MSC may lose winter session but summer vacation may be longer

by Michael Rennie

MSC students may lose the option of taking winter session courses, but could enjoy a longer summer vacation.

Extending the summer break by one week and shortening the winter break by the same are just two of the issues being examined by the calendar and scheduling committee.

Examining the soundness of a three-week consolidated course and a declining winter session registration are a few of the reasons the program is being re-evaluated.

Jessica Bieri, S.G.A. legislator and member of the calendar committee, said that the school year runs too far into the summer compared to most colleges and this makes it harder for students to gain summer employment. Bieri also stated that the idea of an entire semester of study being crammed into a three-week period is what committee members have termed as being “pedagogically unsound.”

The proposal also seems to have the support of a majority vote by the students. As part of the S.G.A. elections ballot in April the question of eliminating the program was asked and 969 students responded with 579 favoring the change while 390 opposed the idea.

Dr. Richard Hodson, chairman of the committee, said that this change is in the discussion stage only. “This change would not take place over night,” he said. “If students here now need these classes to graduate it wouldn’t be fair to them.” Hodson added that this would be a major change and is just part of an overall restructuring of the calendar being considered. Bieri later added that the change is being considered for the 1994-95 school year.

Student reaction to the proposal was predictably mixed. Nicole Troncone, a junior majoring in English, said she has never taken a winter course but has taken a three-week summer class. “I like the idea of getting out early in May,” When asked about the quality of the consolidated course as compared to the regular semester classes she responded, “The quality of the course suffers, it is more difficult for the teacher and the student.” She continued to say that if we eliminated the winter session and started the summer break earlier we could lengthen the short summer courses by one week.

Keith Markowitz, a senior majoring in health education, has taken a chemistry course during the winter break and said he retained the information well. “It was so concentrated and intense that you had no time to fool around.” Markowitz would not only like to see the program continue but would like to see a wider variety of classes offered. Anna Kovacs, a senior in the same major said, “Many students are only looking at getting out a week early in May.” Kovacs would also like to see the program continue.

The main function of the calendar committee is to set the academic calendar for the following school year. There are many issues to consider such as which holidays the school will observe and specific start and finish dates for classes and exams. Each decision must take into account possible ramifications. Any one change may affect dormitory check-in dates, which will affect the maintenance department, food service, campus security, etc.

The calendar committee must now write a recommendation to the college senate, the senate will vote on the recommendation and pass it on to President Reid. Reid will then bring it before the executive committee for final approval.

Mardi Gras celebration at MSC

by Melissa Myers

The first Mardi Gras celebration will be held this weekend April 24-25 at the college Amphitheater. The event is an attempt to cut apathy on campus by promoting harmony and unity through an educational yet entertaining atmosphere, said Sandra Garcia of the Latin American Student Organization.

The weekend’s events will run from 12:00 pm to 7:00 pm and are designed to be entertaining as well as educational. Saturday’s events will include: jugglers, marachi bands, a Broadway musical review, an international fashion show, Latinísimo, performances of OSAU dance troops, a gospel choir and other local bands. While on Sunday Class One Concerts will be sponsoring performances by Durable Planet, Sweet Lizard Illtet, and D’Influence.

Organizations such as Student Intramural Leisure Council will be sponsoring intramural activities while the Greek Organizations will be sponsoring booths, tables and participating in lip sync and step shows. Aldan Food Service will also be there with refreshments.

The Mardi Gras: Multiculturalism At It’s Finest originated in the newest subcommittee formed in the Student Government Association known as the Multicultural Advisory Committee (M.U.C.). This committee was formed in response to the growing need for students to have a place to bring their problems and suggestions concerning racial issues that arise on campus.

“The Mardi Gras is the start of a change in the student body as far as apathy is concerned and will also bring a new positive awareness to what multiculturalism really means,” said Garcia.

Earth Day celebrated at MSC

by Kathy Garcia

The MSC Conservation Club held its 1993 Earth Day celebration on Wednesday, April 21 at the Student Center Mall. The event was part of a week long celebration of the earth which included environmental speakers, campus cleanup, and petition signing.

There was no set theme to the celebration instead students included as many different environmental issues as they could into the fair. One of the main goals of the day was the signing of a petition for the renewal of the Endangered Species Act. Over 200 petitions were signed to send to both state and federal representatives.

The Endangered Species Act was not the only petition being passed out at the celebration. Other petitions included were, one against the Mitsubishi Corporation and it’s affiliation with companies that are destroying the rainforests, the other against the legalization of the sport of whaling in other countries around the world.

