Feminist issues distorted

By Joan Groom

Research into the role of women in Early Christian Era has added to Anti-Jewish sentiment, said Dr. Ross Kraemer, a feminist scholar, in a lecture yesterday.

Kraemer said, "For many feminist scholars, the need to deal with the misogynist (women-hater) that is clearly present in Jewish tradition is a very important need."

"It's a need for all of us to deal with things in our traditions that we don't like. What do you do when your tradition puts forth positions that make you uncomfortable, whether they are positions about the attitude toward women or toward slavery?" she asked.

"One way Christian feminists deal with this is to go back and try to explain the tradition by saying it's the Jewish roots of Christianity; otherwise it would have been fine," said Kraemer.

The research into the role of women in early Christian and Jewish society began as a search for historical antecedents for ordaining women priests, she added.

"There is a great deal of historical precedent already for viewing Judaism in the Greco-Roman period in a fair amount of negative light, in order to better demonstrate the superiority of Christianity," she said.

"Unfortunately, a lot of that has fed into unpleasant relationships between Jews and Christians," said Kraemer.

Kraemer added one of the most serious obstacles to accurate feminist research is the limited number of sources used.

Another problem is the long oral tradition preceding the recording of Jewish sources, she added.

Yet other problems exist in determining the reliability of sources, knowing how many

President vetoes PCAA

By Michelle Ragonese
Correspondent

On March 8, the President's Commission on Affirmative Action (PCAA) reviewed Acting President Richard Lynde's veto of the commission's right to advance notice to the commission before any recruitment decisions are finalized.

Dr. John Thiruvathukal, chairperson of the commission, read Lynde's response letter, which said that the acting president denied the request "as it was worded." The letter added that the appointments which do not adhere to the Affirmative Action policies are exceptional cases where decisions have to be made quickly.

Some members of the commission said they were concerned because these special situations could lead to permanent positions which would undercut Affirmative Action policy.

The commission decided to discuss the issue further at the Executive Committee meeting and to review it again with the president.

Governor proposes austere MSC budget

By Carl Chase

The MSC Board of Trustees revealed its analysis of Thomas Kean's 1990 budget termed "frugal, bordering on the austere" at its meeting Thursday, March 2.

The recommendations for fiscal year 1990 in their present form would force spending cuts in most state institutions, increasing overall spending by 1.8% and reducing higher education spending 3.2%, according to the proposal.

MSC Acting President Dr. Richard A. Lynde said, "Considering the number of students served, MSC is fourth from the bottom in terms of direct state support per [Full Time Equivalent] student."

FTE is the number of full-time students, plus semester hours taken by part-timers converted to a typical full-time course load.

The department of Administration and Finance asked the state Board of Higher Education (BHE) for a base budget of $49.88 million, which the BHE recommended to the Governor unchanged.

Governor Kean's recommendations reduce this by about $1 million.

The total appropriations to all state colleges would increase this year by only two-tenths of one percent.

Board member Dr. Edward Goldberg said, "The

Experts seek close gap between verbal teachers and visual students

By Lilyanne McCleane Staff Writer

A panel of experts invited by the Institute for Critical Thinking agreed on Tuesday that teachers and students must find a medium of communication between oral and written skills and visual skills.

Dr. Lenore Langsdorf, guest professor of Philosophy from the University of Texas said that students and teachers suffer from a communication gap.

According to Langsdorf, most teachers learned to communicate through written text and verbal skills. Today students are learning to communicate through television, she said.

Dr. Milton Seegmiller of the Linguistics Department, said that teachers should expose students to alternate sources of information to bridge this gap.

"The most dangerous aspect of TV," said Seegmiller, "is that it does not represent a wide viewpoint."

Dr. Victoria Tietze, Classics department, said that students should read more. "A person who has been watching TV all his life can't manipulate the other sources of communication."

Dr. William Berlin, Political Science, said that students should learn more about the visual media.

"Students should get more involved," said Berlin. "Students must understand how [TV] is made and understand its impact."

"Saying that TV is going to start affecting the way we think," she said. "We are going to start thinking in terms of images and not words."

Seegmiller said that TV reasoning is not different from other types of communication. "What is going on on TV is not entirely different from what we do," said Seegmiller. "TV is popular because students can identify with it."

Seegmiller added that his students are very verbal and reason well.

Drop-In counselors attend a sexual assault workshop

Contributed by the Drop-In Center

Participants attending a workshop on sexual assault counseling and training at a conference at Fordham University in the Bronx agreed that increased awareness of the topic could facilitate prevention, and perhaps aid those in need of help to come forward.

Three MSC representatives from the Drop-In Center attended the conference, titled COOL, this past weekend. It was sponsored by the Campus Outreach Opportunity League, a national non-profit organization which promotes and supports student involvement in community service and action.

The MSC students spent the three days of workshops on social awareness and outreach together with representatives from twenty colleges across the nation and overseas.

Different resources were pooled from a national perspective, and ideas for further outreach for victims of sexual assault were exchanged.

Other lectures focused on improving organizational skills, personnel management, and publicity of volunteer organizations.

