Putting their backs into it: MSC volunteer workers

By Michelle Keery
Staff Writer

Richard Lynde, MSC provost, and two unidentified members of an MSC Habitat for Humanity work crew remove charred rubble from the basement of "Habitat Newark," a gutted bank on South Orange Ave. The volunteer organization, which secures buildings and refurbishes them to turn them over to the homeless and the "working poor," is converting the 3-story structure for use by low-income families. Habitat has campus chapters throughout the world, including No. 50 at MSC, which received its charter last semester and completed a Paterson project several weeks ago. Workdays like this one, the year's first, alternate on Saturdays this term, including March 3. The first meeting of the Spring is scheduled for Tuesday, Feb. 13 at 7:30 p.m., in Student Center Rm. 402.

The N.J. State Federation of Teachers are setting a strike deadline for the end of February. The meeting planned for Friday, Feb. 2, will determine when the exact date of the strike will be. The possibility of a strike has been lingering since the NJSTF’s contract expired with the state last June.

The strike deadline was put off to await the outcome of the N.J. gubernatorial election. Although 70 MSC faculty members gathered with other union members, including the College Workers Union, on Sept. 22, the gathering was a protest to raise awareness of the union's dissatisfaction with the current contract.

By establishing a strike deadline for the end of February, the chancellor of higher education, Ted Hollander, and the state will have one month to reach an agreement with the NJSTF.

Dr. Catherine Becker, president of the Montclair State Federation of College Teachers, said that state college professors are grossly underpaid compared to public school teachers.

"According to a state report issued last spring, public school teachers make more money than professors with comparable credentials," said Becker.

"The Office of Employee Relations made a verbal offer last fall. Had this offer materialized, the union would have accepted it. However, this offer was never put in writing," she added.

Dr. Richard Lynde, V.P. of Academic Affairs, said that he is optimistic about the possibility of a strike. "We go through this every three years when the faculty contracts are up. A strike by the faculty is illegal; but in the event of a strike, classes will stay in operation as possible, but I believe this issue can be discussed at the bargaining table."

Last year, managerial and administrative positions received a pay raise based on merit. Since this pay raise is on a floating scale, it could range from a 0-11 percent pay increase, but very few people will fall into either of these extremes, making the average pay increase 6 percent for administrative personnel.

Two unions representing the operating and mechanical engineers settled with the state earlier this year. Lynde said that these rates of increase should set the format for negotiations with the MSFCT. Becker said she feels that the teachers have been backed into a corner where, "the teachers and students are being used as pawns."

"I am very pleased that Dr. Rosenblum will be joining my administrative team as MSC's first vice president for Institutional Advancement," said Reid. "His experience, energy and creativity, evidenced in the important role he has played in higher education in New Jersey, has more than prepared him to take the helm of MSC's advancement activities. I am confident that, under Dr. Rosenblum's leadership, MSC will further enhance its ability to serve the people of our state."

Rosenblum has published articles on external relations in various educational periodicals. He is vice president of the Trenton Kiwanis Club and a Lawrence Township appointee to the Ewing-Lawrence Sewerage Authority's board of directors.

Women's Center announces spring events

By Maryann Greise
Staff Writer

Dr. Sharon Olson of the psychology department, the new director of MSC's Women's Center, this week announced the center's schedule of events for the spring semester.

The center's first leaderless support group for women who are ending relationships will meet in room 420 on February 7, at noon. The group will continue to meet every Wednesday at the same time throughout the semester to deal with a variety of topics. Announcements and bulletins will be posted to publicize special programs. An open house will also be scheduled early in March.

Olson said that she is considering many other program ideas suggested by women, including weight stabilization, women and AIDS, alternate love styles and acquaintance rape.

The emphasis of the center will be on supporting women in their academic and emotional lives, according to Olson. The aim of the center is to provide a non-threatening, safe atmosphere for women of all ages to gather and discuss their lives, feelings and interests, and to support each other at all stages of their learning process of education and life, she added.

Olson also said that one of the resources available to students is a library containing over 500 books on all subjects pertaining to women. On presentation of a valid student I.D., a book may be taken out for three hours for copying purposes.

Olson said she envisions the center as "a place where our differences can be heard and respected, our similarities strengthened and supported, and both utilized to energize and create a choice-filled future for each individual woman in the decade of the nineties."

