Shared Governance takes away student vote

By Mary Beth Gutjahr
Correspondent

The Shared Governance Committee's final draft on Academic Shared Governance, which was presented to the Faculty Senate last Wednesday, proposes to take away the student vote in the committee, according to SGA president Mary Jane Linnehan.

The Joint Commission on Academic Shared Governance was originally developed through the efforts of the Faculty Senate and administration to create more "shared governance" over academic affairs.

According to a report submitted to the Faculty Senate and MSC President Irvin Reid by the Committee in September, there was discussion as to whether groups other than faculty should serve as part of the governance system. The consensus, said the report, was that the policy recommendation and implementation process should be collaborative and collegial rather than managerial; that is, the academic enterprise should be understood as the responsibility of each segment of the college community.

The report also stated that a collegial democratic body needed to be formed in which faculty, administrators and students would be represented, and through which each could have a meaningful voice in the institutional governance. However, in the current draft, students are not entitled to a vote, said Linnehan.

The Faculty Senate is a voting conglomorate for faculty which is strictly a recommending board that submits accepted proposals to final decision makers at the college. Some of the decisions the senate does hear involve items such as graduation procedures, curriculum assessments, and anything else that needs larger group endorsement.

"The students should have a vote in the decision making process since they are the main consumers," said Linnehan.

She said that she would like the senate to amend this part of the draft so that students will have the vote. "The SGA will be looking into mounting a campaign to poll student opinion on the issue," she added.

The SGA would also like to better educate students on the senate, to increase the interaction between the students and faculty, according to Linnehan.

The commission has a November debate scheduled with the Faculty Senate over the issue. The Senate will take the final vote in December.

Computer use restricted in Richardson labs

By Anthony DiPasquale
Staff Writer

Beginning Nov. 6, the use of the micro-computers in the Richardson computer lab will be restricted to students taking courses in the departments of math and computer science who have a pass signed by their instructor.

The restriction resulted from complaints that students currently enrolled in math or computer science classes were unable to gain access to the machines due to overcrowding by students using the computers for other course work.

"The intent of the lab in Richardson was to serve the needs of MSC students taking GERs in computer science," said Dr. Kenneth Wolff, chairman of the department of math and science. "What has happened is because Richardson is the only computer lab with fixed regular hours, it is where everyone goes to do their computer work."

Students have already begun to express complaints about the restriction because once they had completed their math or computer science course, they are no longer able to use the computers on which they have just been taught.

"There is a dilemma for students once they have completed their course and want to use the knowledge they have acquired, but it's up to the chairs of the other schools to make arrangements to meet the computer needs of their students," said Wolff.

Each individual department of MSC has its own computer lab, but the accessibility and staffing of each lab varies. The lab in Richardson has complete funding for a staff consisting for the most part, of computer science majors who are available to assist students that need help.

Jeff Giacobbe, assistant supervisor of academic computing, said he has mixed feelings about the department's decision to restrict the lab.

"Ideally I would like the lab open to all students who need to use the facility, but I also understand that students who have classes in math and computer science need a place where they can go to get their work done," said Giacobbe.

Lynn Truesdell, director of computer services, is working to have all the computer labs open during the times the college is open.

"There are a lot of problems with the computer labs on campus," said Truesdell. "The labs are controlled by their individual departments, and they don't always have the funding and support they need to be open to students when they need them."

Wolff said he feels that there is a need for a unifying office for academic computing to cater to the computer needs of the faculty and students, but for now, the students using the computer lab in Richardson Hall will be forced to make new arrangements.

Six Hundred attend Law School Admissions Day

By Michelle M. Alaimo and Maureen P. McGuire

More than 600 students from 35 undergraduate colleges and universities met with law school representatives from all over the country at the seventh annual Law School Admissions Day in the Student Center Ballrooms last Wednesday. The free event gave students from MSC and other schools the chance to talk with representatives and ask questions about law schools and organizations.

"There was a record attendance of students," said Dr. Marilyn Taylor, Director of the MSC Legal Studies Department.

"The fair was a good opportunity to talk to law schools," said one student.

Dean Philip S. Cohen of the School of Humanities and Social Sciences and Murray L. Cole, member and former chairman of the Board of Trustees, welcomed the students and law participants in the opening address.

"Every year I think this fair can't get better, but it does," said Cohen.

Taylor said there were 43 law schools and other law-related organizations that participated. Six representatives of the 43 law schools that participated were MSC alumni who attended law school and came back to encourage other students to do the same.

During opening remarks of the morning panel discussion on getting into law school, John De Liso, assistant dean at Suffolk University's School of Law, said, "I always make it my business to come to the law fair at MSC because of the close personal contact with a variety of students."

"This is the only law fair in NJ," said Taylor, "and the advantage is that there's opportunity for real contact between students and law school admissions directors. Other conventions such as those in New York, Chicago and California are too crowded for that kind of contact."

The afternoon panel discussion on being in law school was moderated by Richard Trenk, Esq., from the Young Lawyers Division of the NJ State Bar Association. He brought current law students to talk to prospective students about what it's like to be in law school.

"Although the purpose (of the event) is state-wide, 20-25% of the students were from MSC," said Taylor. "This gives them advantages. The first is that the fair is held on campus. But the second and more important one is that law schools look with increasing favor on applicants from MSC because we hold the fair here."

"MSC is also getting nationwide recognition because the success of the event is talked about by directors of law schools around the country," said Taylor.

"This annual event is of major importance for legal studies and the state because it's the only opportunity for prospective students throughout the state to meet with so many law school directors," said Taylor.

Two student organizations helped coordinate the fair: Phi Alpha Delta, the international law fraternity, and the Student Paralegal Association of the SGA. The MSC chapter on Phi Alpha Delta is the only one in a NJ public school.

Louis Ramunno, president of Phi Alpha Delta, and Barbara Smith, president of the Student Paralegal Association, said the fair was "a very successful day."

Some of the schools that participated were Drake, Thomas Cooley, California Western, Columbia University, Indiana University, Rutgers and Seton Hall.

A grant from the Alumni Association helped sponsor this year's event said Taylor.

"MSC is also getting nationwide recognition because the success of the event is talked about by directors of law schools around the country," said Taylor.

