Dean Harris to be honored by campus organizations

By Shawn Smith
Staff Writer

This is the first of a two part series.

The Black Alumni Committee, the Black Student Cooperative Union and the Association of Black Faculty and Staff will gather on May 7 in the Student Center ballrooms to honor one of MSC's most dedicated, distinguished, and loved administrators: James E. Harris, associate dean of students.

Jeanette Pinkney, co-chairperson of the BAC and one of the coordinators of the event, described Harris as "a main thread in the fabric of MSC; he pushed a lot of people to get their education. We see him put out—not just for black people, for all people—now it's time for him to receive."

It is easy to see why Dean Harris is one of MSC's most valuable administrators. He has an easy rapport with students that makes him so approachable, that during the interview we had to sit tucked away in Blanton cafeteria for fear of constant interruption.

Undoubtedly one of MSC's most outspoken officials, the young James Harris had rather modest beginnings. One of nine children born to a sharecropper in Castalia, North Carolina, he explained that his parents were the exception, rather than the rule, in allowing him and his two brothers and six sisters to go to school. "In my parents' eyes, I was 'going to be something.'" Harris said.

When they moved to New Jersey he attended South Side High School in Newark (now Malcolm X Shabazz), from which he graduated in 1964. He then entered MSC, receiving a B.A. and teaching certificate in social studies and a master's degree in student personnel services and counseling. He is currently enrolled in the Masters of Public Administration Program at New York University.

Although he was able to finish his high school education at the top of his class, he said he began college unprepared, and his tone revealed a sense of betrayal by the urban school system.

"My first semester here was a disaster," he said. "What they taught at school left me non-competitive with the preparatory students getting at other schools. There were valedictorians from other schools; when matched with those kids, my education placed me at a disadvantage. Even though I got good grades, I didn't get the education that went along with those grades. I had to work real hard."

When he was a junior, the climate of the American nation was fogged with racial disturbances; when he was a senior, Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. was assassinated. The unfolding scenes of the 1960s provided dramatic changes for African-Americans of the future.

"There was a nationwide campus upheaval; demands were being made for more black personnel," said Harris. While still a senior in 1968, he volunteered to recruit students for MSC from urban areas such as Jersey City, Newark and East Orange. As he prepared to enter the New Jersey Army National Guard that same year, the Equal Opportunity Fund was instituted.

Two years later, MSC offered Harris a job as a full-time student counselor for the EOF program. In 1971, he married his high school sweetheart, Justine Erma Perry. They have two children: Kasheena, 16, and Jamillah, 12, who are both "Afrocentric as hell," said a proud Harris.

In 1972, he was placed in a newly-created position: Assistant Dean of Students. At the age of 23, he may have become one of the youngest deans in the state. He supervised the counseling services department and was advisor to the Black Organization for Success in Society (now the BSCU). He also coached MSC's cross-country team from 1975-1986.

Dean Harris did not set out to be the monumental administrator that he has become. He originally planned to teach, "to influence the thinking and behavior" of the students he would have taught. He then rationalized that if he worked in a college setting, he would be able to "train teachers to influence a lot more students than I ever could."

SGA News
Constitution approved

By Mike Heelan
Staff Writer

After a long heated debate, the SGA legislature passed the Greek Council constitution. This will eliminate some of the responsibility which currently rests with the SGA.

"I'm relieved after ten months of diligent work by the SGA, to see the council possess so much power if they would be able to de-charter organizations."

The constitution will provide for the Greek council to exercise partial control over the participating fraternities, sororities and sororities. Some legislators expressed concern that the council possesses too much power and the legislature approved the appointment of Mike Borgia as SGA attorney general for the 1988-89 school year. The attorney general is responsible for seeing that the SGA statutes are being followed.

A question was raised in relation to Borgia's objectivity. According to SGA legislator Myra Rosa, Borgia was not objective during the recent SGA elections.

"I don't have any comment to the charge of bias, to do so would be unethical. I hope to make some changes in election rules including ending Blanton Hall ballooning and looking into creating a real judiciary for the SGA," responded Borgia. He had the support of the entire legislature with the exception of two votes and one abstention.