The Women's Center will be open at 9:30 a.m. every day. On Monday, Wednesday and Friday it will be open all day. On Tuesday and Thursday it will close at 1:00 p.m., but will reopen again at 4:30 p.m. and 3:30 p.m. respectively. It will remain open on Monday until 6:30 p.m. and Tuesday until 7:30 p.m. to accommodate evening students. The schedule will be posted on the doors of the center, which is located in rooms 420-422 of the Student Center. For more information or a referral, call 893-5114.

Insider trading in the SGA

By Virginia Delgado
Staff Writer

A member of the SGA legislature traded off votes last semester, it was revealed at the SGA meeting on Wednesday, January 24.

The legislator suggested to another party that if he or she voted in favor of a bill for the "ear box," a suggestion box in the Student Center, he would not vote for a certain charter that the other party was opposed to.

Eventually, the situation was brought to the attention of SGA president Mary Jane Linnehan, who felt obligated to veto the bill. "Every bill must be voted on for the content of the bill," she explained.

Linnehan added that she felt it would be unfair and demeaning for the SGA to pass a bill that was not fairly voted on.

The accused said, "That’s politics... it happens." He said that he felt that his actions were justified because lobbying is commonly seen in politics.

Nevertheless, the SGA president and other members felt that it was more important to uphold the reputation of the SGA than pass an unjust bill.

The future of the Rat was also discussed at the meeting. The legislature was asked to decide whether they support or oppose having alcohol served at the Rat. The SGA is in the process of forming a committee to research the Rat, which this semester is without a liquor license.

Some other announcements included the construction of the Clove Road steps leading to the bus stop, which will begin in February and will be completed by the summer. February 14 through the 21 will be National Condom week and MSC will actively participate with daytime activities and games.

MSC is also putting into effect a program to help people quit smoking. There will be a free training program for those who are interested in helping others quit. Those interested can contact the athletic department.

Students take a social STAND

By Jeanine Rybeck
Staff Writer

Starting this semester, MSC students will take a stand — starting their own organization for social awareness and aiming for new heights and directions of their own.

“The idea for STAND originated as a young Democrats club, but there wasn’t enough student interest,” says Rob Tomeo, president and one of the founders of the recently chartered Class II Organization. Other founders/officers include Tony Susco, Claire Mulcahy, Mary Jane Linnehan, Lora Westington, and Mike Walmley.

“Students wanted a social awareness club that wasn’t based solely on politics or the Democratic party,” explains the 22-year-old political science major.

The result — Students To-ward a New Direction — promises to deal not only with social issues and politics, but community service and action as well.

“We’re planning to visit a soup kitchen in either Newark or Paterson,” Tomeo says, adding that students would also get involved in volunteer work for the poor and elderly.

However, STAND’s main objective is to get MSC students to listen to what organizations such as Greenpeace, Amnesty International, and the National Organization for Women have to say.

In turn, Tomeo hopes that leaders in society, such as senators and congressmen, will listen to students like us — learning that they are interested and are a force.

STAND’s first project is a petition with the cooperation of the Conservation Club about the Exxon oil spill. Tomeo says the petition is to find out “how students feel about it, and show that MSC students care.”

“Maybe we’ll send it to local leaders,” he adds. While STAND consists mainly of liberal activists, Tomeo stresses that the organization welcomes members from both sides of the political spectrum, or even students who have no specific political preference.

“STAND is open to any student opinions or interests,” Tomeo says, and adds that the organization will attempt to reach students through discussion forums and guest speakers.

Students should join STAND, Tomeo feels, because society and politicians do take notice of the voices of student social awareness groups, and that STAND can bring more respect to the ideas of a student body and some of the “relatively inactive and unaware” MSC campus.

STAND’s first general membership meeting is scheduled for Feb. 8 at 3:30 in Room 112 of the Student Center Annex, where the petition will be discussed.

Perhaps with the right mix of action and awareness, soon people outside the MSC community will stand up and take notice.

Published professors share some of their “write” ideas

By Valerie Kalfrin
Features Editor

You’re reading a book or magazine when something strikes you as incredibly profound. Or incredibly stupid. Are you in awe of the author’s talent? Or do you think you could write better than that, if only you could get published?

Some MSC professors possess the same things.

Dr. Carole Stone and Robert Gordon of the English department and Dr. Barbara Chasin of the sociology department have had their work appear in a variety of publications, from newspapers to professional journals to fiction magazines. What’s their secret?

There is none.

