Insight into prisoners’ lives

By Jane Bech
Staff Writer

A group of MSC students traveled to Rahway State Prison on Oct. 30 to meet with the Lifers, an organization formed by prisoners.

The MSC students are participants in the course “Introduction to Criminal Justice” taught by Dr. David J. Dodd. It is part of a newly established minor in Criminal Justice offered by the Department of Sociology.

Lifers was founded as a nonprofit organization in 1975 by a group of long-term offenders at the prison. By 1976, the group had initiated its first project, entitled “Scarred Straight,” an award winning movie whose aim was to discourage adolescents from committing crimes.

Rahway State Prison, built in 1896, is a NJ maximum security prison, which houses over 1650 inmates. Many of the prisoners are serving sentences for violent or drug-related crimes and most have sentences from 25 years to life.

On entry, the students underwent a security check for drugs and weapons. The students were then given a tour of the prison by the Lifers.

The size of the cells that the prisoners live in varies. The smallest cells are in the wing where incoming prisoners are put for at least six months. The cells barely have enough room to lie stretched out on the bed.

Several students were put in a cell. One of the students locked in remarked, “If I’d been locked up for another minute, I’d have started to scream for somebody to let me out.”

How do prisoners manage to cope with their life and living in the small cells for six months? Many inmates have a hard time getting through the initial period, when they are only allowed out ten minutes a day for personal phone calls plus an hour for showering and exercise.

The prisoner is eventually moved from these small cells to a larger cell. He is then given the choice of either working or continuing his education.

There is an illiteracy rate of about 40% among the inmates and the average reading level is that of the fourth grade. For the Lifers the possibility of learning has helped them cope with prison life.

Many prisoners choose to take a job. It serves as a means of keeping them busy and gaining practical experience. The jobs, which generally pay less than two dollars an hour, constitute their only source of income. The wages provide for personal items such as cigarettes and soap.

Through this visit the students learned that it is up to the individual to survive the system. Only the strongest make it out with their sanity intact.

When the tour of the prison was completed, the students were seated in the prison auditorium together with about eight to ten inmates and members of the Lifers who talked about the organization.

The main objective of the Lifers is to help adolescents. There is a very strong sense of dedication among the Lifers. Some are parents and grandparents themselves, and they stressed several times that their sole aim is to prevent juveniles from going through their own experiences. In an attempt to provide immediate help and advice for juveniles, they have established a hot-line where adolescents with problems can call.

The Lifers run several other projects. One of the most important is the Parental Awareness Project. Every Thursday night, groups of concerned parents gather at the prison. Here the prisoners try to make parents aware of potential problems and give them hints to help their children if they are subjected to peer pressure.

Another program, “Tips on Prevention,” teaches adolescents how to avoid becoming crime victims. This program is mainly directed towards girls who are often subjects of rape and abduction.

When asked if teaching about crime prevention did not make people too anxious, one Lifer answered: “Our goal is not to make kids paranoid, just cautious.”

Among other activities, the Lifers also have stage performances and fundraising events. All their events are funded by students.

The Women of MSC scholarship awards of $400 each were presented to student recipients at a recent luncheon.

Over 50 law schools participate
Fifth Law School admissions day

By Robert Shore
Correspondent

MSC hosted NJ’s fifth annual Law School Admissions Day, the only event of its kind in the state, last Wednesday in the Student Center Ballroom.

The program was highlighted by two panel discussions at 9:30 am and 2:30 pm. In between, students could speak to admissions officers from over 50 law schools, and representatives of the NJ State Bar Assoc. (Young Lawyers Division), the Office of the Attorney General, the Puerto Rican Legal Defense and Education Club, the Phi Alpha legal fraternity, the MSC Legal Studies program, MSC alumni in law, and several LSAT review programs.

At the first panel discussion, entitled “Choosing a Law School,” admissions officers spoke about the differences between public and private institutions, financing, competition, admissions standards and the importance of LSAT scores.

At the second panel discussion, “Attending a Law School,” Richard Trenk of the NJ State Bar Assoc., and two current law students spoke about first-year pressures, teaching and grading methods, clerkship and employment possibilities.

Tomas Almez, who attends Columbia University School of Law, gave a description of a typical law student’s day—three to four hours of classes, five to six hours of study, intense competition, and a lot of stress.

Most of the students who go to law school are used to being in the top ten percent of their class,” she said, “but not everyone can be in the top ten. Law classes are not as personal as undergraduate ones, some have more than 200 students. Just being there doesn’t mean you’ll get an A.”