Students say that the day was a big success. Ann Caldiero, an MSC student with the Conservation Club said, “We try to educate people so that they know they have the choice to buy products that were made with natural things.” She also said that students should be aware of the different companies that contribute to environmental organizations.

Earth Day, some students said is a day in which we celebrate the earth and teach those who don’t know that we can make it a better place. As Caldiero points out, “they’ll know what’s going on and hopefully make a change.”

Other organizations that participated in the celebration were:

- The Body Shop, The New Jersey School of Conservation, Rain Forest Relief, New Jersey Animal Rights, and PSEG.

This is the first occasion that all Ethnic, Greek and Class One Organizations will have the opportunity to work together as well as with the faculty, staff and administration. Every organization involved will be using their own budget to contribute to the funding and success of this event.

"The faculty, staff and administration applaud the initiative and enthusiasm of the students," said Ron Hollander, the chair of the Multicultural Initiative Subcommittee on Campus Climate and Ethical Concerns.

Check out Campus carnival is not serving to replace Montclair's annual Spring Carnival, which has been canceled this year due to several problems that occurred at last year's carnival. The events scheduled to take place are designed to have a calming effect opposed to the high level of excitement a carnival produces.

The event has been publicized on our campus only in an attempt to minimize the threat of outside problems and to concentrate the effort towards our campus and students. The necessary precautions for extra security have been taken.

We need writers to cover the 1992 yearbook release delayed, to be available in May and sent to '92 seniors. Call 893-5241 today!

by David Ecker

The 1992 edition of the Montclair State College La Campana Yearbook should have been available last fall, but due to the delay caused by the problems of that year's staff, it will be available in May and sent to the 1992 seniors, due to the efforts of the 1993 staff, who in addition to handling last year's work, is ahead of schedule with the 1993 edition, said Walter Kulick, Editor In Chief.

Kulick said that he finished the second and last proof of the 1992 book last week. He also said that it will take two or three weeks for the publisher, Jostens, to print it.

Kulick said that he expects the 1993 book to be ready as soon as the middle of September. Kulick said that it was the Editor In Chief, who in 1992 was Kevin Onorevole, who was ultimately responsible to make sure that the book, which is usually around 300 pages, came out in time. Kulick also said that the Editor In Chief's responsibilities included overseeing every facet in the book's production.

In a telephone interview Monday afternoon, Onorevole said that he had nothing to say about last years difficulties.

Nancy Villano, the organization's treasurer who also served on the 1992 staff, said that last year's staff were mostly made up of seniors. She said that many of them held major positions, and were graduating in Spring 1992 semester, leaving much of the work to the rest of the staff in the fall. Villano also said that she felt Onorevole did not check up on people, such as the section editors and the people working under them.

"We had pages left to us that could be filled under the following categories: completed, missing photos, missing copy, and blank pages, and one batch of proofs that needed to be approved," said Villano.

Villano said that the 1992 La Campana Academics section editor Alison O'Dowd never did her section, and left at the end of the year taking all her materials home.

One of the staff's five photographers, Mike Bleeker, who came in March last year, said that one reason why he left after a couple of weeks was due to the inaccessibility of the staff and equipment. "It was impossible to get a camera, it was impossible to get anything, it was impossible to get in the office," said Bleeker. He also said that the board informed the 1992 staff that the problems were going on, the organization really exists in that function or area.

Krupa said that the problems of the 1992 staff were similar to that of 1990. He said that the fact that the 1990 staff, headed by Editor In Chief William Cogen, did not complete the book caused the 1991 staff to complete the book in three months during the summer of 1991. He said that the 1991 staff was dedicated to making sure that the 1990 book would be ready at the agreed time, which was in the fall.

Krupa said that the type of problem is not unique, and that if the interest lies in having a yearbook, students should find realistic options that suit their needs. He also said that if student activism in a group or function is low, the SGA and the student groups should re-evaluate whether student interest really exists in that function or group.

Kulick said that although the 1990 staff does not have an advisor, one is currently being searched for. He also said that while this had been going on, the organization had been functioning quite well.

Mixed reactions about the book came from the 1992 graduates and seniors, currently enrolled. One graduate, Dan Rice, said it did not matter to him because he was not involved with it. Claims, Sandy Garcia said that she felt bad for the 1993 staff because they had to work on two books.

Kulick said that he commends his staff on the efforts they are making to complete both books.

Do you think the FBI handled the crisis in Waco, Texas properly?

Yes—but I think such extreme action should have been taken sooner.

I think they did the best they could with the situation. The people were brainwashed and really believed that guy, so the FBI could not just force the people out if they didn't want to go.

