Two residents arrested for possession of marijuana

by Suzanne E. Potts

Two residents of Bohn Hall were arrested for possession of a controlled dangerous substance on Wednesday, Jan. 22, at about midnight, according to Campus Police.

The Assistant Manager on duty, Stacey Ballou, noticed a strong odor of marijuana coming from the resident's room and reported it.

Campus Police officers responded and knocked on the door. The residents, John Fischer and Jeffrey Springsteen, ages 19 and 20, opened the door and appeared to be under the influence, according to Campus Police. Sgt. Paul Cell, the arresting officer, then asked the residents if they would give consent to a search of their room and they agreed.

Marijuana and rolling papers were found and the students were charged with possession of 50 grams of a controlled substance. The residents could not be reached for comment.

Dean of Students Edward Martin said, "I was called the night it happened and made a decision that night for the two students to be suspended for one year with the right to appeal. The appeal would simply involve writing a letter to the vice president."

He continued to say that all these instructions were written down and given to the students.

"I am very sorry that it occurred, but they violated the law, they have been arrested and they have jeopardized their enrollment as well as their financial aid," Martin said.

Access road open

The new access road was opened this month so students may get to the student parking lots straight from Valley Road.

Obituary:
Spanish-Italian Dept. secretary dies

by Nancy Gannon

Marie Rose, 67, a secretary in the foreign language Dept. at MSC, died last Monday, Jan. 20, in Mountainside Hospital.

According to Diomie Johnson, a close friend and co-worker, Rose suffered a stroke on Jan. 5 in her Bloomfield home and was taken to Mountainside Hospital where she remained in a coma until her death.

Rose had been the secretary for the Spanish-Italian Dept. since 1986. Prior to that, she was employed by the Maintenance Dept. of MSC for two years.

The Foreign Language Office, located on the fourth floor of Partridge Hall, is where Rose worked with Johnson and fellow administrators. The staff expressed their sorrow about the loss of Rose.

"She was a very close friend, we spent more time together than with our families," said Johnson. "She was a lively, energetic and warm person with a wonderful sense of humor."

Phyllis Brighton, a secretary in the English Dept., described Rose as "a very smart and lively person. She was a wonderful friend and we’ll miss her."

Dr. Victoria Larson, a professor in the classic Dept., said, "She was a dynamic kind of person. She was always very cheerful and kind."

Diana Guemarez, a professor in the Spanish-Italian Dept., said, "I met her a year and a half ago. She’s been very nice and helpful to me."

Funeral Services were held last Wednesday morning at St. Francis Xavier Church in Bloomfield. Many of the faculty and staff of Partridge Hall attended.

Rose is survived by husband Carmine and daughter Lisa.

Safety enhancement

MSC is set to begin two projects at an estimated cost of $1.1 million to enhance comfort and safety levels on campus. A new energy management system including isolated computers that will be wired to energy-using equipment in certain buildings and a fire alarm system that sends alarm signals over phone wires to a new supervisory panel in the police building.

Although the functions performed will be similar to those already provided, this project will enhance the reliability of the overall system, "Quinn said.

Campus speaker

Bishop Joseph Francis, a man who walked with Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. in Montgomery, Alabama will be coming to our campus today to speak on the life and times of King during MSC's second annual Martin Luther King, Jr. Convocation sponsored by the Campus Ministry Council. Francis is currently the chairman of the Peace and Justice Commission of the Archdiocese of Newark. The convocation will begin at 12:10 p.m. in the Student Center Ballroom A.

South African Police arrested 10 white extremist leaders. The extremists were picked up in raids meant to gather right wingers who are threatening violence as a reaction to Pretoria's moves to share power with blacks at the national level.

U.N. Inspectors were assaulted by a crowd of Iraqi men in Baghdad as police stood by and watched the attack. The inspectors are in Iraq to search for hidden biological, chemical, and nuclear weapons.

Israelis and Arabs met in Moscow in unprecedented meetings. Arabs are still demanding Israel surrender the occupied territories. The meeting itself was an accomplishment, although more meetings were discussed to cover the problems regarding the representation of the Palestinians. The incident was the end of a 9000 mile cross country tour organized by the Indian people's party which feels India should end sectarian violence and embrace the Hindu culture, 80% of India's nearly one billion people.