SADD

By Tony Bavaro

Four representatives of Students Against Drunk Driving (SADD) spoke outside the Student Center last Wednesday before an audience of approximately 100 students. The talk was one of many events sponsored by Student Activities during MSC's Alcohol Awareness Week.

Angela de Bergeois, a student advisor from Watchung Hills Regional High School, led the discussion. She was joined by three seniors from the school: Candace Weissman, vice president of the school's SADD chapter; Monika Mraz, president of Safe Rides, an off-shoot of the school's SADD program; and Andrew Hoge, vice president of Safe Rides.

The Watchung Hills chapter of SADD has over 150 active student members. "Our main goal is to prevent death on the highways," de Bergeois said. She said that SADD's methods of preventing drunk driving are education, use of the parent-

Faculty Senate urges acceptance of Academic Shared Governance

By Linda Magloire
Correspondent

The Faculty Senate urged the acceptance of the Joint Commission on Academic Shared Governance, a new program that would combine the input of the administration, faculty and students in policy setting for the college, at a special call meeting on Oct. 25.

The special call meeting had no voting, but supporters joined forces to inform newcomers of the benefits of Academic Shared Governance. Supporters argued that historically, the faculty has had little input in policy setting and that students needed to express their opinions on education and extra-curricular activities.

Another issue raised by the supporters of Academic Shared Governance was the excess number of committees at MSC.

Correction

In last week's issue of The Montclarion, a misleading headline—"Students were assigned appointments according to their major: Spring registration did not have more programming difficulties"—appeared on the front page.

Spring registration did not have more programming difficulties; students were assigned appointments based on their major due to a previous programming difficulty, not a new one. The Montclarion regrets any confusion this headline may have caused.
Top Ten Things to do While The Montclarion is on a Two Week Hiatus

10.) Moan about lost relationships and unmended rifts when your personals don't make next week's deadline — two weeks will go by without further social help from The Montclarion's most popular section.

9.) Pick out holiday gifts for friends and loved ones from the 1989 Sears Wishbook.

8.) Take coke, steal a car and masturbate in the library to keep the Campus Police occupied.

7.) Send a thoughtfully planned out “Sorry about your jail term” card to Zsa Zsa Gabor.

6.) Break out the Zamfir records and work on mastering the pan flute.

5.) Buy some Ex-Acto knives and tape them to various parts of your body.

4.) Say something witty and original at the next MSC Open Forum — it might help your otherwise drab personality.

3.) Say something witty and original at the next MSC Open Forum — it might hurt your good reputation as an average MSC student.

2.) Hope the C-Store gives out something better than free Kudos that were left over from last year's Spring Week.

1.) Pour over your already well-thumbed copies of The Montclarion for hidden symbols and clever allusions to famous masterpieces in American literature.

P.S. Visit Maureen and Maggie—they’ll be lonely.

Yes, it's true. The Montclarion staff will not be publishing a paper on November 16 (Date of this year's Associated Collegiate Press conference) and November 23 (Date of Thanksgiving, silly!). We'll return to our normal printing schedule on November 30.

And yes, as always, The Montclarion is a Class 1 of the SGA. So there.
Students face fewer hassles in this week's registration

By Sharonda Thomas and Richard E. Buckley, Jr.

Students registering for Spring classes this week found relatively short waits on line and fewer hassles than last week. Many said they got all their classes, but had to settle for alternate class times because their original choices were closed.

William Welsch, associate registrar, said yesterday that of 2500 available classes, about twenty percent were filled.

Sophomore Lisa Lozzi and junior Chris Pellegrino, both general humanities majors, called the system "unorganized" compared to their prior school, Bergen Community College, East Rutherford. They said at Bergen Community College the registration system included class scheduling, identification cards, and parking stickers, all in a complete circle.

Welsch said "there's a possibility" of registration by telephone being implemented soon.

Roger Long, junior arts, likes the present on-line system, "It's better than standing in the gym. When I registered last spring, there were no problems."

Neil Nik, undeclared/sophomore, also praises the new system, "I registered on Thursday, the 26, I was in and out in five minutes and got all the classes I wanted."

Not all MSC students had such kind words about their experiences with the registrar. Bo Attardi, a senior English major, is one such case. "I went to register on the second day and two of the classes I needed were closed. I needed those two classes in order to graduate in the spring. Now, I have to take the classes in the fall of '90, so the job I had lined up is gone."

Closed classes were not the only problem encountered by students registering. Michelle Lafon, a junior fashion studies major, was detained at registration for 45 minutes. "The system shut down, and the person handling my registration was completely incompetent, but (on-line registration) is better than dropping your form off in the registrar's box, then going to add/drop."

Anyway, students registering for the theft.

Robin Hood threatens Freeman Hall

By Teresa Badalamenti

On Oct. 30 at 8:00 p.m., the desk assistant at Freeman Hall alerted the campus police of a bearded, white male who had just left the building. This male was dressed like Robin Hood and carried a sword. As the campus police attended to the campus and the doors and the lock mechanism were damaged.

There was an attempt made to enter the Life Hall computer lab with force between 11 p.m. Oct. 26 and 9 a.m. Oct. 27. Although the burglar failed to get in, the thief stole $10 in cash and a gold chain valued at $700.

At 1:00 p.m. on Oct. 28, an older male in a parked car was observed by campus police in lot 29. When questioned, the man claimed to be waiting to attend a party in the apartment. Prior to this incident, this man had been arrested by campus police on two separate occasions for harassing women as they walk by him in his car. Campus police arrested him for the third time.

Between 11 p.m. Oct. 29 and 1 a.m. Oct. 30, the jacket of a security guard from State Wide Guard was stolen. During a bomb threat evacuation from Stone Hall, the jacket was recovered from a room in the residence hall. The resident

LASO kicks off Latin Month with flag raising ceremony

By Lorelei McAlone

The Latin-American Student Organization (LASO) kicked off Latin Month last night with a Hispanic Flag Raising Ceremony and a costume contest. The perfect weather seemed to heighten LASO's theme, "Latinos Reaching New Horizons."