However, everyone on the panel agreed that by the second year most law students adjust to the work load, and spend their remaining two years becoming involved in activities and research.

Trenk added that many law schools are taking steps to alleviate the “survival of the fittest” atmosphere by trying to be more selective in admissions and more supportive of first-year students.

People who enter the field just for money, he said, are often unhappy with the work.

“Law should be approached as a vehicle for your interests, not just as a job,” he said.

Trenk also stressed that prospective law students should not be deterred by talk about the glut of lawyers because firms are always looking for people to do legal research.

The event was made possible in part by a grant from the Aaron and Rachel Meyer Memorial Foundation, Inc., and was sponsored by the Pre-Law Society of the SGA, the MSC Center for Legal Studies, the Phi Alpha Delta legal fraternity, and the SGA Student Paralegal Assoc.

Over 50 law schools participate.

Blanton search reveals violations

By Jill Ficarra
Staff Writer

While students were waiting to be readmitted after Blanton Hall's fire last week, there was an administrative search of the dorm rooms. Some of the items found that went against regulation were alcohol, gate arms, and appliances. The residents will face disciplinary action.

On Oct. 27, a male student attempted to forcefully enter into a female resident's room in Webster Hall. He was attempting to break the screen on her window when the resident saw him and called campus police. The student was arrested and charged with burglary and criminal mischief.

Between Oct. 24 and Oct. 25, an unidentified person attempted to steal a 1987 Pontiac, parked in lot 29, by breaking the rear window.

A 1985 Dodge was stolen from lot 29 on Oct. 31. It was recovered an hour later by the Little Falls Police Dept.

A 1987 Oldsmobile was also stolen on Oct. 30.

On Oct. 30, a 1980 Fiat was turned over onto its side.

A Volkswagen was over-turned in a similar way on Nov 1.

In the early morning of Oct. 23, a fire extinguisher was stolen from Patridge Hall and discharged over the entire second floor.

On Oct. 24 two students walking near the Student Center had eggs thrown at them from a passing car.

A student answering a first floor Bohn Hall pay phone received a bomb threat on Nov 1. After the initial threat, the student's life was also threatened.

On Nov. 1, a Clove Road Apartment was entered through its rear window and $75.00 in cash was stolen.

Star gazing on Thursday

Elections for Class I's in May

By Drita Ftera
Correspondent

SGA President Rob Acerra stated that all Class One organizations are to hold their elections in conjunction with the school and not the calendar year. All groups will now elect in May for a term of office from December 31.

Mike Borgia, Program Director for WMSC, is convinced that such a schedule would damage her organization for similar reasons. She said that if this bill is passed, they would have to change their entire schedule of shows, in order to have the more difficult work done when the board members are more experienced.

Acerra said these procedures are needed for better organization. "I'm confident this is going to be for the best." He also says that the SGA would be willing to work with these groups, going over elections, training, and general procedures for each elected officer. The bill was then passed.

The Legislature also approved a bill amending the Class One Review and Evaluation Committee Constitution.

We’ll fly your student body to Boston/Washington for only $39.

It’s the lowest one way airfare to Boston or Washington—lower than the price of a couple of textbooks. And it doesn’t come with a lot of prerequisites. Just purchase a round trip ticket, stay over a Saturday night, and be willing to part with a 25% cancellation fee should you decide to bag your trip. Seats are limited, but the fare is good on all of Continental’s plethora of flights to Boston or Washington. The only thing that leaves more frequently than our flights are the special $5.00 buses every 15 minutes between our Newark terminal and Manhattan.

So prove your student body is savvy in the Economics Department. Call Continental at 212-319-9494, in Newark at 201-596-6000 or elsewhere at 1-800-525-0280.

Are we having fun yet?

There's nothing more gratifying than venting your frustrations. In most cases, the little things that go wrong during the day annoy you the most.

Life at MSC is no exception. What's worse is that as students we are not in a position to directly rectify these situations. So, our little frustrations will be the administration's annoyances until something gets done or we turn blue in the face, whichever comes first. For some reason, we're afraid we're going to be holding our breath a long time.

Nobody said life at MSC was going to be a picnic. College is said to be a microcosm of the real world. Who knows what wrong turns and dead ends the real world leads us to.