GROUP ADVISING SESSIONS FOR FALL 1988 ADVANCE REGISTRATION

Advance registration for Fall 1988 begins on April 25 and ends on Friday May 13. Student course request forms (registration forms) for UNDECLARED FULL — TIME students will be available at the Academic Advising and Tutorial Center (building E) beginning at 8:30 AM Monday 4/25. Part-time students who are enrolled will receive student course request forms by mail shortly before the advance registration period.

Please come to building E to sign up for one of the following group advising sessions. We need to keep track of the number of students planning to attend in order to insure adequate counselor coverage. Due to the number of undeclared students and the number of counselors available to advise, we must insist that you attend one of these sessions in order to obtain a signature on your course request form. Please bring your course request form, a Fall 1988 Schedule of Courses book, a college catalog and your most recent transcript (the pink and white paper on which you got your last grades in January).

Because of the great demand, three of the sessions (4/28, 5/3, 5/11) will focus on the questions and concerns of undeclared students who want to meet the entry requirements for Business Administration and/or Computer Science. In order to insure maximum counselor availability for all undeclared students, any undeclared student may sign up for any of the following sessions:

Is college relevant?

Last May, surveys were given out to undeclared freshmen who advance registered on the 30th of that month. Of the fall 1987 freshmen that answered these surveys, when asked to select only one reason that they were attending MSC, 76.4% chose, "to prepare for an occupation." Other possible responses to the survey's question were, "to become an educated person," and "for personal growth," neither of which came close in popularity to the top one reason that they were attending MSC.

The survey also asks freshmen that answered these surveys, when asked to select only one reason that they were attending MSC, 76.4% chose, "to prepare for an occupation." Other possible responses to the survey's question were, "to become an educated person," and "for personal growth," neither of which came close in popularity to the top one reason that they were attending MSC.

"Businesses today require a college degree for jobs that don't really need it," says a full professor of psychology at MSC, explaining the rationale behind such reasons for seeking a secondary education. Such seems to be the trend in today's job market.

Perhaps current students' parents didn't need a college degree for careers where skills were taught on-the-job. We all know of Lee Iaccoca, who didn't have a college degree but is presently one of the top entrepreneurs of our country.

Of the seven editors polled in The Montclarion, five said that they came toMSC to better their chances of a higher-paid job. Although many of their majors do not train them to work towards a planned career, they still need the degree to acquire a job.

Was their time—and yours—spent at college a waste, an unnecessary but required step towards a career? It depends on the person. Many students resent studying subjects, for four years, that they may never use again. Generally, these are also students that ask, when a professor begins to explain, "Are we responsible for this?"

Another way to view college is a well-spent four years of growing up, of experimentation with different choices. How many people have switched majors since they have come into college? Or future plans for careers? How easy would it have been for them to change their minds if they immediately entered into a job, started training, and found they didn't like it?

After four years of college, we've had time to grow, to experiment. What's more, we're not afraid to continue experimentation.

It all depends on the person.

A mayor or king of the Jews?

WASHINGTON—Oh, shut up, Ed. Shut up and stay in City Hall, where you belong. You are the Mayor of New York and not King of the Jews. You don't speak for the Jews of New York or the Jews of the United States. Jews don't have to be crazy to vote for Jesse Jackson. They can make up their own minds on that. But they have to be crazy to listen to Ed Koch.

For a long time now, Crazy Eddie Koch has treated New York as something like Vatican City—a secular state encompassing five boroughs and also the seat of American Jewry. With the anticipation a child has for Christmas, Koch could barely wait for the presidential primaries to come his way. He would hog the air, dominate the newspapers. And he would tell Jews how to vote.

In all likelihood, some Jews will reject Koch's advice and vote for Jackson. But even many of those who will not, don't necessarily share Koch's animosity towards the black presidential candidate. In fact, a Los Angeles Times poll of Jewish political attitudes showed 35 percent of the respondents had a "favorable impression" of Jackson—although only 4 percent said they would vote for him.

