Two residents arrested for possession of marijuana

by Suzanne E. Potts

Two residents of Bohn Hall were arrested for possession of a controlled dangerous substance on Wednesday, Jan. 22, at about midnight, according to Campus Police.

The Assistant Manager on duty, Stacey Ballou, noticed a strong odor of marijuana coming from the resident's room and reported it.

Campus Police officers responded and knocked on the door. The residents, John Fischer and Jeffrey Springsteen, ages 19 and 20, opened the door and appeared to be under the influence, according to Campus Police.

Sgt. Paul Cell, the arresting officer, then asked the residents if they would give consent to a search of their room and they agreed.

Marijuana and rolling papers were found and the students were charged with possession of 50 grams of a controlled substance.

The residents could not be reached for comment.

Dean of Students Edward Martin said, "I was called the night it happened and made a decision that night for the two students to be suspended for one year with the right to appeal. The appeal would simply involve writing a letter to the vice president."
He continued to say that all these instructions were written down and given to the students. "I am very sorry that it occurred, but they violated the law, they have been arrested and they have jeopardized their enrollment as well as their financial aid," Martin said.

Access road open

The new access road was opened this month so students may get to the student parking lots straight from Valley Road.

Obituary:
Spanish-Italian Dept. secretary dies

by Nancy Gannon

Marie Rose, 67, a secretary in the foreign language Dept. at MSC, died last Monday, Jan. 20, in Mountainside Hospital.

According to Dimmie Johnson, a close friend and co-worker, Rose suffered a stroke on Jan. 5 in her Bloomfield home and was taken to Mountainside Hospital where she remained in a coma until her death.

Rose had been the secretary for the Spanish-Italian Dept. since 1986. Prior to that, she was employed by the Maintenance Dept. of MSC for two years.

The Foreign Language Office, located on the fourth floor of Partridge Hall, is where Rose worked with Johnson and fellow administrators. The staff expressed their sorrow about the loss of Rose.

"She was a very close friend, we spent more time together than with our families," said Johnson. "She was a lively, energetic and warm person with a wonderful sense of humor."

Phyllis Brighton, a secretary in the English Dept., described Rose as "a very smart and lively person. She was a wonderful friend and we'll miss her."

Dr. Victoria Larson, a professor in the classic Dept., said, "She was a dynamic kind of person. She was always very cheerful and kind."

Diana Guemarez, a professor in the Spanish Dept., said, "I met her a year and a half ago. She's been very nice and helpful to me."

Funeral Services were held last Wednesday morning at St. Francis Xavier Church in Bloomfield. Many of the faculty and staff of Partridge Hall attended.

Rose is survived by her husband Carmine and daughter Lisa.

As usual, our nation has found a sidetrack to issues in an election year. Rather than discuss our nation’s woeful economic conditions, the main issue in the primary campaign has been the alleged infidelity of Bill Clinton, a Democratic contender for the presidency.

President George Bush proposed tax cuts to revive the economy in his State of the Union Address. Bush said it would pump $25 billion into the economy and about 300 more a year for 90 million wage earners. Bush failed to mention his failed promises of being the education and environmental President. Money for education has been cut during his tenure and not one of his promised 4 billion trees has been planted. On top of that, he has pushed for off shore oil development near environmentally fragile areas and the opening of the Alaskan frontier for oil development.

LASO y WCSA preparan viaje a la República Dominicana

por Jorge L. Cruz

La Organización de Estudiantes Latinoamericanos (LASO), clase I de la Asociación del Gobierno Estudiantil (SGA) y la Asociación Estudiantil del Colegio de Fin de Semana (WCSA), clase II del S.G.A., han organizado un viaje a la República Dominicana para las vacaciones de primavera.

Esta es una buena noticia para la comunidad hispana de MSC, ya que esta es la primera vez desde hace varios años que estas dos organizaciones comparten un evento de esta magnitud.

La comunidad hispana ha venido en aumento dentro del campus, y es de bastante importancia que todas las organizaciones hispanas del colegio trabajen en conjunto para ayudar a los estudiantes y a la vez crear una interacción con otras organizaciones del colegio. De tal manera, ambas comunidades podrían entenderse mejor.

Dicho evento se puede tomar como un ejemplo para otras organizaciones que deseen unir sus esfuerzos para crear una mejor comunicación entre la comunidad hispana y todos los estudiantes en general.

La República Dominicana es una hermosa isla localizada en el mar Caribe, y este viaje tiene como objetivo primordial conmemorar el quinto centenario de la llegada de Cristóbal Colón, el cual creó el primer encuentro entre dos mundos.

Esta es una gran oportunidad para los estudiantes de conocer más acerca de la cultura, tradiciones e historia de la isla, y al mismo tiempo vivir una experiencia inolvidable.

El costo del viaje es de 699 dólares, el cual incluye: pasaje aéreo (dos vías), 6 días y 5 noches en un hotel de cinco estrellas en Santo Domingo y Puerto Plata (Sand Castles), brindis de bienvenida, dos comidas diarias, entrada gratis a exclusivos centros nocturnos y los visitantes disfrutarán también de la práctica de deportes acuáticos.