Student leaders from across the country shared common experiences and suggestions for the recruitment and retention of volunteer members.

The students spent one day "going into the streets." They entered a New York City community agency and observed and participated in it.

Drop-In Center members had the opportunity to go to Emmanuel House, a homeless shelter and soup kitchen for men in the heart of Harlem. For five hours, time was spent unloading boxes in the food warehouse, working in the kitchen and speaking to and interacting with New York's homeless.

The final day was spent at an "opportunity fair", where local, national, and international organizations gathered to exchange information.

Trip to British Isles

A 16-day tour of England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales is being sponsored by the commercial recreation/travel and tourism concentration in MSC's department of physical education, recreation and leisure studies.

The tour will leave from the metropolitan area on June 3, and arrive in London the following day. Travelers will be visiting such sites as Stonehenge, Salisbury Cathedral, the Roman Baths and Trinity College.

Along the way they will be treated to views across the Salisbury Plain, the Waterford coastal drive and the Scottish borders.

While in London, the participants have been invited to visit the Thomas Cook Agency. Thomas Cook is the person credited for the creation of the packaged tour. While at the Cook Agency, the chief archivist has agreed to personally meet the group and to make the archive available to them.

The tour includes free days in the cities of London, Dublin and Edinborough where the travelers may explore and visit those sites that are of particular interest to them.

Also included in the prize are all land travel, most meals and accommodations in twin-bedded rooms with private facilities in mainly first-class hotels. Other features include travel insurance and service charges, taxes and tips.

The tour is being organized by Dr. Susan A. Weston, coordinator of the recreation and leisure studies program at MSC. This program offers a B.S. degree with a concentration in travel tourism and commercial recreation.

Weston has recently completed a book chapter on the history of these areas.

Individuals who are interested in this opportunity may take the tour for graduate or undergraduate credit, or for no credit at all. The package is priced at $1,190 excluding air fare. For more information contact Weston at (201) 893-5253 or 893-7132.

Teachers should treat media as second language

By Laura Lawson
Staff Writer

The language gap between bookish teachers and televishual students has increased due to technologically dependent resources, according to Lenore Langsdorf, Professor of Philosophy at the University of Texas.

Langsdorf said that television, which may be causing major cultural changes, presents a new means of communication, one which is “read, but not written.”

As a result of the growth in popularity of television over the past twenty years students have learned to communicate differently as compared to teachers who have devoted their lives to reading, writing and discussing the printed word, she said.

The problems associated with televishual communications can be outlined by comparison with the three traditional forms of communication, she added.

Langsdorf defined the first, performance, as kinesthetic or muscular movements initiated and reasoned non-verbally by the brain in order to accomplish a specific need or desire.

She described the second, orality, as requiring speaking, hearing and memory, and the third as print, consisting of writing and reading.

Television, acting as a window, portrays the world in a realistic or superior form and requires no performance from the individual, said Langsdorf.

Both orality and print, utilize kinesthetics. Orality and print allow a response which the media of television does not, she added.

Langsdorf said she believes students as a result of this are becoming more verbally illiterate and may view written English as a second language.

According to Langsdorf, the solution is not to abandon print, but to develop the ability to reason in media, thereby attempting to expand verbally on the culture represented by students.

In order to teach the language of books and to appreciate the contribution of syntax and vocabulary in an interpretation of television, Langsdorf suggested faculty treat the media as a second language.

By this means educators may achieve a bi-cultural or bi-lingual understanding with students in addition to gaining a deeper appreciation of their own grammar by exposure to the new, she added.

Langsdorf defined critical thinking as the ability to understand and evaluate claims based on reason and evidence in order to know right action.

She said she hopes to inspire students to use formal reasoning and to translate that skill to daily living.

On-campus housing in our residence halls provides an excellent opportunity to become more involved in campus life. In addition to the convenience of living and dining on-campus, you will be able to compliment your academic pursuits with a quality living/learning experience. If you are an off-campus student interested in obtaining on-campus housing anytime between now and next fall, NOW is the time to take advantage of this opportunity. If you apply and receive housing prior to our room selection process in mid-April, you will be guaranteed on-campus housing for the 1989-90 academic year. Housing for the fall semester will be extremely limited for those who miss out on this opportunity.

Housing offers will be made on a first come, first serve basis until all vacancies are filled. Off-campus students interested in obtaining a housing application should come to the Residence Life office on the 4th floor of Bohn Hall between the hours of 8:30 a.m. and 4:30 p.m.
Habitat constructs mini ‘home’

By Jolyn R. DeSantis
Correspondent

Some MSC students have the power of creation—helping to create their own little corner of the world.

Habitat for Humanity, a national organization soon to be chartered on campus, began construction on its miniature home display to be used for publicity purposes in conjunction with Spring Week. The house will be completed via donations and will be raffled off as a prize when the week is over. It will function as a backyard shed.

Members from the MSC chapter of Habitat met with volunteers from the industrial studies department on Tuesday, March 14 at 7:00 p.m.