That number—the 35 percent—takes some explaining. Jackson is a complex and vexing figure for many American Jews. There is much to ponder. He has referred to Jews as "Hymies" and New York as "Hymietown." Worse, he initially denied making either slur and owned up only under pressure. In the 1984 campaign, he associated with Louis Farrakhan, a Black Muslim minister who made anti-Semitic statements. Jackson, who is forever calling on others to make tough moral choices, found himself unable to practice what he preached when it came to Farrakhan. He was too slow in dissociating himself from the Black Muslim minister and even then separated the man from his words. He said he could repudiate the words, but not the man—a distinction without a real difference.

Now back to that 35 percent figure. The Times also asked Jews to define "Jewishness." What does it mean to be a Jew? Some respondents mentioned support for Israel, some talked of religious observance, synagogue attendance—either routinely or only on the High Holy Days of Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur. But 50 percent—half—cited something else: "a commitment to social equality."

Who better personifies "a commitment to social equality" than Jesse Jackson? In fact, does his candidacy represent anything else? George Bush may talk about becoming "the education President" and Michael Dukakis is a liberal, but their agendas can't compare to Jackson's. He is an advocate for minorities, the underclass, the unemployed, the dispossessed, the impoverished farmer, the auto worker turned hamburger flipper. You or I may disagree with him and even doubt his sincerity. But how many of us can say we're not impressed by Jackson's agenda. Can you imagine someone like Koch talking about becoming "the education Mayor?"

W Koch seems not to understand that. He assumes, also, that the American Jewish community holds monolithic views on Israel—and that they match his and reject Jackson's. He is an advocate for minorities, the underclass, the unemployed, the dispossessed, the impoverished farmer, the auto worker turned hamburger flipper. You or I may disagree with him and even doubt his sincerity. But how many of us can say we're not impressed by Jackson's agenda. For instance, 29 percent of the Jews queried supported American talks with the Palestine Liberation Organization. They also supported a Palestinian homeland. These are Jacksonian positions. In addition, a majority (57 percent) are favorably impressed with Shimon Peres, the Israeli foreign minister and a proponent of trading land (the West Bank and Gaza Strip) for peace—another Jackson position. And when it comes to Koch himself, a plurality reject his suggestion that Israel "ban the press from areas where Palestinian disturbances might take place."

(Would Koch ban the press if there were riots in Harlem?)

To conduct his poll, the Los Angeles Times went through a list of 200,000 names and contacted 50,000 persons across the country. My own poll is a lot more select. It consists of talking to some people I know, one of whom is a Massachusetts woman who adopted a dark-skinned child from a Third World country.

The woman was troubled by some of Jackson's statements, but she knows what he represents to her children and counts herself one of them. On a primary day, she sat in her car outside the polling place, undecided. Finally, she asked herself what was the most important thing in her life. That made up her mind. She's a Jacksonian. Of course, once lived in Israel. She voted for Jackson. She did it for her children and, Ed Koch notwithstanding, there's nothing "crazy" about that.

Discontent with selection process of track coach

To the editor,

After monitoring from a distance the administration's blundering performance in hiring a new men's track coach, I would like to express my discontent with the selection process, and with what I hope is not the final decision in this matter. As the student/athlete member of the selection who, late in 1984, originally recommended Vic Mizzone to be hired, I would like to provide some insight as to why I felt Vic should be offered the coaching position.

While interviewing the pool of candidates, I distinctly recollect one of them having been at this present head coaching position for only one year. I stressed to the rest of the committee that we wanted to hire a head coach who planned on being around MSC for some time. All too often our school has hired coaches who use their positions at Montclair State for personal gain, as stepping stones to larger programs. The recent departure of two head baseball coaches in the past five years is a prime example.

Vic Mizzone only wants to coach at his alma mater, he has no aspirations of jumping to a larger, perhaps more lucrative position. As a underpaid, part-time coach the last four years, Coach Mizzone resurrected a dormant program back to being a national power, like it was when ran here in the early seventies.

