Completion of cleanup delayed

By Paul Mampilly
Assignment Editor

In an interview Wednesday, Feb. 3, Jerome Quinn, director of Facility and Planning, gave the administration's view of the cleanup of the Clove Road landfill and a brief history.

The cleanup, which was expected to be completed by the end of this week, has been delayed by technical difficulties relating to the amount of garbage in the fill. At the end of the cleanup the landfill should be returned to its original state, a rock quarry.

Enroserv Inc. is the firm hired to do the actual hauling. According to Quinn, "They were chosen because they were lowest bidder in the bidding process." When asked if any violations had been committed by Enroserv, he replied that no violations of the contract have been spotted thus far.

According to reports received from students, however, the trucks which are supposed to be covered (according to Vice President for Administration and Finance William Griffith) as to be watertight, often go uncovered. Students have also complained about the odor emanating from the area.

Quinn said he would inquire about the complaints from the students and is confident that "the smell will go once the garbage is removed."

The cleanup is being monitored by Baker T.S.A., the consultants for the cleanup, and the Department of Environmental Protection (DEP), which makes spot checks to see if the work is being conducted properly," said Quinn.

Quinn says that there has been no effect on the environment as a result of the landfill. "Samples taken from the groundwater and the area have shown it to be satisfactory," he said. "Under the original contract two wells were drilled out there to determine if any pollution was taking place. We would know about it immediately." The landfill was closed in 1982, but is now being cleaned up. Prior to MSC's autonomy from the state, the cleanup was being handled by various state departments, not the college directly.

"As soon as the school gained autonomy," said Quinn, "it got the project moving." The $450,000 the college received as compensation for closing the landfill has been used to offset the cleanup costs.

The original decision to convert the quarry into a landfill was based on an agreement that the dumping contractor, Carrino Trucking and Contracting Co., of Belleville, would level the quarry to the height of the surrounding area, and subsequently develop it into recreation fields.

"Carrino was taking shortcuts and violating the environmental requirements stated in the contract," Quinn explained. As a result, the college initiated some discussions of the contract. (bidder) in the bidding process.

Rodak, questioned the performance of the engineering company, saying the company had "made atrocious mistakes." He noted that these features are vital for the marketing program to maintain its competitive edge, since the change in demographic and global structure are essential elements of future marketing processes.

Rodak met with the Governing Board Association which monitors the state college trustees, on Jan. 29. He informed the Board that the major discussion was on how new student trustees are perceived among their peers. The meeting was so successful that the college student trustees have proposed to meet again.

Acting President Dr. Richard Lynde announced the appointment of Robert J. Hilliard, who will begin his job as director of development and external relations on Feb. 15.

His responsibilities will include fundraising, overseeing offices of Public Information, Publications, and Alumni Affairs. He will also provide external relations with community groups.

SGA President, Rob Acerra, concluded the meeting by briefing the Board on the Dec. 5-12 referendum vote. He emphasized the strong approval of extended library hours as well as the vital SGA fee increase.

New drug laws to protect 'schools'

By Drita Ftera
Staff Writer

A new drug initiative has been put into effect at MSC. A pamphlet was issued by the Deputy Attorney General of the State of New Jersey. The initiative took effect July 10, 1987 and includes new tougher drug laws and education about these new laws through the state.

Stg. Debra Newcombe from MSC's Campus Police commented, "We don't have any evidence of an overwhelming problem with drugs on campus, but we know there is at least a small problem."

The part of the legislation that is of particular interest to MSC students is the establishment of "safety zones" around schools. Therefore, they become an extension of that school. Therefore, they become an extension of that school.

Martin adds, "The new initiative also calls for the development of educational seminars to better advise students what the penalties are."

Martin pointed out that the initiative is applicable for any campus, "including our school."

Allende’s voice of hope

By Maggie Spurr
Correspondent

Isabel Allende, perhaps the most famous novelist in Latin America, spoke at MSC on Feb. 3. The niece of the late Chilean President Salvador Allende, killed during that country’s 1973 military coup, talked about bringing an end to oppression in Latin America. Allende told the audience that while she was writing her first novel, The House of Spirits, she was overwhelmed by newly discovered insights into the history of her country.