He finds the most success freelancing for magazines and newspapers. His article on East Africa will be appearing in the Baltimore Sun.

In his creative writing course, Gordon suggests ways in which students can get published, such as consulting Writers’ Guide magazine for possible markets. However, he is quick to admit that there is no set formula to get your ideas in print.

“For fiction, you take your chances — send it to the editor, cross your fingers and hope. With articles, you propose an idea to the editor, then cross your fingers and hope,” he laughs.

Stone agrees. Known for her poetry, the 20-year faculty member had a short story entitled “Mother’s Day” appear in the Oct. 1989 issue of Midstream. Her poem “A Mother to a Daughter” appeared in Passages North about three years ago, and was recently chosen as one of the magazine’s ten best poems, to be published in an anthology this spring.

Stone finds most writers, like herself, take a personal experience and then build upon it, creating fiction out of a piece of reality.

“The problem is there aren’t enough markets, and there’s a lot of competition as well,” she says. However, young writers shouldn’t be discouraged, in spite of rejection.

“Just do it,” she says. “Lots of people have writer’s block.” In addition to perseverance, Stone feels observation is an valuable trait for a writer to have. “Most people go through life sort of blind,” she says. “Be a good observer — of people, nature, the things you see. Listen to people’s stories and conversations."

Although Chasin deals mostly in scholarly research (her review “Women and Political Conflict: Portraits of Struggle in Times of Crisis” appeared in Sociological Inquiry), she finds something else valuable for a writer to possess — an audience.

“Think about why you’re writing,” she says. “Pick topics that are meaningful or important to people’s lives.”

Chasin and her colleague of 18 years, Dr. Richard Franke of the anthropology department, recently co-authored Kerala: Radical Reform as Development in an Indian State, based on their research from 1986 to 1987.

“We want our work to make a difference,” she says, adding that young writers should look for an outlet where they can make a difference, too. "Use your mental energies and whatever talents and skills you have to improve our society," she says.

Regardless of their talents or outside interests, each gets a great deal of satisfaction teaching at MSC, though Chasin wishes that the state would subsidize higher education, so that students could realize their potential full time.

“Just that interaction back and forth keeps you going,” says Stone. “If I didn’t have that, I’d feel isolated.”

Perhaps that interaction could inspire stories, poems, or articles in the future.

The Question of Survival

The college-aged students of today are the inheritors of the twenty-first century. And the nineties is just starting to realize that the Earth is fragile and cannot be ignored the world we are about to become responsible for. In the past, people in their early twenties never had to ask themselves the serious questions that we are forced to face today: Is there going to be a world as we know it for our children to inherit? Will there be any clean air? Will we grow old on garbage dumps? Will there ever be clean water again? Will acid rain stop? Will the ozone layer finally give way? Will I survive? Will the world survive?

No generation has faced a greater responsibility, or a greater mess. Sometimes it only takes single words to send a chilling message: Extinction. Could this be the buzzword of the nineties?

We are responsible for taking up the slack of not just one, but many generations that have come before us. The world is just starting to realize that the Earth is fragile and cannot keep up her generous habit of giving, giving, giving to mankind. She has already begun to show serious, irreversible signs of wear and tear.

Since the onset of the Industrial Revolution, the human race has advanced further and faster than any other period in history. The past 150 years has shown great technological advances as well as environmental rape. Is this the tradeoff? Do we have to destroy our own planet in order to satisfy our insatiable desire for luxury and advanced knowledge?

The issues that were once scoffed at as being too leftist to pay any real attention to are now demanding the attention of every person on this planet. Religious preference, political stance, race, nationality, and personality mean very little to the person who sits alongside of every person on this planet. Religious preference, political stance, race, nationality, and personality mean very little to the person who sits alongside of

Since the onset of the Industrial Revolution, the human race has advanced further and faster than any other period in history. The past 150 years has shown great technological advances as well as environmental rape. Is this the tradeoff? Do we have to destroy our own planet in order to satisfy our insatiable desire for luxury and advanced knowledge?

The issues that were once scoffed at as being too leftist to pay any real attention to are now demanding the attention of every person on this planet. Religious preference, political stance, race, nationality, and personality mean very little to the person who sits alongside of every person on this planet. A Clove Road Fantasy

By David Maxson
Contributing Columnist

It seems that only in dreams or the movies can fulfilling fantasies be transformed into reality...