The Australian Olympic team's doctor said he could not, in good conscience, support his basketball team that it would be safe to play with Magic Johnson. He said it would be possible for players to contract the HIV virus from Johnson through what he called "a small yet realistic threat."

Governor Jim Florio said his proposed 1.57 billion dollar budget for New Jersey reaffirms his commitment to reducing property taxes, improving education, and creating jobs to reduce the pain of the recession.

Newark became one of 13 cities nationwide to win a five year, $3 million foundation grant to run an innovative community based program aimed at reducing demands for drugs and alcohol. The Robert Wood Johnson Foundation donation will be used in its first stage to help rejuvenate communities through activity and open a drug and alcohol rehabilitation program for women.

Instead of driving on the highway's of New Jersey, a speed monitoring report was conducted in our state to reveal that most people ignore the 55 mph speed limit. According to the report, only 10% of our states drivers exceed 65 mph at one time, and only 33% go over 60 mph.

N.J. Transit posted their best ontime performance for trains in December 1991, over 95%. Transit officials hope this statistic will convince legislators to let go of any ideas of increased fares. The Atlantic City line posted the best mark, with a 97.2% ontime rate.

LASO y WCSA preperan viaje al Republica Dominicana

por Jorge L. Cruz

La Organización de Estudiantes Latinoamericanos (LASO), clase I de la Asociación del Gobierno Estudiantil (SGOA) y la Asociación Estudiantil del Colegio de Fin de Semana (WCSA), clase II del S.G.A. han organizado un viaje al Republica Dominicana para las vacaciones de primavera.

Esta es una buena noticia para la comunidad hispana de MSC, ya que esta es la primera vez desde hace varios años que estas dos organizaciones comparten un evento de esta magnitud.

La comunidad hispana ha venido en aumento dentro del planeta, y es de bastante importancia que todas las organizaciones hispanas del colegio trabajen en conjunto para así ayudar a los estudiantes a la vez crear una interacción con otras organizaciones del colegio. De tal manera, ambas comunidades podrían entenderse mejor.

Dicho evento se puede tomar como un ejemplo para otras organizaciones que deseen unir sus esfuerzos para crear una mejor comunicación entre la comunidad hispana y todos los estudiantes en general.

The Dominican Republic is a beautiful island located in the Caribbean Sea and the trip will help to celebrate the quincentennial of the arrival of Christopher Columbus causing the first encounter between two worlds.

This is a good opportunity for the students to know more about the culture, traditions and history of the island and have an unforgettable experience.

The cost of the trip is $699 and the package includes the round trip airfare and transfers, six days and five nights in a five star hotel in Santo Domingo and Puerto Plata, a welcome drink, two meals a day, exclusive free admission to area night clubs and free water sports.

The trip is planned to be from March 16 to March 21 and it requires a $50 deposit due on February 8. For further information contact the following numbers: (201) 861-2177, 893-7230 and 4440.

The highway of hell

So Pat had this Jeep Wagoneer with big wheels and four-wheel drive. Living in affluent Montclair in the summer with no dinero, you find yourself looking for any sort of trouble for amusement. We were lucky; our amusement came in the form of the state’s biggest man-made mudslide - The Honorable Jim Florio Access Road. Back in August, it was this ridiculous slime pit, a foot deep in gook, cut recklessly out of the back of the quarry. But, as anyone with enough illegal substances in their bodies knows, two restless guys with a Jeep Wagoneer are mystically drawn to man-made mudslides (perhaps a regression to our elementary school days, only our Tonka toys never needed a tune-up.)Regardless, boots on feet, cigarettes in hand, we sped and slid wildly down the deliciously, deadly damp dirt, laughing hysterically. Whoosh—Wroom—Vroom! Splat!! We made more tracks on that unfinished road than any bulldozer could’ve hoped to tackle. It was ridiculous, this huge swath in the mountain, carved by some drunken meteor of doom. Back behind the huge earth movers and dump trucks (which we tried to hot wire, to no avail) there were these enormous piles of woodchips - the obvious remains of hundreds of trees instantly martyred in the name of progress. You could climb atop these piles, after much clawing and clamoring, and see clear across into Clifton and beyond. The chips, still warm from the kill, emitted a strange odor, not unlike that of that cedar chest you got freshman year to keep your stuff in if you were living in the dorms. Anyway, Pat stood on these wood chips, gazing down upon the unpaved mud monster, flicked his cigarette in kind of exasperation, and proceeded to jump, dirt-clogged boos first, down the side of the pile. We jumped back in the Jeep, the Pogues blasting from the stereo, and blew the curb, leaving the virgin road alone for the rest of the summer.