Allende is the voice of human solidarity. She believes there is hope for a better future for the oppressed people in Latin America. It is her dream that bloodshed will one day end and peace will be restored.

With so much political upheaval in Latin America, why is it that Isabel Allende is writing novels and not testimonials about the harsh realities of living in a militaristic land? She says, “Only novels can describe the complexities of Latin America.”

In her novel, she combines fantasy, poetry and legend to convey the message of love, hope, and justice.

Allende went on to say that, aside from her books, voices are being raised within the mass communication channels; messages of hope are surfacing in newspapers, radio and song lyrics.

Allende also addressed the fact that being a successful woman in Latin America is quite an achievement. Throughout her discussion, she referred to the “machismo of Latin America.”

She pointed out that her novels were criticized as being “too political.” Because many published critics are men, she feels that they are not reviewing her books from an objective point of view.

In fact, even before her books were published, they were met with adverse reactions from Chile’s publishing companies. The House of Spirits had to be published in Spain because she was unable to find a Latin American publisher willing to print her work.

Allende says that she writes for herself, for she feels it is important for her to express her feelings and fears about her homeland. She writes for those who have no voice, those who are silenced.

Why does Isabel Allende write? “So that people will love each other more.”

Campus Police Report

Two drug overdose cases hospitalized

By Jill Ficarra
Staff Writer

Two people overdosed on undisclosed narcotics at approximately 9:15 p.m. on Feb. 13. The individuals were transported to Mountainside Hospital. They have since been treated and released. The incident occurred on Feb. 4.

Residents of two Clove Road apartments got into a fight over a hole that had been punched through between the apartments.

The residents of the apartment in which the hole was made, claimed that the residents of the other apartment put their hands through the hole and pushed over their microwave.

The incident is under investigation.

A 1981 Chevy Chevette had its side window broken sometime between 6 p.m. on Feb. 4 and 3 p.m. on Feb. 6. A light broke out in Blanton Hall on Feb. 5. The main offenders in the fight included three students and a visitor. It was broken up at approximately 2 a.m. and criminal charges are pending.

The Campus Police Report of the Jan. 28 issue of The Montclarion, mistakenly stated that a student was given a lift by a male that consequently made sexual overtures to him. The Campus Police has since revealed that both parties involved are not students. The Montclarion regrets the error.

Plan ahead for graduate school

By Jose Magdaline
Career Counselor

The decision to attend graduate school and the choice of an institution requires serious consideration. Before you begin filling out applications, you should evaluate your interests and goals, and know what programs are available and be clear about your reasons for pursuing a particular degree.

If you are thinking about graduate school but are not sure which program is most appropriate for you, begin by speaking with professors, advisors, graduate students and professionals in your field of interests about your concerns.

Consult graduate school directories such as "Peterson's" or "Barron's" which are available in Career Services or in Sprague Library. These publications will tell you what programs exist in the field you are interested in and provide information on costs, admission requirements, the faculty and financial aid resources.

Detailed information on a specific school or program can be found in the institutions' catalogs which can be obtained directly from the schools' admissions office or viewed on microfiche in Sprague Library.

Start the admissions process a full year and a half before the date you would like to begin. Colleges and universities usually require a specific graduate admission test and some departments may require specific requirements. Take the required test the summer after your junior year or one full year before you graduate.

Most institutions require letters of recommendations and an application essay which asks among other things for an explanation of your interest in pursuing graduate study. These are important parts of the application process. Some graduate programs will require you to appear for an interview and in certain fields, portfolios and auditions may be required. Selecting and applying to graduate schools will require a significant amount of planning time and energy. Begin early, research the schools and programs, and most importantly follow up whatever you do.

For further information come to the Career Services office in the Student Center and attend the "Getting into Graduate School" workshop.

Clean up delayed; March completion

"The issue went through the judicial system several times. In one cycle the contractor sued MSC, claiming damages for the alleged delay in the implementation of the contract for no fault of his own. The second time, the court ordered the landfill reopened under the terms of the original contract."

