Higher Education’s endorsement of the measure was another key reason that its supporters were able to get it approved.

Soviet Union, political control and the basic frameworks of the history of Eastern Europe were determined by the Soviet Union.”

The “irrational mass terrorism” employed in the Stalin era was next discussed by Dr. Baer. “No specific attitude needs to be displayed by any individual,” Bence explained. “As long as you belonged to any dangerous categories from which the Communist state expected hostile behavior, you became suspect.”

The state policy has since changed. “If terror is applied in an irrational manner, no social group can feel safe, including Communist supporters,” Bence said. Party leadership reacted in a flexible manner towards the Polish Solidarity movement. Bence explained the inflexibility experienced by the Hungarian revolution showed the ineffectiveness of strict party policy.

Bence feels the new party headed by Soviet leader Gorbachev is leading “an transformation into a new era.” Dr. Bence questions whether Gorbachev may be willing to bridge the gap between the leadership of Stalin and Krushchev. Bence said, “Gorbachev is good at the propaganda game.”

Hungarian dissident explains

Guest lecturer Bence speaks on revolution

By Mary Donnelly

Prof. Gyorgy Bence, a sociologist working at the New School of Social Research in NYC, gave a speech Wednesday afternoon entitled “Revolutionary Working Class Movements Compared: Hungary 1956, Czechoslovakia 1968, Poland 1980-81.”

Hungarian-born Dr. Peter Pastor opened the lecture with remarks commemorating the Hungarian Revolu­tion of 1956. The working class movement was the first of its kind against the Soviet-type system of government. The last week of October and the first week of November signifies the thirtieth anniversary of the crushing of the revolution by Soviet forces.

“The movement was an attempt at a pluralistic, multi-party society model on the American system incompatible with Soviet policy,” Pastor said.

Dr. Bence, a Hungarian dissident scholar, would be unemployed in Hungary. Because of his differing opinions from official state policy, he becomes an “undesirable person.”

Bence focussed his talk on the Hungarian revolutionary movement of 1956. He sought to explain to his audience the similarities and differences present between Eastern bloc citizens and Americans. Bence feels the most important conflict occurs in “problems of communication.”

“Westerners tend to picture the people of the Soviet Union as ideological robots on a program which was written by Lenin,” Bence said.

The “ideological propaganda” envisioned by the West was not effective. Bence said, “the government system was unsuccessful in realizing its goals; there was no ‘new man’ or a transformation of the people.”

A chronological and historical analysis of the Hungarian movement was next accounted by Bence. Bence explained that the last years of WWII was a time when the Eastern European countries were occupied by Soviet forces.

The Soviets did not want these countries to become associated with Western Europe. The East bloc was absorbed by the Soviet system in an attempt to transform them into “nominal communist countries.”

Bence further explained, “The East bloc countries were not meant to become parts of the same country as the Soviet Union, political control and the basic frameworks of the history of Eastern Europe was determined by the Soviet Union.”

The “irrational mass terrorism” employed in the Stalin era was next discussed by Dr. Baer. “No specific attitude needs to be displayed by any individual,” Bence explained. “As long as you belonged to any dangerous categories from which the Communist state expected hostile behavior, you became suspect.”

The state policy has since changed. “If terror is applied in an irrational manner, no social group can feel safe, including Communist supporters,” Bence said. Party leadership reacted in a flexible manner towards the Polish Solidarity movement. Bence explained the inflexibility experienced by the Hungarian revolution showed the ineffectiveness of strict party policy.

Bence feels the new party headed by Soviet leader Gorbachev is leading an “transformation into a new era.” Dr. Bence questions whether Gorbachev may be willing to bridge the gap between the leadership of Stalin and Krushchev. Bence said, “Gorbachev is good at the propaganda game.”

Dear Career Services:

I'm a senior graduating in December and I want to sign up for a recruitment campaign, but you don't have anyone coming to speak with French majors. How can I get some help?

Questioning:

Dear Questioning:

We have French companies coming to Career Services this fall to interview December grads and want to speak with grads of liberal arts majors, so there are recruiters you can speak with if you want.