Finally, it’s January and the dam thing is done, more Oz-like now than anything else. The red brick-lined walls beckon you to take that first 10 mph curve a little faster than you should. The corporate desk pigs who designed the road are undoubtedly praying for a mild winter, considering it snowed 1/4 inch last weekend and boom! the gates mysteriously shut tight.

Your first trip up Montclair’s newest wigging wonder should be treasured and remembered. Consider yourself a pioneer of sorts, chartering unknown territory - the southeast passage, as it were. Gaze longingly at the puke green vegetable growth, placed carefully along the sides of the entrance way. Wave hello to the people in their condos on your right, as they cry uncontrollably in their morning coffee over their plummeting property values. Perhaps if you really want to make a lasting impression, you could cause the first traffic accident, just for kicks. Allow that guy tailgating you to get real close then, BLAMO, slam those brakes. Or better yet, just drive down the wrong way. Head-on collisions are always cause for headlines and besides, who can blame you? It’s a new road for Christ’sake! You didn’t know.

In years to come, one can be assured that a great many grand and glorious people will navigate our new access road. By then, countless accidents, breakdowns, road kills and traffic citations will have occurred. Maybe by then, the asphalt God might even have a real name: President Reid Way or Dean Martin Avenue. Tony Susco Terrace? The possibilities are endless. But you will have the honor of saying you were the true pioneer. You’ll come back as some grouchy and cynical alumnus and say, “I remember in my day, we used to shovel this road with our bare hands, wearing only socks, so we could get to class on time...” And we enjoyed it.

Yes, I would want to know what kind of person he is. The way he acts in his private life could reflect how he acts in office.

College is not easy, as many struggling students know. Cramming until three in the morning, living for days at a time on black coffee and caffeine pills, and even drilling information sometimes doesn't help. Is there a solution? Michael Moore, a Rutgers-New Brunswick journalism student, has one.

Cheating

With his self-published book, titled Cheating 101: The Benefits and Fundamentals of Earning the Easy "A," Moore offers students the chance to read what they may have been doing for years. "And they'll make a student a better prepared person for the working world. General Education Requirements, as Moore puts it, are "pure capilistic cow manure. You must realize that college, above all, is big business. And instead of turning you loose after four, five, or six, maybe even seven years, if you're stupid enough to stay that long."

Although some members of the academic community are not too thrilled about a cheating manual wading through college campuses, Moore remains undaunted. So far, he has gotten grave (rave?) reviews by the Rutgers faculty, and as far off as Ohio State, and the list is growing. Is cheating a problem on college campuses? According to a 1991 study by Rutgers University, which covered 31 of the country's most prestigious universities, found that nearly 67 percent of all college students cheat at some time during their undergraduate years. Out of an approximate 12 million undergraduate students nationwide, that works out to be just over eight million students. To most faculty, yes, cheating is a problem. Also, while Moore says that Cheating 101 should be required reading for any student wanting to be one step ahead of the grade race, MDC Dean of Students Edward Anders believes that the book should be read by the faculty, especially junior faculty, to keep them aware of what's out there in terms of cheaters. Moore, however, sees it differently. "I realize this book will raise a few eyebrows and perhaps even a few blood pressures among members of the academic community. That's tough. My book addresses what [professors] have traditionally ignored. Cheating is not a 'problem,' as you perceive it. It is reality. And cheating is a direct offspring of [their] "efforts" as educators."

"Instead of teaching subjects to students, [they] teach at them," Moore said. "Cheating is a natural defense mechanism triggered by irrelevant courses and professors who look forward to their paycheck more than they do to teaching. My apologies to the true educators in America. You know who you are. I thank God for you."

"That statement is a cop-out," said Martin. Also disagrees on Moore's view of GER's. "At MSC, we believe that a broad curriculum is important to a student. While it may be difficult to see the importance of a GER course now, the totality of the experience won't be seen until later."