As I strolled casually along the sidewalk which winds around the front of the Clove Road apartments, I noticed a noise. I looked to my right, and saw something I never dreamed I'd actually see: a person running across a window on one of the first-floor apartments.

I've heard about Clove Road apartments getting burglarized and witnessed the upheaval and publicity caused by this undesirable activity, and I was angry. This was just the moment I'd been waiting for.

Flashes of egotistical, heroic glory flashed before my eyes. I acted. I turned towards the perpetrator, and yelled, "Hey! What do you think you're doing?" His reply was to turn tail and run, only slightly slower than the speed of light. I gave a courageous chase but gave up when I realized that catching jackrabbits in full-flight is one of the things man does in vain. I spent the next couple of minutes thinking about how I really would have handled it. I decided that if I had to legally bring this wrongdoer to justice I would have had to make him unconscious ("murdered" him).

But then, I calmed and began to think a bit more realistically. I imagined what it would be like to be a chief of police. I had decided not to exercise my chosen method of apprehension, and I let him flee.

I felt good about intervening in the noble name of justice, for the apartments in fact, not burgled. But somehow my heroic fantasy was not completely fulfilled. I would've loved to clobber the vagrant!

This leads me to the whole point of this editorial, which is that you cannot really blame anyone involved in the Clove Road apartments for not wholeheartedly involved in situations like this. Especially when the instinctive course of prevention in the angry person's mind would make them subject to prosecution!

The only thing you can do in such circumstances is to get to the nearest phone and call the police. But by the time the police arrive, the would-be thief would certainly be long gone.

But all kidding aside, my main concern in writing this, is of course, not to dissuade you from reporting to the police any unsavory activity. Rather I want you to say that we all have to be more aware, more alert, and to do all we can to make the Clove Road apartments not only at Clove Road but anywhere on campus.

Everybody should pitch in: students, faculty, staff...anyone involved in MSC life in any way.

A couple of suggestions: Instead of Campus Police stationing an officer outside the bookstore to ensure the security of overpriced text-books, how about putting this officer to better use by stationing him anonymously around the clock at Clove Road, in order to attempt to ensure the safety of "underpriced" students?

Also, it just popped into my head that since a great deal of the burglaries are committed on first-floor, easy-entry apartments, how about bars or some type of preventive metal mesh on the bottom floor windows only? Or more importantly along the back of the apartments?

Linnehan predicts change for the campus

WELCOME BACK! As we sit here on February 1, 1990, we begin a new semester, a new year and a new decade that will close out a millennium.

We also await the new leadership of Governor Jim Florio. Much change potentially awaits us all in the near future. The same can be said for our community here at MSC. In the near future, you will see great expansion of the college in both facilities and academia. An extended library, a very large new classroom building and a potential parking garage are to appear soon.

The Shared Governance plan for an All-College Senate will be decided upon shortly. The upcoming years' state budget will be proposed and appropriated in the upcoming months; a decision that will greatly affect how much you will pay for your education. On a more local level, the college budget and your Student Government Association budget will soon be negotiated upon for their appropriations.

Now some of these issues may seem unimportant to you, but if you look closely at them, you will see that each of these major issues will affect you and your succeeding students in a direct way.

The direction of our college and the accessibility of it to its students is currently at stake. While it is of utmost importance for MSC to continue its standards of excellence and establish itself as a prominent educational institution, this cannot be achieved at the expense of its students. An affordable, quality education should be MSC's top priority. We, as students, are this college's main consumer and revenue generator, therefore we should have substantial input in the decisions that will affect us.

As we begin this semester, I urge you to keep informed of campus issues and to question anything you are concerned with. As the largest constituency on campus, we have a large voice if we are united.

Please... get involved with a campus organization, write an editorial in this newspaper or at least read the Montclarion weekly. Only through knowledge of the issues, can students take a stand.

Paterson Feasts on culture

By Barclay Minton
Arts Editor

What do you have when images of tortured faces, rows of illuminated phones, distorted masses of brass and wire, bluesy renditions of "Darlin' You Send Me," and a shaggy mutt named Moondog come together?

The airy gallery is set in an open second floor loft in the heart of downtown Paterson. The meek sign indicating the entrance is hardly synonymous with the dramatic draping of fabrics and masks that link the steep stairwell leading up to the phenomenal collection inside.

The curator of the show, James Andrew Brown, describes the exhibit as "a cross-cultural ideology with each artist having a strong sense of materials and personal statements." He succeeded in achieving a "physical" approach.