The Flag Raising Ceremony began at 4:30 p.m. between Mallory Hall and the Student Center. About 30 people, including SGA and MSC Veterans' Association members, gathered to watch as first the American flag and then 19 flags from Mexico, Central America, the Caribbean and South America slid up the pole. When the applause died down, Dr. Joanne Englebert of the Spanish-Italian department read a proclamation from President Reid that declared November as Spanish-American Heritage Month at MSC.

The flags signify not only the diversity of the Latino groups but also pride in their cultural bond. According to LASO member, Javier Ferrada, the ceremony "shows the U.S. that even though Latin American traditions are in the minority, they can still be heard by the public. This ceremony can improve recognition for the Latin American community."

"New Horizons," means 'great expectations' for a better life and a better standard of living for themselves and their children," said LASO advisor Jose Magdaleno. It also symbolizes a growing mutual understanding between the Hispanic and non-Hispanic communities he said.

More than 60 people attended the Opening Banquet held in the balloon-filled formal dining room of the Student Center. Englebert, a guest speaker, captured the essence of the evening when she said the "Hispanic community is coming of age." Jose Fuentes, Esq., second guest speaker, focused on bi-lingual educational programs.

The Ribbon Ceremony was marked by a large white cake, the first to have LASO's logo. As the ribbon was cut, helium balloons drifted higher towards "New Horizons."

MSC hits the airwaves

By Amy DeWitt

How about a glimpse of our college in between music videos and foul shots? If you live in Passaic or Essex County, don't be surprised if you see an advertisement for MSC on MTV or during an NCAA game. It's part of a new ad campaign to promote MSC's Open Houses for prospective high school students and their parents.

Cynthia Barnes, assistant to the president, says the ad is part of an experimental marketing strategy which will "show off" the campus and "raise awareness" about the college and its many programs. The 30 and 60 second spots for television include an 800 number so that the campaign's effectiveness can be measured.

Because of the college's modest advertising budget, a local cable station, Suburban Cable, was chosen to broadcast the ads during youth-oriented programs. Barnes said the $36,000 campaign began broadcasting on October 16 and will run for six weeks.

Barnes also stressed the importance of newspapers and radio, two other media the college utilizes. MSC ads can be seen in The New York Times and The Star-Ledger, and can be heard on WHTZ (Z100), WLTY, and WCBS. The college spends $60,000 on newspaper ads and $65,000 on radio ads, Barnes said.

Edward Martin, dean of students, said that the college became aware several years ago of the declining number of students graduating from high schools, which sparked an interest in improving the college's marketing strategies.

Hopefully these new promotions will get the attention of high school juniors and seniors and their parents. Who knows? Maybe one of them will feel inspired enough to say, "I want my MSC!"

Hearing it all at the Free Speech Forum

By Ann Daly

Correspondent

Step right up, MSC students, and say whatever's on your mind.

You could be cheered, applauded, laughed at, or ignored, but at least your voice and opinion will be heard.

And you'll even get rewarded for what you have to say.

Students gathered on the steps of the Student Center last Wednesday for the third Free Speech Forum sponsored by the SGA. Equipped with 500 frisbees printed with "Alcohol Awareness Week," two microphones, and the American flag, SGA members encouraged students to stand up and voice their concerns.

Some people got up just to have fun at the mike. Others addressed serious issues, bringing the voice of anger, reason, or conscience to the Student Center mall.

A Record reporter stands trial

They were MSC journalism students armed with pads and pens. The case they heard was real.

They travelled in the rain to a small courtroom in West Orange. On creaky wooden benches, they took notes, listened, and learned.

And maybe wondered what it would be like on the other side of the law.

Lisa Marie Petersen, a reporter from the Bergen Record who spoke to journalism students and professors in Partridge Hall a few weeks ago, was convicted of trespassing Tuesday as a result of the Glen Ridge sexual assault case.

Petersen was found guilty of an incident that occurred last May 26 when she entered West Orange High School seeking an interview with the sexual assault victim's teachers.

Instead, Petersen told the students in Partridge, she found the 18-year-old victim herself in the hall and interviewed her under a tree for about 20 minutes.

After the interview, she'd said, school officials confronted her and warned her they would charge her with trespassing.

Some of the topics discussed were the importance of Alcohol Awareness Week, alcohol on campus, abortion rights, guns, and the conduct of campus police toward students.

Many students were angered over the conduct of campus police raiding the Clove Road apartments during Homecoming.

"MSC students should take a stand. This is not a 'party school.' This happens to be a dry campus!" said one angry student.

Other students voiced their opinions about abortion and a woman's right to choose. Argu.

Life on other campuses isn't always a pretty picture.

Rutgers University: January 1988 and August 1989—the B'nai Brith Hillevi Foundation building on campus was defaced with swastikas and slogans such as "Die Jews."

Pennsylvania State University: April 1988—a group called "Committee for an AIDS-Free America" reportedly posted signs stating "Homoicide has a definite place at Penn State," complete with drawings of skulls and crossbones.

Temple University: 1988-1989—130 white undergraduates gathered to form a White Student Union.

University of Wisconsin at Madison: 1988—Zeta Beta Tau pledges performed skits in blackface and Afro wigs, followed by a mock "slave auction."

Northern Illinois University: Spring 1988—Students driving by yelled "Niggers go homie" and "Niggers we ought to lynch you" at a black student walking home from a campus bar.

Smith College: Fall 1988—Notes with racial slurs were slipped under a student's door and tacked onto a bulletin board.

St. Paul's Macalester College: Fall 1988—A native American student serving as the school's Community Council President received hate mail, including the message below.

"The week isn't designed to solve all the world's problems. Other schools react. My goal is to do something before anything happens. I want to see all the groups on campus work together—administration, residence life, class organizations. I know they do it as far as homecoming and carnival, but I'd like to see it in a more social aspect," he said.

had ignored two students and 12 signs asking visitors to report to the principal's office before entering a classroom.

"No one has suggested she entered a classroom," Wiss said. "If the burden of imperfection falls on anyone, it has to fall squarely on the school."

Wiss called the signs "useless," and said that the Board's policy had not been posted properly. "You print up another green piece of paper with the right words on it. They (The Board) failed to do that," he said.

