Board of Trustees limits students input at meeting

Students protest rate hikes at trustees meeting

By Lee Ann Malfetti

Several students protested the proposed tuition and fee increases at the Board of Trustees meeting last Thursday.

"The purpose of attending a state college is to obtain a quality public education at a reasonable price," said James Cotter, a sophomore, speaking on behalf of the 15 to 20 students present at the meeting.

Dr. Robert A. Altman, board chairperson, also granted Mary Jane Linnehan, president of the Student Government Association, two minutes to speak.

"The college exists to give students a higher education and the SGA is vehemently opposed to an increase," Linnehan said.

Ten students requested permission in advance to speak at the public session but were denied.

Linnehan implored the board to hear some of the concerned students. Altman allowed two minutes for students to speak on behalf of the entire student body.

Angel Musucco, a junior English major, said that four voices from the 13,000 student enrollment is ridiculous.

A drastic reduction in state funds appropriated in the Governor's office leaves MSC with a $5,575,000 shortfall, said Dr. Robert A. Altman, the newly-appointed vice president for administration and finance, recommended an $8 per credit hour increase for in-state undergraduates which directly affect the following areas:

General service fees—$2.50
Freshman Summer Orientation—$2
Application fee—$5
GRooms (including Clove Road Apartments)—$150
Reid had suggested a few ideas to lower the increase amount.

University requirements may change

MSC to become MSU?

By Mark MacDonald
Correspondent

MSC could become MSU by December.

Both the Board of Trustees and the Student Government Association passed resolutions last week supporting proposed amendments to Department of Higher Education regulations regarding the definition and characteristics of a university.

MSC is excluded under the present code because it does not have doctoral programs or sufficient research facilities. The amendments, all of which MSC meets or exceeds, will be voted on by the Board of Higher Education on April 27.

If they pass, the administration intends "to touch base with its constituencies, and upon favorable recommendation to ask the Board of Trustees to consider university status," Rosenblum said.

When asked whether other state colleges would pursue university status, Rosenblum said, "I am not worried about the other state schools."

Commenting on Rosenblum's apparent enthusiasm for the change, Dr. Grover Furr, assistant professor of English, said, "Does he think we're stupid? Changing the name to a university will not raise the quality of education. More resources will."

Furr said the change would require no additional improvements in education, and would only be another development in the continuing cutback in education.

"This is a smoke screen. It's a way of creating something from nothing."

Furr cited Fairleigh Dickinson University's declining academic standards as an example of placing ostensible improvements above the need for additional educational resources.

Rosenblum said the change to university status would be perfunctory because MSC has "a full breadth of courses, sufficient enrollment, and extensive graduate programs."

He said MSC is larger than many universities in the United States, citing Drew and Princeton as examples. However, when asked whether other state colleges would pursue university status, Rosenblum said, "I am not worried about the other state schools."

SGA President Mary Jane Linnehan speaks before the Board of Trustees last Thursday to protest tuition and fee increases at MSC. Linnehan and only two other students were allowed to express concerns at the meeting. When the meeting ended, protesters blocked exits and two students had to be bodily removed from the meeting by campus police.

Senior Committee of the SGA
GIS exam may become a graduation requirement

By Andrey Regan
Staff Writer

Students across New Jersey, who took the SAT's to get into college, may soon be required to pass a new test to get out. Sooner or later, "The General Intellectual Skills Assessment exam, a test of "critical thinking, problem solving, and writing," will be a graduation requirement for all students in the state, Dr. Stephen Kowalski of MSC's science department said last week.

Requiring mostly essay answers, it will be taken by all sophomores starting whenever enough state funds are available.

According to a state College Outcomes Evaluation Program bulletin, the test was originally devised as a means of evaluating skills not of individuals, but of groups of students. Now, however, if the state budget allows, the state Department of Higher Education (DHE) plans that those who fail it will have to retake it until they pass, even if that means delaying their graduation.

Volunteer students from MSC and other two to four year schools throughout New Jersey have already taken the exam, and volunteer faculty members have spent the last few weekends grading them.

Kowalski, one of those faculty members, describes the test as a "means of measuring whether college grads are really educated," adding that "educating" might not be the correct word but rather "the ability to put together information to draw conclusions."

The difference is that this test will not measure what one is majoring in, nor test for specific facts, dates, or knowledge. Rather, it concentrates on what Kowalski calls "one's ability to think rationally."

A bulletin published by the DHE calls it "critical thinking, problem solving and writing."

The bulletin says a student might be required to "read a myth, rewrite it to show its interpretation of it, and examine the ways two poems and a painting interpret the myth."

Theoretically, a business major should be able to pass this, just a psychology major should be provided with enough information to pass a test on the breeding grounds of lemon sharks, the DHE says.

These tests will then be scored by two different faculty scorers who will be looking for "content, expression and the ability to write," as explained in the bulletin.

Educators have asked whether journalism students have an unfair advantage.

"Yes, and they should," said Kowalski. "They can get their ideas across better. However, we don't see any way around that right now. Students should have enough English background and should theoretically have taken English Composition here at the college."

So far, reactions to the GIS tests have been mixed, according to the several volunteers who were granted advanced registration for taking them. Nicole Vara, an English major, thinks, "The test doesn't measure what one has really learned. The test is designed to make sure that students should come equipped with these skills already." Arlene Forman, an art major, agreed, adding that "the test is a graduation requirement and so intelligent enough to make it through college, this test shouldn't hold them from graduating."

MaryAnn Butkowski, another volunteer, said the test was fair because "enough information was given to answer the questions and do well. By the time you graduate you should have enough common sense to answer questions such as these tests call for."

Although the final results of the roughly 200 MSC volunteers are not yet tabulated, Kowalski said, "most seemed to score higher than average."

Is the test then too easy? And not a means to raise the level of education in New Jersey as originally intended? "No, the thinking process is still stimulated," answers Kowalski, who adds, "a doctorate (degree) doesn't prove you can think. It helps clear the brain of a B.S. will prove they can."

He doesn't know when these tests will be instituted. However, he says DHE continues to fund the program, and that the test may take the place of English 101, or college composition, as "the only way to prepare for this exam."

Wall Street reality hits MSC students

As Finance Club visits Kidder Peabody

By Oscar Lopez
Correspondent

The reality of Wall Street was felt by the members of the Finance Club on April 6 when they visited the investment banking firm of Kidder Peabody in Manhattan, NY.

The Finance Club was the first college club to ever visit Kidder Peabody. "They made everything special, it was not a standard visit," said Paul Mamplini, president of the club.

With the help of club treasurer, Kristine Roome, who is also a part-time employee of Kidder Peabody's New Jersey subsidiary, the club was able to organize a trip that made an impact on those who were there.