I loved my 75 VW Bus. Its dead now. I miss it. Dig that.

Alright look, I'm sorry. Really. Its been hectic, y'know. I've had ravioli coming out of my ears for the last three weeks. And I'm not talking good ravioli like Celentano or anything-I'm talking Chef Bayardes or Franco Ameri- can monsters popping out of my nasal cavities like bullets from a shotgun. There's an unwritten law in the universe that only allows a person a certain number of posi­tive things in his existence. A metaphorical quota, so to speak.

Pulling your massive quaff from the back of your head, you scream with froth­ing anxiety and dart around your bedroom, pulling your hair and scratching your face. Throwing­ your pants over your head and a shoe on each elbow, you clamber down the stairs and out the door, the morning sun blazing into the fragile retinas of your eyes like laser beams from the stratosphere.

Getting into your 75 VW Bus, you turn the engine over and peal out into the neighborhood. About at the entrance of the Park­

Now 'plink plink' is not a good sound under most circum­stnaces, especially when you are getting hurtling yourself towards certain doom at 65 MPH down the P-way. Nevertheless, you press on, baby, press ever onwards towards your destination.

Cranking the radio louder, you peer into your rearview mirror and notice billowing white smoke pouring from the back of the bus, leaving Honda's and Tercel's weeping and dodging your noxious emmissions and plowing into concrete dividers.

It is time to make a decision. You can recog­nize the agonizing sights and sounds of your Bus con­veying to you and for the betterment of public safety, abandon it at the next toll plaza, OR, push on with disregard for the health and well being of yourself and fellow drivers. I mean, you do still have to get to work. You start to try... "PLEASE! Critics always have conflicting opinions, and I am no excep­tion. Well, this time I'm disputing the mighty TG Guide. This week, they are offering the "All-time Best TV," and being the argumentative little snob that I am, I have to put in my two cents. Here it is. The Couch Potato Update. All-time Best TV.

Best Sitcom: M*A*S*H.

Figtteyheadcult, the merly men and women of the 4077th get my vote, and certainly blow most of the junk that's on TV today out of the water. Cheers runs a close second, but M*A*S*H blended comedy, intimacy, frustration, war, and made it all come together.

Best Movie: Hill Street Blues. Hill Street also gets my vote for Best Dramatic Series. It was a remarkable show for the seven seasons it was on, and it did the most gracious thing it could—quit while it was ahead, rather than shifting its writing staff and write "Bobby comes out of the shower" quality stories. Best Nightime Talk Show Host: Johnny Carson. Yeah. as if there would be any other choice. He is the indisputable master of the late night, and everyone believes he will have the honor and terror of having to live up to him and his skits.

Best News Show: 60 Min­utes. This one was a tough one. 20/20 is too lofty, and the only current contention in the field (not in the timeliness, other America's favorable stopwatch has is the Little Rascals fame. Well, Spunky called me of late to tell me he's do­ing fine. He's looking forward to doing some personal appearances up this way (He lives in Texas) perhaps with Tommy Bondi ("Butch") and he's playing a lot of golf. If you have an organization that would like to sponsor a Spunky and/or Butch personal appearance, write The Butter Fly, 1 Pac- man, The Montclaron, 113 Student Center Annex, Montclaron State College, Upper Montclaron, N.J. 07043. In addition to Spunky told me that he will be appearing on this weeks episode of Cheers. So check it out...

"Now,y'all listen up! Hear! When westerns like Unforgiven are winning Best Picture awards, well of course we're due for a shot of old west shootemups from every market. Kurt Russell(Backdraft) and Kevin Costner(Dances With Wolves) are both starring in films about Wyatt Earp. Russell's film, Tombstone is a Disney film, and we never know what that means anymore, does Costner's film, without an official title, is still in development. I'm looking forward, however, to Geronimo, starring Dances With Wolves and Last of the Mohicans own Wes Studi. Jason Patric(Bush) also stars as the opposing cavalier officer. Look for it this summer! And fi­nally, there is talk of an F-Troop film. Where will the madness end?