He waited patiently, hoping his job would become a full-time position, only to see it given away to an unqualified, girls high school coach. What a great way to reward a member of our Athletic Hall of Fame for producing twelve All-Americans in four years.

If the powers to be remembered the old adage, "if it is not broken, don't fix it" this wholeiasco would have been avoided. In order for any athletic program to be successful, it is imperative that tradition and consistency be instilled. Hiring an outsider has destroyed those ingredients Coach Mizzone has provided the men's track program with.

As far as the selection process goes, the campus community would be better served if the Athletic Department had the autonomy to do their own hiring. This way, the process would be devoid any of the political pandering, which probably permeates other administration hires.

Speaking of our Athletic Department, where was our new Athletic Director during Coach Mizzone's ordeal? As the former MSC swim team coach, Greg Lockard should know first hand how difficult it is coaching one of the more obscure sports on this campus. Because of that reason alone, he could be a staunch supporter of Vic Mizzone.

Instead, the administration's strong arm tactics has reduced his role to Montclair State's newest marionette. His puppet show should be shown at our Summerfun Theater.

The final blow to this debacle comes from Murray Cole and his pusillanimous Board of Trustees, who had the opportunity to clearly right a wrong. Instead, he chose to ignore the pleas of the athletes. If nobody listens to the men on the team, who will they listen to? It is the obnoxious Board of Trustees who now must walk around campus with omelets on their faces for hiring a coach who now has no team to coach.

The men's track program was thriving when Vic Mizzone was hired. By approving the firing of him, and the simultaneous hiring of John Blanton, the Board of Trustees are responsible for the miscarriage. The blunder has produced two winners, one of which is Vic Mizzone. It was obvious from the beginning nobody took into consideration what might be best for the track program itself.

Although I find it somewhat ironic, I would like to laud Eastside High School principal Joe Clark for his show of support for one of his teachers, and for calling a press conference to try to bring some attention to what is clearly an administrative miscarriage.

An incident like this, where an alumnus is treated like a stranger, can only generate negative repercussions throughout the alumni community of MSC. I for one would now twice of ever helping my alma mater, be it physically or financially, after the way it treated Vic Mizzone.

In support of Sontag

To the editor,

I wish to respond to Professor Spencer's commentary on the Susan Sontag lecture on April 12, 1988 (The Montclarion, April 13, 1988). Her first and strongest criticism is levelled at Sontag for her failure to sympathetically address a question regarding Palestinian exiles. In her letter, Spencer unfavorably compares Sontag to another American Jew who handled this issue with diplomatic aplomb: What is Spencer actually suggesting by her criticism?

I am certain she would agree that to expect all American Jews to treat this issue in an identical manner is ludicrous and terribly offensive. "American Jews" are perhaps as variegated in opinion as any other "group" in our culture.

In the same rambling, unfocused paragraph, Professor Spencer also attacks Sontag for not mentioning the fact that number ten is a basic unit of measurement. Sontag was not focusing on descriptive definitions of time but rather the prescriptive meanings of time and the impact of these imperatives on our lives. Spencer's objection is irrelevant here.

Professor Spencer aims another criticism at Sontag's failure to embrace a non-Western perspective. Although I might agree, I believe the audience nor that of Sontag.

The plight of Palestinians in exile was neither raised nor suggested by the lecturer itself, and while I am sympathetic to the anguish provoked by the situation, I have difficulty understanding its relevance to Sontag's talk.

Since Spencer's main concern was the turmoil in Palestine and not the topic addressed by the lecturer, "Traditions of the New", it is easy to understand her disappointment and criticism of Susan Sontag. Perhaps we all have come to the following aphorism in mind: "Minds are like parachutes, they only work when fully open."

Morty mouth

The motor mouth, Morton Downey Jr., blew into MSC Tuesday evening leaving behind an enormous amount of noise and an audience filled with pumped up college students.

The topic of the presentation was alcohol and its effects. The panel for the discussion consisted of Dr. Arthur Humpe, head of the campus ministry, Mike Dziuba, student representative from the Greek Council, Rob Austin, SGA President, James Harris, Associate Dean of Students, and Liz Murphy, a representative from MADD.