Time, great experience, and enthusiasm were lent by Winfield Parsons, the construction instructor, and Scott Kennedy, the consulting carpenter, along with various industrial studies students. The members of Habitat were exposed to, as expressed by Parsons and Kennedy, “the basis of residential construction.” Habitat members were directly involved with the construction of the floor of the house and one wall. One member, Amy Knight, used an electric saw to cut some supports. The others were involved in measuring with the industrial professional’s tools, or nailing in just the right place to have the plywood meet the supports properly.

The miniature home will measure 4 feet wide, 8 feet long, and 8 feet high. It will be completed with an asphalt shingle detachable roof (the industrial studies department will deliver it to the home of the local raffle winner), cedar shake sides, one window, and will be able to be raised above the wet ground. However, it will not be supplied with electricity.

The members of Habitat will meet once again to help the industrial studies students further the construction on the home. The home will be very basic and will only be completed at the end of Spring Week, and construction continues on a scale comparing real prices to donation capabilities.

Donations can be made at the site of the house in the Student Center Plaza during the week, or at the site of the house at the weekend carnival. All donations will be split directly among three Habitat projects:

one in Newark, one in Paterson, and one as yet unnamed sister project overseas.

In addition to fund raising and publicity, Habitat’s smaller “housing project” with the industrial studies department helps demonstrate what Habitat actually does—giving homes to people who can’t get housing ordinarily.

With the help of student volunteers, these people put in a specified number of hours working on their own house and eventually pay for it interest-free.

Students go wherever they can to be of help. There are currently two local projects under way in Paterson and Newark.

Habitat members recently visited the Paterson project, clearing debris and levelling ground for rainwater runoff at a site of six townhouses that are nearly completed.

Once chartered by the SGA, Habitat for Humanity will become a Group IV organization. At this writing there are roughly 20 active members.

Although still in the early stages of growth, the MSC chapter has been given a “leg up” by the broadcasting department.

Lack of affordable housing prevails in America today

By Toni McLaughlin
Correspondent

Masses of people are being sheltered in low-budget motels/hotels because of the lack of affordable housing for low-income individuals. These and other shocking statistics were revealed at the second of a three part series of the Public Policy Forum entitled “Homelessness: The Costs of Housing.”

The program was held in the Student Center Ballrooms last Wednesday night and served as a follow-up to last Fall’s conference on the homeless.

A series of paintings by artist Lucy Janjigian named “The Uprooted” was on display in the Ballroom prior to the forum. The series contained sixteen paintings, each of which depicted the emotional torment and bitter cold reality of the homeless, which set the tone for the evening.

The panelists were Helen Seitz, supervisor of homelessness prevention in the New Jersey Department of Community Affairs, John Glasscock, project coordinator of the American Affordable Housing Institute, and Victor DeLuca, administrator of the Ironbound Community Corporation and co-founder of the Newark Coalition for Low-Income Housing.

By far, the main point of the evening, as stressed by De Luca, was the housing problem due to the large amount of conversions taking place.

In fact, the New Jersey Tenants Organization has reported that since 1979, over 70,000 rental apartment units in New Jersey have been lost because of conversion to cooperative or condominium ownership.

De Luca reported that approximately 500 families were being housed in motels/hotels as of November 1988. Speaking monetarily, De Luca revealed that it costs 13 million dollars to shelter one family per year in one such motel/hotel.

De Luca suggested that this money go into the building of permanent housing as opposed to the continuation of payment for temporary shelter.

“Shelters (are) not the answer. These provide no future and little hope,” De Luca said.

Glasscock and Seitz talked more about government aid, or, as they stated, lack of it. Glasscock stated that the Stuart H. McKinney Act, which was passed in 1987, is “the first serious statement government made” in terms of relief programs for the homeless. However, Glasscock stated that most of the relief is given by “non-profit organizations.”

Seitz reported that in 1980 the government allotted 34 billion dollars for aid for the homeless; that budget has dropped to 7 billion dollars for the 1989 year.

Glasscock explained that most of the prevention policies are designed for those in need of temporary help, which is a loss cont. on p. 9

Employee assaulted

By John Friberg
Staff Writer

On March 10, about 3:30 p.m., a male cafeteria worker was assaulted by another cafeteria worker on the #60 bus, on College Ave. The one worker signed an assault complaint against the other.

The assailant is scheduled to appear in Montclair Municipal Court on March 23.

On March 10, on Webster Rd., two cars were vandalized by persons unknown. An '80 Chevy and an '84 Chevy both had their windshields smashed.

There was a report of a suspicious person in the Life Hall studios around 11 p.m. on March 11. The person has been using the building to sleep in.

Campus Police was unable to locate the person.

On March 11, at 1:17 a.m., there was a bomb threat in Blanton Hall. On the same night, at 2 a.m., there was another bomb threat in Bohn Hall.

A car stolen from MSC on Feb. 21 was recovered by Newark police at 4:08 a.m. on March 12.

On March 14 between 4:30 p.m. and 4:45 p.m., an '83 Toyota Celica two-door was stolen from lot 25.