Barbara Sandberg, the gallery owner, resides on the first floor. When this professor of theatre at William Paterson College first opened the gallery in October, she already had intentions of creating a show specifically dealing with contemporary issues. The next two shows will concentrate on women in society and then the environment.

A resident of Paterson for eight years, Sandberg shares the same goal as a local man — a culturally aware city. Sandy Shevack is opening a combination day care/community center that preaches that when blacks, whites and Hispanics come together insanity doesn't have to and shouldn't exist.

Shevack excitedly explains, "If this could be a first step towards developing a movement that will challenge the status quo in Paterson, great! A show that simply exhibits art is good enough, but a challenge is better."

A noticeable favorite was the unique depiction of modern technology in a piece called Telephone Number 1,2,3 by Willie Cole. The piece displayed a row of black, yellow and red phones dismantled in a remarkably personified fashion. The blinking lights seemed to be in tune with the entire show, uncannily keeping time with "Satan".

"Satan" was the one man band (who strongly resembles Grady from Redd Foxx's Sanford and Son...) that performed a mix of jazz and blues on his set of two small amps, hi-hats (cymbals), and an electric guitar.

Other more soothing paints depict African life with images of dance involving an intertwining of human and animal figures in an organic setting.

Still, some works struck out at the viewer such as Cole's metal sculpture, Gun Mobile.

Newark artist Manuel Acevedo, who describes his photographs as an effort to "interpret the breath and rage of the urban experience...to record the streets, the people, the poverty and the hope," wowed the crowd with an eerie piece titled, Installation: The Door.

Lethal Weapon II Rated R
The latest Mel Gibson shoot-em-up did it all this summer; it wowed the fans, made megabucks for the studios, and even the critics liked it! Mighty Mel once again co-stars with Danny Glover. This time, Riggs and Murtaugh are assigned to protect an annoying accountant who laundered millions of dollars for a South African "mafia" who's out to kill him. Weapon II also fills in the gaps about Martin Riggs' late wife, including how she died. A couch potato must see!

NJ's alternative to Broadway:

A Fine and Private Play

By Richard E. Buckley, Jr. and Barclay Minton

Theater-goers in the metropolitan area know how fortunate they are with their proximity to Broadway. New York, New York, if you can make it there you can make it anywhere...well, the American Stage Company is trying a different approach to fame by establishing itself outside the city.

The four-year-old ASC has made it a policy to premiere shows rather than compete with original Broadway productions. The ASC premiered Jerry Sterner's Other People's Money, soon to be made into a movie, possibly starring Dustin Hoffman.

The ASC's latest enterprise is the World Premiere of A Fine and Private Place, based on the book by Peter S. Beagle (The Last Unicorn). The story and lyrics were adapted to the stage by Erik Haagensen with music by Richard Isen.

This musical is set at the end of summer in a North Bronx cemetery. Jonathan Rebeck, played by David Green, has lived for 20 years in a mausoleum. Rebeck has a gift, communication with the dead. He helps the ghosts to accept their deaths.

Rebeck is befriended by a speaking raven, played by Gabriel Barre. The sharp-tongued raven, who steals food from local Teaneck restaurants such as Dunkin Donuts for Rebeck, knows what everyone thinks, and provides insight to the characters as well as comic relief.

Gertrude Klapper (Mary Ellen Ashley), a widow of a year and two months, who has not been able to adjust to her late husband's death and visits the cemetery daily, happens upon this strange society.

The story centers around the ghosts of brash Michael Morgan (Joe Barrett) and simple Laura Durand (Sophie Hayden). Michael, a struggling writer, commits suicide in frustration of not achieving success as a writer and as a husband. However, upon reaching his new status, Michael changes his mind and has a new zest for "life."

Laura, on the other hand, dies of a fatal illness. She has accepted her death and is ready to move on. Rebeck must help Michael come to terms with his life and to go to heaven or else spend his days in eternal purgatory.

Michael and Laura soon fall in love and plan to spend eternity together, something totally new to Rebeck. Michael's suicide note is found and both his accused wife and the Catholic Church decide to move the body to a new cemetery that permits suicide.

Rebeck has also fallen for Gertrude, but by pushing her away so that he can remain in the cemetery as the mender of lost souls, Gertrude decides to get on with her life with or without Rebeck. Rather than spoil the ending, we'll leave it at that.