The club members were met by Mark Cambisios, vice president of training, who guided them through the realities of job hunting and job security in the investment world.

"What the field is in the professional world is not reflected by courser classes," said Mamplini. The department does not offer an internship that allows the application of course studies. "Trips like these expose the student to options available to them that they may not see in a text, and the experience of being on a trading floor helps to enhance the desire of continuing with a major in finance."

Research is a major aspect of finance, which is really not thought of by most finance students, but the visit to Kidder Peabody gave us a taste of finance an option of interest.

Cambisios addressed the issue of hiring: if two applicants were equally qualified, the recruiter would lean towards hiring the applicant from the more reputable school. The opportunity for the next year's sophomores may find themselves sharpening their writing skills, which is the only way to prepare for this exam.

Wall Street reality was hit, and many of the students are rewarding.

In observance of Holocaust memorial week (week of April 23), there will be a film depicting how the Jews attempted to fight the Nazis when they had the chance. The film will show on April 25 from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. in room 1 of the non-print area of Sprague Library.

Lack of MSC student participation hinders campus and graduate reputation

By Tony Kraft

Lack of student participation in academic clubs hinders the reputation of MSC and its graduate studies, said officers of academic clubs.

Paul Mampilly, president of the Finance Club, said his club organized a trip two weeks ago to a New York investment firm that only five students attended. He said 25 said they were interested.

"The firm had expected at least 15 students, had prepared a presentation, and had even set up a microphone," said Mampilly, adding, "Things like this make the school look bad. That firm now has a negative impression of Montclair State students."

The clubs are wary of inviting outside speakers to the campus because of a historical low turn out, according to Mampilly. "These speakers drive an hour to get here and prepare material, to have only two or three people show up," he said.

The Math Club recently had a speaker give a presentation about the actuarial field and had an audience of 12. Janet Scourzo, president of the Math Club, said she considered this a great turn out. "We're happy if we get more than five," she said.

Lack of participation is a common complaint of club officers. Hank Kobik, vice president of Phi Alpha Theta, the national history honor society, said his organization plans to have some nationally-known people come to speak next fall. "I have a few things up my sleeve to get students to attend the lectures," he said.

One of the causes of low participation, the officers agreed, is the difficulty in scheduling meetings and events. "We understand that students have to work and that most have to commute, and we are willing to work with that," said Kobik, who also said he would be happy if the members showed a continued interest by dropping a line now and then.

Kobik is also president of the History Club, which, after taking a year to obtain a Class II charter with the SGA, fuzled out from lack of interest.

Many students join the clubs because it is good resume material. "Having been involved in the Math Club, has already helped me when I've looked for summer jobs," said Scourzo.

But the resume aspect is sometimes the only reason students join initially, only to drop out from lack of time or interest. "We even use the resume factor to recruit members," said Mampilly.

Faculty support is important to the success of the clubs, the officers said. Having the faculty announce club meetings and events to their classes has helped increase student attendance.

One club officer said that a faculty member can also help by using his or her clout to get things done that would take a student months to achieve because of red tape.

The low participation is not an indication of low benefits of being a club member. "With more participation, it could be a lot of fun, both academically and socially," said Sharon Bonick, president of the English Club.

Mampilly pointed out another benefit of joining an academic club, saying, "I have met so many finance professionals through organizing events, that I already have a decent list of people to send resumes to after I graduate."

All of the club officers said they felt frustrated over the lack of interest. Bonick said she sometimes has to nag people to get their help. "It's frustrating. I want the club to be all it can be, and I feel guilty sometimes that I can't do more," said Bonick.

Students looking for entry level jobs in the competitive industry of advertising should prepare themselves now for what is probably the toughest market available to college students upon graduation, said Stanley Turk, President of Turk Group/ABP, Inc.

Turk, a veteran of the advertising industry for 26 years and president of his own agency, which specializes in new product introduction and development, spoke to marketing and communication studies majors Wednesday about the job opportunities available now in the advertising industry.

"Getting a job in advertising is probably the toughest it's ever been because there are lots of people with limited experience looking for jobs who are having difficulty finding a position with an ad agency," said Turk.

The reason Turk gave for the competitive nature of entry level positions in the advertising job market is that agencies have given up all of their training programs and are reluctant to hire new employees without prior experience. Therefore, without a "title" to show some kind of knowledge and experience in the advertising business, getting an entry level job as an assistant account executive is very difficult to do, he said.

According to Turk, secretaries today in the agency have a better chance at getting their first job, and can make much more than assistant account executives. With a starting salary of 18,000 dollars and below, the potential growth for account executives after three to four years experience can grow to 27,000 to 30,000 dollars a year. Wages for agencies in New York City's larger advertising firms can be 35,000 dollars a year.

Turk said that in getting a first job in advertising, a student is really going to have to "dig" and do some groundwork before graduation. One way he advised to do that is to go to the library and get a hold of the advertising agency "red book", which lists all the major advertising agencies in the area and in New York City.

"What you want to do is speak with as many people as possible, both in department offices as you can and ask if there are any entry level positions and if there are, how can you go about getting them," he said.

Turk said that a student's best bet is to target the bigger ad agencies, because they are more likely to hire a student right out of college. An aid for students in marketing themselves is some special talent that will give that student a little bit of an edge over another entry level candidate. One way to do this is through the writing of a really good resume.

"Your resume has got to be something that is absolute key in getting a job today," said Turk.

Turk spoke strongly when he explained that the advertising industry has "buzz words" of the trade, and the more you use in your resume the closer you get to the job. The first, second or third job.

"All students," he urged, "must ask themselves 'What does this position require in this job?' and as an assistant account executive in the advertising industry, I can tell you a company wants strong organizational skills."

Turk told his audience that as entry level employees, companies want you to be able to come in, interface with clientele and when the account supervisor says, "Where is that project?" you can tell him, "It's here and here's what it's doing."

In his closing statements, Turk said that getting a job title or opportunity in any position is most important to agencies hiring on an entry level position. By researching companies and writing solid resumes that reflect their experiences and special abilities, college graduates will be able to find those positions available in the advertising industry.

In 1967, he assumed account supervisor duties on the Whitehall Division of American Home Products. Under his marketing and positioning direction, Tic Tac Mints was transformed from a concept to a $40 million brand, fostering a new $80 million category: mini-minis.

Eleven years prior to joining Kornheuser & Calene, he was Senior Vice President and Partner at Janoff & Dreyer Advertising Agency.

This event was sponsored by Career Services, in response to The Advertising Educational Foundation (AEF) ambassador program.