El viaje se llevará a cabo del 16 al 21 de marzo y requiere de un depósito de 50 dólares a más tardar el 8 de febrero. Las personas interesadas pueden llamar a los siguientes teléfonos: (201) 861-2177, 893-7230 y 893-4440.

Harassment:
Jan. 28 A female resident of Blanton Hall complained that she was being harassed by four other females. Apparently this is an ongoing problem dating back to Spring of 1990.

Criminal Mischief:
Jan. 24 1986 Dodge Aries was found with a broken mirror.

Theft:
Jan. 27 2:00 p.m. - 4:00 p.m. A leather waistpack was stolen from Panzer Gymnastics.

Resolutions:
Jan. 28 A Blanton resident was set to appear before a Little Falls court and failed to appear.

The trip is planned to be from March 16 to March 21 and it requires a $50 deposit due on February 8. For further information contact the following numbers: (201) 861-2177, 893-7230 and 4440.

The Dominican Republic is a beautiful island located in the Caribbean Sea and the trip will help to celebrate the quincentennial of the arrival of Christopher Columbus causing the first encounter between two worlds. This is a good opportunity for the students to know more about the culture, traditions and history of the island and have an unforgettable experience.

The cost of the trip is $699 and the package includes the round trip airfare and transfers, six days and five nights in a five star hotel in Santo Domingo and Puerto Plata, a welcome drink, two meals a day, exclusive free admission to area night clubs and free water sports.

LASO and WCSA prepare trip to Dominican Republic

by Jorge L. Cruz

The Latin American Student Organization (LASO) a class I of the Student Government Association (SGA) along with the Weekend College Student Association (WCSA) a class II of the SGA have organized a trip to the Dominican Republic for the Spring Break.

These are good news for the Hispanic community which has been increasing on campus.

It is really important that all Hispanic organizations work together to help the Hispanic students to create an interaction between them and the other organizations on campus. Thus, both communities can understand each other better.

This event could be an example for other organizations that may want to join their efforts to create better communication between the Hispanic organizations and the students in general.

The highway of hell

So Pat had this Jeep Wagoneer with big wheels and four-wheel drive. Living in affluent Montclair in the summer with no dinero, you find yourself looking for any sort of trouble for amusement. We were lucky; our amusement came in the form of the state's biggest man-made mudslide - The Honorable Jim Florio Access Road. Back in August, it was this ridiculous slime pit, a foot deep in gook, cut recklessly out of the back of the quarry. But, as anyone with enough illegal substances in their bodies knows, two restless guys with a Jeep Wagoneer are mystically drawn to manmade mudslides (perhaps a regression to our elementary school days, only our Tonka toys never needed a tune-up.) Regardless, boots on feet, cigarettes in hand, we sped and slid wildly down the deliciously, deadly damp dirt, laughing hysterically.

Whoosh—Wroom—Vroom! Splat!! We made more tracks on that unfinished road than any bulldozer could've hoped to tackle. It was ridiculous, this huge swath in the mountain, carved by some drunken meteor of doom. Back behind the huge earth movers and dump trucks (which we tried to hot wire, to no avail) there were these enormous piles of woodchips - the obvious remains of hundreds of trees instantly martyred in the name of progress. You could climb atop these piles, after much clawing and clamoring, and see clear across into Clifton and beyond. The chips, still warm from the kill, emitted a strange odor, not unlike that of that cedar chest you got freshman year to keep your stuff in if you were living in the dorms. Anyway, Pat stood on these wood chips, gazing down upon the unpaved mud monster, flicked his cigarette in kind of exasperation, and proceeded to jump, dirt-clogged boots first, down the side of the pile. We jumped back in the Jeep, the Pogues blasting from the stereo, and blew the curb, leaving the virgin road alone for the rest of the summer.

Finally, it's January and the dam thing is done, more Oz-like now than anything else. The red brick-lined walls beckon you to take that first 10 mph curve a little faster than you should. The corporate desk pigs who designed the road are undoubtedly praying for a mild winter, considering it snowed 1/4 inch last weekend and boom! the gates mysteriously shut tight.

Your first trip up Montclair's newest wigging wonder should be treasured and remembered. Consider yourself a pioneer of sorts, chartering unknown territory - the southeast passage, as it were. Gaze longingly at the puke green vegetable growth, placed carefully along the sides of the entrance way. Wave hello to the people in their condos on your right, as they cry uncontrollably in their morning coffee over their plummeting property values. Perhaps if you really want to make a lasting impression, you could cause the first traffic accident, just for kicks. Allow that guy tailgating you to get real close then, BLAMO, slam those brakes. Or better yet, just drive down the wrong way. Head-on collisions are always cause for headlines and besides, who can blame you? It's a new road for Christ'sakes! You didn't know.