A Stone Hall resident accused a Blanton Hall resident of stealing a pair of sneakers from him on March 14.

Corrections

In last week's Montclarion, SGA President Tommy Mergola was incorrectly quoted in the article "State Police raid Rat."

Mergola did not say "Somebody—an administrator or a member of the Faculty Student Co-op—knew about this raid ahead of time in order for that to happen." Mergola actually said, "Somebody knew about this raid ahead of time in order for that to happen."

In addition, it was incorrectly reported in the article "SILC privileges revoked" that Cathy McNeese resigned after SILC's budget was frozen. According to McNeese, she never officially resigned from her position as treasurer.

The Montclarion apologizes for any confusion that may have occurred due to these errors.

Link between feminism and anti-Judaism seen

Accepting limited sources as representative amounts to a "homogenization of Judaism," she said.

Kraemer added, "There has been a really intentional suppression of a lot of evidence about women's leadership and roles and authority in early Christian communities. The historical transfer of information about women's roles was not accurate, she said.

Kraemer spoke to a group of Women's Studies faculty and students Tuesday afternoon in Kops Lounge. This was the first of two lectures she delivered titled, "Women's Religions in the Ancient World." Kraemer is the author of a recently published book titled, Maenads, Matrons, Monastics: A Sourcebook on Women's religions in the Greco-Roman World. She is a visiting scholar from the University of Pennsylvania.

Dr. Kraemer answered questions from students and faculty, which focused on the pagan as well as Jewish roots of Christianity and the possible differences between public and private attitudes toward women, at the conclusion of her remarks.

Sources are enough and knowing if the sources are representative of the communities they come from, said Kraemer.

situation is very fluid right now, these figures could change with legislation.

According to the proposal, MSC still would receive more state funding overall than any other state college in New Jersey at $40.2 million. William Paterson College is next, at $33.2 million.

The issue of future use of the Sprague library building was raised in Student Representative Robin Miller's report when she said, "If anyone knows how the new Master Plan will affect classes for the various schools on campus, I can tell you that many students are concerned about this and would appreciate any information."

Last month, rumors circulated to the effect that upon completion of a new Library facility, the Sprague Library was destined to become a Fine and Performing Arts Center, Miller said.

Business students have collected about one thousand signatures on a petition saying that the old library should rightfully serve business students.

Chairman Murray L. Cole said the Master Planning committee had no word yet from the private consulting firm studying various uses for the facility.

In other business, the board unanimously passed a resolution prohibiting sexual harassment that differs slightly from a document submitted in its last meeting. It had narrowly rejected the earlier draft in favor of a broader definition.

The expanded version was finally adopted as a substitute, after the committee's draft was also approved.

Attached to the meeting agenda was the intended revision, replacing the word and with or to broaden the definition. Vice chairman Robert A. Altman called for major changes to this, further expanding the policy few days prior to the meeting.

Equal Opportunity Department director Anita Walters, who headed the committee, said, "This is a more-than-adequate action, it covers the situation. Now it's up to the administration to implement the new policy."

President Bush takes a stand with new gun ban

President Bush has finally done what many democrats thought would never happen: He took a serious stand on gun control. On Wednesday, President Bush temporarily banned the importation of semi-automatic weapons to the United States from any country except those where that type of weapon is legal to own by civilians. This is a start, much more needs to be done.

There already exists a ban on automatic weapons. The primary difference between the two is that automatic weapons will continue to fire as long as the trigger is depressed or until the ammunition is exhausted. Semi-automatic weapons require a trigger pull for each bullet.

For many years, the National Rifle Association has had a strong hold on lawmakers and had virtually stymied all possible legislation on the subject of gun control. That seems to be changing.

The California Senate and Assembly, in the wake of the Stockton incident, has passed legislation banning the weapon. Though this is a start, much more needs to be done.

Unless the ban covers all 50 states, the legislation will be useless. Gun-runners will surely go to states where the gun is legal, purchase it and bring it into the state where it is illegal and resell it—at a profit. Thus, we have not stopped the problem—we've only created a black market for illegal weapons.

Gun control lobbyists can thank drug policy director William Bennett for the temporary ban. Bush appointed him to investigate a black market for illegal weapons.

So you want to be secretary of defense? Show us your liver.

And John Tower obliges. His liver, it turns out, is fine. What else do you want to see?

"I'm a single man, I do date women," Tower responds. He is, at the moment he says this yuppy words, 63 years old and the father of three grown daughters.

Wackiness has gripped the nation. As I write, U.S. senators are trooping into a room in the Capitol with slavering lips to read the FBI's gossip about Tower's love life and drinking habits. The senators come forth and solemnly profess to be weighing the grave decision they must make on the basis of the evidence. The future of mankind, you see, depends upon it.

Psychiatrists and alcoholism experts pontificate from afar on whether Tower, whom they have not examined, is truly an alcoholic. They predict that he cannot possibly give up drinking, or, alternatively, that yes, he can, or alternatively, maybe he can and maybe he can't. This is their professional opinion.