If, however, these companies are not the type you have in mind, since they are looking for the general skills you've developed at MSC rather than translation ability or knowledge of Racine, then work with us to get your job campaign started. Import/export houses, the U.N., foreign exchange agencies—organizations you might prefer—don't recruit anywhere. They don't have to as they can choose their employees from applicants who contact them individually. Come talk to us, and we'll show you resources like International Jobs which tells about agencies which hire people with your background.

Dear Career Services:

I followed my convictions and majored in English, but now that I'm about to graduate, I'm feeling panicked. What organizations will want me? What can I offer them?

Literate But Nervous:

If, however, you want to use your knowledge of Chaucer and Henningsen, a love of linguistics, a fascination with etymology or the English sonnet, interests and skills directly related to English—you might consider employment as a copy editor or copywriter in publishing, a position as a teacher, or a position developing educational media. Your love of books might lead you to work as a librarian, a technical writer, a writer of a company's in-house publications or publicity releases, or a lexicographer. You might also consider working for a company that produces word games, either in book form or as a box game.

Some of our alumni who majored in English hold positions as promotion copywriters for magazines and advertising agencies; as journalists; as editors of corporate newsletters and in many other areas.

But you don't have anyone coming to speak with grads of liberal arts majors, so there are recruiters you can speak with if you want.

Dear Career Services:

My brother graduated from MSC last year and had a hard time finding a job. He says Career Services really helped him, but he began his efforts too late. Can I do something even though I'm a freshman so that doesn't happen to me?

Worried:

Dear Worried:

Absolutely—start working with Career Services before senior year. Get familiar with the office and its services as a freshman or sophomore in order to give yourself time to figure out a couple of careers of interest to you. Then you can take courses which will help you to prepare for work. You'll also then give yourself plenty of time to talk to people who know about the work you're considering and have time enough to change your mind.

Candy store may be moved

By Mike Heelan
At last night's SGA meeting, the feasibility of moving the candy store into the College Store was discussed. According to SGA President, Mark Brancato, the Faculty Student Cooperative Association is looking into the many different aspects of this transaction.

A decision to move the candy store would require that the College Store compensate the Student Center for projected income losses of approximately $12,600 over a period of three years. Also, the FSCA would be required to purchase all outstanding inventory at an estimated value of $4,000 dollars. This transfer would enable students to shop for their needs in the College Store rather than wait on line in the already congested area.

In other news, the purpose of the residence life federation was discussed. The federation is made up of students representing their dorm buildings. The purpose of the organization is to help students who have maintenance problems, cafeteria complaints and other problems that may exist within the dorm. In addition, the federation plans many different social activities.

According to the Executive Vice President, Chriss Williams, the main goal of this group is to strengthen relations between the SGA and other campus organizations, hence being able to serve the students better. For these reasons, the Director of Residence Life, Robin Miller, stressed that residents need to voice their complaints so they can be acted on.

A debate was raised whether the SGA purchase order requirement of $250 dollars should be raised to $350 dollars. Many of the legislators in favor of the increase argued that inflation demands it. While some of those opposed to the increase felt that the present leadership of various clubs was not responsible enough and with the increase may try to 'cheat' the SGA. The proposed increase was voted against.

Finally the SGA appropriated $470 dollars to the Marketing Club for a trip to a convention at Penn State on the weekend of November 14-16, 1986.

If you think the best way to pay for college is to put it off for a few years and join the military, you're half right.

Because with the New GI Bill, you can join the Army National Guard and get a guaranteed minimum of $18,000 for college. But best of all, you serve two days a month and two weeks a year. Which means you can go to school full-time. Right now. On us.

So the question you have to ask yourself is not, can you afford college.

The question is, can you afford to wait.

Mandatory retirement act unfair to tenured teachers

Professor Ben Minor held a lone vigil in front of MSC's Student Center. A large sign strapped to his body protested the new federal law which was to take effect at the end of this academic year. Minor is one of many tenured college professors who are being victimized by age discrimination. At a time when age discrimination is being eliminated at the workplace, these professors have been overlooked. This is a mistake.

At age 70 Professor Minor is unwilling to leave the job he has held for many years. However, Congress has declared that he must. The weakness of the anti-discrimination measure which ended mandatory retirement at 70 in most professions, the few exceptions included law enforcement personnel, fire-fighters, certain high-level corporate executives, and college professors.