School superintendent James Donovan said that the sign was not the issue. The students crowded around the tall, balding man, talking about the case during a recess. "My interpretation is very clear. A school is made up of classrooms. It's an issue of intent," he said.

Assistant Principal Vincent Donovan recalled that another record reporter, Carolyn Mirandi, had reported the case on the same day and had reported the building.

"How specific does a sign have to be?" he asked. "If one reporter on the same day was able to interpret the sign, why not the other?" he said. "Ignorance?"

Wiss objected to any testimony concerning Hendrie, calling it irrelevant. "(Petersen) was already in the building. It (Hendrie's entrance) was either before or after the fact."

Municipal Court Judge Joseph C. Cassini III ruled that the posting was accurate, and that the two students had communicated the policy. He withheld sentencing until Nov. 28.

Petersen faces a maximum penalty of $500 fine and 30 days in jail. She left the courtroom, some students following her, asking how she felt.

She paused to face them in the hall. "I really can't talk to you guys right now," she said. "We're gonna appeal." Then she turned to leave.

Maybe she remembered what it was like to be on the other side.

ments erupted between students about cases involving incest and rape. While many believed that women who are victims of those crimes should have the choice to report them to the Board of Education, others believed that no one has a right to take another human life.

SGA President Mary Jane Linnehan is very happy with the controversy, and feels that the Free-Speech Forum has been pretty successful so far.

"The purpose of the forum is to let students voice their concerns," she said. "It's an opportunity to network and help other students."

"By allowing them the opportunity to express their feelings on different topics, we (the SGA) are hoping they will be able to take action for their concerns," she added.

Students who got up to speak were given a free frisbee. "The frisbees were not a gimmick," Linnehan said. "They're promotional items used to help advertise the event."

student contract, and advertising that appeals to a student's sense of responsibility. She spoke of many tragic incidents involving students and drunk driving, and said that SADD strives to keep alive the memory of those killed and injured in alcohol related accidents.

Weisman spoke of the "devastating effects that alcohol can have when mixed with gasoline."

"There is a 50 percent chance that sometime in your life you will be involved in a drunk driving crash," she said.

Hoge said that Safe Rides, a hotline network that provides confidential rides to students who feel they are too intoxicated to drive, was founded in 1986 after a local student was killed in a drunk driving accident while returning home from a party.

SADD was founded in 1982 in Boston by Robert Anastas, a high school student concerned about the growing problem of teen alcohol abuse, De Bergeois said. Anastas is currently SADD's national director.

The backward education

There are some students at MSC who are a little backward. That's not a comment on their attitudes or the way they wear their clothes, it's about the way they see. Literally see. There are people who look at words on a page or notes on a musical staff and see it in reverse. They suffer from a condition known as dyslexia, a frustrating learning disability which can cause people to be labeled as lazy or slow students.

It's crucial for people with dyslexia to get by on the way a word looks to them on a page. However, this system can easily backfire, causing embarrassment to the dyslexic student. Any single letter in the alphabet can be maneuvered by the dyslexic eye to its mirror image due to a neurological disorder. The letter 'b' can look like 'd' or even be turned on its side.

This may be hard to comprehend for the "normal" students, but it really happens, and more often than one might think. Many students may experience dyslexia in one form or another, and at times, in a milder sense. However, the reason that it is not commonly exposed as a disorder is because students may not understand what is happening to them and reconcile themselves to believing they aren't as smart as the other pupils in their classes.

But what about the students who realize their disorder and want to gain a quality education anyway? They know that they aren't smart or slow, but they just learn differently than the majority. They require a non-traditional education where they can pace themselves according to the rate at which they can learn effectively. Remedial classes aren't the answer. A slower version of a regular, mainstream class is not the ticket for those who need specially constructed classes to help them learn with this disorder.

MSC does not offer classes that cater to the dyslexic student or proper training to professors who come in contact with them. Why is it that funds are channelled toward promoting honor students in their endeavors for success while the dyslexic students have to work through their education with hardly any aid or support from the college?

Since this is an institute of higher learning, shouldn't we cater to the needs of all the students? Especially the ones who have a problem with education because of a physical impairment? There ought to be a concerted effort at MSC to help identify the needs of dyslexic students and help them turn their education in the right direction.
Registra­tion works fine

To the Editor:
Your front page headline of Oct. 26, 1989, explained that “Spring registration has more programming difficulties.” Addition­ally, the front page cartoon and editorial page cartoon both took this office to task.

Despite your headline, there were no “more programming difficulties.” There was only one problem, and that was reported on your front page of Oct. 19, 1989.

Yes, we wanted to schedule students by priority based on the number of credits earned. No, we could not accomplish that, basically because we still must work with two systems—the old one (Custom) and the new one (SIS).

Yes, students were scheduled in groups by major. No, that was not your allegation not-with­standing your student meeting. With the exception of the problem stated in the beginning of this letter (and we’re optimistic that this will be resolved in the near future), the new registration system is still working very well.

Peace, not violence is the answer

To the Editor:
I am not talking about peace through superior firepower, or through nuclear deterrence, or even through Love (for love often brings out the worst of our violent natures). I am talking about peace through understanding and cooperation. Any conflict can be resolved through these mediums. As, the world’s future leaders need to learn the skills that it takes to understand the viewpoints of others and cooperate, in any situation or conflict so that we may non-violently come to a peaceful resolution.

We need to think globally about the problems that threaten our human existence as a species and the freedoms all of us deserve. We need to begin by acting locally for change, peace, and a better Earth to live on.

No parking (part two)

To the Editor:
I agree whole-heartedly with last week’s letter about the intolerable parking situation in Lot 13.

Just today, Oct. 30, the atten­dant on duty stood in front of the entrance at 9:50 (when cars are usually allowed in) not allowing anyone to line up to wait for cars to exit. When I asked how you were supposed to know when a car has left so that you can enter the lot, he responded, “You don’t - you just get lucky!”

So now you are not sure if the lot is even open on any given day - you now have to time your “drive-by” to coincide with a car exiting!

If there is such a chronic parking problem as it has been stated - it would seem to me MSC should utilize what spaces are available. I am sure there is a better turnover when students park in Lot 13 than confining attendants!