President Bush argues that the opposition to Tower comes purely from partisan Democrats. This overlooks the opposition of conservative activists Paul Weyrich and Howard Phillips, and the doubts about Tower in the minds of GOP Sen. Jesse Helms of North Carolina, Charles Grassley of Iowa, Larry Pressler of South Dakota and William Armstrong of Colorado.

Sen. Sam Nunn of Georgia argues, on the contrary, that his prime concern is whether Tower will be cleared in a crisis, as though this one man alone could plunge the nation into war. Unless the rules have been secretly changed, Tower would have no finger on the nuclear trigger. The chain of command goes straight to the White House. If Tower shows up bleary-eyed in the Situation Room, Bush can heed his advice, fire him or let him sleep it off in the corner.

Something dramatic has changed in Washington. What should have been a debate about the future of America's defense has turned instead into a running joke. Tower is now and forever a figure of fun, a little bantam rooster whose breath is to be sniffed at and whose coat collar you see, depends upon it.

The San Francisco Chronicle has said President Bush brought the issue up and should be commended for doing so. This town has become much more partisan, he said over the phone. "Five years ago I cannot believe that a new president, a new commander in chief, could not pick one of his own aides for a Cabinet post. The Senate has become much more willing to challenge the president."

But another change is the willingness of public officials to expose their private lives in excruciating detail. Jimmy Carter started it all when he allowed the White House to release the results of his hemmorhoid examination. This removed the last barrier to civilized discourse about our political leaders.

The innermost details of Reagan's colon surgery were flashed around the world to be a topic of breakfast table conversation from Moscow to Madagascar. The public had a right to know.

When Kitty Dukakis had a couple of belts too many, the gallant Michael promptly held a press conference to announce that he was putting her in the tank to dry out.

With Tower, we are shocked to discover that this man who would lead our mighty defense machine is, in fact, human. He had a drinking problem in the past. He has an adolescent's view of sex. Yes, he knows his stuff. Yes, he has the backing of the President. Yes, he would probably be the best-qualified person to whip the Pentagon into shape. Yes, he would be closely watched.

But he is not made out of plastic. Bring on somebody who is or who does a better job of pretending.

Lars-Erik Nelson is a syndicated columnist with the Tribune Media Service
What was Nunn thinking about?

Several questions will need to be examined now that the voice of the Senate is finally in, but why postpone consideration of the singularly intimidating point made by Sen. Sam Nunn, namely that the secretary of defense is second in the operational chain of command in a nuclear age? The clear message was that the American people would need to wonder every night whether, if John Tower had a martini before dinner, we would be flirting with nuclear apocalypse.

True, Senator Tower took from them this weapon when two weeks ago he said that if he took office he would cease drinking altogether for the length of his tenure. This pledge of contingent abstinence did not have the intended effect; but even so, we are left to wonder whether someone who drinks or even someone who has been seen drunk can’t serve a secretary of defense for the reasons insinuated by Senator Nunn.

We are, really, left with the impression by Senator Nunn that the secretary of defense John Tower might ... do what?

Launch a nuclear strike against the Soviet Union without orders to do so from the president?

Was that what Senator Nunn was thinking about? Well, without knowing the details of highly secret arrangements, as a potential victim of a nuclear exchange initiated by an inebriated secretary of defense, I want Senator Nunn to answer this question. Suppose that a secretary of defense lurched into his office after the cocktail hour, or for that matter rang up from home, and said to the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff: “Lob a cruise missile (hie) from one of our submarines into Leningrad.”

Would the orders go out to our submarines? If this is so, then we all have much more to worry about than the confirmation of Senator Tower—after all, he has promised to stay sober. But if we can go trippingly into war because there aren’t internal protections against the kind of thing Senator Nunn is hinting at, then there ought to be, and why are we waiting so long?

Or is Senator Nunn saying that if a SecDef who drinks might respond inadequately to orders from a president? What kind of orders? Suppose that Bush were to call the Pentagon and order a general alert.

Is it suggested that a defense secretary who had been to a cocktail party, or even one who had gone to bed drunk, would abstain the flow of instructions from the president? What contingency arrangements do we have to protect ourselves against such an interruption of the current of orders originating with the commander in chief? Suppose that the president decided on alert at 11:05 and at 11:03 the secretary of defense had suffered a stroke? What actually would happen? Would the orders flow by predetermined direction to the deputy secretary of defense? Surely the will of the president cannot absolutely depend for its execution on instantly locating an instantly alert secretary of defense?

Suppose that the president wishes to consult with the secretary of defense over a crisis and the secretary of defense is a little lightheaded after three margaritas. Well, let’s see: 1) the SecDef could sober up in a hurry, as we have all seen people do under pressure; 2) the president could leave him out of the earlier discussions of the crisis until he had sobered up, pursuing his discussions with other members of his staff. If it were the kind of crisis required action within, say, a half-hour (let us suppose our radar tracked an incoming armada of missiles from the Soviet Union), would consultation with secretary of defense prove vital?