"I can see why police and firemen should retire due to the physical activities involved in their jobs," said Minor in a recent article. "But why tenured professors?"

The law assumes that most people will choose to retire by age 70. This is clearly wrong. At MSC, 59 faculty members will reach that age in the next ten years will not receive reappointment when their time comes. Their tenure, which is supposed to ensure job security, will no longer be in effect.

Another assumption has been made. The exemption of professors from the anti-discrimination act suggests that they are considered unfit to work at an elderly age. As a result, many fine and experienced teachers will be lost. Age is by no means an indication of ability in this case.

The policy may have further implications for the quality of state college faculties. Some teachers are apt to be scared away from the state colleges toward private institutions, where enforcement of mandatory retirement is more likely to be relaxed.

Thirteen states have retirement measures which discriminate against senior college professors. New Jersey is one. Still, victims like Ben Minor feel that Congress has let them down. Instead of eliminating this injustice, Congress has made it nationwide.

Even if the law is designed to open the field to new talent, it should allow older professors to appeal for an extension of tenure. The professor's colleagues and the MSC Administration should decide the matter, not Congress or the state. Since an MSC reappointment board may be subject to bias, neutral parties from other academic institutions should be included.

Minor has begun legal procedures to fight the mandatory retirement act, which takes effect June 30, 1987. The state Attorney General's Office is prepared to oppose him.

Neither the states nor the federal government should encourage age discrimination in the colleges. Rather, they should prevent it. From our point of view, mandatory retirement for professors is unwise and unfair.

Mikulski: new political prototype

Baltimore — The temperature in the packed room has reached sauna level by the time Barbara Mikulski works her way to the stage. There is no flying wedge of pin-striped aides before her. At 4 feet 11 inches, she finds her own path, weaving shoulder-level past the supporters who have come to this fund-raiser.

Short, stocky, rough around the edges, Barbara Mikulski doesn’t fill Hollywood’s image of The Senator. The version from central casting, as the candidate likes to say, “always looked like Yale, class of ’42.” Mikulski is and looks like Mt. St. Agnes, class of ’68. Yet, the first Democratic woman elected to the Senate in her own right.

Granddaughter of a Polish immigrant who ran a bakery here, daughter of parents who owned a neighborhood grocer, the woman everyone calls “Barbara” is a known quantity in the metropolitan area that accounts for 50 percent of the state’s vote. A former Baltimore social worker, a former city councilor, a congresswoman for ten years, she has built a reputation as tough, smart-mouthed, funny and caring.

As the man introducing her to this crowd says in a hyperbolic frenzy, “She is the people person of all people people.” The label means something in a campaign year when voters aren’t talking issues, but are seeking the candidates and the character they feel most comfortable with.

People vote for the candidates they know,” agrees Mikulski later as we talk over an Italian dinner, while she cheerfully sabotages her perennial attempt to keep down to campaigning weight. “That’s always been true. BUT,” she says wagging her fork for emphasis, “most of all, they vote for candidates who know THEM. She adds with an ironic smile, “I’m a 20-year overnight success story.”

Mikulski’s home ground.

In many ways, Mikulski is the prototypical female candidate for this post-Ferraro political season. To Stephanie Solen, who watches over candidates from her perch as executive director of the Women’s Campaign Fund, “Barbara very much represents what we’re seeing in 1986, a seasoned political candidate who switched parties and states less than three years ago.

Chavez’ main if dubious qualification is that she directed the U.S. Civil Rights Commission under Reagan. In her ads and debates, she has tried to convince Maryland people that they don’t know Barbara Mikulski as she “really” is: a “San Francisco-style” Democrat, an anti-malarial feminist. But it just isn’t playing on Mikulski’s home ground.

“I don’t like negative campaigning,” says the congresswoman flatly. “I don’t like it when it’s a national trend and I don’t like it when it’s directed at me. I think it turns voters off. One of the largest blocs of voters are the no-shows. That’s the only bloc it increases.” Her own ads are pure Mikulski. One ends with her response to a constituent’s friendly question about her waistline: “I’ve been counting my calories, counting my votes, and counting my blessings.”