Quinn said the force of public opinion in the closing of the landfill was obvious since two local state legislators sponsored the bill that closed the landfill permanently.

Quinn expressed the hope that the quarry could still be made into recreation fields. "The administration would still like a recreation field over there, but it depends on the availability of funds," he said.

In an interview on Tuesday, Feb. 9, Jack Rodgers, the resident engineer at the site for Baker T.S.A., assured that the garbage cleanup would be 99 percent done by Feb. 9.

The water which has been in contact with the garbage is being pumped out. The area will be drained by Friday, according to Rodgers. The water led to a delay, as it had to be completely removed prior to clearing the clay.

The last step of the project is the placing of rocks and other dirt in the area. The dirt will be taken from road tear-ups on campus and other construction sites.

Baker T.S.A. originally underestimated the weight of the garbage because the estimates were based on test pits dug at selected points on the site. The estimates were not fair representations of the true weight of the waste plus the clay lining.

"Because every sample is not totally accurate," Rodgers said, "There is always the chance of overestimation or underestimation."

He said that they had not encountered any other problems other than the weather and equipment breakdowns. He added that he is happy with job Enroser, Inc. had done thus far and said the remainder of the project would definitely be completed by the end of February.

Of primary importance: Iowa goes nationwide

Try to find a parking space in Des Moines during the Iowa caucus. This mid-western farming state is inundated during election time with presidential campaigns galore. The Iowans' choices can make or break a candidate's chances in the race for the presidency. Iowa certainly doesn't represent a cross-section of America. Its population is largely white, Anglo-Saxon protestants, with only two percent of the 2.8 million people being black or Hispanic.

Varying primary and caucus dates compound the problem. Should such a small, homogenous state have the chance to influence later voters and their choices? If all the primaries and caucuses were held on the same day, wouldn't the system be more democratic?

These dates are negotiated by the state and national parties, though. And since the present schedule benefits the parties, it is maintained will few changes. If all voting took place on the same day, candidates wouldn't have the chance to "snowball" their popularity with the media attention that comes after the first poll results—it would be all or nothing, as in the national election.

Another plus for party candidates is that good showings in earlier races get more positive media coverage, and positive media equals more funding. Though we don't like to admit it, the media has had the greatest impact on politics in recent years. Through daily coverage, candidates are fully scrutinized by the media. Additionally, candidates are spending huge sums of money in an attempt to get their names across to the public.

A candidate's personal decisions now affect the voting population's political choices. When it gets down to it, viability depends more on surface actions than on political issues. Can is this any way for people to make political decisions? Is it any different than systems in other countries that we scorn for being undemocratic because they flood the population with propaganda? Bringing the focus of the question of democracy back home, how fair is New Jersey's primary system? Persons unregistered as independents are not allowed to vote, yet registered independents can. In a two-party system, splitting the vote neatly.

People who do not affiliate themselves with either of the two major parties don't get a say in the final party candidates, the only ones who are likely to become president one day.

And how will the students of MSCC vote this election? What will influence their decisions—how other people vote, media hype, looking for candidates with issues, or a cross among the three? It remains to be seen, but it's something to think about. When casting a vote, what has influenced it?

As the year rolls along, the American public will be hearing more about the race to be elected President of the United States. Some of what is said will be factual. Other bits and pieces will be guesses at the nature of the race.

The basis for many of these guesses will be polls conducted by not only the campaigns themselves, but also independent polling companies. Campaigns use the polls to determine where they stand in relation to the other candidates. They also use them to determine where they stand on the issues. The media uses polls to interpret the effect of events on the race as a whole. Campaigns and polls seem to benefit one group in particular, the telephone company.

Ever since its invention a little over one hundred years ago, the telephone has become gradually more important to our way of life. At first, it was a form of communication which only the wealthy could afford. By the twentieth century, it became an integral part of every home and business. Now the telephone, or rather telecommunications, is a highly competitive business.