Why can’t these conference attendees use the Clove Rd. parking lot? Are they afraid their cars might be broken into and/or stolen? If the faculty want their attendees to have close, safe parking, why don’t they use some of their faculty spaces?

Orchestra omission

To the Editor:
I am writing this in response to the amount of negative feedback I have received about last week’s review of A Funny Thing Happened On The Way To The Forum. Apparently the orchestra was not mentioned causing more than a few ruffled feathers.

I think that it should be kept in mind that writing a review on a musical that has nineteen cast members and the orchestra not being noted is the exception, or it becomes too long and tedious for the reader.

Neglecting to mention the orchestra was not deliberate and by no means a negative comment on their performance. I was not aware at the time that there were many students from the music department who donated their time and talent to make the show a success. I am sure that their efforts are greatly appreciated by the theatre de­partment.

If the omission of the orches­tra’s skillful performance caused any undue tension, I do apologize.

Students needed on new college senate

To the Editor:
Currently, there exists a pending decision on campus - one that will affect each of us. This decision involves expanding the current Faculty-Senate into an All-College Senate, including not only faculty, but administrators, NTP’s, Deans and hopefully students.

Since 1987, The Joint Com­mission on Academic Shared Governance (a College-Wide Committee) has been working to present a model for a Shared Governance College Senate. The model, as it stands today, would replace the current College Senate with a more collaborative body.

The Joint Commission recommends that student representation be increased with an additional 51 student members, and that the Senate be comprised of a Chairperson and 24 voting members (12 for each College).

The proposed College Senate will have a large group of committees under it, each of which will discuss different college concerns. These com­mittees will then report to the All-College Senate which can either oppose or support the committee’s report.

The decisions of the new All-College Senate have the poten­tial to be of great influence over the various policy and curric­ulum decision matters on cam­pus.

In theory, this does seem a very needed and effective me­thod of empowering our faculty, by strengthening the College Senate. Through increased communication among all cam­pus facets, mere concerns can be raised in larger number of people, who are in a position to address these concerns.

There exists, however, one aspect of the draft that will directly affect the student. At present, the model calls for a 51 person membership, with 35 voting members. Of these 35 voting members, none are stu­dents.

A College Senate can have great effects on the academic and college processes at this college. Students directly affected by this academic process, as the primary consumer, should stand in the forefront, as proportional input into your own academic process.

Faculty, as the primary pro­ducer, have adequate represen­tation on this senate, as it is proposed. Shouldn’t the producer and consumer, or the faculty and students reportedly work together in a mutualistic relationship?

If students are taking the initiative to become further involved in their educational experience, how can they be denied this right?

Ultimately, the reason for reforming the All-College Senate was because faculty did not feel adequately listened to, and wanted to strengthen their joint voice. With this in mind, faculty should have the sensitivity to the students’ needs of being listened to - in this case being amply listened to in contrast upon the right to vote.

As the paying customers at this institution shouldn’t we be included in the decisions that affect us?

I raise these questions, because it may not be too late to change the current draft and get students as voting members. As students, it is really your responsibility to think about this for your education and all students succeeding you. As you see and hear this, keep updated. Call or come to the SGA office, write editorials, or just ask questions. As students, I think it’s time we come together.

There are over 100 Universi­ties and Colleges across this country who offer majors and degrees in peace studies. It is time for such curriculum here at MSC. I think, however, that we must start small.

We need a club or organization to compose our ideas and begin to get our message across. Thus, I propose L.O.V.E. for PEACE.

The time is now. There is not time to hate...and barely time to wait!!

Through an organization such as this, we could begin to educate our campus community on the problems and conse­quences facing all of us through movies, lectures, and literature campaigns.

It could also be a forum for new theories concerning world peace.

If this idea sparks your inter­est as all please write one time at a time to Freeman Hall. Let’s Organ­ize and Volunteer our Energies for PEACE! Hope to hear from you soon!

Fire drills, an alarming experience

To the Editor:

Of all the little things on campus that college students must go through, waking up in the middle of the night for a fire alarm is the worst.

Not only does it destroy whatever peaceful dream you might be having, but it also thrusts you out into the cold night air.

The first thing to do when a fire alarm goes off in your dorm is to ignore it and go back to sleep. There is no reason to get up right away as the resident assistants don’t check rooms for at least twenty minutes.

So lay your little head back down on its pillow and try to block out the keening wail of whatever peaceful dream you might be having, but it also might be trying to defuse a bomb.

Next, you should wake up after about 15 minutes. If the bell isn’t ringing, turn over, go back to sleep and don’t wake up until morning. If it is still ringing, look out the window to make sure everyone else is leaving the building, or to make sure they are already out there.

Depending on what you are wearing at the time, sneakers, pajamas, women’s underwear, add whatever accessories are needed. A jacket, a pair of shoes, or a blanket will do just fine. Unless you really want to attract attention by going outside naked. This is not to be suggested in low temperature climates.

The next step is very important: take your keys!

Without your keys you can not get back into the building without 25 forms of I.D., a pint of blood, and your firstborn male child. Always remember your keys.

Once you are set to leave your room, double-lock the door. If an RA wants to search your room they will have to take the extra effort to get inside. Unlocking a door may not seem like too much effort, but at 3 in the morning it might as well be like trying to defuse a bomb.

Now you are ready to leave the building. Trudge down the fire stairway and when you reach the first flight, pause momentarily to examine the alarm box.

Study its insistent, blaring, annoying wail. Then punch it with all your might. It won’t hurt the box in any way and chances are you’ll break every bone in your hand, but it will make you feel better, believe me.

After you have bandaged your hand walk to the front of the building and wait. And freeze. And wait. And freeze. And freeze some more. The RAs are always inside, nice and warm, until they are told to let everyone in.

When the door opens, shove your way to it, trampling whoever seems to be in your way. Since they only open one door during a fire alarm, the glass door is reminiscent of the inside of an hour glass, with its millions of grains of sand squeezing through a tiny opening.

Once through, trudge back up the stairs as every RA in the building stops you every 10 feet saying, “Keystag please”, open your door, throw off your clothes, and get into bed. If you’re lucky you can be asleep in 5 minutes and write the entire night off as a nightmare.

Lastly, and most importantly, after your night of thrills is over wake up late for your earliest class.