A hiring freeze and the use of the emergency reserve, which lessen the increase to 12 percent. Tamara Burke, alternate student trustee, said that a slight increase spread out gradually over time is expected, but the board should come up with other ways to offset the increase amount.

The main goal of the protesters was to mobilize as many students as possible before the final vote in an effort to maintain a tuition increase freeze, said Angel Mosucco, a spokesperson for Students Toward A New Direction (STAND) and Coalition for People's Rights. The Board of Trustees will meet on May 10 to vote on the tuition increase.

Righteous Gentiles shows life in Nazi Europe

By Michele Messina
Correspondent

With Holocaust Memorial Week set to begin next Monday, Righteous Gentiles was presented last night showing family lifestyles under Nazi occupied Europe. Christian families raising Jewish children to protect them from the Nazi concentration camps, was one theme of this year's commemoration of the Holocaust presented by the Jewish Student Union, Alpha Phi Omega, and the Newman Community of MSC.

The circumstances concerning the millions who helped countless Jews survive the Holocaust was represented by a two-person play called "Righteous Gentiles," performed at 8:00 p.m. last night in Ballroom C of the Student Center. Righteous Gentiles was written by Isaac Dostis and his wife Diana Sunrise. Dostis is a Greek Jew whose family survived the Holocaust. He is co-founder and director of Act One Theatre Productions in Leonia, NJ. Sunrise is the daughter of a Christian minister, and co-founder and teacher at the Acting Center in Leonia.

Posters displaying details of Nazi-occupied Europe during the Holocaust aligned the walls of Ballroom C.

The commemoration started with a period of silence and prayer, followed by 16 separate accounts of poetry, letters, and speeches, that explained different situations where Christians risked their own lives to protect members of the Jewish religion in their community. The accounts were written by the individuals who were responsible for helping the survivors, and the survivors themselves. Each account was characterized in the 50 minute play by Dostis and Sunrise.

The play was written to pay homage to the good Samaritans who helped the survivors. "If you hid a Jew, it was immediate death," said Dostis.

Act One Productions has existed for nine years, and Dostis and Sunrise have been performing Righteous Gentiles for the last four years throughout the United States.

Dostis has performed and directed a variety of productions regionally and off-Broadway in New York City.

After the play, Dostis and Sunrise spoke as themselves, about their experiences over the last four years with the play, followed by a brief question and answer period. The commemoration ended with a small prayer service, and a Jewish prayer song of faith and freedom.

Forum focuses on racism

Anti-semitic and other racist attitudes were the hot topic in public forum on human relations Tuesday.

Kops Lounge, Russ Hall was the scene of the event created to help "design and coordinate a human relation program for the college which will foster a sensitive environment for all campus constituents," Dr. Saundra, MSC professor and chairperson of the Council on Human Relations, said.

COHR, now in its first year, was formed to create a more open-minded campus environment. "You don't have to wait for situations to explode in your backyard before you can address them," Saundra said.

Dr. Alan Oppenheim, professor in the school of business and quantitative methods, department of finance for 17 years, said when he went to his statistics class last week he found his name, a picture and the words, "Alan Oppenheim is a Jew bastard," scribbled on the blackboard. "This is an act of extreme hatred," said Oppenheim.

Stone Hall was evacuated on April 17 at 1:50 a.m. due to an anonymous caller phoning in a bomb threat.

Webster Hall was evacuated on April 18 at 1:26 a.m. due to an anonymous caller phoning in a bomb threat.

A 1984 Ford Thunderbird valued at $3000 was stolen from lot #30 sometime between April 10 and 12.

A Jeep that was previously stolen from Wayne was discovered completely stripped in lot #23 at 11:00 p.m.

Dave Buoncuore, an MSC freshman, said, "It's good to know there's an awareness as to what's going on."

Jillian Gregory, a senior psychology major, said, "There is a definite racial problem. It's sad that teachers don't encourage all students to speak out."

Everyone was given five minutes to speak and no one person was allowed to speak more than once on the same issue. Other topics discussed included: the handicapped and the disabled, required classes, parking, racism and more racially diverse classes to make students more aware at MSC.

Dr. Saundra, who said she was pleased with the turnout of the forum, said, "This will help to coordinate human relation programs and to make sure information is distributed."

If MSC becomes a university, do you think costs will be raised? How do you feel about this?

by Peter S. Rebovich Jr.

"I think MSC is just perfect as a state school. Our tuition right now is appropriate, but if it becomes a university tuition will increase."

B. Tchalikian

"If MSC becomes a university tuition will increase. On the other hand MSC will become more prestigious with a university status."

Cyrrenne Bolt
freshman/chemistry

"Fees would definitely have to increase to maintain a university. It will not happen soon because MSC does not have the qualities of becoming a university."

Wally Acuna
senior/speech pathology

"Of course they will. But if everything improves with these increases, I feel it will be worth it. MSC would become more accredited among other schools."

Looking back

by Steve Sukala

Ten years ago this week, the Student Center mall was again a place of meeting and controversy, and stories that week and five years ago from the Montclarion showed how the more things change, the more they stay the same...

April 17, 1980

- “Minorities rally in mall”
  A rally was held by about 25 blacks in front of the Student Center, demanding the hiring of more minority faculty members.

- “Fire alarms sound off”
  False alarms and short circuits in the alarm systems plagued Stone Hall and Life Hall this past week. Stone Hall residents experienced the same problems that Freeman residents had had the week before due to oversensitive smoke detectors.

April 18, 1985

- “Students camp out for housing”
  Approximately 150 students camped outside Blanton Hall for two days to get housing for the following semester. Some things never change.

- “Freeman vandals caught”
  Six MSC students were caught by campus police for causing an estimated $6000 worth of damage to the building. In other campus news, five cars were either stolen or broken into during the week.

- “A landslide for the Rat”
  An SGA referendum passed (834-354) to keep the Rat as is (with alcohol) instead of trying new ventures.

Sex, movies, and rock and roll

A preview to Spring Week 1990

By Chris Rogers
Staff Writer

Well, spring has arrived, and so has MSC’s Spring Week. Better watch for falling rocks, for starters.

For seven full days, the College Life Union Board (CLUB) treats the students of MSC to activities that both entertain and inform.

It gives students a chance to relax just before finals begin, have a great time, and enjoy the Spring weather, all in a responsible, careful, and (most importantly) not quiet way.

This year’s theme is “Can you feel it?!” and members of the Spring week committee are dedicated to making this season’s activities the best ever, from the movies and the music to the weekend-long carnival.

The week kicks off on Monday, April 23, with “Falling rock Zone,” an improvisational comedy group that will be appearing in the Rathskeller at 8 p.m. Admission is free.