Very few of us could imagine living without a phone today. Telephones have made friends miles away, people who are only three feet away in the comfort of a living room or kitchen. Or what about the ease with which a person can learn what's playing at the movies, how much cigarettes cost at the corner store or how late the hardware store is open on Sundays. It is wonderful: the world at one's fingertips, "letting your fingers do the walking."

How does this relate to political campaigns and polling? Simple. Instead of just reaching out and touching someone, telephones are becoming a way of reaching in.

Many of the polls conducted today are done by calling people at home. As a result, the privacy people are accustomed to has disappeared. Their homes are invaded by strangers demanding to know what they think and why they think it.

Businesses are reaching in as well. Salespeople call, around dinner time usually, trying to sell insulated windows or aluminum siding. The local newspaper wants you to start a subscription to their paper, even though you've received it for years.

This type of stuff used to be called junk mail. Companies called list houses supplied mailing lists to clients who wanted to use "direct mail" to sell their product. Now it's called telemarketing, and telephone numbers are distributed. Being unlisted doesn't necessarily help, either.

To compound the problem, businesses have devised a way to have computers dial and ask the questions, not humans. Of course, a cough or unresponsive comment triggers the computer system to continue its activities.

Once the home was invaded, people had to find someplace where they were safe from telephone harassment. Until recently, only two places could be considered legitimate havens. The first of these no longer exists, the car.

Due to the seeming need to be able to conduct business anywhere, anytime and about anything, cellular phones rapidly attacked the serenity of driving. Once you could think about the day's events, either coming or past, without interruption. Now you need to worry about who needs to talk to you, as if it could not wait until the next morning, or another half an hour, once you reached the office.

Additionally, car phones are rather dangerous products. As it is, people can lose track of their driving while singing with the radio. Using a car phone for an important business call is even more distracting. The radio is background noise; the telephone is an important conversation.

So where does this leave Americans trying to evade the telephone? Well, there's always the bathroom.
When considering methods of distribution, Availability of condoms is the central issue

To the editor:
The recent Montclarion editorial, “An ounce of prevention is a must for college life” (Feb. 4) discussed the extremely controversial and overdue topic of condom vending machines on campus. The subject is not a new one at MSC, just one that has been discreetly addressed by the appropriate administrative channels.

Clearly, the recent increasing awareness to the perils of sexually transmitted diseases has generated the unsatiable desire to become educated in such areas. This campus-wide desire— and need—has led to the plethora of information, lectures, and condom distribution at MSC. While the Health Center, Drop-in Center and yearly health fair are excellent sources of safe-sex information, the need for even further knowledge was answered last year by the inception of AIDS Awareness Day, in which I was a student speaker for the Health Professions Association. While researching my talk, “Condoms on Campus,” I also looked into the approach towards condom availability at other NJ state colleges.

Out of the nine NJ colleges I contacted (including William Patterson, Kean and Stockton), none sell condoms in the campus store or have condom dispensing machines on campus. The campuses that do distribute condoms do so with limited availability through the schoolnurse/health center, often at a nominal charge. However, New York University in NYC sells condoms in the laundry facilities.

MSC is not ignoring the concept of condom vending machines on the campus or in the residence halls. According to Dr. Stover, director of Residence Life, “Death is not controversial. So why should AIDS prevention/condom awareness be controversial?” As yet, there is no firm proposal for condom dispensing in the residence halls. A proposal for putting condom vending machines in the dorms could come from a) The MSC Center for Human Sexuality; b) Dr. Rosenberg, the campus physician; c) other interested groups; or d) individual persons. If such a proposal is submitted to the office of Residence Life, it would be reviewed by a committee including medical personnel.

According to the Dean of Students, Edward Martin, AIDS is a serious subject. The candy store in the Student Center is currently selling condoms at $1.75 and $2.00 for a box of three. (In speaking with the candy store, I was told that condoms are not a popular item.) A proposal from an independent contractor was in the office of Student Affairs last April. The contractor would like to place condom vending machines in the restrooms on campus. The proposal is subject to review by a committee consisting of college administrators, board of trustees members, parents and students.