It's official. DeNiro(Mad Dog and Glory) has been signed to play Frankenstein's monster for Tri-Star. Kenneth Brannagh(Henry V, Dead Again) will play the good doctor and will also direct. There's also a rumor that Francis Ford Coppola(Bram Stokers Dracula) will be the chief producer, but I could not con­firm this. And finally some PROPHET notes. To Maryann, Happy Secretaries Day now, where the bell's my tea? To Joe, The Squid, thanks for the birthday present. To the leader of the Hat Squad, cheer up. "Summer set to ruin your happy camp memories"

by Mark Loughlin

Remember those good old days when Mom and Dad used to ship you off to summer camp, and you'd get back to nature with a kindly old gentleman named Uncle Lou who would show you a moose in its natural habitat? No? Then I guess Indian Summer will not be for you. This new ensemble nostalgia comedy is from writer-director Mike Binder, who prior to filmmaking was best known as an extremely unfunny comedian and winner of the Danny Bonaduce look alike contest. Here, he has assembled an incredibly talented group of young actors who do a lot more justice than his ill formed script deserves. Vincent Spano, Elizabeth Perkins, Kevin Pollak, Matt Craven, Bill Paxton, Julie Warner, Diane Ladd and Kimberly Williams-are the now yuppie group of former campers invited back to their beloved Camp Tamakwa by their former head counselor Uncle Lou, played by Alan Arkin. Also along for the ride is Evil Dead director Sam Raimi, who doesn't speak much, but has most of the laughs in the film. I won't regurgitate the story of Indian Summer, because I don't want to ruin the shocking plot development that occurs about halfway through...just kidding. Actually, that's all there is to it. A bunch of former campers get together to spend a week contemplating their lives, and rebuilding their relationships. Sounds good, but Binder's script, seems to be written in secret Tamil/Swahili Indian code language. We are supposed to laugh when they tell stories of twenty years ago, when so and so made out by the swing set. It's hard, actually impossible, to make the audience feel nostalgia for something that they have never come close to experiencing. There's a two minute prologue, but after that, it's just "remember when?" talk. If you've been to a summer camp, perhaps you'll be able to relate a bit, but dialogue like, "we ought to spend the rest of their lives a living hell," Kevin Pollak barely gets out the protracted line, now he has to make it funny.

Binder definitely seems to have a passion for his subject, but his direction lacks any inspiration and the end result makes it seem like this could be a glorified TV movie of the week.

The plot would be perfect for a Meatballs cast reunion. They pull ugly pranks on each other, run around in the woods and "count" each other. The only difference is in Indian Summer they get humorous once in a while, something sparing us in the Bill Murray film. After all, it is a bit difficult to take people seriously when you are sleeping in little cabins with pictures of Spiderman on the wall, and eating Frosted Flakes. Perhaps this is why Binder would probably be like making a serious film about a high school marching band and Picture it, a stirring portrait of a troubled young musician, who wears a big feather on his head.

Indian Summer stars Elizabeth Perkins, Diane Lane, Alan Arkin, and Matt Craven

Get out something to write because this will be the only and last time I'll explain, cue up the reverberation Eddie (Okay, it's on), The Greatest Of All Review Formats, Formats, Formats.

There are three categories. The first is the traditional five star rating. The next is the number of good songs compared to the number of total songs (ex: 7 of 10). Thank you Eddie. And the last criteria and probably the most important to the reader, is the number of times I've listened to the album. For example, "5 Listens" or "Didn't Bother". Finally, now to the river.

You know, you're Eddie, the Mets could have had three Cy Young pitchers... And Cone should have had a Cy Young, except that the year he went 20-3, Orel Hershiser had a better season than Cy Young ever did. If Schuerock could ever put it all together, they could have sent Fernandez to the bullpen and have the two most dominant relievers in the game. I don't know why Caution couldn't have loosened the purse strings a little and (tap tap tap tap tap). Okay, okay, here we go. For all of you, who like me, know nothing about music and have a guitar collecting dust somewhere, this review's for you. All right, here goes nothing.

Emerson, Lake & Palmer - Black Moon: With drummer Cozy Powell out and founding bassist Carl Palmer back in, ELP finally disbanded their ultra top secret Senate subcommittee, headed by Senator Bob Dole, to find a drummer whose last name begins with a "P". (Your federal taxes at work.) Their multi-million dollar search began with a fake phone number, after a lengthy courtship. As was Rangers' defense man James Patrick, whose unconventional double handed hockey stick method turned the Senate's twenty million dollar drum set into a pile of ruble. And let's face it the Rangers are still in the thick of things (Ha!).

The next candidate, Soon-Yi Previn was left dangling by Mark Loughlin. Ross Perot who later declined, then hinted on accepting, did. But she wasn't alone as George Pitman from Queens and Shirley McClaine also got the ox. That's right, the ox. Ms. McClaine claimed to have been decoated drummer John Bonham in a previous life but had to be reminded that the committee To Find Mediocre, Aging Actresses Who Were John Bonham In A Previous Lifetime was down the hall.