In years to come, one can be assured that a great many grand and glorious people will navigate our new access road. By then, countless accidents, breakdowns, road kills and traffic citations will have occurred. Maybe by then, the asphalt God might even have a real name: President Reid Way or Dean Martin Avenue. Tony Sacco Terrace? The possibilities are endless. But you will have the honor of saying you were the true pioneer. You'll come back as some grouchy and cynical alumnus and say, "I remember in my day, we used to shovel this road with our bare hands, wearing only socks, so we could get to class on time..." And we enjoyed it.

Cheating: Taking the easy way out just got easier

by George Olschewski

College is not easy, as many struggling students know. Cramming until three in the morning, working five days at a time on black coffee and caffeine pills, and even drilling information sometimes doesn't help. Is there a solution? Michael Moore, a Rutgers-New Brunswick journalism student, has one.

Cheat.

With his self-published book, titled Cheating 101: The Benefits and Fundamentals of Earning the Easy "A," Moore offers students the chance to read what they may have been doing for years. "And they'll learn some new tricks at the same time."

"There's no other book in the world that offers this information," Moore says in the book. "This is the stuff you learn throughout your educational career, whether in elementary school or college, although it's never formally taught to you. Cheating 101 is that formal lesson, but it's more fun than formal."

Why would anyone want to create such a book? Higher education is supposed to be required reading for any most prestigious universities, found that nearly 67 percent of all college students cheat at some time during their undergraduate years. Out of an approximate 12 million undergraduate students nationwide, that works out to be just over eight million students. To most faculty, yes, cheating is a problem. Also, while Moore says that Cheating 101 should be required reading for any student wanting to be one step ahead of the grade race, MSC Dean of Students Edward Martin believes that the book should be read by the faculty, especially junior faculty, to keep them aware of what's out there in terms of cheaters.

Moore, however, sees it differently. "I realize this book will raise a few eyebrows and perhaps even a few blood pressures among members of the academic community. That's tough. My book addresses what professors have traditionally ignored. Cheating is not a 'problem,' as you perceive it. It is reality. And cheating in a direct reflux of [their] efforts as 'educators.'"

"Instead of teaching subjects to students, [they] teach at them," Moore said. "Cheating is a natural defense mechanism triggered by irrelevant courses and professors who look forward to their paycheck more than they do to teaching. My apologies to the true educators in America. You know who you are. I thank God for you."

"I think the book's cool," said Natalee Vaccaro, a freshman Fine Arts major. "But you really can't use it much at MSC. A lot of the stuff in the book is made for large classes, and because of the lower student-to-teacher ratio here it makes it hard to use." She also admits that she already knew about 60 percent of the information in the book, but picked up an idea or two.

Have cheating manuals been around for awhile now? Don't Cliff's Notes fall into the same category? Theoretically, a student could walk into the College Bookstore and pick up a copy of Cliff's Notes about Moby Dick, and read that as opposed to the actual book. Not only will that student get the novel in a condensed form, but the student will get information about the characters, genre, setting, and a host of other areas. How does that compare with Moore's "Cliff's Notes" on college?

"I think that the book is different from Cliff's Notes," said Martin. "Cheating 101 covers activities that are a violation of most college's policies. Cliff's Notes have been accepted by the academic community as a guide, or an outline." At best, Cheating 101 is an entertaining read, as well as a defense manual for professors who want a little more in their arsenal against cheaters. However, if a student gets caught cheating, he or she risks legal action, and possible expulsion from school.

Moore's book covers that, too.
MSC reserves the right...

The fourth amendment of the United States Constitution protects "the right of people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures."

The MSC Residence Life Appointment/Handbook states that "although residents have a right to personal privacy, Residence Life professional staff as well as the Campus Police have the right to enter any student room, if an emergency occurs, without giving advance notice [italics added]." Furthermore, it states "you may be asked to reveal the contents of bags, boxes, etc. if the presence of alcohol is suspected," upon entering your residence hall.

Quite clearly, the MSC Residence Life Appointment/Handbook and the Constitution of the United States are at odds. To whom would you like to trust your civil liberties? I'll take my chances with the campus police. Would the room have been searched if its occupants had not given the campus police permission? Almost certainly. The ambiguous wording of the policy set forth in the student handbook gives the college a large amount of leeway when it comes to room searches. Who decides what constitutes an emergency? Should this room have been searched under these specific circumstances even if its occupants had refused to give consent? I believe so. But what makes me nervous is that the "war on drugs" (and at MSC, the war on alcohol) seems to be degenerating into a war on civil rights and privacy.

Perhaps the best example of a violation of privacy on campus is the Residence Life bag check policy. On certain nights, tables are set up and the bags of every person entering residence halls are checked. I guess being a college student automatically makes one suspected of smuggling alcohol; remember, Residence Life only reserves the right to check the belongings of persons suspected of having alcohol.

Most of us have nothing to hide, so these intrusive policies are merely mildly annoying and/or insulting. But once the administration is allowed to disregard some of our civil rights, none of them seem quite safe anymore.
Stop the violence

America is the most affluent nation in the world and one of the most violent. Why so much violence and what does it do to us?