Not that the interest of students is lacking. The Health Center distributes condoms confidentially to many students each week; in fact the Health Center buys condoms at the beginning of each school year by the gross. That is in addition to the condoms that have been generously distributed at MSC by Schmid laboratories on many occasions. However, if students are smart, they will not look towards condom vending machines as the answer for preventing AIDS. What if the machine (if installed) is empty or broken? Or is a student expected to make a dash for the nearest machine while in the heat of passion? Clearly, responsible and caring students will be prepared well ahead of time without relying on the presence of a vending machine.

A box of 12 good quality condoms costs less than $5.00—not much of an investment monetarily when considering the health investment.

The issue is not the reduction of STD’s from condom vending machine availability, but the availability of condoms overall. And MSC is rather liberal on that issue. The only sure ways to combat sexually transmitted diseases are through health education or condom use, and both are available either free or at a nominal cost. And every student should remember that the best prevention—self control—is free.

(The information in this letter is accurate as of April, 1987. Further information on STD’s is available from the Drop-In Center, Planned Parenthood, or the MSC Health Center. Remember, February 14th is National Condom Day.)

Super Bowl letter's focus belittles black movement

To the editor:

F. Scott Fitzgerald once wrote, "Whenever you feel like criticizing anyone, just remember that all the people in this world haven't had the advantages that you've had," but Fitzgerald never read anything written by Shawn Smith.

Pat Haden didn't replace James Harris just before Super Bowl as Smith had stated in her article last week. Vince Ferragomo played in the Rams' only appearance in the Super Bowl.

Smith failed to mention that Doug Williams replaced Jay Schroeder (a white quarterback) as the starting quarterback of the Redskins, two weeks before the playoffs started. You remember Jay Schroeder, the quarterback who was selected to the Pro Bowl last year.

The press coverage of African-Americans' achievements are by no means meager. Mike Lupica of the Daily News said, "Doug Williams' performance Sunday was the greatest in Super Bowl history." He also said, "Williams played the quarterback better than any white ever had in the Super Bowl." The rest of the writers in the major NY and NJ newspapers described Williams' performance with a list of superlatives a mile long.

Complaining about the volume of the announcers' voices only serves to belittle the black movement. Smith could have written about the tragedy of a young black man being killed at Howard Beach. Instead, she increases the tension between blacks and whites by her perception of the difference in the tensions of the announcers' vocal cords.

I fear racism as much as communism, but lets not take the route that Senator McCarthy took in the 1950's; or someone will be waving some papers with the names of supposed racists in the near future.

Greetings Sports Fans! It's time once again to grab a week's supply of beer and chips, plant yourself in your favorite easy chair and take a secure hold of that remote control because it's time for the 1988 Winter Olympics. ABC begins its coverage Saturday, February 13 at 2:30pm.

Broadcasting from Calgary, Canada, the coverage will continue through February 28 and total 94 1/2 hours. Julius Barnes, president of ABC, Broadcast Operations admitted "Alpine skiing, figure skating and hockey are your three big events. Everything else is just filler."

St. Elsewhere, the show that had the guts to have Dr. Westphall (Ed Flanders) bare his buttocks and shout "Kiss my ass," is going to try something similar. This time Dr. Jackie Wade (Sagan Lewis) will perform surgery in the nude. It seems the producers were inspired by the idea of "Naked Pizza Delivery Boys" who claim it is more hygienic to operate in the buff. Maybe they should change their name to St. Undies?

Some old friends unite on NBC's 227. Marla Gibbs, who portrayed the sassy maid Florence on The Jeffersons will be visited by her former boss Sherman Hemsley (George Jefferson) on this Saturday's show (February 13). Then on February 27, Franklin Cover (Tom Willis) will be paying a visit to 227 as a butler Mary (Gibbs) wins in a contest.

From the won't they ever learn department, comes yet another successful movie adapted for a T.V. sit-com. This time the movie is Baby Boom and NBC is the culprit. Details are sketchy but you can bet Diane Keaton will not be involved.

Look's like another star of Happy Days has turned to directing. Anson "Potie" Williams has been busy directing many of the hottest shows on T.V. Williams helped put together The Magic of Michael Jackson for Show time. Plus he directed episodes of Slap Maxwell, L.A. Law and Hooperman.