And let your mouth lead you to some money. That night there will also be a Lip Sync Competition, co-sponsored by the Inter-Fraternity Council, at 8 p.m. in the Student Center Ballrooms. The prizes for the contest are $200, $150, and $100 cash!

Dr. Roger Libby will be on hand on Thursday, April 26th, for his humorous lecture on sex. The lecture begins in the Student Center Ballrooms at 2 p.m. and admission is free.

Spring Week and its Carnival are activities that are entirely student-run. If you have any questions about Spring Week or any of its activities contact organizers Lisa Gardener or Rich Steffens in the CLUB office at 893-5232.

Earth Day Week at MSC — Awareness is growing

Prospective “parents” gathered in the Student Center quad yesterday to adopt a tree as part of the week-long Earth Day celebration at MSC. Lynn Miller (far left) and other Conservation Club members handed out approximately 200 white pine seedlings from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. to students and faculty. Parents received their baby tree, complete with soil in a paper cup, after signing an agreement promising to care for it until it grew strong.

The college itself also became a tree parent — the Conservation Club donated a six-foot white pine tree to the campus at noon. It now stands on the College Hall lawn.
Honor and Omnicron Nu

By Ann Daly
Staff Writer

These days, women can get married, have children, and go back to work. They can also go back to college, and get inducted into a national Greek organization. Take Pat Williamson, for example. A wife and mother of two and a junior at MSC, she's only one of the inductees of Omnicron Nu, the national home economics honor society.

Last fall, the society inducted 46 members consisting of faculty, alumni, and students. On Sunday, April 29, it hopes to add the 32 hopefuls — both students and student mothers alike — to its search for excellence in writing and research. Founded in 1912 at Michigan State University as an honor society, Omnicron Nu promotes graduate study and research. It also offers good exposure which can be a big help as you work towards your career, "says Williamson, who adds her hard work of juggling college and a family has paid off.

Senior Barbara Beck, 39, can sympathize. A full-time honor student, substitute teacher, wife, and mother, she demonstrates leadership abilities through serving as secretary and editor for the Beta Theta chapter, qualities which are important when being evaluated for membership.

"I'm honored to be invited into the society, and pleased that my work is being recognized," she says.

The society boasts 50 college chapters and six alumni chapters, a total of 66,000 members nationwide. Sandra Perrott, the faculty advisor in the home economics department, became a member of the Mu chapter of Omnicron Nu when she was an undergraduate at Cornell University.

"This is a terrific opportunity for students who have excelled academically to be recognized. Being a part of this society enables them to apply for scholarships, fellowships, awards, and to have their works published," Perrott says.

Pat Lenart, a senior and another inductee, finds another benefit to belonging to the organization.

"As a home economics major, this is an opportunity to have a base-line with people who share the same interests as I do," she says.

And Sunday's induction is the immediate interest. Anyone interested in becoming a member of the Beta Theta chapter should contact Perrott or Beck in the home economics department in Finley Hall, room 110.

To the Campus Community:

The tuition proposal for the 1990-91 academic year has been proposed at a 15% increase. This means that for all undergraduate students, the tuition in-state will rise $8 a credit and $12 for an out-of-state credit. For graduate students, the in-state tuition is rising $16 and $20 for out-of-state.

If this tuition increase is passed through the Board of Trustees on May 10, it will be the tenth straight year of tuition increase in New Jersey. This must be stopped if MSC and the NJ state college system is to follow its mission—that is one of providing crucial, accessible and affordable quality education.

If this increase is put through, the accessibility of higher education at MSC will be sincerely threatened. It has been brought to our attention that if this tuition increase is enacted, students will have to vacate their residence life halls, take a seriously lightened course load, become heavily employed off campus to pay for tuition, drop out of organizations, and over all, lose the vital opportunity for a true college experience. This will be a grave violation to the students and faculty.

If we are to prevent a tuition hike and preserve the mission of our state college, we must unite and fight it together. We are requesting to all students and faculty that you send us your concerns about tuition in writing to the SGA office, room 103 of the Student Center by April 27. We will forward them to our administration and Trenton.

In addition, an open meeting will be formed on Monday, April 23 at 1 p.m. in the Student Center cafeteria. The SGA, Inc. has passed a unanimous resolution calling for a tuition freeze and for the active participation of students in reaching our goal.

We implore all students, faculty, support staff, administration and the Board of Trustees to come out, unite and work together in combatting this most unjust, unreasonable and threatening tuition proposal. Please call 893-4202 for questions and to show your support and help students protect students.

SGA, Inc.
Lack of competition hurts

At just about this time every year, we at the Montclarion write our main editorial endorsing certain candidates competing in the race for SGA Executive Board positions. This year, our approach to the elections is somewhat different: we aren't endorsing any of the candidates running for SGA Executive Board positions. This year our approach is more because every candidate running for an SGA Executive Board position is uncontested. The fact that the positions are uncontested reflects a serious problem on our campus: apathy. The five executive board positions available - President, Vice-President, Treasurer, Secretary and Student Alternate to the Board of Trustees - are the five most influential student positions on campus, and only five people have stepped forward to offer their services to the students of the campus. Doesn't anyone else think they are capable of handling the responsibility? Out of the thousands of students on this campus only five believe they are qualified to run for these positions? That is a very bad reflection on all of us.

What ever happened to the competitive edge? Competition in an election allows the voters to make a responsible choice. If there is no competition, the choice has already been made for the constituency. Competition is a necessary element of the electoral process. Without it, there is just a few selecting the powerful. That is not the way of democracy; that is the way of elitism. The political apathy on our campus has reached rock bottom. How many times have SGA petitions been passed around a classroom only to be signed by students offhandedly? How often are candidates questioned by their "supporters"? Do these petition signers even know what or who they are signing for?

The funny thing is that after such wide-spread apathy, students can complain about the situation of student life on campus. Everyone has an opportunity to make their mind or make their concerns the concerns of the SGA. But why aren't more people taking advantage of the power of the student voice?

The elections will come and go this year, probably relatively unnoticed. With radio shows that I wanted on the air, and some starting revelations about the management that followed.

However, at the same Board of Trustees meeting, a $900,000 new phone system was approved! Tuition has continually increased for the past 9 years. Students argued that the administration should be struggling with the state to obtain better funding - not asking the students for more money!
R.A. supports student who attempted suicide

To the Editor:

I would like to address the letter written by Kathy DeGraaff which was printed in the April 5th Montclarion.

I was a Resident Assistant for a year and a half. I was also Kathy's RA for one year, and I was one of the "caring people" who was close to Kathy when the night of her attempted suicide.