Although I haven't yet been physically harmed, this violence affects me. The threat of it causes anger, anxiety and even fear in me. The hate and rage I feel over it gnaws me. Being a virtual pacifist, these feelings frighten me. How can I expect people with less inhibitions towards confrontation not to respond to violence with more violence?

One must wonder, imagine the impact real crime causes. How are the people who live in the high-crime areas affected? How the violence experience must lead to mistrust, fear and more violence.

This is why people don't make eye contact or say hello on the street anymore. This is why we lock our doors at night and don't talk to our neighbors. This is why we pass the stranded motorist on the highway.

Maybe if people like us who hate violence and confrontation made a point to say hello and quell the fears of people around us things could change. If we were more inclined to be friendly and helpful it could make those with dubious intentions more conspicuous.

If vengeance wasn't sought as an answer to violence, maybe we could try to understand the pain and ignorance that cause people to lash out. We should try to forgive if we can, and demonstrate the error in people's ways, rather than seek punishment and reparation. We could try to use kindness to dry out the seeds of hate. Maybe understanding can help some of those who are violent to deal with what they are and what they have done, possibly opening the gates to a better world.

Environmental Theatre
Act 1; Scene 1

Apparently nothing is as simple as it could be. All I did was stop in at the convenience store in the Student Center to purchase a "sugar fix" to see me through registration when voila! There they were, several plastic holders for six-packs of soda in the trash basket. How could I leave them there without raising a question or two? So:

ME: What happens to these plastic holders?
CASHIER: Not much. They are tossed out.
ME: Does anyone cut them up so that ducks, birds and fish do not get caught in them and end up strangling?
CASHIER: Nope.
ME: Why not?
CASHIER: We are too busy.

Please note that during this conversation there was not another customer in the shop and the cashier conducted this conversation while glancing through a magazine, but...

Who cares anyway?

There's no place like home

Okay, here I am again, my 6th semester moving into the dorms. As I approach Blanton Hall, I see a six foot gladiator on the side of the building underneath a sagging ceiling. As I ice skate to the door to check-in, I wonder "What now?"

The tired RA says "Hi, welcome back. Oh, by the way, there's no heat or hot water." Oh, is that all? I see. Friday, I couldn't buy books in the College Store because a water-pipe broke (this caused a "fire hazard," but I guess it didn't affect the plethora of people in the ballrooms for some convention), but I can live in the arctic temperatures of the fourth floor in Blanton without bathing.

I don't know, but when something this serious occurs at home, whether it's Sunday, Monday or Christmas, there is a servisa to fix it. The dorms are our home for eight months or so, and we never get consideration. Fire drills at 3 a.m., shootings or whatever the crisis, it seems it takes weeks to correct the problem.

For once, can't the dorm population have a peaceful semester? Less people live here each year due to these annoying problems. It's now Tuesday. I want to take a nice hot shower. I guess my choices are home or in another dorm.

I hope that things will improve, because many students are talking about commuting. I realize these things take time, but hey, we're paying for certain little privileges like water. Come on, splurge on the time and a half to pay the plumber and get the pipe fixed before 500 students move in. Check the rooms and make sure they have heat, two beds and two desks. Give us a peaceful semester, so we will want to come back.

There are a few little known facts that you, the reader, must be made aware of before we get into the substantive part of this soon-to-be elucidating essay. The first new fact that I require you, the reader, to be not necessarily comfortable with, but to be made aware of nonetheless, is the sad fact that this may indeed be the substantive portion of this aforesaid soon-to-be elucidating essay. The question that arises even from within my convoluted and entirely self-serving mind is; "What is he saying, or, more appropriately, what is he trying to say?" One must wonder; if he truly has nothing to say why is he writing a column in The Montclarion, formerly widely esteemed before he started writing for it? Taking issue with myself, and answering my own pertinent and poignant question, I interject that you cannot read nothing. We all have, at one time or another, steadfastly maintained that we have done nothing, seen nothing or heard nothing. But not of course. I speak all of us at least until we are firmly ensconced within the second paragraph, has read nothing. It is unequivocally impossible to read nothing. Hence, I must be saying something simply because you are reading it.

The something that I have to say, which coincidently becomes a prerequisite for understanding this columnist and this column and allow me to point out here if you do not understand this columnist and columnist and if you do not read it I will not be wasting my time sucking up to an uninformed readership, is (can we have a glistening?...)

I wonder if providing $64 a-month of food stamps and welfare checks very attractive on a woman. Once, not so simply or so long ago, I met this certain slime bunny. She was the personification of my dreams as well as my soon-to-be stepping stone to the stratosphere of the subculture within which I had ascended membership. Anyhow, way or day now, I will get on with the story. I met Candy, convinced her to leave home, go on welfare and rent an apartment around the corner from my favorite bar so we could live happily ever after. I had reached the apex, the pinnacle of my subculture. Her husband, who had no sense of humor, could not appreciate this fact.