The set design and lighting are excellent under the direction of Paul Sorvino (Sorvino played David Addison's father on Moonlighting). The set was a combination of a Monet landscape and Sesame Street architecture on LSD. Sloping headstones and jutting memorials provide an excellent playground upon which the extremely acrobatic raven alights and perches and looms.

The character of the raven was phenomenally performed down to the subshow of the death of a worm.

Ashley's portrayal of an aging Jewish widow is both poignant and often hysterical with all of her energy culminating in "Stop Kidding Yourself" and "No One Ever Knows," both sung with full, wavering Yiddish accent. Laura is at times too meek and uninteresting and the only possible deduction for Michael's falling in love is desperation.

The American Stage Company is located at Fairleigh Dickinson University's Teaneck campus. A Fine and Private Place will run through Feb. 18. Performances are from Wednesday-Saturday at 8 p.m. Sunday: 2:30 p.m./for more information call 692-7744.

Avent. Seton Hall is also a lot stronger than most expected, with the addition of freshman Terry Dehere. Dehere, who played high school ball for St. Anthony's of Jersey City, is a sure candidate for the All-Big East freshmen team and has matured quickly in his position. Carlisimo couldn’t be happier, as he knows a return to the NCAA tournament is within his sights.

The Big East tournament starts up in 5 weeks, and right now who will win it is anyone’s guess. The way the Big East shapes up this year, it is a very distinct possibility that you could see a repeat of the 1984 tournament. That year the Big East offered 3 teams in the Final Four. Buckle up for March Madness, it will be here before you know it.

The Super Bowl was a super bore.

Pitchers and catchers report to spring training in less than three weeks. That leaves college basketball alone in the spotlight. Sure, there is NBA basketball and NHL hockey, which does satisfy the winter sports appetite to an extent, but nothing can duplicate the excitement and electricity felt when watching a heated rivalry between two teams.

The college basketball season is a rollercoaster ride filled with many highs and lows that makes many people wish they had attended a school with Division I hoops.

Fortunately, thank God, for those who need a taste of the big time. The perennial basketball conference known as the Big East is right in our backyard.

Since its humble beginnings in 1979, Big East teams have captured 2 national titles while being represented another four times in national title games.

This year, Jim Boheim's 7th ranked Syracuse Orangemen and John Thompson's 6th ranked Georgetown Hoyas are the frontrunners for the "Beast of the East."

The two teams met five days ago at the Capital Centre with the Orangemen winning 95-76. The Hoyas (16-2) were dropped 3rd coming into the contest, while Syracuse was the 11th ranked team in the nation.

The Orangemen (15-3), led by All-American Derrick Coleman, forward Billy Owens, and Steve Thompson, should make a considerable jump in the AP poll, as they went on to beat a 1 point decision to the Redmen there last Saturday, you have to have wished you won them all.

The Garden has not been friendly to Syracuse, as they dropped a 1 point decision to the Redmen there last season. However, the victory will push them up considerably in the rankings.

Even though Georgetown lost soundly to Syracuse last Saturday, you have to have little faith in any game activity if you think Georgetown is dead and buried. The Hoyas' front line of Alonzo Mourning, and Dikembe Mutombo are menacing towers of power.

Each is capable of rebounding, scoring, blocking shots, and dominating a game. Of course, this was not the case against Syracuse, but you can win them all.

In addition to their front court game, Georgetown's floor general Mark Tilmon has contributed a great deal to Georgetown's quest for another final four appearance. How well he performs during pressure situations can be the difference between playing in this year's championship game and watching it from the stands.

Jamaica, Queens is the home of the 18th ranked St. John's Redmen (17-5). Whether at Alumni Hall, Madison Square Garden, or in the unfriendly confines of an opposing team, Louie Carnesecca's team cannot be taken lightly. The Redmen feature a powerful, young front court of Jayson Williams, Robert Werrdan, and Malik Sealy.

The backcourt can also get the job done, creating scoring opportunities for the big men as well as themselves. The tandem of Jason Buchannan and Boo Harvey, have come up with solid performances in some Big East battles, but the two have been inconsistent.

The Connecticut Huskies are yet another team in the conference currently nestled in the nation's top 20. Fourth year coach Jon Calhoun is delighted with his team's 19-3 showing thus far.

The Huskies, who have been playing in a brand new arena for less than a week, are being paced by Phil Gamble, senior guard Tate George, and junior forward Murray Williams. Before this season started, UConn was not expected to finish any higher than the bottom third of the conference.