Still, we wonder how the bookstore staff can sleep at night knowing that they've taken the students for everything. They are snickering when they buy back books only one semester old that are in mint condition, for less than half the original price. What's more, they have the gall to resell them at almost full price, coyly marking them with a "Used" sticker.

Searching for a copy machine that's in working condition is never an easy task. Once you do find one, you realize you have no change. The librarian informs you that last she heard the nearest one was in Kalamazoo, Michigan.

What's a student to do?

The cafeteria is just another device that helps us to prepare us for that cruel, cruel world we hear so much about. Overcharging for lousy cafeteria food is a sure way to toughen us up. Never mind the mvat.

A visit to the Financial Aid Office or Registrar is a great test of how long you can retain your composure. The forms and the questions along with the headaches are neverending. But at least they are kind enough to provide us with a good workout. After getting the runaround for half an afternoon, most students are ready to hit the showers.

If you weren't able to get housing this semester, word has it that Residence Life is renting out one room in the dorms for a nominal fee. You'll have to wait 'til February for the pot holes to be available.

If you were lucky enough to find housing, perhaps you've met several six-legged "roommates" who insist on eating your last Oreo cookie. Or maybe you have your hands full with your two-legged roommates. Any way you cut it, dorm life has its, um, "moments." (Four am fire alarms come to mind.)

Perhaps you live at the Clove Road Apartments, that pseudo-concentration camp that actually makes you register for parties. When and where does it end?

Have you had the distinct pleasure of being trapped in an elevator? Had your car towed, or worse yet, stolen? Had classes cancelled after you registered for them? These are the joys and treasured memories of college life. Isn't this fun?

The big guns in Washington

Every so often you have to stop and look at what the people in Washington are doing. By the people in Washington, I mean everybody, not just the elected officials.

Government has developed spin-off industries, just like television programs. Lobbyists and political action committees (PACs) have sprung up in the swamps of Washington. And just like the bureaucratic structures that are there already, they have entrenched themselves as a necessary part of government.

The purpose of these quasi-governmental groups is to influence the process in their own, often conflicting, favor. With this in mind, organizations try very hard to get the attention of Congress by contributing money to campaigns and opposing candidates who disagree with them. A prime example of one of these groups is the National Rifle Association (NRA).

The NRA's main position is complete and absolute support of the Second Amendment to the United States Constitution: "A well-regulated militia being necessary to the security of a free state, the right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed."

Sounds pretty noble, doesn't it? The Supreme Court has ruled that the Second Amendment refers to the states' national guards, not to everyday individuals. The NRA believes otherwise, and sometimes carries the idea too far.

Due to advances in technology, the companies that manufacture guns have learned new ways to produce the parts. Lighter weight, more sturdy plastics are replacing metal pieces. In light of this, Congress is debating legislation that would outlaw these plastic guns. The NRA has declared that it will fight the ban and has mobilized its lobbyists against the bill, which is seen as an infringement on members' rights.

One should wonder about the NRA's position though.

The Secret Service, the individuals who are specially-trained to sacrifice their bodies for the President of the United States, has a slightly different view. Congress has been informed that should plastic guns be produced, tours of the White House will have to stop because these weapons cannot be detected. Now if the White House can't stop them, what should people think next time they are scheduled for an airline flight?

This is not the first time that the NRA has opted for the less than secure position. A few years ago, a company developed special bullets which would be able to penetrate bulletproof vests. Police departments across the country opposed production of the bullets, arguing that their primary purpose is to kill officers and troopers. Needless to say, the NRA opposed banning the bullets.

The group probably doesn't want to help criminals but its position on at least these two issues does not reflect a concern for national safety. In many ways, the NRA promotes a very positive attitude on gun ownership. It provides training and education on how to use and care for a gun. It serves as an organization in which enthusiasts can participate.

Unfortunately, the NRA also represents one of the worst developments in American political affairs. As one of the most blatant offenders in the money for politics game, it has distorted priorities and helped to change the face of democracy. Too bad, the Constitution was written "to promote the general welfare and secure the blessings of liberty," not to see who had the most money.

Patscam: Did MSC police go the limit?