The book in itself is an entertaining read. Its six chapters (Growing Dissent, Removing the Blinders, Defining and Denying, A Lesson in Class, Term Paper News, and The Planned Getaway) contain quite a bit of information that is already common knowledge, but offers insights on new and different ways of cheating than the average student is geared to. Moore's book covers that, too. Cheating 101 is an entertaining read. As one or two new techniques she learned, most of the other ideas she already knew, such as cheat or crib sheets, and hiding test answers in a skirt hem. She also liked the chapter on getting caught (The Planned Getaway). When confronted with the charge of cheating, most students will deny it. "Everyone knows not to admit you cheated," said Schirloff.

"I think the book's cool," said Natalie Vaccaro, a freshman Fine Arts major. "But you really can't use it much at MSC. A lot of the stuff in the book is made for large classes, and because of the lower student-to-teacher ratio here it makes it hard to use." She also admits that she already knew about 60 percent of the information in the book, but picked up an idea or two.

Have cheating manuals been around for awhile now? Don't Cliff's Notes fall into the same category? Theoretically, a student could walk into the College Bookstore and pick up a copy of Cliff's Notes about Mobly Dick, and read that as opposed to the actual book. Not only will that student get the novel in a condensed form, but the student will get information about the characters, genre, setting, and a host of other areas. How does that compare with Moore's "Cliff's Notes" on college?

"I think that the book is different from Cliff's Notes," said Martin. "Cheating 101 covers activities that are a violation of most college's policies. Cliff's Notes have been accepted by the academic community as a guide, or an outline."

At best, Cheating 101 is an entertaining read, as well as a defense manual for professors who want a little more in their arsenal against cheaters. However, if a student gets caught cheating, he or she risks legal action, and possible expulsion from school.

Moore's book covers that, too.
The fourth amendment of the United States Constitution protects "the right of people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures."

The MSC Residence Life Appointment/Handbook states that "although residents have a right to personal privacy, Residence Life professional staff as well as the Campus Police have the right to enter any student room, if an emergency occurs, without giving advance notice [italics added]." Furthermore, it states "you may be asked to reveal the contents of bags, boxes, etc. if the presence of alcohol is suspected," upon entering your residence hall.

Quite clearly, the MSC Residence Life Appointment/Handbook and the Constitution of the United States are at odds. To whom would you like to trust your civil liberties? I'll take my chances with the administration. But what makes me nervous is that the "war on drugs" (and at MSC, the war on alcohol) seems to be degenerating into a war on civil rights and privacy.

Perhaps the best example of a violation of privacy on campus is the Residence Life bag check policy. On certain nights, tables are set up and the bags of every student entering residence halls are checked. I guess being a college student automatically makes one suspected of smuggling alcohol; remember, Residence Life only reserves the "right" to check the belongings of persons suspected of having alcohol.

Most of us have nothing to hide, so these intrusive policies are merely mildly annoying and/or insulting. But once the administration is allowed to disregard some of our civil rights, none of them seem quite safe anymore.

MSC reserves the right...

Apparently nothing is as simple as it could be. All I did was stop in at the convenience store in the Student Center to purchase a "sugar fix" to see me through registration when voila! There they were, several plastic holders for six-packs of soda in the trash basket. How could I leave them there without raising a question or two? So...

ME: What happens to these plastic holders?
CASHIER: Not much. They are tossed out.
ME: Does anyone cut them up so that ducks, birds and fish do not get caught in them and end up strangling?
CASHIER: Nope.
ME: Why not?
CASHIER: We are too busy.

There's no place like home

Okay, here I am again, my 6th semester moving into the dorms. As I approach Blanton Hall, I see a six foot glacier on the side of the building underneath a sagging ceiling. As I ice skate to the door to check-in, I wonder "What now?"

The tired RA says "Hi, welcome back. Oh, by the way, there's no heat or hot water." Oh, is that all? I see. Friday, I couldn't buy books in the College Store because a water-pipe broke (this caused a "fire hazard," but I guess it didn't affect the plethora of people in the ballrooms for some convention), but I can live in the arctic temperatures of the fourth floor in Blanton without bathing.

I don't know, but when something this serious occurs at home, whether it's Sunday, Monday or Christmas, there is a serviseman to fix it. The dorms are our home for eight months or so, and we never get consideration. Fire drills at 3 a.m., shootings or whatever the crisis, it seems it takes weeks to correct the problem.