However, victories against Georgetown and St. Johns at home have shown those who follow the Big East that the Huskies refuse to back down from the conference big boys. Then there is Seton Hall, the team from Jersey that no one knew anything about until last March. Head coach P.J. Carlinsono was not expected to have a competitive team this season, as he lost last season starting five. Despite this fact, the Pirates cannot and are not being taken lightly.

The Pirates have been playing well and holding their own thus far with Franz Voigig, Michael Cooper, and Anthony Gamble, senior guard Tate George, and junior forward Murray Williams. Before this season started, UConn was not expected to finish any higher than the bottom third of the conference.

Ski Team Results

The MSC men's ski team finished second out of a 12 team field this past week. Individually, Harvey Bierman placed first and Jeff Conover ninth. The women's team came in fifth place out of nine teams and were led by Maureen Harrington, who finished fourth. She was followed by sixth place finisher, Amy Rakowski.

Awards Given

MSC senior football, track, and now basketball standout Amod Field, and now graduated wrestler Karl Monaco, each received "Special Achievement" awards at the 54th Annual New Jersey Sports Writers Association's banquet on January 21, held at the Pines Manor in Edison, N.J. Congratulations! Defensively Carolyn Savio swiped yet another 13 boards and Wilson contributed 8.

The next game was played Saturday at Trenton State College. MSC was victorious once again, defeating TSC by a 44-31 score.

Red Hawk center Carolyn Savio completely dominated, scoring a game high 21 points. However, more incredibly, she pulled down an eye-opening 27 rebounds. The TSC starting team could only manage a total of 26. Case closed.

To complete the hat trick, the Red Hawks disposed of Kean College by a commanding 68-51 score. This was the same Kean College team that was introduced to Red Hawk Rowdy Night on Tuesday at Panzer Gym. It was a wild one indeed. The fans came out in a big way for this clash and they were treated to a Red Hawk feast.

After an evenly played first half, the Red Hawks showed why they are on the verge of something special this season, as they came out on top and went on a 44-11 run in the second half. The Red Hawks disAvowed and finished with a 14-11 score, MSC then went on a 20-10 run keyed by the team's fine defense. Two clutch 3-point baskets by Cathy Madalone completed the scoring with a 31-24 halftime advantage.

In the second half, the Red Hawks showed why they are on the verge of something special this season, as they came out ready to play on both ends of the floor.

WOMEN CONTINUE TO ROLL

The women's team won their three games this past week. Their first victim was Glassboro State College. In the 65-43 victory MSC featured a well-balanced attack as three Hawks scored in double figures. Kim Wilson had 21 points. Guards Cathy Madalone and Tracy Moffat netted 14 points apiece to aid the cause.

Defensively Carolyn Savio completely dominated, scoring a game high 21 points. However, more incredibly, she pulled down an eye-opening 27 rebounds. The TSC starting team could only manage a total of 26. Case closed.

Carolyn Savio scored six points in the first five minutes, aided by the passing of Tracy Moffat as MSC built a 39-28 lead. Moffat played well all-around as she had 15 points and 9 rebounds to go with 6 assists.

Kim Wilson gave her usual fine performance with an 18 point; 7 rebound effort. She said, "This was a team win, everyone played good defense and took the pressure off me."

Play defense MSC did as they held Kean to just 51 points, well under their norm of 69.2. As coach Jeffrey put it, "We had to play 40 minutes of intense defense." Coach Jeffrey was also pleased with the offense. She said, "Offensively we were attacking and controlling the tempo. This was our best team effort this year and came at a perfect time with the playoffs coming and just 5 games left."

MSC is now atop the NJAC with a 12-1 record. They are 16-4 overall. They play Rutgers-Camden at home on Saturday at 2:00 p.m.

The Red Hawk wrestling team is off to a 4-9 record this year. Armando Nardone has a dual meet record of 8-1-1, with a dual win over 126 and 134 weight classes. Scott Vega, wrestling at 190, is 9-2-2 in dual matches this year.

MSC was led by Amod Field, as he netted 19 points. Ernie Harris had 10 rebounds to go with 6 assists.

The second loss came against Trenton State, ranked 16th nationally in Division III. This was the same team that is 16-4 and fighting the Hawks for sole possession of the New Jersey Athletic Conference. Both teams were 11-1 in the NJAC before the game.