If negative advertising hasn’t worked for Chavez, neither have coattails. The President who took this state by a comfortable margin in 1984 came in a while age, labeled Mikulski a “wily liberal,” raised $400,000 for the Chavez campaign, and left without making a dent in the polls.

-A101 Freshman Orientation

Nothing could have prepared me for the first few moments with my roommate. “Anique”—nothing more, just “Anique”—was her name. Change the “A” to a “U” and you’ve got a description.

When they asked what type of roommate I wanted, I didn’t know that I needed to be more specific than non-smoker. I could swear I saw a picture of Anique on a postcard I got from London. Within five minutes, I found out that she was an Art History student, into the Psychedelic Furs, and totally, totally against the domestication of animals.

I was just about ready to put in for a room transfer when she reached into her leather backpack, pulled out a can of Suisse Mocha and offered me a cup. Okay, I decided to keep an open mind.

As we sipped our cups, I found out that Anique and I share the same fondness for Cary Grant movies, the same disdain for wine coolers, and the same ex-boyfriend.

That gave us plenty to talk about.

It’s been said that theatre often imitates life. Maybe.

Music residency puts students in the show

The New Jersey Chamber Music Society is expanding its residency program at MSC, with the help of Governor Kean's Challenge for Excellence award to the school of fine and performing arts. Founded in Montclair in 1974 by flutist Peggy Schecter and pianist Bernice Silk, the Society began residence at MSC in 1985. Now this critically-acclaimed group will be including on-campus performances, classes with students, and special invitations for students to the Society's performances. In addition to the Society's residency, the program provides for participation by selected MSC faculty and students in some of the performances.

Students prepare repertory as a part of their regular program and then replace professional members of the Society in the presence of the music student body.

He performs exclusively on the eight string guitar - a perfect instrument for Renaissance and Baroque music and an ideal medium for expanding the modern repertoire.

MSC finished the 1986 Fall baseball season with an impressive 16-3-1 record.

After their fourth straight World Series appearance last Spring, the Indians looked this fall to replace eleven seniors including All-Americans Lou Blanco and Tim Johnson. Fortunately, coach Kevin Cooney has a strong nucleus from last year’s 36-11-1 Regional Championship club.

The big story was the emergence of sophomore John Deutsch as one of the premier hitters in the east. The 6-5, 225 lb. Deutsch clubbed four tape-measure home runs in only 13 MSC games. Deutsch moved to the outfield from first base for the Indians and responded by batting .410 with six doubles and fifteen RBI’s.

“John has the potential to be an outstanding college player and should be a top prospect for major league scouts,” said Cooney.

MSC’s pitching looks to be in good hands for this spring. Returners Brian Cheswick and Jeff Vanderoff had outstanding falls. They, along with All-American Anthony Foti, should make up a starting rotation capable of propelling MSC into the playoff picture again.

Newcomers who made an impact this fall included outfielder Stan Alston, a transfer from St. Leo College, who led the Indians with a .472 batting average. Sophomore Vinny Mann moved up from the JV to hit .326 and play himself into contention for an outfield spot. Pitchers Gary Murdoch, a transfer from County College of Morris, and Brian Devins, a freshman from Mt. Olive High School, were impressive and will add depth to an already fine staff.

“Repeating as NCAA Regional champions is our top goal,” says Cooney. This fall’s 16-3-1 is the first step.

Football team rebounds, dismantles Trenton, 54-3

By Perry Schwarz

After a 13-6 loss to Salisbury State, the MSC Indians rebounded and took their anger out on conference rival Trenton State College (26-0). The Indians prevailed, 54-3. The Indian intensity persisted for the entire game and mostly every Indian player saw time on the field.

The first score of the game was a crazy, but exciting one. After being flushed from the pocket, MSC quarterback Walter Briggs scrambled, shook off a few potential tacklers and released a 55-yard bullet to Amod Field in the end zone. Tony Colasurdo hit the extra point and that was all the scoring MSC needed to win the game. They would get much more, however.

“I was looking downfield and didn’t see anyone open so I scrambled for extra time,” Briggs said. “Receiver usually come back to the ball when a quarterback is rushed, but Amod knows I can throw far and he just waited for the ball. The score pumped the team up.”