For once, can't the dorm population have a peaceful semester? Less people live here each year due to these annoying problems. It's now Tuesday. I want to take a nice hot shower. I guess my choices are home or in another dorm.

I hope that things will improve, because many students are talking about commuting. I realize these things take time, but hey, we're paying for certain little privileges like water. Come on, splurge on the time and a half to pay the plumber and get the pipes fixed before 500 students move in. Check the rooms and make sure they have heat, two beds and two desks. Give us a peaceful semester, so we will want to come back.

There are a few little known facts that you, the reader, must be made aware of before we get into the substantive part of this soon-to-be elucidating essay. The first new fact that I require you, the reader, to be not necessarily comfortable with, but to be made aware of nonetheless, is the sad fact that this may indeed be the substantive portion of this aforesaid soon-to-be elucidating essay. The question that arises even from within my convoluted and entirely self-serving mind is; "What is he trying or, more appropriately, what is he trying to say?" One must wonder; if he truly has nothing to say why is he writing a column in The Montclarion, formerly widely esteemed before he started writing for it? Taking issue with myself, and answering my own pertinent and poignant question, I interject that you cannot read nothing. We all have, at one time or another, steadfastly maintained that we have done nothing, seen nothing or heard nothing. But not the case of the student who speaks to all of us at least until we are firmly ensconced within the second paragraph, has read nothing. It is unequivocally impossible to read nothing. Hence, I must be saying something simply because you are reading it.

The something that I have to say,

Mental Jewelry shines

by Joe Ventola

Live-Mental Jewelry-Radioactive/Neve

Out of the depths of Erin, Pa., comes the band Live and their debut album. Produced by ex-Talking Head Jerry Harrison, this album is one of MCA’s most hopeful prospects for 1992. In fact, on the heels of MCA’s optimism, MTV has interestedly managed to fit the video for the first single, “Operation Spirit,” into daily rotation.

The album itself is a lyrical exploration into mental preconceptions that we all carry with us, thus the title Mental Jewelry. Edward Kowalczyk pronounces this exploratory journey with his somewhat omniscent vocals over a backdrop of percussion and drums provided by Chad Gracey. Couple this with the bass of Patrick Dahlheimer and guitar of Chad Taylor and the resulting sound is one reminiscent of the pop/alternative sounds of the Talking Heads (I wonder why?).

The cuts on this track are some of promising cuts, the most interesting of which is a Doorn-sounding anti-racism song called “The Beauty of Gray.” Also apparent are the tribal-style rhythm, while “Mirror Song,” the album’s token ballad, falls short of its goal.

On the whole, the album is conceptually well-intentioned and will satisfy most. However, many of the tracks feel unnatural and inexperienced. The percussive and bass movements become boring and predictable. The vocals do a good job of painting imagery; yet, they suffer from excessive studio-effects. In fact, this album does a good job of highlighting behind slick production and major label backing. This is definitely detrimental to a record that tries to get listeners to search through their inner souls for what is real and true. It would be nice to know how good Live is live.

Vidiot Report:

The Next Generation

by George Olacheski

If you’re a fan of the old fashioned coin-operated video games, you probably remember the mellow oldies such as Asteroids, Defender and Space Invaders. As the cigitrette ad goes, you’ve come a long way, baby. Look at the latest arcade scene. It’s em up on today. Comparing today’s games with yesteryear’s is like comparing a 1992 Corvette ZR-1 to a 1976 Pinot Terminatus 2. Time Traveller with its holographic imagery or the new Dragon’s Lair make every other game reel of obscurity.

Like the coin-op games of days gone by, the Super NES might do that to its country counterpart, the NES. The shooter games out for the NES are vastly overshadowed by the superiority of the SNES. Some of the best shoots are em up on systems out on any system that I’ve played. The original coin-op R-Type is pretty good. Got a little boring, though. Kind of like Asteroids. It isn’t kidding when I say that the SNES version blows away everyone.

When I say blown away, believe me, I would have enjoyed A Wish For Wings That Work. That, however, is not the subject of this week’s Update. Ever since its debut, The Simpsons has done remarkably well in its timeslot. Hell, there are Nintendo games starring Bart, a full-sized coin-op sitting in our MSC gameroom, and oh! The merchandising! Don’t have a cash cow, man! To top it all off, The Simpsons haven’t had serious competition since Cosby.