I hope everyone got a chance to see two outstanding shows on channel 13. Tuesday night at 10 p.m. Frontline focussed on Mark Charles, John Lennon, the Assassin. This show will discuss in depth, Chapman's life and obsession with Saling's Catcher in The Rye.

Friday night, Playhouse, Lemon Sky, starring Kevin Bacon seen Wednesday February 10, proved his worthiness as an actor. The play was written by Lanford (Burn This) Wilson and will hopefully be repeated for all who missed it.

Guess what! Hanna Barbera productions has decided to develop a cartoon series starring Whoopi Goldberg. The animation series will be shown by Goldberg and will also be doing many of the voices. She also appears in some live action scenes.

Watch for: Saturday Night Live (February 13) on NBC at 11:30. Justine Bateman host with musical guest Terrence Trent D'Arby.

Sunday (February 14) channel 9 will broadcast a Woody Allen double feature. At 6 p.m. Bananas and at 8 p.m. Manhattan.

Wednesday (February 17) Fox will show High Anxiety, Mel Brooks' homage to Hitchcock can be seen at 8 p.m.

Benji (1981) is a sequel to the 1980 film, which opened last Thursday, January 6. The sequel to the 1980 film dealt with several controversial Oprah Winfrey show Beach trail and also the controversial Oprah Winfrey show.

The studio production of Under Milkwood opens Thursday, February 18 and runs through Saturday February 20. All performances will begin at 8 p.m. in the Studio Theatre.

Seating is by general admission and there are no reservations accepted. Accept the box office opens at 7:30 p.m. for ticket sales. Prices are: Standard, $2, MSC students with ID, $1. For further information, call 893-5338 or 893-4205, between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m.

Watch for Major Theatre Series March 3-5 productions of Spring Festival of Dance , and the following Studio Theatre Series productions: Accidental Death of an Anarchist, March 17-19, and American Buffalo, April 14-16.

Art Lecture

Richard Serra will present a free, day long discussion on Wed. Feb. 24 from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. in the Cailea Auditorium. Until noon, Serra will discuss a "Critique of an Outdoor Sculpture Project" in the Sculpture Studio. Following lunch, he will talk about "Major Concerns of Sculpture Today."

This discussion will encourage open participation by students, faculty, sculptors and the audience. After a brief intermission, Serra will present a slide show of his work, from 4 p.m. to 5 p.m.

Black and white

"We can't change the world but we can try and enlighten it," says Nicky Furris, producer of the new film Lou, Pat ana Joe D which opened last Thursday at the Willmont Theater, in Montclair.

Shot completely in Northern N.J., director Stephen Vittoria eloquently brings to life the friendships that were prevalent in many Italian communities during and after World War II. More importantly than the film's treatment of racial issues, it also deals with the issue of racism. In addition, director Vittoria has been asked to speak with the class this morning.

"If you're black in America, see Lemon Sky. If you're white in America, see this, said Furris. Hopefully, this first attempt by these new filmmakers will prove to be a lasting and financially successful venture. However, more importantly to them is the film's courageous stance on racism in America in the 1980's and in the future.

People hear the term "new age music" and either perk up or turn off immediately. No new age artist has been able to garner much crossover following. That may change someday with Joaquin Levano.

Actually, it may be unfair to call Levano a new age artist. He certainly packs more percussion punch than, say, an Andreas Vollenweider or Liz Story. The album is heavy on guitar work, ala Pat Metheny. Levano manages to create and mix melodies without reaching too far and risk sounding pretentious. Acoustic and electric are blended beautifully at times, such as on "An Uncommonly Fine Life."

Former Journey drummer Steve Smithadrably plays on four of the seven tracks. Isaac Epps also does fine hand percussion work on four tracks, particularly on "Seven Pools."

If Levano ever latches on to a real label (How many artists can you name on the Global Pacific roster?), he could be a big thing.

Winters' Tales by Jonathan Winters (Random House, $14.95).

In the introduction to his collection of brisk stories, Jonathan Winters writes, "Throughout my life, I've been gratified that I've been able to keep the child in me alive and inspire others to do the same. If these stories do that for you, I'll be happy."