Yes, I realize that you cannot recapture the glories of youth. However, I did not anticipate that they would be legislated away. The Governor that I did not vote for because of his funny hair, Jim Florio, had initiated a welfare reform program that penalizes women who become pregnant while subsiding on welfare. This, in effect, penalizes the children of welfare families. If a woman opposed to abortion has two children on the previously received two-child stipend. Now she will not receive the perfunctory $64 increase in benefits. If a woman opposed to abortion has two subsiding on welfare. This, in effect, penalizes the children program that penalizes women who become pregnant while subsiding on welfare. This, in effect, penalizes the children of welfare families. If a woman opposed to abortion has two children, becomes pregnant, carries and delivers the child, becomes pregnant, carries and delivers the child, she will not receive the performance-based increase in benefits. She then will be providing the sustentacular needs for three children on the previously received two-child stipend. Now suppose she has twins or even triplets.

Mental Jewelry shines

by Joe Ventola

Live: Mental Jewelry-
Radioactive/MCA

Out of the depths of Erin,
Pa., comes the band Live and their debut album. Produced by ex-Talking Head Jerry Harrison, this album is one of MCA's most hopeful prospects for 1992. In fact, on the heels of MCA's optimism, MTV has interestingly managed to fit the video for the first single, "Operation Spirit," into daily rotation.

The album itself is a lyrical exploration into mental conceptions that we all carry with us, thus the title Mental Jewelry. Edward Kowalczyk pronounces this explorative journey with his somewhat bombastic, over a backdrop of percussion and drums provided by Chad Gracey. Couple this with the bass of Patrick Dahlheimer and guitar of Chad Taylor and the resulting sound is one reminiscent of the pop/alternative sounds of the Talking Heads (I wonder why?).

The cuts on this track are some of the most interesting things. The most interesting of which is a Doors-sounding anti-racism song called "The Beauty of Gray." Also apparent are the forceful tracks "Waterboy" and "Pain Lies On the Riverside." Unfortunately, this album also provides some cuts that it could do without. "You are the World" is a failed attempt to move the listener with a primitive tribal-style rhythm, while "Mirror Song," the album's token ballad, falls short of its goal.

On the whole, the album is conceptually well-intentioned and will satiate most. However, many of the tracks feel unnatural and inexperienced. The percussive and bass movements become boring and predictable. The vocals do a good job of painting imagery, yet they suffer from excessive studio-effects. In fact, this album does a good job of hiding behind slick production and major label backing. This is definitely detrimental to a record that tries to get listeners to search through their inner souls for what is real and true. It would be nice to know how good Live is live.

The Next Generation

by George Olcheski

If you're a fan of the old-fashioned coin-operated video games, you probably remember the mellow oldies such as Asteroids, Defender and Space Invaders. As the ciga-rette ads go, you've come a long way, baby. Look at the latest arcade to come out: an arcade shoot 'em up sitting in our MSC gameroom, and oh! The merchandising! Don't have a cash cow, man! To top it all off, The Simpsons haven't had serious competition since Cosby. Until what?

What should happen if Berkeley Breathed should make Bloom County an animated prime time series that happened to air at another timeslot for a set? And if it turned out to be really good, aired it next to The Simpsons? Believe me, with all the Bloom County fans that need another fix that Outland doesn't seem to be giving, it would work! Just think of the following that Bloom County has. Sure, The Simpsons has a few fans here and there. A good chunk of the kids (emphasis on "kids") who watch it might not get the off-beat political humor of Breathed's Pulitzer Prize-winning creation. I admit, some of the stuff Breathed may come up with will go over the heads of the average 10 to 15-year-old who's only worried about Bart, Luke Perry and 90210. But think of the adults who would eat this stuff up. Come on, admit it. How many Bloom and Outland fans would like to see Deathtongue (a.k.a. Billy & The Boingers) in concert? Or Cutter John's U.S. Enterpoop? Or Oliver Wendell Jones makes me sweat hair tonic (which C. Everett Koop banned as a controlled substance)?

Bart is pretty much overrated. Sure, he still gets the ratings. That's why he's still on the air. But just consider what would happen if Bill the Cat was marketed instead of Bart Simpson coffee mugs, keychains, boxer shorts and contraceptive inserts? Maybe he'd be a better candidate for fraternity beer-bonging T-shirts... Unfortunately, if you need that Bloom County fix, go out to your local bookstore and buy the whole back catalog of books. If you'd like to see Bart eat Opus' shorts, man, then call up CBS and tell them. Until then, it looks like we're stuck with Outland, such as it is.

would have enjoyed A Wish For Wings That Work. That, however, is not the subject of this week's Update. Ever since its debut, The Simpsons has done remarkably well in its timeslot. Hell, there are Nintendo games starring Bart, a full-sized coin-op sitting in our MSC gameroom, and oh! The merchandising! Don't have a cash cow, man! To top it all off, The Simpsons haven't had serious competition since Cosby. Until what?

The Hand that Rocks the Cradle lulls viewers to sleep

by Jodi Schultz

After the death of her husband and miscarriage of her baby, Peyton Flanders’ (Rebecca DeMomay) world of privilege and ease comes crashing down, forcing her to start a new life; forcing her puppet strings to break, thus creating a madwoman’s soul. The life she insanely craves belongs to Claire Bartel (Annabella Sciorra), a fulfilled and busy, wife, mother and career woman. The perfect life searched for by almost every woman and sickly lust for by one.