If you follow these simple rules you should be more than able to have a speedy and efficient waste of time.

Film on new AIDS theory

To the Editor:

Is the AIDS virus some quirk of nature, that “somehow” just developed until it became the harbinger of this dreaded disease?

Or was the AIDS virus man-made, in a laboratory, and, under this scenario

1. was transmitted to mankind — accidentally — through contamination of some vaccine, or
2. was transmitted to mankind — intentionally — by American germ warfare personnel

(a) to destroy the homosexual community in America and/or

(b) to wipe out hundreds of millions of Blacks in Africa in a carefully considered act of racial genocide.

I first came across this 2b theory this past summer as I was giving a course on the Holocaust. I had never heard of the “charge” in the regular American media. And I came across it at a time when my class was learning how the Holocaust — Hitler’s carefully considered act of killing 6 million Jews in death camps like Auschwitz — was early on disbelieved in because of the atrocious nature of the event.

And yet it was all true. When I asked several of my colleagues, including an African American colleague, whether they had heard of this AIDS charge, they said they had not.

I plan to explain and explore the charge in connection with two of my classes on Nov. 13 when I shall show a dramatic videotape outlining some of this 2b AIDS theory.

There are a limited number of seats for interested members of the College Community — students, faculty, or staff — who may wish to attend. I especially welcome anyone who may know more about this theory than I presently do, to help us explore it. For it seems to have been ignored in our usual media coverage. And we might explore it as well. Why should this be so?

The videotape presentation and class discussion will take place on Monday, Nov. 13, from 12:00-2:00 p.m. in the Non-Print Media Room #2, Lower Level, Sprague Library.

all theirs."

Despite the pouring rain, MSC’s backup players showed a lot of character as they fought back from a goal deficit and managed to win 2-1.

"It was a good win for us,” said Rubinetti, “because it told us that our backup players are capable of filling in if they have to.”

"Today was their day,” said Smith, “and they showed a lot of guts.”

Also, the win capped off MSC’s winning streak at seven in a row as the regular season ended.

On to the play-offs it is for MSC. Their first game will be played tomorrow against Muhlenberg-Pennsylvania, who beat MSC in a pre-season mini-tournament. The loss to Muhlenberg was full of controversy. Many of the MSC players feel as though they were cheated out of a win. However, many of the players feel that it’s necessary to put that game behind them and prepare for this one.

Masur says, “Our strategy will be to defend against Muhlenberg’s direct play. Direct play is similar to a football team always going for the ninety yard bomb,” says Masur. “We can’t make mistakes because it’s difficult to defend against it if the team can execute the play effectively.”

It’s a good idea going into tomorrow’s game. He feels that he knows Muhlenberg’s weakness and that they can be contained on defense.

“We have to go in on Friday and play our game,” said Charlie Smith. “Once we begin to play our game, we then have to notch it up even more, this way we won’t have any regrets. From the first day of practice in the summer, coach Masur has told us that we would be thrilled if we gave a 100% effort all around. It wouldn’t matter if we lost, as long as we have no regrets.”

“Playing 100% and losing still makes us feel like winners,” says Roger Rubinetti, as he compares the winning feeling to the Rutgers New Brunswick game even though MSC lost 2-0.

MSC is already at a slight disadvantage going into tomorrow’s game. The game is away at Muhlenberg and the expected attendance is around two thousand fans. “It’s difficult to beat a team on their turf,” says Masur. “It’s more difficult than playing in the first time contender in the

Billy Joel

By Jon Max Green

Billy Joel is more than just a piano player... more than just a performer... more than just a singer and even more than just a father married to one of the most beautiful and (judging by one of his new songs "That's Not Her Style") down to earth woman around; he is a songwriting "freak."

All of this makes it seem as though Billy Joel is numb. Time after time he comes up with amazing material. The way he presents his ideas is fantastic both musically and verbally. But what really makes it is his sumptuous style and acoustic piano.

His new album is called Storm Front. It's absolutely more than you expect. You've already heard the single from the album "We Didn't Start the Fire". But believe it or not, it's not the best song on the album, and that's saying a lot because it is a great song and a wonderful overview of history set to music. And by the way, when you do go out and buy the album, even before you listen to it, read it. Sit down and read the lyrics. Billy Joel is a black belt at making us think through his lyrics.

On his new album Storm Front Billy Joel has done it again and through its added pressure... can't wait for the next album! So if it's cool under pressure you're looking for, then you can stop looking because Joel's new album Storm Front is as strong as Popeye after a full can of spinach.

Young of Old

By Dan Grosman

For Neil Young, the 1980's was a decade of experimentation. No, not with drugs; those days are over for Young. No, he had been experimenting with a wide range of musical styles including synth-pop, rock-a-billy, country, and the blues.

However, in Freedom, Young has returned to his days of yesteryear. By giving us a mixture of piano and acoustic ballads intertwined with blistering electric guitar attacks, he shows us how he became the folk and rock icon that he is.

The album's first single, the driving rhythmic "Rockin' in the Free World," bookends the album, at the start with a live acoustic version and closing with a ferocious, distorted electric rocker.

The song shows us some of the unfortunate people living in the free world: the homeless, a young, un-wed female drug addict, and the unwanted, abandoned child of the addict. In the electric version, Young latches out at false, political promises: "We got a thousand points of light/For the homeless man/We got a kinder, gentler machine gun hand."

The emotion-filled ballads "Hangin' on a Limb," "Ways of Love," and the rock ballad "Too Far Gone" are reminiscent of Young's early 70's work. The captivating "No More" gives us a look at Young's other entrapment in the drug world.

For a combination of bittersweet lyrics and raw power, check out "Don't Cry," a tale of a broken relationship. The album also contains a burning version of "Freedom," Young's song that made him famous.

Freedom is essentially a melancholy album with Young showing us the misconception of the ideals of freedom and also showing that many free people are sometimes slaves to their own conscience. No matter how you interpret it though, most people will agree that Freedom is classic Neil Young. Welcome back, Neil.