But if that child in each of us were standing beside us, as a real person, reading Winters' Tales, it's more likely we'd gasp, cover his eyes and send him to bed.

None of the stories in the collection are funny; rather they're unsettling and frightening. With each of them we find ourselves being led deeper into the uncharted regions of Winters' maniacal mind. Even deeper regions than the ones we anticipate when viewing him on television or at the movies.

None of the stories reflect the type of comic genius that inspired Robin Williams or that the American public has come to love and expect.

From a literary standpoint, the writing is pure formula. A character introduces himself to us and begins to tell us of some disturbing incident in his life. You can almost hear the Twilight Zone theme buzzing in your head.

Then we are put upon to be shocked. Sometimes it works. Stories such as the king who secretly desires to be the queen; the cross-dressing grandson who seduces his own grandfather; the man who reminisces fondly about his wartime dance partner and the incident that caused her broken back are good.

There's the feeling that Winters had something on his mind that he wanted to say. He didn't quite know what it was or how to go about saying it, though.

At least writing was cheaper than therapy.

Movie Update

One of the most talked about films is Broadcast News. Starring the delightful Holly Hunter (Raising Arizona) and charismatic William Hurt (Kiss of the Spider Woman) the film reveals the emotions, rough drafts and back-biting of the daily news cast.

The characters in the movie are well developed and performed with conviction. They destroy the television audience's image of the nightly news, with every right to.

-Jennifer G. Stelevich

Finally Robin Williams has found a vehicle that shows his acting ability and comedic brilliance to perfection. Good Morning Vietnam, directed by Barry Levinson, (The Men) is the story of Armed Forces radio Disc Jockey Adrian Cronauer and his experiences in Saigon in 1965.

The film is much more than a comedic showcase for Williams. It touches on many of the dramatic effects of the war on the U.S. soldiers and the Vietnamese people.

Track team derailed - The MSC track team has now been in search of a full-time coach for 3½ months. Meanwhile, "interim" coach Vie Mizzone has been trying to keep team members in shape for the Vitalis Olympic Invitational meet, to be held this weekend at the Meadowlands.

The reason for the delay is the long process state colleges must go through to hire a full-time coach. But the people who are suffering are the track team members, who have been without an organized practice for two months. Meanwhile, Mizzone has developed two National qualifiers in Amod Field and Godfrey Brown, who also have a chance to qualify for the Olympic Trials. The team has shown its support for Mizzone by voicing their opinion to Athletic Director Greg Lockard and Vice President of Student Affairs Jean Armstrong, threatening to boycott the upcoming spring season if Mizzone is not chosen as full-time coach.

While the track team must realize that it's a long process in choosing a new coach, school administrators must also realize that it's a long process to get in shape for competition on the national level. And the uncertain status of their head coach is a hurdle that the team shouldn't have to overcome.

Klecko callously cut - The New York Jets this week released veteran defensive tackle Joe Klecko, a perennial All-Pro and a future Hall-of-Famer. The Jets, feeling Klecko was unable to play up to his capabilities after a recent operation on his knee, first asked him to retire, then offered him a position on the coaching staff. Klecko turned them down on both counts, wishing to attempt to come back next season. The Jets felt they had no choice but to let Klecko go.

There's something wrong there. Here's a guy who in previous years has come back from two operations on the same knee to help out the team at a position where they weak, a guy who left his heart on the field every week. He watched as the Jets went from a contender to a pretender because of poor management decisions, yet he had nothing but praise for the organization.

The Jets' team doctor, Dr. James Nicholas, felt that the 11-year veteran couldn't last the rigors of another full season, and his opinion weighed heavily in the minds of the organization's management. But why isn't Klecko given a chance to prove himself at training camp?

Obviously, his salary had something to do with it, but there are some players on the very same team—on the very same defensive line as Klecko—who earn more for less. To release a proven winner like Klecko, and continually pat a proven loser like Head Coach Joe Walton on the back left his heart on the field every week. He watched as the Jets went from a contender to a pretender because of poor management decisions, yet he had nothing but praise for the organization.