The committee finally decided on political activist Ross Perot who later declined, then hinted on accepting, did in fact, and was finally roughed up by some Senate pages and kicked out of the building. After a lengthy contract negotiation, the committee signed former Eagles defensive lineman Reggie White, but had to be told by someone with half a brain that not only did his name not begin with a "P" but he couldn't even play the * * drums! Rebuffed by the NAACP, Jesse Jackson almost forced his candidacy by leading a march of thousands of drummer demonstrators to the gates of Congress. After being told that there was this groupie named "Tawnwe" waiting for them in the lobby of the local Holiday Inn, the crowd quickly dispersed. Erik Estrada came in, offered to take drum lessons and change his name to "Pestrada." The committee agreed to the name change and kicked out a furious Pestrada, all the while screaming "You want something with a "P" I'll give you something with a "P"!"

A few days later a spokesperson for ELP informed the committee that months ago, the band had agreed to rejoin with Carl Palmer. And well, they made a fantastic album. See you next week. Not. /8 of 10/ Listen.

John Toth Brings Intermedia Art To Montclair State

by Mary Idell

What was missing from the theory of evolution? The Einstein dream state. The flaming hoofer. Okay. John Toth has always had different ideas, but it wasn’t until he started working on his Amiga 2000, that he was able to put into a mass forum what he visualized in his mind. Toth’s overwhelming theme is diversity. It’s not enough that he’s a sculptor, painter, and graphic artist. He’s always believed that the medium is only a starting point in his journey to express himself. To this end, he’s taken his art and become a composer, a choreographer and a film maker to accurately reproduce what he envisions in his mind. When he is called a “intermedia” artist, there is no understatement to his talent.

Last year, Lori Young, a professor in the Art dept asked Toth to do an expanded version of his “Red Room”. Toth was a graduate student with the Art dept. Toth was impressed with the range of artists that had been asked to do the show, and accepted. This resulted in probably the best art Longest Art Forum yet, as his show lasted a shade under two hours. At times, it was repetitious, but no one could deny the originality of the work. The first piece was called “Pointing Man”. It was a video self portrait of digitized images, and a multitude of color changes. The computer represents his element of choice, he is reared as a multitude of distorted photographs flashed on. The fact that there are only 200 colors in painting, while there are two million in a computer, not only has reinforced his trust on his inanimate collaborator, but is a gift given him a belief in life. With so much diversity and so much change, there are no wrongs or rights, just another choice you have to make.

From the abstract, to classical, Toth’s computer always found a parallel to his ideas. Like Monet’s impressionist works, the computer, with it’s masses of dots gave works, new meaning as the photographs he showed were broken down to their most geometric shapes. The next exhibit, called “Core Samples” dealt with the natural layers found on rocks carved by the ice age, cylindrical core data collected on land or just the layers of colors that the sun creates as it sets. As these images formed, synthesized music with the changes of shape and color affecting the rates and repetitions of the music.

Next, he showed the audience a “miembro”, a musical instrument that gave a wave of notes as it struck a keyboard at a rate of 12 seconds. He showed how he talked of the science of chaos and how there is no such thing because everything has an order. He talked of how modern day physicist and Buddhists speak of reality in the same way.

He then moved on to a beautiful exhibition of sculpture fabric that he called “Fabric and Space”. Made of tricot, the sheer fabric used in lingerie, he intended it’s many stretched layers to show the invisible fabric of space. The exhibition ended as he pressed on his chaos theme with a choreographed dance complete with his artwork as well as a singer and a poet sang and recited their works to it. This was one of the most interesting Art Forum’s yet but it probably could have been more effective if it had been shorter, making Toth look more diverse instead of numbing the effectiveness of his works. There is no question however that not only is Toth a brilliantly unorthodox artist, he’s also one that makes you think.

Next Week, Thursday, April 29, at 3PM in the Calcia auditorium. Shirley Keneda, painter and writer will discuss painting from the position of difference. She states, “If the task of painting is seeking truth as a singularity, in my case it is transformed into one of articulating it by comparisons. This constitutes an aspect of the feminization of formalism. My proposition is a re-evaluation of the terrain of abstraction as something fundamentally constructed and androgynous.”

Vampires and Nudes Begins Letters From The Dead

by Richard S. McDonella

As you can see, this is a new column, starting with this issue of the Montclarion. In Letters From The Dead, I will be reviewing new titles, and older books worth looking at, like Letters From The Dead. The Vampire Lestat opens with Lestat walking from a form of hibernation to find his title.