To the editor:
News flash via Campus Police beat: "Girl Harassed After Seeing Blind Date . . . Pat's Scam."
"Big deal," so another chick got harassed out of her own ignorance. What in the world does that have to do with me? Who cares?
Is this really the popular MSC student's reaction? I wonder at times, but, when that reaction becomes a policy of a police department, I don't just wonder, I get scared.
My fear is not for myself in particular, but for MSC's female population. Not to mention the women I have come to know and care for on a personal level. I don't ever want to see any of them become the victims.
Somehow, I don't feel too confident in believing my campus police will take care of it all. Anyone could quickly rationalize that they would, and that their friends will never become victims. My disbelief becomes hardened in my mind especially when I have good information on how the whole ordeal is being handled.
The busy MSCPD (Parking-violations Department) just hasn't had the time to seriously look into how to nab the guy. Nor does it seem that they might really care to nab our wonderful friend Pat. Oh, and if it seems that I have become overly sarcastic, you're right, because I'm damn mad.

Why? If anyone was to walk in to the campus police department headquarters, and just out of curiosity wanted to know how progress was going in the matter. They would be asked to kindly take a seat "because, you see, the head of that investigation is out at the present time."
She is out either to lunch, towing a car, writing a ticket, or shuttling across campus, each of which is important in its own way. However, I certainly hope the day never comes when she is busy due to her calling your parents, and having to tell them their little girl had just been raped. You see, Pat is still free, and he will continue to be so unless all the necessary steps are taken.
Most of the steps are completed, but MSCPD has not capitalized on them. They have Pat's full name, his full address, confessions of his being an annoyance to on-campus women (dates and times of calls which aren't even enough to incriminate), and the verification of his having violently raped a Freeman Hall resident after misjudgment.

In appreciation, they have also informed on-campus women of his little scheme. This simply is not enough, and most certainly will not prevent Pat's doing it again. To do that, Pat, the name campus police has attributed to him, must be brought to court, criminally tried, and, hopefully, put to jail.

What good is it if all the other efforts have been made but have not been acted upon? They must get him!

Please, everyone, voice your own concerns to this problem. I am but one person. For you to read this article, but do nothing to aid the cause, is like becoming a member of the MSCPD.

Our police department has more of a purpose than to cause us a hassle or cost us a few dollars. They must serve and protect all students, just as all students must serve and protect society and their own rights.

MVAU to the rescue

To the editor:
Nearly every time a medical emergency requires an ambulance to transport a member of our college community, we turn to the Montclair Volunteer Ambulance Unit (MVAU) for help. Without fail, a competent and caring team of volunteers speeds to our aid.
Because of their need to recruit new members, I would like to publicly endorse their efforts for their public service—especially on behalf of our students, faculty, staff, and guests.
As recently as last week, the MVAU responded and helped with the timely transportation of one of our students to Mountainside Hospital.
Anyone with the time and interest certainly will be well advised to consider joining this fine group of people.
Thank you, MVAU, for being there!

Movie warrants Zero stars

By Jennifer G. Stelevech
Arts Editor

Have you ever forced yourself to stay seated through a horrible movie? Well, Less Than Zero is one of those movies. It's just another R-rated teenage romp. Set in Flashy Beverly Hills, this pitiful drama covers the current movie bases: sex, love, and drugs.

Andrew McCarthy (Pretty in Pink) portrays a rich kid named Clay. Throughout the film he seems out of place and unimpressive. His performance is clouded by the dance scenes at the overplayed California parties. Sometimes he was saved by jumbled lines, but other times the movie-goer wished for music to drown him out.

Clay's girlfriend Blair (Jami Gertz) is a film model. She dons tight black mini skirts and low cut blouses. Her makeup is unattractive—lipstick that looks painted on to her mouth.

Gertz' acting was terrible. She was too stiff and predictable. Her lines were delivered without polish or believability.

Robert Downey, Jr. (Julian) is the overdosed and bankrupt completion of the trio. His performance was only half as good as the script. Maybe he decided good acting couldn't even save the film.

Downey played the hilarious roommate in Back To School, but this pseudo-drama offered little humor. Oftentimes the audience laughed at more serious lines because the lines weren't delivered well. Obviously the script and the actors were working against each other.

Julian is the most pathetic character. He is a crack addict with no job or home. It seemed odd that his wealthy friends couldn't take him home and clean him up. Instead, to make the plot interesting, they wait for him to overdose and be used as a male prostitute!

The first screen of this marvelous trio at their high school graduation. Director Marek Kanievsky attempts creativity with metronome flashbacks from white and black to color scenes. Had the word FLASHBACK been spelled out on the screen the viewer wouldn't have been surprised.

After all that excitement, the plot begins six months later. Clay returns from college for Christmas break. He and Blair reunite and she urges him to help their drug friend Julian.