Posing as the ideal mother’s helper—a theme that is overused in today’s horror industry, but played out rather well—Peyton moves into Claire’s home, and in no time, becomes a fixture in the Bartel house, and a trusted friend to the entire family, including husband Michael (Matt McCoy) and young daughter Emma (Madeline Zima), who are immediately infatuated with this ever-helpful and seemingly devoted God-send. Provoking once again, the naivety and instability in today’s society. How we can turn on someone who loves us once we get the attention we crave. Selfish little units aren’t we!

Only Solomon (Ernie Hudson), the hired handyman, senses that Peyton isn’t the pearl everyone thinks she is.

However, before Claire catches on to Peyton’s hidden agenda and discovers the shocking truth about the stranger living in their midst, it may be too late to save her family; from the chilling and demented future Peyton has planned for them in Hollywood Pictures’ new suspense thriller, The Hand That Rocks the Cradle.

I found the characters to be believable in every aspect. Especially Ernie Hudson whose handicap made his presence on the screen frightening when he would come in contact with Peyton. Even the slightest glance would send chills up my spine. Hudson provided Solomon with true sensitivity and intelligence which made his character probably the most believable in the movie. DeMomay gave the performance of her career as Peyton. She provided a sickly aura throughout the entire movie, and disbursed this insanity into all of us.

The major problem I had with the movie was its lack of true horror. The motives became silly after a while and the true fright came within the last 15 minutes of the movie. I admit the entire movie was disturbing for the mere fact that we do let people manipulate their way into our lives and when faced with the reality of their betrayal we disbelieve it. Despite a few interesting moments, the movie as a whole dragged on.

The Hand That Rocks the Cradle, directed by Curtis Hanson, is not highly recommended by this critic. If you want suspense rent an Alfred Hitchcock movie.

A Commentary: JFK Controversy
by Audrey Regan

Oliver Stone has said JFK is a "counter myth" to the Warren Report. Yet, so many have criticized this movie as not being true, as being a misrepresentation of history, gross speculation and a confusing mix of fact and fiction. After all, they say, what gives Oliver Stone the right to make a movie like this that isn't true?

The American public relies on the cinema for its history lessons. It seems that the controversy surrounding this three-hour movie is coming from the press, the same press who choose to ignore evidence contrary to the findings of the Warren Commission and the same press who have maintained for almost 30 years that Lee Harvey Oswald assassinated President John F. Kennedy all by himself. For years they've been able to dismiss critics like Clay Shaw and Harold Weinberg as "conspiracy buffs," but it seems they've finally met their media match.

Stone's movie is based on New Orleans District Attorney Jim Garrison's attempt to indict Clay Shaw as a part of a huge conspiracy, including CIA, mafia, the Secret Service and even Lyndon Johnson, whom he considers "an accomplice after the fact." The movie shows Garrison's investigation and his mistakes, like his trumping of Shaw and his lack of solid proof.

Nevertheless, JFK still spurs controversy. According to the Feb. 3 issue of Newsweek, a film critic for The Washingtonian Magazine was silenced after giving the film a glowing review. Jack Lempert, editor of The Washingtonian, said, "JFK was a clunker of a movie that put forth such an extraordinary, fallaciously flat review of Washington."

Pat Dowell, the critic, quits, saying, "A critic's work should not be killed because of someone else's idea of political correctness." She was promptly replaced.

Stone may over-dramatize. The blame may spread too loosely. But he does raise questions, one of which is, "When will the American public stop lazily accepting the truth from both the media and the cinema?"

Critics find it hard to connect a government-level plot to kill a President, with a government-level plot to release documents. unstated in the film. But according to the fact of this happening spontaneously. The actuary concluded that odds were 100 quadrillion to one.

Oliver Stone's JFK: Single-bullet theory shot down
by Tom Boud

JFK is a consciousness-raising reel that places flash photography, photofearful acting from Kevin Costner and a trail of investigation that would set just about any mind thinking. Although this Warner Brothers production is fraudulent and scientific proof of a conspiracy, it nonetheless gets the moviemaker's attention by focusing on the real life eccentricities of this Presidential pulse.

Kevin Costner is New Orleans District Attorney Jim Garrison. (In real life, Garrison is known for trying unsuccessfully to connect David Ferrie, a pal of Lee Harvey Oswald, to the CIA plot to knock off Kennedy.) After catching wind of the assassination, Garrison embarks upon an investigative crusade in order to get to the bottom of the matter. However, between government interference, a savage press and disappearing witnesses, it seems he would have an easier time getting to the bottom of the Manhattan Project.

Costner is fabulous as Jim Garrison. That's because Costner exudes a lot of emotion and conviction. Costner is a ball of fire with rage, enthusiasm and patriotism. I'd put it to you this way: you know he's a good actor when he keeps up his fiery emotion and conviction throughout this three-hour flick.