Either such emergencies are of a kind that require instant action by the chief executive, in which event he has no time for consultation, merely time to give out orders; or else there is time for everyone to sober up and come to the Situation Room.

When McGeorge Bundy, serving President Kennedy as national security adviser, learned finally that the Soviet Union had nuclear weapons in place in Cuba, it was about 11 in the evening. He elected not to wake up President Kennedy, but to greet him with news of this development at breakfast the following morning. Why? Mr. Kennedy was not a drinker, so it wasn’t a matter of giving him time to sleep it off. It was, rather, a reasoned alternative to melodramatic midnight sessions, which run the danger of weakening the mind the following day.

Senator Nunn either engaged in a indefensible scare tactic or else he is admitting that adequate security arrangements haven’t been made in the nuclear field. Which one?

FAMOUS LAST WORDS FROM FRIENDS TO FRIENDS.

"You've had too much to drink, let me drive."
"Nobody drives my car but me."

DRINKING AND DRIVING CAN KILL A FRIENDSHIP.

How to live with someone who's living with cancer.

Learning to live with cancer is no easy task. Learning to live with someone else's cancer can be even more difficult.

Nobody knows better than we do how much help and understanding is needed. That's why our service and rehabilitation programs emphasize the whole family, not just the cancer patient.

We run local programs with volunteers who are recovered cancer patients, or whose lives have been touched by family members or friends with cancer. That's what makes us one of the largest, best-motivated and most caring of any health organization in the country.

Among our regular services we provide information and guidance to patients and families, transport patients to and from treatment, supply home care items and assist patients in their return to everyday life.

Life is what concerns us. The life of cancer patients. The lives of their families. So you can see we are even more than the research organization we are so well known to be.

HERE'S A NEW TAX LAW TIP
Generally, the new tax law requires children and other dependents to file tax returns for 1987 if:
• they have any investment income, such as interest on savings, and
• this investment income plus any wages is more than $500.

Brickell shoots for stardom with Bohemians

By Oren Silverstein

The music scene of 1988 will undoubtedly be remembered for the re-emergence of the female artist. Sperun on by the chart and critical success of Suzanne Vega, in 1987, 1988 followed suit with a torrent of distinctly individual and original female artists. They ranged in styles from the teenage bubblegum music of Debbie Gibson and Tiffany to the socially conscious folk of Tracy Chapman and Michelle Shocked. Women cropped up in the "new wave" scene as well, most notably Sinead O'Connor and Natalie Merchant and her band 10,000 Maniacs. 1988 heralded the return of several rock veterans such as Belinda Carlisle, Debbie Harry, Joan Jett and punk priestess Poly Styrene!

Catania plays the Rat

By Maria De Luca
Correspondent
On Wednesday, Mar. 8, Class One Concerts sponsored a live rock band, Catania, in the Rat. The band went on shortly after 10 p.m. to an audience of about 70 people. The five member band is headed by the brother/sister team of Jeffrey and Cynthia Coratoni. Jeffrey, 24, is the guitarist, and Cynthia, 22, is the band's powerful lead vocalist. Additional band members include Jeffrey Miller, 24, on keyboards, Billy Langam, 25, on bass and David Silver, 21, on drums.

Nolan's Notes

By Jarrett Nolan
Hello and welcome to another edition of Nolan's Notes. This is not Madonna's week. Recently, a 10-year-old boy claims she assaulted him last year and has slapped the singer with a $600,000 lawsuit. Madonna, notorious for ignoring "regular nightmares," said attorney. The encounter occurred on a New York street in which the Material Girl allegedly "stuck" him and "threw him to the ground." Madonna denies assaulting the kid, who was trying to take her picture at the time. Guess she learned that from her ex, Sean. Also, her video for "Like a Prayer" has gotten rave reviews out in the midwest and May and June releases, respectively. Tower Records is almost full of new releases, the only art form in town! By the way, I'm going to Daytona on sight. Maybe, it has something to do with those burning diapers.

The piece allowed the dancers to incorporate them into a pleasingly original sound.

The following dance piece was brought to us through MSC's technique of humorous events. This surrealistic fantasy suggests a carnival with its brilliant, colorful and incredible dance, like lighting created Nikolaus. "Revels" was further heightened with the dimension of vivid colors designed by Frank Garcia.

The images of a surrealistic phantasm presented by this piece are extraordinary and all-absorbing. "Revels" truly is a fine work of art.

Bon Jovi rocks the Coliseum

By Chris Rohloff
Correspondent

Jersey boys Jon Bon Jovi, Richie Sambora, and Alec John Such and David Bryan, collectively known as rock supergroup Bon Jovi, rocked Nassau Coliseum on March 10.

Jon Bon Jovi strutted his stuff in front of thousands of screaming fans. Arrows reached out everywhere in response to Jon's command to "Lay Your Hands on Me," from the band's latest release, New Jersey.

Jon occasionally stopped to talk to the audience, sharing his personal views on relationships: "Yes, I'll thank you to that four-letter word before" and on his success: "If you want something bad enough, it's yours for the taking."