But other vampires do exist - and they are watching him. The Les Innocents is the story of science fiction was published in 1956 and is one of the last book to be reviewed taken a totally different direction. It is Childhood’s End by Arthur C. Clarke. This classic story of science fiction was published in 1956 and is one of those rare books that reads just as fresh and true today.

It begins with man at the brink of interstellar travel. On the day that the first launch in planned, however, a fleet of alien spacecraft come to rest above every major city in the world. These aliens, called “the Overlords” by successive generations of humans, proclaim themselves rulers of earth, and that humanity will remain free, but that it must never go into space.

The few scattered attempts at resistance are futile. A nuclear weapon launched at a ship is simply disarmed. No retaliation follows. Not a single human life is harmed by the Overlords. They ignore sovereign nations, instead going straight to the U.N. Soon, humanity is enjoying the boom of a golden age of utopian society.

The plot of the story is that a small group of scientists, led by a man named Louis, plan to force the other vampires to reveal themselves - publicity. This constitutes an aspect of the feminization of formalism. My proposition is a re-evaluation of the terrain of abstraction as something fundamentally constructed and androgynous.”

Letters From The Dead - Dante’s Inferno, Canto X. - John Cicardi translation

The major part of the story deals with Lestat’s early life, as a human in Pre-revolution France and later as a Parisian Vampire. The prologue and epilogue, however deal with a totally different storyline, Lestat’s running across an aspiting mortal rock band and a copy of Interview with the Vampire. Although grossly misrepresented by Louis, this tells Lestat with a desire to see Louis. Another side effect is Lestat’s writing his own story, which we are led to believe is the novel held in his hands. Lestat reveals himself to the mortal band and uses them as a tool with which he plans to force the other vampires to reveal themselves - publicity. This smaller storyline, it seems, leads into what I assume will be the plot of Queen of the Damned. But alas, I have yet to get my hands on a copy of Queen, so my suspicions are unfounded.

If Interview is an excellent novel, then Lestat is equally so, only on a much greater scale. The loneliness of a vampire’s existence is explored to greater degree as well; the fledgling vampire Lestat, first not knowing whether or not any others like himself exist, soon finds that any vampires he creates are lost to him in another way, for he can no longer read their thoughts.

But other vampires do exist - and they are watching him. The Les Innocents coven follows the old superstitions. They believe they are the Children of Darkness, the chosen of Satan, and see Lestat as a heretic for walking as a gentleman, passing himself off as a mortal, brazenly entering churches, well it streets, even wearing the cross that supposedly is feared by vampires.

Montezuma's Box O' Tips Starts

Montezuma's Box O' Tips

Welcome to Montezuma's hints and tips. This article and future articles will deal with hints and tips in the use of some of the software that is used in the computer labs, such as Lotus 1-2-3, Microsoft Works, Windows, Word for Windows, Harvard Graphics, Word Perfect and others.

WordPerfect for D.O.S.
Print envelopes with a keystroke.
Use this macro to grab the inside address from a letter and print it on an envelope. This trick works on any printer with a WordPerfect printer definition that contains a paper size called envelope. First, open document that contains an inside address. Place the cursor at the beginning of the address and start recording the macro by pressing Macro Define (Ctrl-F10). At the Define Macro: Prompt, enter the words Envelope Grabber. Now you're ready to record the following keystrokes:

{Bbdc}{SeaH±}{B*r}{Bfcr}{Bdt}
{Rxm)fHE{Btr}{Htr}{Eti}{B<t}
{Cancel }r{ Print }2{ Exit }my {Fbnret}lm35{atr}{Ertr}{Exit}
Press Ctrl-F10 to end macro recording.

The macro opens up a second document, so if you use the WordPerfect's Switch feature regularly, make sure the second document screen is empty. To use the macro, place the cursor at the beginning of the inside address on the letter you want to print the envelope for and press Alt E. for Hewlett Packard LaserJet, insert the envelope sideways in the manual feed slot.

Make icons easier to find.
If your program groups are cluttered with icons and the titles run into each other, follow these steps to tidy up your desktop. Adjust the icon spacing to allow more room for each icon and its title. To do this select Desktop from the Control Panel and change the icon spacing to a larger number. The default is 77 and the maximum is 512, but anything over 100 takes too much real estate on most monitors.