Until what should happen if Berkeley Breathed should make Bloom County an animated prime time series that happened to air at another timeslot for a test? And if it turned out to be really good, aired it next to The Simpsons? Believe me, with all the Bloom County fans that need another fix that Outland doesn’t seem to be giving, it would work! Just think of the following that Bloom County has. Sure, The Simpsons has a few fans here and there. A good chunk of the kids (emphasis on “kids”) who watch it might not get the off-beat political humor of Breathed’s Pulitzer Prize-winning creation. I admit, some of the stuff Breathed may come up with will go over the heads of the average 10 to 15-year-old who’s only worried about Bart, Luke Perry and 90210. But think of the adults who would eat this stuff up. Come on, admit it. How many Bloom and Outland fans would like to see Deathtongue (a.k.a. Billy & the Boingers) in concert? Or Cutrer John’s U.S. Enterpooll Or Oliver Wendell Jones make cute sweat hair tonic (which C. Everett Koop banned as a controlled substance)?

Bart is pretty much overrated. Sure, he still gets the ratings. That’s why he’s still on the air. But just consider what would happen if Bill the Cat was marketed instead of Bart Simpson coffee mugs, keychains, boxer shorts and contraceptive inserts? Maybe he’d be a better candidate for fraternity beer-bonging T-shirts... Unfortunately, if you need that Bloom County fix, go out to your local bookstore and buy the whole back catalog of books. If you’d like to see Bart eat Opus shorts, man, then call up CBS and tell them. Until then, it looks like we’re stuck with Outland, such as it is.
The Hand that Rocks the Cradle lulls viewers to sleep

by Jodi Schultz

After the death of her husband and miscarriage of her baby, Peyton Flanders' (Rebecca DeMornay) world of privilege and ease comes crashing down, forcing her to start a new life; forcing her puppet strings to break, thus creating a madwoman's soul. The life she insanely craves belongs to Claire Bartel (Annabella Sciorra), a fulfilled and busy, wife, mother and career woman. The perfect life searched for by almost every woman and sickly lusted for by one.

Posing as the ideal mother's helper — a theme that is overused in today's horror industry, but played out rather well — Peyton moves into Claire's home, and in no time, becomes a fixture in the Bartel house, and a trusted friend to the entire family, including husband Michael (Matt McCoy) and young daughter Emma (Madeline Zima), who are immediately infatuated with this ever-helpful and seemingly devoted God-send. Provoking once again, the naivety and instability in today's society. How we can turn on someone who loves us once we get the attention we crave. Selfish little units aren't we!

Only Solomon (Ernie Hudson), the hired handyman, senses that Peyton isn't the pearl everyone thinks she is.

However, before Claire catches on to Peyton's hidden agenda and discovers the shocking truth about the stranger living in their midst, it may be too late to save her family; from the chilling and demented future Peyton has planned for them in Hollywood Pictures' new suspense thriller, The Hand That Rocks the Cradle.

I found the characters to be believable in every aspect. Especially Ernie Hudson whose handicap made his presence on the screen frightening when he would come in contact with Peyton. Even the slightest glance would send chills up my spine. Hudson provided Solomon with true sensitivity and intelligence which made his character probably the most believable in the movie. DeMornay gave the performance of her career as Peyton. She provided a sickly aura throughout the entire movie, and disbursed this insanity into all of us.

The major problem I had with the movie was its lack of true horror. The motives became silly after a while and the true fright came within the last 15 minutes of the movie. I admit the entire movie was disturbing for the mere fact that we do let people manipulate their way into our lives and when faced with the reality of their betrayal we disbelieve it. Despite a few interesting moments, the movie as a whole dragged on.

The Hand That Rocks the Cradle, directed by Curtis Hanson, is not highly recommended by this critic. If you want suspense rent an Alfred Hitchcock movie.

EVERYONE LOOKS FORWARD TO FRIDAYS
Olive Stone's JFK: Single-bullet theory shot down

by Tom Boud

JFK is a consciousness-raising reel that plots a smooth flashbackography, pugnacious acting from Kevin Costner and a trail of investigation that would set just about any mind thinking. Although this Warner Brother's production is liberally drenched in scientific pseudo-probability, a conspiracy, it nonetheless gets the moviegoer's attention by focusing on the real life eccentricities of this Presidential personage.