Jon's voice was considerably better this time than when he played the Meadowlands in August of '87. He was on top of every note and showed no signs of raspiness. Yet, in many instances, Jon's voice lacked the bite that is needed to "cut" through the music. On the other hand, Richie Sambora, lead guitarist, possessed an energy in his voice that was explosive.

The lighting and special effects were incredible and greatly added to what was already a well-choreographed, high-energy show. Fireworks, as seen in the "Living on a Prayer" video, were used as well as a metal ramp that was attached to the stage and circled the Coliseum. Jon and Richie occasionally ran across the ramp to the delight of fans below who wanted a closer look.

Favorite moments include Jon's cappella introduction to "Living on a Prayer," and the performance of "Wanted Dead or Alive" which included a ten-minute solo by Richie on the acoustic guitar. Another moment that came as a surprise to the audience was the appearance of Billy Squier. Billy joined Jon on stage for a rendition of Free's "All Right Now."

One negative aspect however was the exclusion of earlier material from the set. Bon Jovi played only one song from the first album, and "Tokyo Road" from 7800 Degrees Fahrenheit. The band focused primarily on their commercial hits from Slippery When Wet and New Jersey. This choice is understandable—powerful punch lines have shown more allegiance to fans who have followed him from the beginning.

A mention should also go to Skid Row, who opened for Bon Jovi. Recently signed with Atlantic Records, Skid Row performed hard-driving hits from their latest album, including "Youth Gone Wild."

Bon Jovi, without a doubt, is one of the best live shows I've seen in a long time.

The story of East Side High: movie Lean on Me is a hit

By Adrienne Fudge
Correspondent

Cocaine, marijuana, crack, and violence aren't only on the streets—they're in our schools, too. Eastside High of Paterson was being crippled by these elements of self-destruction.

The movie Lean on Me depicts a city school that is out of control. Teachers and students are being harassed and brutally beaten in between classes. The cafeteria is like a flea-market for drugs. Teachers are powerless and drug dealers are in control. Something has to be done.

The movie Lean on Me depicts a city school that is out of control. Teachers and students are being harassed and brutally beaten in between classes. The cafeteria is like a flea-market for drugs. Teachers are powerless and drug dealers are in control. Something has to be done.

Lean on Me was a thought-provoking movie that displayed many of the problems of society today. It raised questions about drugs, violence, teen-age pregnancy, parenting, and most of all, education.

The movie was well acted and worth seeing. It's a movie that will make you think and question society. Lean on Me makes you remember that East Side is not an isolated incident, that what happened at East Side is happening all over the country, and that something must be done about it.

New Order punches out rhythm

By Rhonda Rego
Correspondent

New Order is not your typical dance-music band. O.K., maybe they're trendy and DJ's and remixers might love to get their hands all over their latest 12 inch. Nevertheless, they are their own band.

Technique, the latest from New Order, is typical of the band with a few traces of Spanish spice thrown in for a postmodern affect. The album was partially recorded in Europe's latest hot spot, Ibiza, the Spanish Island that birthed the "Balearic beat."

New Order, rather obviously, produces some stuff that is strictly for the dance club, but I don't knock them for it—I like to dance. "Fine Time," the first track on the album and the first track to get club play, is definite dance music.

The second and third tracks, "All the Way" and "Love Less," are more somber and almost ballad-like. Both would be my picks for pleasure in listening. The rest of the album comes together with the balance of three harmonies and three basic New Order numbers.

The band is in touch; they know how to play music, dance and otherwise. The new album is alluring and promises a powerful punch of rhythm, lyrics and sound.
Skin Deep goes further than you think

By Chris Rohloff
Correspondent

Skin Deep, a film written and directed by Blake Edwards, stars John Ritter, of Three's Company and Hooperman fame, as Zach, a man desperately trying to win back his wife.

A renowned alcoholic and womanizer, Zach recognizes the need to reform himself, but forever falls back into his old habits.

Alyson Reed, best known for her role of Cassie in the movie version of A Chorus Line, brings engaging wit and a comedic sense of timing to the role of Alex, Zach's wife.

In one scene, Alex comes home early only to find Zach's mistress about to kill him because she found him in bed with her hairdresser. Alex casually strolls into the bathroom and comments, "If you think you're going to kill him, could you bring him outside? Those are new sheets."

Although primarily a comedy, Skin Deep contains serious undertones. These undertones are generated by the conflict that Zach experiences within himself. Zach seeks the services of a therapist, played by Peter Donat, to help him deal with the disappointment and dissatisfaction in his life.

There is a sharp distinction between the surface of Zach that consumes too much alcohol and treats women as sexual objects, and the internal, pensive Zach that despises what he sees in himself, and desperately wants to change.

Originally, when the picture was being shot, it was titled Change, but the producers later decided on Skin Deep. This is perhaps a better title because the picture focuses, both comically and seriously, on the need to look beneath the surface.

The serious Zach is portrayed realistically. He does not go through some unrealistic, complete metamorphosis at the end. Rather, Zach's change is gradual.