The film then proceeds to numerous parties where Julian's addiction is amplified in each scene. He is a victim of a serious drug which his friends don't seem to take too seriously.

The relationship between Blair and Clay contributes to the lack of realism and success of the film. Opposites attract but they seem to be stretching it.

As the film drags on, it seems more and more unrealistic. The acting is weak and the directing is choppy, with scenes abruptly changing instead of flowing.

Altogether, this film is a waste of time. There was nothing offered to keep the audience interested. This movie gets less than zero stars.

Cameron and Moore like father and son

By Kathy Odyke
Correspondent

What started out slow and confusing ended up to be a witty and humorous movie. Like Father, Like Son starring Dudley Moore (Arthur and 10) and Kirk Cameron (Growing Pains), could have had a better opening, but fortunately, finished with a bang.

Moore portrays Dr. Jack Hammond, a successful surgeon. Cameron is Chris, his pressured-to-be-doctor son. The film opens in a desert with an old man stumbling through it. No one is sure what is going on. I was confused and even thought I was in the wrong theatre. The man has a cut leg and Indians help him heal it.

The scene switches to the fabulous home of Jack Ham­mond. Chris and his friend Clarence (Sean Astin) are fooling around with a “brain transfer serum.” The drug was stolen from the old man (who is revealed to be Clarence’s uncle). They give the drug to the cat, who then looks at the dog as expected, the cat runs around barking at a timid meowing dog.

What follows is predictable. Accidentally, Jack swallows the drug. He and Chris then “switch brains.” The whole transformation process is slow and tedious and strange music blasts while Cameron and Moore stumble around screaming.

Then the movie picks up. Jack (who has his son's brain) goes on a wild spending binge. Chris (who has his father's brain) becomes a school nerd and takes over all of his classes. Jack goes to work but of course knows nothing about medicine. At one point a nurse tells Jack to “hit” a patient with a failing heart. So, what does he do? He hits him right across the face. Now the patient has a broken jaw as well as an unhealthy heart.

Both men ruin big dates for each other. Chris finally has a date with the school beauty queen. Only he has his father's brain. Just imagine a snobby doctor at a heavy metal concert. Need I go on?

A sexy, gorgeous woman makes a pass at Jack. Only he has his son's brain. He serves her a can of beer by candle light. Then he accidentally dumps the candle on the couch and sets it on fire. The whole night is a disaster.

The “brain switching” idea is extremely amusing. Cameron does a wonderful job of portraying a proper older man. Moore does an equally good job of playing a bumbling adolescent.

The movie then takes us to Death Valley to find an antee­dote for the “brain transfer serum.” It continues its humorous pace as the audience waits for the two men to return to normal. The picture ends with a funny, heartwarming scene between father and son, or is it son and father?

Luckily, the movie didn't continue its slow pace. With two fine actors like Cameron and Moore, it would be a shame if the rest of the movie was like the beginning. I enjoyed it immensely. Like Father, Like Son is worth seeing and I give it three stars.

The Hidden worth finding

By Tom Boud
Correspondent

Action! Violence! Blood and guts! That's all we seem to get from Hollywood these days. But what if I told you there's a picture with action, horror, sci-fi and drama all wrapped in one? That is what The Hidden, a cross between Invasion of the Body Snatchers and Dirty Harry, is all about.

Michael Nouri is L.A.P.D. detective Tom Beck, a veteran homicide investigator trying to make heads or tails of a mysterious crime wave which leaves bodies all over the place. He teams up with Kyle MacLachlan who plays FBI Agent Lloyd Gallager; a top-notch G-man sent by the Seattle bureau to help get to the bottom of this continuing carnage.

Together they discover that the perpetrators plundering L.A. were, oddly enough, model citizens with no previous offenses whatsoever. That's not all. Beck finds out that the newfound crimestripper is really an alien.

Beck is impulsively vigorous, callous, and determined to solve this enigma. He's dedicated to his job, but is wary of anyone he doesn't know, even if they're from the FBI. However, Nouri's greatest feature is his conviction and his intensity.

Kyle MacLachlan, on the other hand, is off-target. He acts more like a programmed android than a federal agent. He slays instead of plays his role by constantly looking around like a lost tourist. Of course, he's supposed to be an alien but I think he overhears it.