Kevin Costner is New Orleans District Attorney James Garrison. (Real life Garrison is known for trying unsuccessfully to connect David Ferrie, a pal of Lee Harvey Oswald, to the CIA plot to knock off Kennedy.) After catching wind of the assassination, Garrison embarks upon an investigatory crusade in order to get to the bottom of the matter. However, between government interference, a savage press and disapparening witnesses, it seems he would have an easier time getting to the bottom of the Mafioso plot.

Garrison is fabulous as Jim Garrison. That's because Costner exudes a lot of emotion and conviction. Garrison is a ball of fire with rage, enthusiasm and patriotism. I'll put it to you this way: you know he's a good actor when he keeps up his fiery emotion and conviction throughout this three-hour film.

Concerning director Oliver Stone, you can pretty much say he tackled this daunting task from the best possible source. With scientific acting, a lack of likes, Stone people would attack him furiously for this, Stone primarily examines the validity of the "single bullet theory" (that Lee Harvey Oswald alone killed Kennedy and seriously wounded Texas Governor John Connally with one single bullet out of three fired, a theory officially accepted by the Warren Commission).

Stone raises many questions, such as how Oswald could have aimed, fired and recollected his bolt action rifle in less than six seconds -- something that FBI sharpshooters couldn't do capably in his absence. He questions how Oswald, a mediocre marksman, could have successfully hit a target 88 yards away, traveling 11 miles an hour, through the foliage of an obstructing tree, all within this six-second time frame.

Stone also points out that a lone assassin would have to travel the motorcade was traveling along a straightaway for the best possible aim. However, the area in front of the Texas School Book Depository building is one small area that resists a curve turnoff from Houston Street to Elm Street, which forced the motorcade to slow down to 11 mph and, according to what Stone portrays, is a perfect set-up for a "turkey shoot." There may be many opinions Stone scrutinizes which is one good reason to go out and see JFK.

Although Nov. 22, 1963 is a date long in the past, it must be noted that the Kennedy issue is far from dead. In the Jan. 22 issue of the New York Times, a front page article reports that Congressmman Louis Stokes (D-Ohi), former chairman of the House Select Committee on Assassinations, called for the release of 848 boxes of unpublished documents that, by order of Congress, are to be released by 2022.

Stokes is also pushing for the release of three FBI tapes consisting of conversations between undercover FBI agents and Carlos Marcello, a New Orleans mob figure in which Marcello reportedly said he was involved in the assassination. When FBI Director William S. Sessions was asked by the New York Times about supporting the release of these documents, he was quoted as saying, "The law, of course, will be followed."

Lastly, it must be noted that according to Carl Sifikasi's Encyclopedia of American Crime (Copyright 1982 by Facts on File, Inc., p. 546), a total of 18 million witnesses did not come forward three years following the assassination. Six were shot to death, two committed suicide, three died in car accidents, one was killed by a karate chop to the neck, one is untraceable and the rest of the witnesses suffered fatal heart attacks and two expired from other natural causes. The London Sunday Times hired an actuary to determine the probability of this happening spontaneously. The actuary concluded that odds were 100 quadrillion to one.

A Commentary: JFK Controversy

by Audrey Regan

Olive Stone has said JFK is a "counter myth" to the Warren Report. Yet, so many have criticized this movie as not being true, as being a misrepresentation of history, gross speculation and a confusing mix of fact and fiction. After all, they say, what gives Oliver Stone the right to make a movie like this that speculates and a confusing mix of fact and fiction.

It seems that the controversy surrounding this three-hour movie is coming from the press, the same press who chose to ignore academics.

The American public relies on the cinema for its history lessons.

In the past, it must be noted that the Kennedy issue is far from dead. In the Jan. 22 issue of the New York Times, a front page article reports that Congressmman Louis Stokes (D-Ohi), former chairman of the House Select Committee on Assassinations, called for the release of 848 boxes of unpublished documents that, by order of Congress, are to be released by 2022.

It'll be interesting to see the reaction in a week or two. After catching wind of the assassi­nation, Garrison embarks upon an investiga­tive crusade in order to get to the bottom of the matter. However, between govern­ment interference, a savage press and disapparening witnesses, it seems he would have an easier time getting to the bottom of the Mafioso plot.