I have always considered Kathy to be a bright and extremely intelligent person, but in her letter, Kathy wrote one of the most irrational statements that I have ever heard.

First of all, would the inclusion in our Student Handbook of how Residence Life deals with attempted suicides have actually changed my mind about taking her life? I highly doubt it. From what I have learned about the subject of suicide, if a person decides to kill him or herself, or she is not likely to be influenced by some policy in a residence hall. I have found it very disturbing that Kathy's only desire is to return to Freedom Hall and "fortify" her "problems." The desire to forget her problems seems to be what makes her an unhealthy and unstable person. She has chosen to deny her true emotions and wishes us to ignore what her actions of that Saturday night really mean.

It seems that the real problem is that Kathy is an unhappy person and the situation is to offer her help so she can discover why she feels the way she does and how she can improve her emotional state. I can only imagine that therapy can be a long and difficult process which has no guarantees.

As an RA, I was taught that people who attempt suicide once may try it again if not given professional help. It should be remembered that Resident Assistants are the people who are closest to the residents in all. They are also only para-professionals and should not be required to be responsible for a person who needs professional guidance.

Directors are professionals, but they are responsible for an entire residence hall and can not give their full and undivided attention to someone like Kathy. In my opinion, an emotional person should not live in a community where they can not offer her help so she can discover why she feels the way she does and how she can improve her emotional state. I can only imagine that therapy can be a long and difficult process which has no guarantees.

I am also concerned about the statement that she "does not need (our) special attention or concern." Isn't special attention exactly what someone who attempts suicide is asking for? I who was there understood such an action to be the last and most desperate cry for help.

Kathy does need and deserve our attention as well as professional help. It is extremely unfortunate that Kathy refuses to pay attention to herself and address the real problems in her life. It is almost impossible to help someone who refuses to admit that she has problems which she can't deal with by herself.

Cartoon charged with harmful sexism

To the Editor:

The March 15th editorial page of the Montclarion carried an unsigned cartoon which was disturbing on several matters but was particularly hostile toward women. The dual panel cartoon showed "Recyclable Trash" on the left which included a mock copy of the Montclarion, a soda can and a bottle. The right panel labeled "Non-recyclable Trash" contained a photo of a woman only a few people identified as Jane Fonda.

Several people, female and male students, staff and faculty, raised objections about this item. When I learned that the picture was of Jane Fonda, I questioned whether or not the cartoon could be construed as political. But, if the intention was to express disapproval of Fonda's politics, I think they should show her face, her name, or a clothed photo? Why issue a generic insult to women? There is equivocal validity in the accompanying editorial text that the point is to draw attention to recycling. That is a laudable intention and clearly, the cartoon worked for some people.

Nevertheless, it is another example of the misuse and abuse of women's bodies for the purpose of propaganda and, no matter how praiseworthy the cause, women will not be used as props to make a point.

Or, the cartoon might have been a reference to the aging process and Fonda's recent breast enhancement surgery. While it is true that people can't be recycled and our bodies sometimes betray us as we get older, we do not become trash of any kind when we age. To imply such is ageism.

It seems that the cartoon there has been a recent increase in overt acts and words of sexism, racism, homophobia, and classism on the MSC campus. These create an environment which is inhospitable, uncivil, and debilitating. It is possible that both the Montclarion staff and its faculty advisors remain unaware of words and actions that may be humiliating to others. In fact, this is the reason that letters previously written to the editor about this have gone unpublished. In the hope that education and understanding will bring about change, some members of the Women's Studies faculty are ready to meet with any group which would like to discuss these concerns.

Yearbook mess could have been prevented

To the Editor:

We would like to address two articles that appeared in the Montclarion in early 1989 and were republished in the 1989 La Campana.

The first article entitled, "Yearbook staff faces censorship and review after cartoon controversy," was in response to an administrative backlash toward the yearbook resulting from a controversial cartoon published in the 1988 La Campana (1st edition).

In these articles, students spoke out against the possible creation of a review board. This board, to include one faculty member, would review all materials before publication. Needless to say, the staff and many students were against the creation of such a body.

However, most seem to forget that the suggestion of the board was in direct response to an irresponsible act on the part of the La Campana staff. A measure that was being put into place to try and prevent this type of thing from occurring again. La Campana managed to escape the first incident with a slap on the wrist.

So, how does the yearbook respond? Their next yearbook, 1989 edition, has copies of the articles mentioned above.

What are they trying to prove by republishing these articles? We are still trying to find a rational answer to this question. However, there is one question that they did manage to answer for us, and that is the question of responsibility. The yearbook staff has managed to reinforce the notion that they are not capable of handling their own publication in a responsible, unsupervised manner. Supervision, in the form of a review board, may be the best thing for them at this point and time.

We see no logical reason for these articles to appear in the 1989 yearbook. It shows a lack of respect for a faculty member, and the institution as a whole. Coach Blanton does not deserve this blatant disrespect and attack against his character and ability. You made your point, as to your feeling regarding his appointment, when you published the cartoon in 1988. However, at this time, that is irrelevant. John Blanton is the head track and field coach at MSC. Like it or not, So, enough is enough already.

The fact is, Coach Blanton and his staff are doing an outstanding job with the track program. In place of these articles, there should be a piece featuring the track team, and congratulating Coach Blanton, and staff, for a job well done. It is so ironic that you managed to have these articles republished, but could not find the room to include a piece featuring the track team. The only major sport excluded from the yearbook.

It is time for the yearbook staff, especially those in decision making positions, to grow up and show that you can make some responsible decisions. We have had enough of your childish games, and insensitivity towards members of the campus community. Stop crying about censorship if you refuse to move forward and learn from your past mistakes.

When you start acting like the responsible publication that you are supposed to be, maybe then you can once again be treated as such. Until that time comes, as long as you continue to act in a childish, irresponsible manner, you will be treated in that manner. Children in need of supervision.

Freedom of the press, or freedom from censorship does not come without responsibility.

A new COHR being formed for campus

To the Editor:

Recognizing the importance of the campus milieu to the educational process, the Council on Human Relations (COHR) was constituted by the College administration to foster a sensitive environment for all members of our campus community. Our sense is that this case, distract from important contributions made to the college community.

The goal of COHR is simple: to foster an environment where all feel free to express themselves and to pursue their work and study in an atmosphere which appreciates their value as members of our campus community. Our sense is that this goal is achievable, and we trust its validity is recognized by all members of the MSC community.

The most amazing statement in the piece comes in the twelfth paragraph. He says that when my letter was seen in the paper, he did not see "too" many people expressing a "great" deal of favor upon the letter. I talked to DJ's at the station as well as students, and they love it. Who did he talk to? He then says that there is no "fear" at WMSC radio. Well, I'm afraid that he's wrong.