Wes Craven, the filmmaker who has graced the cinema with such notorious films as A Nightmare On Elm Street and The Serpent and the Rainbow, has a talent for concocting interesting plot devices for his films. In Nightmare, the world was introduced to Freddy Krueger, the homicidal child killer who kills pert (and sexually active) teens by entering into their dreams and slashing them with a razor sharp claw, much to the dismay of their suburbanite parents. The film is built upon the premise that we all create our scariest monsters within our own minds and that by facing them in the daylight we can dispel them.

In his latest film, Shocker, Craven employs an equally unique premise: introducing his newest psychopath on the populse: an executed mass murderer—a television repairman by trade—enters into the electrical power current via the chair in which he is fried. Through the current flow, he is able to pass into the television sets of unsuspecting viewers, and from there, with a bizarre and hideous way of doing away with his victims. The premise here is good: the idea that television, that often unthought of device that quietly enters into our homes every day, may have consequences and a potential for destruction generally unanticipated by the majority of the population. If the premise is not lacking, what Craven does with it is.

The film quickly degenerates into a standard gore show, with all of the conventions traditionally associated with such films in tact including wildly overacting performances (particularly by the very miscast Michael Murphy as the detective trying to crack the case), grossly exaggerated dialogue, and an employment of cinematic technique so unrefined and blatant as to draw attention to itself and little else.

One interesting sequence in the film occurs when the weary detective follows the killer into the world of television to track him down, and ends up chasing him across a variety of programs highly indicative of television in the eighties: tacky game shows, sexually violent police dramas, and tawdry made for TV features. Unfortunately, this one sequence is hardly enough to salvage the film.

Craven employed a heavy metal soundtrack in the film, which quickly becomes insipid and repetitious. Like the film itself, it is not long before we tire of it.

An interesting premise is not enough in itself to build a good film on. This is one lesson that Craven, a former college professor, has yet to learn.

An Alarming Change

Change, The Alarm's fourth full-length album (excluding the first EP, The Stand) will undoubtedly leave the band standing exactly where they have been in the past, on the outskirts.

In the case of The Alarm, however, I'm not so sure that is a bad place to be or, unplanned. The Alarm is a band with an infamous dedicated following that is ever-growing. They have achieved this status without too much help from the critics.

On the up side, this leaves the band free from the laziness that accompanies commercial stardom. The drawback, however, is that there are many people unaware of The Alarm, leaving potential fans in the dark. However looked at, the trend of growing popularity and respect is sure to continue with the release of Change. This album will satisfy the die-hard members of The Alarm's army, while attracting new fans, really anyone who loves good music. Change contains all the elements that have become a trade-mark to the band. The name "Change" does not deal with the band itself but the world around them ("Change, change, I need a change, oh Lord!).

The songs are instantly likeable with hooks that do not tire after repeated playing but become stronger. The lyrics are thought-provoking.

They convey a unified message of a world that goes deeper than monetary needs. The fight of the blue-collar worker in a dead-end town is evident in "Devolution Workin' Man Blues" and "Hardland" ("For on these streets/That I spit upon/There's no money in my pocket/No soles on my shoes/ Ain't got no religion/But the workin' man blues").

They write of misunderstanding and stereotyping, ("Help me, help me, I'm trapped in a prison without prison bars"), to a change in values and respect for life in "Rivers To Cross" ("How many battles must we fight/Before we start a war?/ How many wounds will open/ Before the first blood falls").

One subject that has appeared more frequently in The Alarm lyrics, that started with the previous album, Eye of The Hurricane, is love. From being lost in love in "Love Don't Come Easy" and "Sold Me Down A River," ("Love's the drug that I live by/Give me a shot before I die") to the unbreakable and indescribable bond between two people ("I am devoted to you/Like the sea to the shore/Like the tree to the forest/I can't live without you/ A river can't live without water").

All these lyrics sound too involved, it is the rich and powerful music that gives the lyrics a subtle tone and lets you enjoy the songs. Dave Sharp is at his best on guitar, technically, and giving the album a fresh sound by varying his guitar approach on each song. Mike Peters strums the acoustic guitar while singing his cries for help and hope, and Eddie Macdonald on bass and Twist pounding the drums lay down a powerful base.

Perhaps the best thing about Change, however, is when listening, you can almost hear how incredible these songs will sound live. The Alarm are noted for their live shows and if you've never seen them, make a point, it is truly an incredible and uplifting event for anyone.

Although there are not as many "anthems" as on past releases, songs like "Black Sun" and "Change II" are sure to make the set list as electric as ever. Overall, this is an album for anyone, waiting to be listened to....and loved.

DON'T BUY IVORY!

Of 1.5 million elephants in Africa in 1979, fewer than 700,000 remain

Poachers armed with modern automatic rifles are massacring African elephants across the continent. Their tusks cruelly hacked off for sale in the International Illegal Market for Ivory.

The United States consumes one-third of the total exports of ivory from Hong Kong, which is the largest exporter of worked ivory in the world.

HELP SAVE THE AFRICAN ELEPHANTS FROM EXTINCTION BY REFUSING TO BUY ITEMS MADE WITH IVORY!

Behind every great team are the unsung heroes whose skill and determination are often appreciated by the coaches and athletes they attend; the team simply known as the athletic trainers.

The student trainers, under the direction of John Davis, are responsible for looking out for the health and well-being of the athletes of MSC. Their tasks range from basic taping, to being responsible for evaluating injuries, setting up programs for rehabilitation, and working with the latest technology and equipment of the expanding field of sports medicine.

“We spend more hours in the Athletic Department than anyone else,” said Davis. “The student trainers arrive before football camp in August, and work with the various teams and chill out until baseball which ends in June.”

The students involved with the training program are required to spend many hours in the classroom learning about the anatomy, nutrition, and prevention of injury methodology, but the real understanding comes from experience gained from attending the athletes.

“MSC is one of the best starting programs for athletic training because you have more hands-on experience,” said Teresa Marcinkiewicz, (better known as T. in the training room). Most schools make you wait two years before you touch anybody, here you begin to learn a lot on your own from working with the athletes every day.”

The trainers attend every football game and practice along with the team doctors, and have ensured that injuries to players like Dan Walsh and Paul Cioffi are treated correctly. “The trainers do a great job,” said head football coach Giancola. “We have a lot of confidence in their ability, and appreciate all the time and effort they give to the players before, during, and after the season.”