Concerning director Oliver Stone, you can pretty much say he tackled this daunting task from the best possible source. With scientific evidence lacking, (one person would attack him furiously for this), Stone primarily examines the validity of the "single bullet theory" (that Lee Harvey Oswald alone killed Kennedy and seriously wounded Texas Governor John Connally with one single bullet out of three fired, a theory officially accepted by the Warren Commission). Stone raises many questions, such as how Oswald could have aimed, fired and recocked his bolt action rifle in less than six seconds -- something that FBI sharpshooters found incomprehensible. mean it. The graphics are superb, the soundtrack is put together well -- the only thing you need is a "heads up" display to make you feel like you're actually in the cockpit. Maybe an idea for Super R-Type III? The game isn't all that difficult, you might even lose your fumble-fingered and Nintendo-illiterate parents into a little family friendly tournament. It does take some reflex hand-eye coordination, don't be surprised if the game isn't all that difficult, you might even lose your fumble-fingered and Nintendo-illiterate parents into a little family friendly tournament. It does take some reflex hand-eye coordination, don't be surprised if you have criticized this movie as not being true, in which Marcello reportedly said he was involved in the assassination. When FBI Director William S. Sessions was asked by the New York Times about supporting the release of these documents, he was quoted as saying, "The law, of course, will be followed."

Lastly, it must be noted that according to Carl Sifakis' Encyclopedia of American Crime (Copyright 1982 by Facts on File, Inc., p. 546), a total of 18 material witnesses died in the three years following the assassination. Six were shot to death, two committed suicide, three died in car accidents, one was killed by a karate chop to the neck, one by a needle to the arm and one by a .44 magnum to the head. Stone raises many questions, such as how Oswald could have aimed, fired and recocked his bolt action rifle in less than six seconds -- something that FBI sharpshooters found incomprehensible. Super Bowl was Super Bore

The preparation was unnecessary. The hype was over-exaggerated. And the game was as exciting as a Friday night with Grandma.

The Buffalo Bills were outmatched, outclassed and outcoached by the Washington Redskins in one of the most disappointing Super Bowls ever.

For years, the Super Bowl was a classic game which pitied two well-deserving, evenly-matched teams in a heated battle for football’s world championship. This was true in the 70’s when we saw the classic Steeler-Cowboy confrontations.

Unfortunately, in the last decade, only three games have been decided by less than 10 points. The game is no longer one for the fans to enjoy. It has become an excuse to drink. The fans enjoy what they can’t remember about the game.

Every year from Jan. 1 on, the question everyone asks is, “Where are you going for New Year’s?” Few people care about the games. They’re just looking for a warm place to consume alcohol. Most people can’t remember anything that happened in Super Bowl XXIV when the 49ers crushed the Broncos 35-10. I bet most people can’t remember anything from last year as well, except Scott Norwood’s last-second missed field goal.

When I was growing up, the Super Bowl was a celebration which brought family and friends together for four hours of excitement. For the past several years, it has become eight hours of pure disappointment.

At the party I attended, by the start of the third quarter with the ‘Skims up 17-0, I was the only one awake. Everyone else ate, drank and passed out. In a capsule, this shows what the Super Bowl has become—a Super Bore.

A game that used to be for the fans has become an unbelievable profit-making machine for the respective Super Bowl city, the advertisers and, of course, the beer companies.

Hey! Remember us! There would have been 26damn Super Bowls if it weren’t for the fans. We shell out all the cash and then we get bored to death!

Swim teams on the rise
by Jim Klossek

The cliche “Only time will tell” wears well on the 1991-92 Red Hawk swim teams. Before the season started, both the men’s and women’s rosters were full of question marks, but as the season draws to a close, those doubts have been replaced with solutions.

The men especially have proven their mettle by defeating many of the teams that have outclassed them in past years.

Last Saturday both swim teams journeyed to Glassboro for a meet against Ursinus. The men continued to impress by coming away with a 102-85 victory, while the women were beaten by a 107-76 score.

After a huge loss to Glassboro the previous Saturday (140-89), the men’s team regrouped to down crosstown rival William Paterson at home Thursday night before embarking on the two-hour bus ride to Ursinus.

“We’re very pleased with the effort the men have given us this year,” said Head Coach Brian McLaughlin. “Everyone from the Minzaks (Andrew and John) to Francisco Kraft have done everything we’ve asked of them and more. When you add Warren Town and Scott Fried to that list, I’d say we have quite a bit to look forward to.”

With the departure of graduating seniors Duke Harding and Matt Gorski, the remaining members of the team and any newcomers in ’92 will be pressed to match this season’s success. “Although both Duke and Matt will definitely be missed, we still have the nucleus of a very good (men’s) team,” said optimistic McLaughlin.

On the other hand, the women haven’t fared as well. The loss to Ursinus last Saturday was the team’s third straight since returning from winter break and proves it has a way to go before reaching the level at which the men currently find themselves.