He concludes by saying that he is confident that the DJ's will understand his reasoning sooner or later, and he assures them that WMSC is "a wonderful place to work for (sic)." Supposedly, then, the people whom I know who quit the station while they still had their original stomach lining missed the boat. I wonder how long the bunch of us was supposed to wait.

After this infamous third paragraph, he implies that going to the WMSC management and asking for an oldies show is like going to a country-western station and asking for a Heavy Metal program. Nonsense! The station plays jazz, classical, and other types of music already, during their weekend time slots, so his analogy is totally convoluted. And, in any event, if a significant portion of the student body would enjoy hearing Balinese gong music, it would be the management's duty to give it a chance.

He then goes on to talk of sacrifice for the betterment of the station. How about "sacrificing" two hours of dead air time to try out a show that might land many new listeners?

He then asks if I was trying to join WMSC just to have my own show, or to experience the thrill of working at a "real live radio station." The answer: I was trying to join to get my own show, and to make a contribution to the musical growth of the student body. If I wanted thrills, I'd join the circus. Does this mean that I have no talent, ego and am seeking gratification, as he goes on to imply? You be the judge.

He goes on to discuss the management in the eighth paragraph, by introducing us to General Manager Jim Williams. Jim, he says, "is finishing his fourth term," (fourth appears in all capital letters), something, he says, "that no other organization can match." Ronald Reagan was re-elected, too. So what? The issue here is objectivity, not longevity.

He continues to say that, at the station, "we live and learn from each other's lifestyles and tastes", as if he still worked there. Had he been at the station recently, he might be more able to see that this is clearly not the case.

Two centuries of minority art

By Steve Sukala  Assistant Arts Editor

The guest for the Art Forum Lecture Series on April 12 was David Driskell, an art historian and a professor of art at the University of Maryland. Driskell focused on the last two centuries of African-American art through the course of his lecture.

Driskell has acted as the curator for several African-American exhibitions, including a national showing called "The Harlem Renaissance." He most recently was co-curator of American exhibitions, including "Against the Odds," which just completed its run at the Newark Museum.

Driskell started off his lecture by relating the experience he had lecturing at the National Gallery of Art in Washington, D.C. He was surprised at the bare minimum of attention given to the works of women, Hispanics, Native Americans, and especially African-Americans.

Most nationally shown art is essentially "European centered," and white males dominate the field," said Driskell. He stressed that this was "not an attack on white males, but it is just that we (minority groups) have been sleeping...instead of demanding our place."

The problems of minority artists in the past, and especially those of African-Americans, were addressed. Driskell mentioned that up until relatively recently, minorities were discriminated against in exhibition showings and rewards, and even into the present, they face difficulties.

"Their artistry...survived despite the attempts to destroy it (by the slave owners)"

"Race does not always have a lot to do with it (artistic expression), but it can have a part." Driskell said that through the history of African-Americans, their art "has been" the core of life, but it does not always have to be linked with Africa, though some African themes may be incorporated.

To illustrate the fact that race does not necessarily exert an overriding influence on an artist's style, Driskell gave several examples of African-Americans who created art in the typical American style, without any discernable African influences. "Art can cross cultural and racial lines."

African-Americans were credited with "bringing many traditions to the New World" through the years that they were brought to the U.S. as slaves. "Their artistry...survived despite the attempts to destroy it (by the slave owners)."

A method of providing cultural and social events to enliven the Weekend Student's college experience is the yearly Campus Music and Masquerade. Each event a few weeks ago at the Palladium in New York. She invited them to come and perform at the Memorial Auditorium. Mariachi and Tango numbers are also included in the evening.

Included this year is the popular Lambada, a Brazilian dance. President of the Weekend Student Association, Astrid Chica, said she discovered the Lambada dance: the Cumbia and the Mapale. This year, both are being performed by "de Columbia con Sabor," a company established in 1989.

Richard Barone, a former member of The Bongos, has just released Primal Dream, a very interesting blend of pop-rock and South American rhythms. Barone's musical experience began with The Bongos in the early '80s, a pop group that "helped define the alternative music concept and market in the 1980's," or at least that is what the press release said.

Personally, I had never heard of The Bongos or Richard Barone before I picked up the album, but I have to say that I was pleasantly surprised by Primal Dream. Barone's style seems to be a mix of several different types of music, with a strong orientation to pop.

Barone worked with two separate producers for this record to reflect the different styles on the album. Some of the tracks are more distinctly pop-rock songs, while most of the others are set in a different groove. Primal Dream is, on the whole, an upbeat album, with an occasional melancholy song to provide a change of speed.

The best tracks on the album are probably "Where the Truth Lies" and "Before You Were Born," though there are many other excellent songs throughout the album. Barone has a good songwriting ability, and it shows in Primal Dream. Even the songs on the album that are not outstanding are at least coherent, unlike some artists who slaughter the English language for the sake of a mediocre song.

"Something Happens," "I Only Took What I Needed," and "Mr. Used-To-Be" are some of the other exceptional cuts from Primal Dream, but what is nice about Barone's style is that his songs actually do not all sound the same. Even though they are set in the same basic mold, he has the artistic talent to vary his song catalog enough so that the album does not become a boring rehash of the first three songs.

Barone also has included some songs with a very different sound to them, such as "Native Tongue" and "To the Pure." They reflect some of the music he explored during his travels in different locations throughout the world. His impression of South American musical styles creeps its way into these songs.

"Roman Circus," the last track on the album, has an eerie yet strangely upbeat quality, which is an appropriate ending for Primal Dream.

All things considered, Primal Dream is an album where the artist's talent, combined with a skilled back-up band and a diverse musical background, produces a high quality recording. I may not have heard of Richard Barone more than two weeks ago, but I know who he is now, and I wonder what I have been missing.

HOLLYWOOD BUZZ

The entire cast of a Girl’s Guide to Chaos

By Audrey Regan
Staff Writer

Guys-ever wonder what girl-talk sounds like? Do you care? If not, don’t go to see A Girl’s Guide to Chaos playing April 18-21 in cafeteria B of the Student Center, because that’s what it’s about.

Written by Cynthia Heimel, a New York City playwright, this is about girls in the same city who bitch about why they don’t have boyfriends, and why girls “don’t know who they are anymore.”

After the play you won’t want to know who girls are anymore, either.

For instance, Rita (Amy Figuerreo), Cleo (Adrienne Bresnahan), and Cynthia (Sandra Spillman), all friends, explain how women went from doing things “for our men” to “kissing their uniformed men goodbye” in the 40’s, to “we hate men” feminists in the 70’s.