Once you make the adjustment, you'll have to select Arrange Icons to see the new layout. In Version 3.1, Desktop also has a Text Wrap option that allows icon titles to wrap into several lines; check this option for flexibility. While you don't have this luxury in version 3.0, you can always rename icons with shorter titles that are still descriptive. For example to rename Microsoft Word for Windows to WinWord, select the Word icon in Program Manager, choose properties from the file menu, and on the Description line type in Are you an advanced WordStar user who doesn't need basic help? Or a beginner who needs hand holding? Or a menu user who doesn't need to know obscure Ctrl key combinations? If you are one of these, you may find this tip of some use. Use WordStar's command line switch /S to select the level of help that you may need. Easy help screens load up when you start the program with WS/H3 at the DOS prompt. Help that takes a lot for granted loads up when you use WS/H0. Menu based help runs when you load with WS/H4. For more information about help levels, check out the help menu during a WordStar session. In addition to its obvious convenience, this technique ensures that WordStar loads quicker because it doesn't have to load all the help it has to offer.

PageMaker
When using PageMaker, common sense tells you to set up the margins to match the limits of text you plan for a page, including the footers and headers. But if the top and bottom margins you set up in the Page Setup dialog box include space that you intend to use for the headers and footers, PageMaker will automatically flow the text too long for each page, and you'll need to adjust the top and bottom window shades on every page manually. Set the margins precisely to the area into which you'll be flowing text, excluding headers and footers.

Movies Redone

by Mark Loughlin

Have you been to the movies lately and thought you've seen something just like it before? Are you in agreement with the many people who think that Hollywood has run out of new ideas? Then again, Tinseltown has never been known for taking many chances artistically. Witness one of the only really daring (and satisfying) films this year, The Crying Game. It was made in England by an Irish director for under four million dollars. That's how much Macaulay Culkin got paid for Home Alone 2.

So, if you are experiencing an acute form of deja vu when you glance up at the temple menu board, you are not alone. Almost every film currently in release has roots somewhere else. Some are just plain rip offs. Take a look!

The Adventures of Buck Finn - This is the ninth different adaptation of the Mark Twain novel and they still haven't gotten it right. Joel Siegel liked it.

The Crush - The Cradle that Rocks the Hand?! It's like Lolita meets Fatal Attraction, but without James Mason or Michael Douglas. What animal do they boil in this one? Only in America do we have screwed up sub genres like this.

Point of No Return - La Femme Nikita without the subtitles, or the style. But we do have Bridget Fonda wielding a really big gun.

Now that's entertainment!

Cag And A Half - A graf, but lovable cop gets teamed up with a kid, gee I've never seen that before.

Born Yesterday - Don and Melanie star in a modern reworking of a good film from the 50's. Don plays an intellectual, which is undoubtedly a stretch for him.

Indecent Proposal - It has the same plot as Honeymoon In Vegas, except it's not funny. Starring Robert Redford, Woody Harrelson, and Demi! "I want a bigger trailer close to the set!" Moore.

Homeward Bound - Another remake, this time of an older Disney film that needed some of the advantages of modern film techniques...voice overs! It's just like The Adventures of Milo and Otis, but with an extra dog thrown in.

so there you have it. A sequel, four remakes, two rip offs, and one just plain unoriginal film. This is actually nothing new. Last year we brought us the still bom remake of Die Hard. Under Siege. Don't forget the summer of sequel mania. Let's hope that this summer can make up for the year so far. If not, we might have to do something drastic, like read a book!
Earth day cometh

Along with April being the rainy month, and the information month, it also holds a most important day, a day where we pay homage to our surrounding little critters and their home. It's Earth Day.

What does this day specifically revere? No, not the organic mildew growing on Bohn Halls' public bathroom toilet seats, nor the moss spreading across Blanton's salad bar. Earth day celebrates what we have of nature, while reminding us all of Mother earth's needs. Her furry little critters being clubbed in the arctic conserving water instead of wasting it away in a nine hour hot shower. In an effort to promote awareness, The Conservation Club took over, holding their 1993 Earth Day celebrations on Wednesday April 21.

Their event was spread throughout the week. Besides speakers, they included Campus Clean up and petitions.

One petition offered by the Conservation Club, was in hopes for the renewal of the Endangered Species Act. Another dealt with a petition against Mitsubishi Co. for affiliating with companies destroying rainforests.

Topics of recycling, conservation of water, as well as animal preservation are not held in a social high esteem. An important topic, our campus should be more aware of the needs of our planet and take a more serious outlook. As Ann Caldieo points out, "Hopefully [students] will make a change."

Our earth is one we need to share equally. Within this responsibility also lies a reality that we have to take care of our home. Despite the cynical outlook of most patrons on Earth, this world is as idyllic as it will ever get and is worth worrying about.

Although the day has passed, everyday should be a celebration of Mama Earth with the full recognition of how beautiful she really is.