As for excitement, The Hidden goes all the way. The movie opens with a bank robbery leading to stunt-cremmed car chases and keeps on going. There is more shooting here than in any other movie I have seen except for a few old-time war movies.

What's more is the presence of horror in this film. In several key scenes, you actually get to see the alien as they transfer from one body to another.

Complementing the suspense is the brilliant camera work. All the shoot-outs and chases are done sharply. The camera is able to stay abreast of the action.

Director Jack Sholder did a good job with The Hidden. Although he let MacLachlan get away with his overemphasized curiosity and phony behavior, he nonetheless support­ed a creative idea with Nouri's sincerity as well as with a plot that's glare your eyes to the screen.

Go and see The Hidden! You won't be disappointed! Three and one-half stars worth of explosive action, eye­opening horror and heart-thumping suspense.

The tunes play on

Yes-Big Generator (ATCO)

Yes' much anticipated follow­ up to the successful 90125 is a unique combination of the old and the new. Beginning in the early 70s with The Yes Album and continuing on until Drama, Yes was known by their epic songs with flowery lyrics that were usually quite lengthy. In 1985, minus guitarist Steve Howe, Yes returned with the successful 90125. 90125 reclamed the super­group's title as one of the tightest and most talented groups in rock music. Some songs were more like "Changes," "Leave It," and their first top ten single since "Roundabout." "Owner of a Lonely Heart" became the new and improved Yes to reclaim their old fans and pick up some new ones as well.

To say that Big Generator begins where 90125 left off would simply be misleading. It is in many aspects a return to the older Yes fashion of com­plex melodies and rather mys­tical lyrics. That is not to say that Big Generator is not commer­cially viable. It is. You need to listen no further to songs like "Love Will Find Away" and "Rhythm of Love." The old Yes however is here too. The complex melody in all seven minutes and 34 seconds of "I'm Running" is a prime example of what gifted musicians can do when they work as a team. They work as a complete unit, which is how they managed to last almost 20 years.

With the production and engineering in the talented hands of guitarist Trevor Rabin.

The last Indian home game of 1987 takes place Saturday at Sprague Field when MSC faces New Jersey Athletic Conference rival Jersey City State College (JCSC).

The Gothic Knights last week lost to William Paterson, 24-14, while the Indians knocked off Trenton State by a score of 34-10. JCSC Head Coach Roy Miller has directed the Gothic Knights to a 3-5 mark overall thus far this season, and a 1-4 record in the NJAC.

The Gothic Knights are a young team whose main problem has been scoring points. The probable reason for this is the relative inexperience of the offensive unit, which consists of no senior starters and just two juniors in starting roles. The JCSC offense features a pro-set, run by sophomore quarterback Anthony Minervini. Minervini had been sharing time with sophomore Mike Minervini (no relation) but has since emerged as the starter after some stellar performances.

Sophomore Joe Rotundi is the team's fullback. Rotundi is the Gothic Knight's leading rusher and scorer, and is thus the main cog in the offense.

Senior nose guard Mark Brignolia has been playing well so far this season, as is junior defensive tackle Juan Ribot. The line backing unit has been a pleasant surprise for Miller, as the trio of Joe Stevenson (junior), Anthony Trainor (se­nor) and Todd Dow (sopho­more) is the anchor of the defense.

In the secondary, sophomore David London, Sam Winfield and Demetrius Shaw are young but good. JCSC's few problems defensively have been playing the run, not the pass.

Senior tailback Leroy Horn is close to 100% and will probably see plenty of action for the Indians.

Key Matchups:

MSC QB Anthony Cannon vs. JCSC secondary - It will be Cannon's first college start, but it will be against a young secondary group.

MSC NG Matt Clark vs. C Mike Heesters- Clark is tied for the Gothic backfield.

The JCSC offense features a pro-set, run by sophomore quarterback Anthony Minervini. Minervini had been sharing time with sophomore Mike Minervini (no relation) but has since emerged as the starter after some stellar performances.

Sophomore Joe Rotundi is the team's fullback. Rotundi is the Gothic Knight's leading rusher and scorer, and is thus the main cog in the offense.

Senior nose guard Mark Brignolia has been playing well so far this season, as is junior defensive tackle Juan Ribot. The line backing unit has been a pleasant surprise for Miller, as the trio of Joe Stevenson (junior), Anthony Trainor (se­nor) and Todd Dow (sopho­more) is the anchor of the defense.

In the secondary, sophomore David London, Sam Winfield and Demetrius Shaw are young but good. JCSC's few problems defensively have been playing the run, not the pass.