After Colasurdo hit a 24-yard field goal, which capped a 63-yard drive, Ed Chavis joined the scoring list. Because the quarterback is rushed, but Amod

“had a determined attitude and executed on both sides of the ball,” Chavis said. “Trenton is a rival and we came off a loss, so the intensity for the players was high.”

The second quarter was all defense. MSC sophomore David Harris eyed a Trenton pass in the air, made the interception, and ran 28 yards to make the score 23-0. After that score, Colasurdo hit another FG. TSC’s only points came from a field goal of 19 yards. The halftime score was 26-3.

Before the half, Briggs became the all-time leading passer in MSC history. Briggs, who has now thrown for 6,519 career yards surpassed Mark Casale, who was drafted from MSC to the Chicago Bears of the NFL. Casale’s yardage total at MSC was 6,096.

The Indians came out in the third as if it were the start of the game. Leroy Horn scored early on from two yards out. The key play of the score was a 40-yard reception by Chavis. Chavis then caught the next TD pass from 11 yards to make the score 40-3.

“We knew what this game meant to our season. The defense contained the quarterback and the defensive backs did a great job of secondary coverage,” defensive lineman Dan Zook said. “It was a good win. We must keep that burning feeling alive. Destiny is in our hands.”

Chad McCallum replaced Briggs near the end of the third. He threaded a 41-yard pass to Field. McCallum continued his own aerial barrage when he threw a 46-yard pass to Van Johnson. Johnson literally jogged into the end zone with 6:18 remaining, the final was 54-3 and afterward, MSC locker-room was fired-up and an excited one. However, the competition doesn’t get easier. Next week the Indians go on the road to Jersey City and take on the 5-3 Gothics for another conference match. The Gothics scouted MSC since September so it should be a great game at 1:30 p.m.

Walter Briggs: MSC’s leading passer

By Perry Schwarz

Records were made to be broken and Walter Briggs followed that adage on Saturday evening. Briggs, who threw for 225 yards against Trenton, became the all-time leading passer in MSC’s history, the senior quarterback has 6,519 yards-to-date (2,072 this season).

He broke Mark Casale’s record of 6,096 set in 1983. However, Briggs has mixed options about the accomplishment. He was glad there wasn’t a lot of hype about the record so he could concentrate on football. However, he feels he should receive the same recognition that Casale received when he set his mark.

“With Mark became the first quarterback to pass 5,000 yards in New Jersey, there was talk all over the state and rightly so,” Briggs said. “With me, it was all the way back to breaking the record I feel the team and I should have received more than a one sentence write-up. We should have got the same amount of coverage as Mark did.”

Briggs attributed his success to Casale and a few other people. He said Casale taught him things that were beneficial as the years progressed. Briggs also took note of the players and coaches that helped him achieve the status he has.

“There were a lot of people that were of a big help to me in achieving this honor,” Briggs said. “First, my receivers Ed (Chavis), Bryan (Scipio), Amod (Field), Tony (Sweet) and Van (Johnson) were helpful. They are the guys that came up with the big plays when we needed them.

“Also, credit goes to the offensive line. I owe a big part of my success to them. They went out week after week and protected me. They should share in this honor also,” he said.

The main person Briggs mentioned was the little man in blue-offensive coordinator Charlie Cocuzza. He said Cocuzza is an offensive genius. Briggs learned the game of football more in four years of college than he did in high school. Briggs noted his mind was mentally stronger about the game because he knows what he and the other players are doing on the field constantly.

The coaching staff is very happy with the senior’s achievement. A big part of the offensive system allows Briggs to highlight his skill. Rick Giancola said he has come a long way in three years.

“This record is a big achievement for us. The record he broke belonged to a person that was drafted to the National Football League,” Giancola said. “We are also happy because it’s not every day we have record-setting quarterbacks in our program and it’s not over. He will add to those records.

Briggs said he is going to keep doing his best. He wants people to remember me as the player that I am. With all this attention, and accomplishments, what else could there be for the senior quarterback with the rifle-arm do?

“There have been a lot of good things that happened to me, but I want the ring!” Briggs demanded. “I want people to remember me as the best to play the game,” he concluded.

INDIAN NOTES: Doug Butler, who played for Princeton, is the leading passer in New Jersey. He broke Casale’s record with 7,291 yards. Briggs needs 772 yards to become the all-time leading passer in the state.