“When it’s true our women are not progressing as quickly as the men’s program, they are not pushovers by any means,” explained McLaughlin. “On the contrary, with individuals like Marianna and Christina Krivak, Sara Dobol and others, I believe next year’s team is going to be an exciting one to watch.” Only time will tell.

Hawk Notes—Prior to the dual losses to Glassboro, the men’s team swept both Kutztown (Dec. 11) and Stony Brook (Jan. 13) while the Red Hawks downed Kean in a single meet on Jan 15. The men’s win over Stony Brook was decided by Duke Harding on the last lap of the final relay event. Everyone connected with the Red Hawk swimming program would like to extend their condolences to the families of Notre Dame swimmers who were killed in the recent bus accident, which also left other members of the team severely injured....The home meet against William Paterson was the last one for famed women’s diver Carrie Spender as it also was for Harding and Gorski on the men’s side.

I think it’s time for a change. Let’s get back to the basics. Forget the egos. Forget the money and the hype. Forget the Bud Bowl and all the beer. Just play hard, solid football like the game in 1979.

If this could happen, the players, the coaches and, more importantly, the fans would be better off. If this would happen, we would be able to call it Super Sunday once again.

Calling the Shots
I knew the game was going to be bad when Bills kicker Brad Dalaluso “misunderstood the referee’s signal” on the opening kickoff.

What about Thurman Thomas? The Bills running back couldn’t find his helmet so he had to sit out the first two plays. This typified the Bills pathetic showing Sunday night.

All week long Thomas was upset about the statement that QB Jim Kelly was the “Michael Jordan” of the Bills. Thomas bitched that the team had two Jordans. Does Thomas realize he played like a Jordan?

Jordan Knight of the New Kids on the Block.

Kelly was no better, as he played like he belonged in a bakery. Did I hear someone say turnover? Yeah. Seven.

Now everyone knows who Mark Rypien is. The game’s MVP is a great QB who “Ryppeed” a bunch of Counterfeit Bills apart.

I’m sorry. I know that was bad.

I can’t believe the average 30-second commercial cost $850,000 during this year’s contest. I’m in the wrong business.

I turned the game off. Who won the Bud Bowl?

How good did Cindy Crawford look? I am definitely in the wrong business.

Women's hoops upset Glassboro State 64-59

by Jim Klosek and Michael Frasco

The MSC women's basketball team pulled off a dramatic 64-59 victory over Glassboro State College Tuesday night at Panzer Gym.

The Red Hawks, down by 15 points with 14 minutes remaining, yet managed to chip away the lead thanks to the strong play of Jeanine Mullaly, Maritza Martinez and Kim Barnes. Mullaly led the Red Hawks with a career-high 18 points. It was the junior guard's four free throws in the final :17 which sealed the victory for MSC, whose record now stands at 11-6 (8-3 NJAC).

However, Martinez proved to be a key player down the stretch as she made two steals and turned them into four points to edge MSC closer to the Profs as crunch time neared.

Martinez' floor leadership was contagious on a night when MSC truly put forth a total team effort to defeat GSC 14-2 (9-2) for the second time this season.

Hawk Notes...MSC's record stands at 11-6 (8-3 NJAC)....Mullins leads the squad in scoring (21.6 ppg) and minutes played (24:45)....Ristevski leads in rebounding (7.9 rpg)...The Red Hawks have not won three games in a row since the '86-'87 season...Two games are scheduled this week and both are at Panzer Gym. On Saturday, Feb. 1, MSC does battle with a surprising Rutgers-Camden team. The visitors come off the bench last year, while Shannon Shaffer and Judy Stair hit for 14 apiece for the Hawks.

"It was a very big win for us," said Assistant Coach Carolyn Savio. "The team was disappointed after the loss (to Rutgers), and I think that gave us the incentive to come out and play the type of game that we were capable of."

Barnes especially has been a big part of MSC's success this season. She averaged only 5.3 points per game coming off the bench last year, but so far this season the 5'7" guard from Mastic Beach, N.Y. has come into her own and is currently averaging 14.7 ppg.

"Kim has learned to be more selective with her shots," said Savio. "She's beginning to take the higher percentage shots which proves she's maturing as a player."

MSC forward scores 26 points in OT victory

by Keith A. Idec

The Red Hawks, who have suffered through a tough season, pulled off a huge upset Saturday, defeating Trenton State 54-50 in overtime at Panzer Gym. Junior forward Lee Mullins led the way for the Red Hawks, scoring 26 points. The victory broke TSC's domination of 12 straight victories against MSC over the past six seasons.

MSC trailed the contest 46-37, with 6:05 left in regulation. Soon after, the Red Hawks picked up the intensity. Consequently, MSC stepped up its defensive effort, as TSC managed to get off one shot in the last 6:05 and also was forced to turn the ball over three times during that span. MSC went on to outscore the Profs 18-2 in the extra session.

Despite trailing 15 points with 14 minutes remaining, the Red Hawks were 14-4 over the winter, pulling off a dramatic win over the Profs.

"We were capable of," said Barnes, who led the Red Hawks with 18 points, while Shannon Shaffer added 14 apiece for the Red Hawks.