MSC 73-Rutgers-Newark 44

Senior Sue Ehrmann netted 19 points and grabbed 12 rebounds as the Indians won their fourth straight New Jersey Athletic Conference (NJAC) game, 73-44.

The victory improved MSC’s record to 17-6 overall, 7-4 in the NJAC.

MSC 71-Jersey City St. 61

Indian Head Coach Jill Jeffrey explained that MSC is a "pressure team, which plays well in big games, when it counts."

Jeffrey also feels the team has matured over the course of the season, as they "understand the importance of these last few games and they have responded very well to the challenge."

Indians fall to Gothics, Rutgers-N

By Dennis Campbell
Staff Writer

MSC rebounded from a tough loss to give a gutsy performance against division rival Rutgers/Newark on Wednesday at Panzer Gym, losing 72-61 in a tight game.

Junior Tom Deutsch paced the Indian attack with 18 points.

Assistant Coach Brian Cavanagh, commenting on the difference between last night’s game and the Jersey State game said, “Last Saturday we played Jersey City. That’s the difference. Somehow knowing that we didn’t have to play them, the team played with much more confidence.”

Cavanagh, on the improved job the team did on the boards, said, “It goes back to confidence. Tonight the team felt it had a legitimate shot at winning and the overall play reflected that.”

Cavanagh continued, “Rutgers/Newark is the same type of team we are. We both play a deliberate low scoring game. The only difference is they have Tony Little, who can raise his game a notch above everyone else. He is without a doubt the premier player in our league.”

The Indians did a good job of controlling the tempo of the game early as Pat Brunner ran the offense. MSC did a better job of rebounding in the second half as they played inspired defense.

Trailing 42-34 at the half, the Indians were able to make a run at the Scarlet Raiders partly because of the fine play of Vince Gulbin, who played both ends of the court well.

Cavanagh said, “Considering we got pummelled the last game, we showed a lot of class by coming back and playing a good game tonight.”

Jersey City State 92-MSC 52
The Indians’ record fell to 2-17 as they were totally dominated by a talented Jersey City State College (JCSC) team at Panzer Gym Saturday night.

The Indians, trailing by 18 points at the half, were brutalized on the boards as the Gothics took complete control of the game.

MSC hung tough in the early minutes of the game as a Chris Albertson hoop got them to within two, 15-13. But this would be the closest the Indians would get as JCSC scored four unanswered baskets to take a 23-13 lead. The Gothic Knights then went on a rampage and took a 43-25 advantage into halftime.

The second half proved to be an extension of the first as the Indians’ offensive woes continued, finding themselves trailing 57-27 with the Gothics totally dominant on the boards.

Albertson paced the Indians with 15 points and 10 rebounds, while Vince Gulbin chipped in with 13 points and seven rebounds.

What’s What in MSC sports

Men’s Swimming

The Indians’ dual meet schedule ended with a forfeit win over St. Francis last week, giving MSC a 2-8 mark for the season. The team will be out of action for over a week as they prepare for the New Jersey State Men’s Swimming Invitational on February 19. The meet will be held at Panzer Gym.

Wrestling

MSC was in action in the Essex Cup Tournament this past weekend, splitting their two matches against Seton Hall and Upsala. Against the Pirates, who won the tournament for the third straight year, the Indians won four events by decision: Pete Gonzalez (147) outpointed Winston Jackson by a 13-1 count; Mike Massafski (150) defeated Brian Marella, 8-5; Pete Georgoutos (177) beat Stan Barber by a score of 5-1; and Dom Olivo outscored Albertson hoop got them to within two, 15-13. But this would be the closest the Indians would get as JCSC scored four unanswered baskets to take a 23-13 lead. The Gothic Knights then went on a rampage and took a 43-25 advantage into halftime.

The second half proved to be an extension of the first as the Indians’ offensive woes continued, finding themselves trailing 57-27 with the Gothics totally dominant on the boards.

Albertson paced the Indians with 15 points and 10 rebounds, while Vince Gulbin chipped in with 13 points and seven rebounds.