Senior tailback Leroy Horn is close to 100% and will probably see plenty of action for the Indians.

Key Matchups:

MSC QB Anthony Cannon vs. JCSC secondary - It will be Cannon's first college start, but it will be against a young secondary group.

MSC NG Matt Clark vs. C Mike Heesters- Clark is tied for the Gothic backfield.
Freshman running back Scott Vega scored two touchdowns and junior Tony Colasurdo kicked two field goals to lead the Indians to a 34-10 victory Saturday against the Trenton State Lions.

Trenton State received the opening kickoff, but fumbled on the second play of the game. It was recovered by MSC defensive back David Harris on the Lion 27 yard line.

Three plays later, Vega ran 11 yards for his first touchdown. Colasurdo’s successful extra point kick pushed MSC ahead by 7 points only 35 seconds into the game.

With 4:10 left in the first quarter, freshman quarterback Ed Baffige was forced out of the game due to an ankle injury. He was replaced by second string quarterback Anthony Cannon, also a freshman.

In the second quarter, senior defensive back Greg Faust recovered one of four Trenton State fumbles to set up a 24 yard one yard touchdown run. The point after made it 17-0.

The Lions then mounted an unsuccessful comeback attempt that began and ended in the final minutes of the half.

Trenton State kicker Dave Grant tossed a 14 yard touchdown pass to John Towey, making the score 17-10 at the half.

The only points to be put up on the board by either team in the third quarter came as a result of a 45 yard field goal by MSC’s Colasurdo.

Colasurdo has been successful in 73% of his field goal attempts (11 of 15) and 23 out of 25 extra point attempts this season, ranking him eighth in the nation among Division III kickers.

In the fourth quarter, Cannon made a spectacular recovery on a broken play when he recovered his own fumble, raced around the Lion defense to the left sideline and broke away for a 34-yard touchdown run. Colasurdo’s kick pushed MSC’s lead to 27-10.

The final points of the game were scored as a result of a fumble recovery by Indian linebacker Mike Dalton.

Cannon connected with freshman Rahn Barnes for six points on a 36 yard pass. The ensuing extra point clinched MSC’s win at 34-10.

The final score of the game was 34-10.

The Indians’ leading rusher was the only player in Division III football who carried the ball over 100 times for 13 yards.

Baffige may or may not play Saturday, depending on his day-to-day progress.

Free tuition lottery postponed

The drawing for a free semester of tuition, which was to be held at this Saturday night’s football game, has been postponed. The Athletic Department intends to reschedule the lottery for an upcoming Indian home basketball game.

Soccer team wraps up season with win, loss

The timekeeper watching the Indians’ offensive pressure on the ball, keeping track of their skill and speed, would see, as he carried only 10 times for 13 yards.

The Indians would win, but if they were scored as a result of a fumble recovery by Indian linebacker Mike Dalton.

The question on everyone’s mind during Friday night’s game was not whether the Indians would win, but if they would survive. The game had all the elements of high drama, with a second half bench clearing brawl and yellow cards being given out as if there was no tomorrow.

The Indians closed out their final home game in a rugged, physical display of soccer. Forward Rick Caruso took it all in stride. “The game was physical and it was violent, but the one we played against Glassboro was much worse,” he said.

The games we play in our division always seem to be tougher. But we have to take it in perspective, because we won and their were no injuries,” Caruso continued. “The Glassboro game was different because we came out with Chip (goalkeeper Chip Hyde) having a broken arm.”

Both teams came out applying good pressure on the ball, and the Indian midfield clicked early as Bill Fitzpatrick found Derek Lewis open on the left wing. Lewis blasted a shot that was wide. Fitzpatrick then made a good play to get free on the right side, but his cross was wide.

The Indians kept the pressure as Robert Chesney’s bullet was snagged for a spectacular save by Wells. The Raiders’ Manetti had a chance to score but blasted the shot wide. Nick McNally picked up the ball and blasted the shot at Raiders David Wells, who made a great save to keep the game scoreless.

The Indians took the lead at 1-0 victory against Rutgers/ Newark remarked with alarm, “Oh my god this game isn’t real.”

MSC started working the ball to Lewis on the wings, letting him go one on one. At 35:02 a penalty was called against the Raiders as Lewis was hammered in the goal area. Chesney blasted the penalty shot home to give the Indians a 1-0 lead.