Downey started off the hour-long show with a completely irrelevant and offensive sexual remark about a groupie in Syracuse. He followed this by falling to his knees and begging the forgiveness of Father Trumpethe law, and he received cheers from the audience.

For the most part, the show did not differ much from his daily show on WOR-TV, except for being on course for his course language. Complete with his chain smoking and day-glow socks, he began by asking “How many of us were taught responsible drinking in high school?” Nobody in the audience responded. “Maybe we should then blame the public school system for the drinking problem,” Downey shouted.

As usual, Downey did all he could to give the issue an “us against them” theme. This, in essence, is the key to Downey’s success. Whether it’s conservatives against “pablum-puking liberals,” or students against administration one thing is certain, Downey does all he can to keep the tension high. Thus, many of Harris’ sensible comments about school policy in regard to alcohol were met with jeers, while all student remarks brought thunderous applause.

Still, this was not a serious debate—it was meant to entertain, and no one in the audience seemed to care about the issues. The most surprising thing to me was that Downey did manage to address a few important topics such as the teaching of alcoholism in elementary school. Wonders never cease!

Saturday morning childrens show at airing in the fall on NBC.

The Misadventures of Ed Grimley will star Short and will consist of a mixture of animation and live action. It can be seen in the 11:30 to noon slot.

There’s some more striking news. In case you’re keeping score, the strike is now in its eight week and has cost the industry a total of 15 million dollars. Also the strike has put the evening but we have to be on in the afternoons that’s where big money is. I don’t know when you read this you’re going to be watching the show, but it is true. Gilligan, the Skipper too, audience gained insight into not of you are smacking your head true. Gilligan, the nerdy character created by former Saturday Night Live star Martin Short (you know, the guy with the pointed hair) will be a Rebel Without A Cause (1955) Saturday night at 8 p.m. on WOWR. James Dean and Natalie Wood in this powerful film that all must see at once.

Lame Movie Of The Week: They Still Call Me Bruce (1987) Sunday afternoon at 12:30 on HBO. This spoof on the old Bruce Lee films leaves something to be desired. Unless you’re a fan of bad jokes, and I don’t mean bad as in good, I mean bad as in bad. Until you read again!

Oates presents literary works

By Kris Roome
Staff Writer

Addressing a standing room only crowd in Kope Lounge Tuesday night, Carol Oates recited several selections of poetry and one of her latest short stories entitled “Transfigured Knight.”

Besides reading, Oates gave brief introductions to each piece. During which time the audience gained insights not only her opinions about writing, but about her own life as well.

Ideally she claims, each poem should be as short as possible to make it more powerful. Furthermore, for her, each one grows out of personal experience. She sees each poem as a “bloodlet,” a visual, graphic, accurate image of her own blood, creating the heartbeat of the poem.

“It may be abstract,” she stated, “but always personal.”

She uses poetry as a type of convolution, especially after writing a novel. She considers the novel a “long haul,” a “marathon race,” because while she is writing it, this is living. Oates often does not even know the ending until she’s there. On the contrary, poems are “sprinty” and “non-chartered voyages” of her own.

“Calling herself a feminist, she states that it gives her a chance to write about men. Primarily, though she has been inspired by the rise of Mike Tyson.

Recently she was among 50-80 “intellectuals” invited to meet the Gorbechev’s in Moscow. Also featured were actors Paul Newman and Robert DeNiro and writer Norman Mailer.

As of late she has published a novel entitled Lives of the Twins, written under a pseudonym-Smith. Although she wanted to keep this fictitious novel a secret, she was quoted out including herself in a legal battle with publishers.

For a somewhat quiet, non-imposing individual, Joyce Carol Oates creates such thought-provoking, graphic images in her writing and speech that she is someone not to be missed.