Super Bowl was Super Bore

The preparation was unnecessary. The hype was over-exaggerated. And the game was as exciting as a Friday night with Grandma.

The Buffalo Bills were outmatched, outclassed and outcoached by the Washington Redskins in one of the most disappointing Super Bowls ever.

For years, the Super Bowl was a classic game which pitted two well-deserving, evenly-matched teams in a heated battle for football’s world championship. This was true in the 70’s when we saw the classic Steeler-Cowboy confrontations.

Unfortunately, in the last decade, only three games have been decided by less than 10 points. The game is no longer one for the fans to enjoy. It has become an excuse to drink. The fans enjoy what they can’t remember about the game.

Every year from Jan. 1 on, the question everyone asks is, “Where are you going for the Super Bowl?” Few people care about the game. They’re just looking for a warm place to consume alcohol. Most people can’t remember anything that happened in Super Bowl XXIV when the 49ers crushed the Broncos 55-10. I bet most people can’t remember anything from last year as well, except Scott Norwood’s last-second missed field goal.

When I was growing up, the Super Bowl was a celebration which brought family and friends together for four hours of excitement. For the past several years, it has become eight hours of pure disappointment.

At the party I attended, by the start of the third quarter with the ‘Skins up 17-0, I was the only one awake. Everyone else ate, drank and passed out. In a capsule, this shows what the Super Bowl has become -- a Super Bore.

A game that used to be for the fans has become an unbelievable profit-making machine for the respective Super Bowl city, the advertisers and, of course, the beer companies.

Hey! Remember us! There would not be Super Bowls if it weren’t for the fans. We shell out all the cash and then we get bored to death!

I think it’s time for a change. Let’s get back to the basics. Forget the ego. Forget the money and the hype. Forget the Bud Bowl and all the beer. Just play hard, solid football like the game in 1979.

If this could happen, the players, the companies and, more importantly, the fans would be better off. If this would happen, we would be able to call it Super Sunday once again.

Calling the Shots

I knew the game was going to be bad when Bills kicker Brad Daluise "misunderstood the referee’s signal" on the opening kickoff.

What about Thurman Thomas? The Bills’ running back couldn’t find his helmet so he had to sit out the first two plays. This typified the Bills pathetic showing Sunday night.

The MSC women’s basketball team pulled off a dramatic 64-59 victory over Glassboro State College Tuesday night at Panzer Gym.

The Red Hawks, down by 10 with just five minutes left, outscored the Profs 18-3 in the overtime period to overcome their deficit.

MSC trailed by 10 with just 15 seconds left in regulation when sophomore guard Efrain Renee made a 3-point shot to pull the Red Hawks within 6 points with 15 seconds on the clock.

The Profs had one last chance to win the game with less than 10 seconds left, but their last shot was off the mark.

MSC has dominated the Ivy League this season, winning 12 straight games.

MSC past TSC 54-50

by Keith A. Idec

The Red Hawks, who have suffered through a tough season, pulled off a huge upset Tuesday, defeating Trenton State 54-50 in overtime at Panzer Gym.

Junior forward Lee Mullins led the way for the Red Hawks, scoring 26 points. The victory broke TSC's eight-game winning streak.

MSC trailed by 15 points with 14 minutes remaining, yet managed to chip away at the lead thanks to the strong play of Jeanine Mullally, Maritza Martinez and Kim Barnes. Mullally led the Red Hawks with a career-high 18 points. It was the junior guard's fourth free throw in the final minutes which sealed the victory for MSC, whose record now stands at 11-6 (8-3 NJAC).

However, Mullins proved to be a key player down the stretch as she made two steals and turned them into four points to help MSC close to the Profs as crunch time neared.

Martinez' floor leadership was contagious on a night when MSC truly put forth a total team effort to defeat TSC 14-2 (9-2) for the second time this season.

Back in early December the Red Hawks pulled off a dramatic 64-59 victory over the Profs.

The upset marked the first time since 1989 that MSC has won two games in a row.

MSC defeated Rutgers-Newark 74-64 in Upper Montclair. Mullins dropped in 30 points and junior guard's four free throws in the final minutes.

MSC's Garland Gillette skies as he scores a tough basket. The Red Hawks won the game, 74-64.