Now it’s the 80’s and there’s this “great boyfriend crunch.” And these three women, single and horny, complain, with hands on hips, through the play uttering such sarcasms as “what did Dr. Spock tell our mom’s in the 1950’s that made all our men retarded?”

Retarded? O.K., so men are retarded, but they do “cry late at night.” The two token men in the play, one named Jake (Peter Mercurio), the other just “Man” (Brian C. Vanderhoof), have comebacks of their own. (Oh no, not another battle of the sexes...)

“What have one major flaw; they’re manipulative and greedy,” (Isn’t that two flaws?) says ex-reporter token man #1 with that dumbfounded, sex-starved look on his face.

The see-saw teeters on...but seriously, where is that dumbfounded sex-starved look on his face? Cynthia would say “when in doubt, act like Myrna Loy...” But Lisa Devins, the director, said “women face confusion because there is so much we can do, so many choices and no role models!” That’s confusing, and so is the play.

One minute Cynthia is desperately single, then she’s living with someone for three years, or was that her old boyfriend from three years ago? Does she love him or just lust him?..or was that her old boyfriend from three years ago? Does she just lust for any man? I’m confused, but ah! A ray of hope from this spinning sexism-Lurene, played by Laura Pavlick. She’s a babbling, bubble-headed waitress, whose N.Y. philosophy is to “never listen to anybody!” Listen to her because she steals the show. So does the hot dog Rita (also a superb job acting) uses as a male prop, if you know what I mean...

Seriously, where is the guide to chaos?

In fact, the only sense this play will appeal to is your sense of hunger. The actors continually shove pretzels, cold pizza, cheese doodles, and orees down their throats which overpower the entire play. Cleo’s great revelation “nothing is predictable. We just drive around blind corners and see what’s there.” I left hungry.
The pain of Silent Cacophonies

By Candy Cordes
Staff Writer

Silent Cacophonies. Sometimes in life we encounter certain words that elude definitions. Often, we use these words to describe something without knowing exactly what the Oxford Dictionary would have to say. But we use those words anyway because we have a picture painted in our mind of what it all means.

Sometimes that impression of meaning stamped in our head condenses a paragraph of thoughts and feelings into one word that will be uttered later on our lips. But before words have meaning, something must first be impressed upon us that will cause us to remember them later. It's possible to gather this word experience in many ways.

In this case, the play at hand is the impression maker, and silent cacophonies is the statement that embodies two hours worth of defining.

After I saw Silent Cacophonies, those words came to life for me. The play takes place in a hospital in St. Louis, Missouri and is a fictional account of Tennessee Williams' hospitalization for drug and alcohol dependency.

His interaction with other characters is often downright funny and terribly sad. But, upon this show some things become really apparent. For instance, struggle is universal to humankind, but often it goes unheard or unnoticed. Furthermore, the pain we suffer shapes us, but also serves as an invisible link between all people.

"We're all a little crazy!"

This is Silent Cacophonies. The individual pain experienced by the famous writer, or the mental patient, or the cleaning lady, or the nurse in charge isn't all that different from each other. As playwright Sam Gerber put it aptly, "We're all a little crazy!"

However, what we do with our pain makes all the difference. In the play there are six characters who deal with their pain in six unique ways. It becomes so apparent to the spectator that these people, who are so terribly human, deal with their pain so ineffectively!

Director Diane Holub should be immensely proud of this production! With minimal lights, no set and props, the actors are virtually on their own. Watching this show caused me to wonder how distracting a set and props can be. In Silent Cacophonies all eyes were riveted on the wonderful actors, enabling the audience to practically intake the dialogue.

Congratulations to Antoinette Doherty for the fantastic performance of the mental patient! Newcomer Alexis Oliphant superbly mimes her way through the role of the cleaning lady.

The soon to be alumni of the BFA Acting program, Cheri Fiora and Jennifer Biddle lend polished performances that are both touching and funny as the head nurse and actress, respectively. Kier Andrews and George Abboud are both convincing in their sensitive roles of Tom Williams and Thrace.

Hats off to alumnus playwright Sam Gerber! The sensitivity brought to stage in his first written play ever causes one to hope many more will follow. See Silent Cacophonies, and let it make an impression that will be part of you forever.

Softball plays at .500 level

By Tom Reid

The MSC Softball Team continued to struggle in their quest to put together another consistent winning streak, finishing the week with a 3-3 record.

In the first game, MSC out-hit Muhlenberg 4-2, but stranded 6 runners on base. Johanna Tolomeo pitched well for the Hawks, but was the victim of poor support as MSC lost 2-0.

In the second game, Muhlenberg squeaked out a 5-4 win as errors were the main factor in the loss. MSC's Lois Fyfe allowed only 2 hits but the 5 errors the Hawks committed led to a sweep. Donna Brooks and Kim led MSC with 2 hits each and Kelly Dockx had 2 RBIs.

In game two, MSC lost 5-2 and Judy DeMarco had 2 hits for the Hawks.

In NJAC action, the Hawks split with 19th ranked Glassboro State, by scores of 5-4 and 7-3.

In game one, errors once again played a prominent role in the outcome. Johanna Tolomeo pitched well, but was the victim of 3 unearned runs. Kim Wilson and Kelly Dockx each had 2 hits and Lois Fyfe had 2 RBIs, as MSC lost a close one, 5-4.

In game two, MSC pounded out 15 hits to defeat the Profs 7-3. Every hitter in the lineup had at least one hit. Kelly Dockx and Kim Gardinier had 3 hits each and Kim Wilson drove in 3 runs. Lois Fyfe gained the win.

MSC is now 15-10 overall and 3-1 in the NJAC. The team has 6 players hitting .300 or better. Kelly Dockx leads the team with a .395 average and 20 RBIs. Kim Wilson and Donna Brooks are hitting .375 and .366 respectively. Johanna Tolomeo leads with 10 wins.

The Bottom Line

On Sunday, the 28 NFL General Managers will be salivating over the enormous pool of talent at this year's draft. With commissioner Paul Tagliabue allowing underclassmen to enter the draft for the first time in league history, almost 30 top underclassmen decided to take the jump from school books to big bucks. It's possible that almost half of the first-round selections will be underclassmen, as many as seven being selected in the top ten picks.