Rock-n-Roll Corner

Pasquale DiFulco

I know it’s only rock and roll, but I like it... Mick Jagger slipped out of paying a settlement to Patrick Alley, the reggae artist who was suing Jagger for $6 million. I wonder if it all wasn't an expensive way to get Alley some press coverage. Regardless, everyone who reads a daily paper on you if you don’t know who Alley is now...Hottest new stuff out has to be Eric Clapton’s Crossroads collection. The 73-track retrospective includes a rediscovered and remastered version of “Layla” and the beer commercial version of “Layla”...

THOUGHT FOR THE DAY

"God is found in the peaceful heart"

The following thought is from Gerhard Tersteegen, an 18th century German quietist.

God is a tranquil being, and abide in a tranquil manner. So must thy spirit become a tranquil being and peaceful spirit. Avoid all anxious care, vexation, murmuring, and all other evil passions until someone gets an eye out. Nothing in the whole world is worth the loss of thy peace even the faults which thou have committed should only humble, but not disgust thee. God is full of joy, peace, and happiness. Endurest thou to obtain a continually joyful heart and peaceful spirit. Avoid all anxious care, vexation, murmuring, and other evil passions. Let us heartily desire and ponder with the friendship of God. If thou dost not perceive such feelings arising, turn urgently to God, and say, "My Love, You will last a lifetime. To Pact, Rat and Patch— Why do you do this? I do? Please go clean the bathroom. Love, The street.

—Muzzy— Thanks for saying yes. Environmentally yours, Lisa

— Joanne— I’ll forget about lunch. But next time you sit on my lap you’ll owe me. Environmentally yours, Lisa.

— Annie — We haven’t parted together in a very long time— let’s get together and get drunk. An ex-DA of the week.

— Dan F.— Congrats and Happy Birthday, love N. Nanner.

— Jodes— Were your trips on Saturday night better than Aruba? Do you want to go to Big Bird’s Bush? Love Alex Reager.

— To TKE, especially Eugene— We, the women of MSC, want Eugene. Especially yours. Eugene. Maybe over the Carnival, Bright Eyes.

— Hey snowflake— You’re the best. 6/1/2 and still going strong. We do have some hormones don’t we. Love, Hankysky.

— Pineapple— I had a totally awesome time at the Ball. You should really take up the sax. Love, Buds.

— Jeff (1024 Bohn) tall, with dark hair, and gorgeous green eyes— I love you and I want all your boys to know it. Love, Leah.

Second annual contest a success

Bodybuilding contest beneficial for ‘every body’

By Dennis Campbell
Staff Writer

The Second Annual Bodybuilding Extravaganza got off to a raucous start, as free t-shirts of the night. The crowd favorites, however, were Amad Field and Peter Gory, as they stole the spotlight with their own unique poses and styles. Sponsored by the women's track team of MSC, the contest, which was held in Memorial Auditorium, was open to all students of the college. The focus of the bodybuilding contest was to promote health through fitness, nutrition and drug free athletes for all ages.

Director Shelia Holman judged the event a success, saying "The event was well attended and everyone had fun." On the popularity of bodybuilding, Holman said, "Bodybuilding has become a spectator sport, because people like to admire other people that look good. Through bodybuilding you learn about fitness and it promotes good nutrition."

This year, 19 contestants competed in separate weight classes for both men and women. The men's competition was divided into three weight classes; heavyweight (177 and up), middleweight (160-176), and lightweight (up to 159 pounds), while the females were divided into lightweight and middleweight classes.

The most competitive weight class in the male division was the lightweight as the six contestants were most evenly matched. The eventual winner was Steve Wolsinski, while Kevin McGrath and Jim Hughes placed second and third respectively.

Five males competed in the middleweight class. Peter Gory placed first. Jeff Gramoni took second and Gene Segeda was third.

In the lightweight competition, Dave Chandler proved it's better the second time around as he improved from last year's performance to take first prize. George Irwin was second and Wilbert Jones came in third.

The lightweight female level had only two competitors, and Jody Piza won first and Susan Kamed came in second. The middleweight female division consisted of three competitors. First place went to Dawn Martini, as Valerie Vogues and Ruth Sutherland placed second and third respectively.