Skin Deep is a vehicle for the talents of John Ritter. Ritter's portrayal of Zach was touching and proved to the audience his versatility and depth as a performer.

The supporting cast is comprised of veteran actors such as Vincent Gardinia of Moonstruck and Joel Brooods of Protocol. The cast also includes the up and coming talents of Julianne Phillips of Fletch Lives and Chelsea Field of Commando.

Denise Crosby, Raye Hollitt, Heidi Payne, Diana Barton, Jean Marie McKee, and Brenda Swanson round out the cast.

How to get through college with money to spare:

1. Buy a Macintosh.
2. Add a peripheral.
3. Get a nice, fat check.

Skin Deep is a Morgan Creek Productions Presentation and is presently in release by Twentieth Century Fox Film Corporation.

Greediness still the name of the games

By Kenny Peck

Get Yours The story of the greedy athlete is not a new one. Arbitration, renegotiations, walkouts and even lawsuits are testimony to the fact that players will stop at nothing to get what they want.

The story of the money-hungry coach, however, is a bit of a new one. At one time, coaches stayed with clubs out of loyalty, dedication, and desire to turn a program around, or get it off the ground. But then again, so did the players. No more.

The award winning greed deed, however, has to go hands down to Bill Freda, who yesterday accepted a position with Arizona State University as head basketball coach. What's wrong with that?

He's the head coach of Michigan, who play Xavier of Ohio Friday night in the first round of the National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) playoffs. How's that for a role model?

Freda isn't the only culprit in this mess. Arizona State has to share some of the blame for this, I don't blame Freda for taking the job—after all, greed is what makes the NCAA go 'round.

I don't blame Freda for taking the job—after all, greed is what makes the NCAA go 'round. But then again, so did the players. No more.

Trivia Time-Out

Each week, The Montclarion publishes a list of sports questions and answers to test your knowledge of sports trivia. In addition, there is a sports stumper which will be answered in the following issue.

If you think you have the correct answer to the stumper, drop it off at The Montclarion office in Room 113 of the Student Center Annex. The names of those submitting the correct answer will be published in the next week's issue. Deadline for submissions is Monday at 3 p.m.

1. Who invented free-style figure skating?
2. How many fights did boxer Gene Tunney lose in his illustrious career?
3. What National League pitcher gave up Pete Rose's 4000th career hit?
4. In what year was the United States Football League started?
5. What Dallas Cowboy defensive tackle set a Super Bowl record by sacking Miami Dolphin quarterback Bob Griese for a 29-yard loss in Super Bowl VII?

Answer to last week's stumper:
Who was the American League home run champ in 1909 with nine round-trippers? Ty Cobb.

Submitting the correct answer: Jeff Vogt and Tom DiStefano.

This week's stumper:
The only Rose Bowl game not played in California was played in what city?

March 16, 1989

In the sport of softball, it is very difficult to overcome the loss of an outstanding pitcher. But the 1989 MSC softball team will have to do just that, as star pitcher Dina DeAquinio has graduated. DeAquinio, now an assistant to head coach Wilma Rucker, is the winningest pitcher in Indian history.

Coach Rucker has three pitchers on this season's roster who will attempt to fill the void. Sophomore Johanna Toleomeo, the team's only returning hurler, is joined by freshmen Lois Fyfe and Janine Luzzi to give MSC a formidable staff.

Though the pitching staff is an unknown quantity right now, the infield is solid. First baseman Tracey Burke is back for her senior year. Burke batted .308 last year and led the team in runs scored.

At second base, Cindy Dorman will move into the starting lineup. She played a limited role as a freshman last year, but she played very well when given the opportunity. Senior Lisa Hallock will play shortstop for the Indians this year. She played in 11 games last year and batted .250. Second baseman Kim Gardener will be stationed next to Hallock at third base.

The responsibility of handling the pitching staff will fall on the shoulders of freshman catcher Amy Dills from Salem, New Jersey. Sophomores Cathy Madalone and Michelle Moffat will back up the infielders.

The outfield will have five players battling for three positions. Senior Captain Andrea Peters is guaranteed a spot. She was second on the team with 24 RBI's last year when she appeared in 42 games.

Junior Chris Nixon got some playing time last year, and this year should be no different. Deonna Brooks is also back for her final campaign. Brooks was ninth for nine in stolen base attempts and batted .294 a year ago. Chris Emrich will see action as will Kim Hetzel, who pitched 2 games for the Indians last year.

The 1989 softball campaign will be a transition year for the Indians. The squad is very young, with only five seniors on the roster.

Coach Rucker, however, has won an average of 30 games a year since taking over the Indians five years ago. With her at the helm and a little experience for the younger players, there is no reason the Indians can't accomplish that feat once again.

The MSC baseball team will be in Florida this Saturday, but they won't be there to get a tan. The Indians, ranked third in the country in all of Division III, will be in Florida on Saturday afternoon when they meet Michigan State at 1:00 p.m. at the University of Miami. The Indians, the winningest pitcher in Florida Atlantic history, will be in Florida this Saturday, but they won't be there to get a tan. They won't be there to get a tan.