On the local scene, the Giants have the 24th pick in the draft and need to go after a running back. Even though they have Ottis Anderson, Joe Morris, Dave Meggett, Maurice Carthon, and Lewis Tillman, the Giants will look to get Indiana's Anthony Thompson if he is available. Both Anderson and Morris are old, Carthon is primarily a blocker, Meggett fumbles frequently, and Tillman is not ready to carry the ball 20 times a game, prompting a need for a running back. If the Giants were to get Thompson, it could lead to something even more interesting. Disgruntled and retired Colt running back Eric Dickerson has expressed interest in playing with a selected list of teams including the Giants. Perhaps the Giants could package together a deal with the Colts for Dickerson. The deal could include a future first-round draft choice, two conditional draft choices, a defensive starter, and Thompson, who played his college football not far from the Hoosier Dome.

The Jets have the second pick in the draft and you know that there is a group of cynical football fans that would like to see the Jets blow their selection like so many other first rounders during the Walton era. The names of previous first-round selections include such immortals like Dave Cadigan, Mike Haight, and Roger Vick. Rumors have Penn State running back Blair Thomas headed to New York. Thomas is a powerful back (5'10 1/2", 195 lbs.) who will make an impact in the NFL...if he plays somewhere else. It would be tough for Thomas or any other running back to try to gain any kind of yardage with the Jets offensive line. Thomas can expect to spend many hours in the training room and whirlpool next to Ken O'Brien if the Jets select him. Instead of getting someone that will get punished, get someone that will do the punishing. The man is Keith McCants. McCants, a linebacker from Alabama, was expected to be selected as the top pick in the draft, but looked terrible in the scouting combine, coming to the workouts out of shape and overweight. His stock dropped considerably, but McCants could be the cornerstone of the Jets defense, if Dick Steinberg decides to pull the trigger.

The fact that McCants was out of shape at the combines means nothing. All the Jets have to do is wave the cash in front of McCants and load up his contract with some incentive clauses, then McCants will be ready to shine in the Big Apple.

Consistency eludes Red Hawk baseball

With just three weeks left to go in the season, Norm Schoening's Red Hawk baseball team is 10-10-1 this season and is currently in first place in the NJAC North Division with a 5-2 conference record.

This year Coach Schoening had some big holes to fill that were left by John Deutsch and Wayne Masters who are currently playing in the minors. However, assistant baseball coach Rich O'Connor said that the loss of senior lefthander Brian Devins with an injured arm has not helped the pitching staff. "Brian was a nine game winner last year and both Brian and Masters accounted for 19 of last season's wins. However, we feel we have enough talent in the program to be successful once again," O'Connor said.

Without Devins, the Red Hawk starting rotation consists of James Dunphy, Cory Poat, and Vinny Henrich, and Drew Ryan. Ryan, a hard throwing right-hander also plays first base and DH on his nonthrowing days, which O'Connor points out isn't easy. "Drew is going through the adjustment of one day being a starting pitcher and throwing nine innings to playing 1st base the next day and swinging the bat five times. The adjustment for Drew is physically demanding," O'Connor said.

O'Connor also pointed out that they are getting fine performances from middle reliever Mark Tomoskovic who leads the staff with a 2.92 ERA.

The Red Hawks also have seen offensive punch from Elliot Morgan (.333), Mike Bradon (.315), Ron Moore (.313) and Tim North (.260), who was last week's NJAC player of the week.

According to O'Connor, the team's .500 record is indicative of lack of consistency in all phases of the game. "We are looking to play that way everyday."

The Red Hawks play their next four games on the road starting today with William Paterson, Friday at Jersey City State, and a twin-bill against Glassboro. The next home game is Tuesday against Dominican College at 3:15 p.m.

Rider 6 MSC 4

The Red Hawks trip to Lawrenceville was not a memorable one. Rider scored 5 runs in the third inning off MSC pitcher Ralph Doerfler. Doerfler took the loss pitching six innings, giving up six hits, striking out one, and walking a batter. Two of Rider's five runs in the third were unearned.

The Hawks buses were not extremely active producing only 4 hits. Scott Asaad went 2-5 for MSC, with John Puskar and Tim North contributing with a hit each. MSC left 9 runners on base.

Kean 15 MSC 14

Both the Hawks and Cougars combined for 42 hits in a wild game at Pitzer field last Saturday. MSC starter James Dunphy was pulled from the game after only 1 1/3 innings, giving up 6 hits and allowing 5 runs (3 earned).

With MSC trailing 6-3 after 3 innings, the bats came alive. The attack was paced by Drew Ryan who blasted his third home run of the season, and by left fielder Mike Dixon who pitched in with 3 hits on the afternoon.

MSC right fielder Elliot Morgan delighted the crowd with a 2 run, 7th inning moon shot to right, which accounted for MSC's 13th and 14th runs of the afternoon.

Unfortunately, Paul DeSimone and Mark Tomoskovic could not hold the lead in the late innings. Kean responded to MSC's offensive showing with some muscle of its own. Kean scored 4 times in the seventh and then tied the game in the eighth after a 2 run homer from catcher Jeff Scott. Kean then scored in the ninth off reliever Joe DeMiro for the game winning run.

MSC 12 Kean 3 (2nd)

In the second game of the double header, MSC got good pitching performances from Cory Poat and reliever Melvin Robinson to salvage the twin bill. Poat gave up 6 hits in six innings of work, and Robinson gave up one hit in the seventh to nail down the victory.

MSC jumped on Kean pitching early scoring 6 runs in the 1st and another 4 runs in the 3rd. Tim North and Mike Brandon each homered and Rich BelBruno collected two hits.

Eastern Conn. 10 MSC 2

Coach Schoening sent James Dunphy to the hill Monday to try to stymie one of the best Division III teams in the nation. Unfortunately, it was not to be. E. Conn. collected 10 hits to pace their ten run attack.

Tennis preps for '90

Their regular season was finished back in the fall semester of '89, but the MSC women's tennis team is already preparing for the 1990 season. The team is currently participating in its first informal spring season, which includes a total of five matches and some valuable playing time.

The team compiled a dismal 1-11 record after its short six week fall season was over but look to see a different team in the future. In fact, MSC is 2-0 in spring play, and coach Brian McLaughlin feels the program will continue to develop and grow in a positive direction because not only do the players work hard and have a good attitude, but they really love to play tennis. The informal spring season allows the team to go out and have fun without the added pressure and intensity that a regular schedule during the season has.

The team features two All NJAC selections in Barri Polner (singles and doubles) and Alina Wilczynski (doubles). The duo have contributed to strengthen the team and Katie Morita at the no. 6 spot is also playing well.

Although the team has only eight players, there are other problems that the team has to overcome. One problem is court availability and scheduling practices so as not to interfere with the men's usage. Playing in a single season in six weeks before the cold weather sets in is yet another inconvenience. However, coach McClaughlin doesn't expect a complete turn-around of last year's record but he feels that the team is capable of playing at the .500 level and can gain respect from its opponents in the fall as the women's program is taken more seriously.