The varsity soccer coach, Dave Masur, whose team won the N.J.A.C. this past weekend, said that the athletic trainers are, “a necessity to any successful team, and MSC has one of the best.”

The training for the upcoming season is already underway. Meetings are scheduled for every Monday night at 9 p.m. in room 402 of the student center.
The Bottom Line

If you are a sports fan, you probably know who Mike Francesa is. For those of you who don’t, you do, daily a sports radio talk show on 66-WFAN. Both “Mad Dog” Russo and Francesa are opinionated, highly knowledgeable, and offer interesting insight on issues from the hopeless Jets to what went wrong with the Mets. People in the entertainment industry will tell you that making the jump from radio to television isn’t the easiest thing to do. Don’t take my word for it, look what happened to Marv Albert and Mike Downey. Anyway, CBS-TV coverage of college football on Saturdays features the Prudential College Football Halltime Report which keeps the college football fan up to date on scores and highlights from around the country. The halftime report features the team of Greg Gumbel and Francesa as Gumbel’s sidetnik. So far CBS’s move to bring Mike to television has been brilliant.

For example, three weeks ago, Gumbel had previewed the Notre Dame-Air Force game which started 10 minutes before the start of Game 2 of the World Series. Gumbel hinted that there might be a dilemma for the sports fans who couldn’t decide what to watch. Francesa disagreed saying that Notre Dame would have the game in hand by the time the first pitch of Game 2 would be thrown. Sure enough, 10 minutes before the start of the Series, Notre Dame was on top of Air Force 14-0 and the Series, Notre Dame was on top of Air Force 14-0 and the Series. You can’t be a dilemma for the sports fan who couldn’t decide what to watch.

Then Francesa pulled another trick out of his hat last Saturday. It was basically the same scenario as the two were discussing the Miami-Florida State match which would be featured later that night on ESPN. Miami was the number 2 team in the nation while Florida State was ranked 9th. Despite the Hurricane’s rank, Francesa boldly stated that Florida State would beat Miami. Miami won Florida State 24 Miami 10.

This is not to say that he is a soothsayer, the voice of God, or a handicapper with a correct prediction rate of over 90%. What it means is that Francesa knows sports. So next time you’re stuck in traffic or on the road somewhere and you are tired of hearing New Kids on the block, flip your radio to AM 66-WFAN from 3-7 p.m. and enjoy Mike and the Mad Dog. You never know, you may see sports in a different light!

urday night. A Week back has left Podduddy on the trainer’s column. Podduddy’s the key to getting a strong, complete, second line to play behind the Devils powerful #1 line of Sundstrom, MacLean, and Shanahan.

Ken Daneko is expected to miss the remainder of the week and weekend with a sprained arm.

The Muller, Broten, and Turgeon line has not been producing up to expectations. Muller is believed to be battling a virus for the last few weeks. Kirks’ too much of a winner to make excuses.

The Devils lost a tough game in Vancouver on Halloween by the score of 4-3. Brendan Shanahan scored two goals and gave the Devils a 3-2 lead in the second period. But the Canucks rallied late in the third and defeated the Devils. Burke played fantastic in goal, but lost the game. Although they lost the contest, their first road loss this season, they played a competitive game on the road. Not a bad start for the three game road trip, but still not a victory. Devils play next in Edmonton then complete the road trip in Calgary.

Wake up Kirk Muller, Sylvain Turgeon, and Slava Fetisov!
The MSC soccer team has done it! They managed to defeat Rutgers Newark on Friday night, making them the conference champs. “This was the biggest game of the season,” said Rob Chesney, “and we played as hard as we could.”

MSC thrashed their opponent by the score of 5-1. Charlie Smith opened the scoring for MSC after he received a pass from Bill Bustamante. Smith one timed the ball off of his right foot and into the net. “It was a real pretty goal to watch,” said captain Roger Rubinetti, “the goalie really didn’t have a chance because of the quickness of Smith with his nice hard, low shot.”

MSC’s next sequence of events were as follows: a penalty shot was awarded after a Rutgers player touched the ball with his hand inside of the goalie box; Rob Chesney was elected to shoot the ball, as he has done before; Chesney fired the ball to the right side of the cage and the goalie made a spectacular save to keep the game close. “A big save like that can bring a surge, Rutgers scored a goal of their own on a penalty kick. Mike Harrington who was in goal for MSC was beat on the play,” said Masur. “They really know when to pour it on,” said Masur, “and I’m confident with him.” Harrington is a freshman goalie who redeemed his missed penalty shot by blasting a direct kick of the cross bar and into the cage.

Finally, after MSC’s five goal surge, Rutgers scored a goal of their own on a penalty kick. Mike Harrington who was in we’re confident with him.”

MSC had one more regular season game on Tuesday against FDU Madison. In this particular game, Coach Masur avoided starting as many regular players as he could. “This was a great opportunity for what the rest of the guys can do,” said Masur. “They always come to practice and work real hard and Tuesday’s game was...”

MSC soccer team wins title

In one of the most exciting games of the year, Trenton State(TSC) quarterback, Darin Roberts, scored on a 10 yard run with no time remaining in the game to enable the Lions to tie MSC 31-31. TSC had the opportunity to go for the win with a two point conversion but elected to go for the tie and kicked the extra point.

The Red Hawks had taken a 7 point lead, with 1:07 to go in the game, when Ed Baffige hit Kelvin Lindsey from 6 yards out. Baffige then threw to Amod Field for the two point conversion and made the score 31-24 MSC.

MSC’s defense made several key mistakes in the game, the worst of which led to a Lion touchdown. With 27 seconds left in the first half, TSC was lined up for a field goal attempt and MSC jumped off-side making it 4th and inches. The Lions then decided to go for it and Darin Roberts threw an 11 yard TD pass to Billy Donoghue and gave TSC a 16-14 lead.

Ed Baffige and Amod Field then combined on a long pass that enabled Mike Attardi to kick a 37 yard field goal with 8 seconds left in the half and give the Red Hawks a 17-16 halftime lead.

TSC jumped on the scoreboard first in the second half when Darin Roberts threw a 41 yard touchdown pass to Anthony Johnson. The two point conversion was good and the Lions led 24-17.