As president I listened as they screamed at me and tried to tell them that I understood, sympathized and would speak to the individuals. (We punished the individuals by restricting them from attending any social events for the rest of the semester.) I made it clear to them that the fraternity was not at fault and that it was only a handful of individuals. They disagreed and continued to make threats and contact Dean Harris. I spoke to Dean Harris and told him that this was not a fraternity matter. ZBT would like Sigma to know that we are sorry that it happened. It was a childish act done for fun and was stupid. We sympathize with you and agree that those individuals were wrong. But let us make it crystal clear to you for the absolute last time: ZBT DOES NOT CONDONE, SUPPORT NOR AGREE WITH WHAT HAPPENED THAT NIGHT. It was not an organized fraternity

No more Prophet

Although I am usually apathetic towards the Prophet Bigg’s “column,” I feel compelled to voice my opinion toward this wasteland of valuable newspaper space. Actually, I enjoy Mr. Bigg’s failed attempts at humor and his outrageously misinformation “facts”, but to tell the entire student body, in print, that the Prophet has become untrustworthy, is all hype and that last time achievement awards hidden behind other awards. I’m won­dering if Mr. Schwoebel even saw Last of the Mohicans. The Mohicans is pretty much a dressed up melodrama that tells us once the Indians nor the Colonists don’t have to save someone from a burning building, Last of the Mohicans lets us know that neither the Indians nor the Colonists were trustworthy people. I under­stand that the Prophet’s political values and closemindedness may have contributed to his dislike of the film, but he should at least give some reasons why he thought it was all hype. Why was Last of the Mohicans so great? Why does he spout bits of poetry like, “a film that was looked over by the Acad­emy for lots of things.” It’s true that not everyone will like The Crying Game; You have to be open minded. You can’t have any ma­jor discriminations against certain social groups, and you can’t idol­ize John Wayne. Perhaps the Prophet was disappointed that there wasn’t actually a “game” in the film.

Don’t get me wrong, I really couldn’t care less about the Os­cars, or his opinions, but letting someone print whatever the hell he wants, when he wants to, (the Oscar was two weeks ago) re­flects poorly on the paper. The film companies are nice enough to send The Montclarion tickets to advance screenings of their films and you send the gossip columnist! Glad Luck Montclarion!

Support the Mardi Gras

Dig this here now. I was squatting in the Student Center Quad, absorbing the delicious weather, trying to adjust my shoe­lace, which had become unrav­eled and twisted around my ankle. It was a knotted mesh, and the more I struggled to release the lace’s grip, the tighter it contracted around my leg, cutting off the cir­culation entirely. I watched help­lessly as my ankle began to swell, turning a myriad of colors: purple, green and blue. It was at this point that I started to freak. Trapped by my own footwear, I whimpered and drooled in silent agony:

“OOhoooldhth! OOOooow! Jesus Mary! Frickin’ flickableck! OW!”

Something along those lines. I was rolling now, limb on limb, hands and purple green blue feet thrashing about like a carnival at­traction. It was a pitiful sight to witness I’m certain. In the midst of the anguish, I noticed a dark haired, red lipped figure standing curiously above me, intently peer­ing at my technicolor ankle. Was I to be saved from my torture? Could this figure above me be the savior that would release me from the sinister shoelace of the under­world?! Unable to speak, I raised my ankle, gesturing to the figure of my desire to be free from the bonds that held me. Finally, it SPOKE!

“Hey! I’m Ritu, the chairper­son of the SGA’s Multicultural Ad­visory Committee! I must say, I’ve never seen an ankle as di­verse as yours. I wonder if we might use you as a symbol, your lower leg in particular, to rep­resent the myriad of colors, creeds, and ethnicities that make up our campus. We’re holding a Multicultural Fair the weekend of April 24, 25 here on campus where various organizations including the Class 1’s, Greeks and others will converge in the spirit of pride and diversity!”

“Huh?” I replied

“On Saturday, OSUA’s Gosp­pel choir will perform, LASO’s dance troupe will be on hand along with a multitude of organizations and students in the ampitheater enjoying the sun and exciting events!”

“Help! Help!” I cried

On Sunday, the big finale happens with Class One Concerts providing live music! Diggable Planet will perform outside, for free, and you know they’re Cool Like That! Can I count on you being there to lend a hand, or shall I say, ankle?”

I could hardly speak, and with the last burst of energy left in my beaten leg, I raised my ankle one last time in the hopes of re­lief...

“Wonderful! I’ll see you there on the 24th of April!!!” Ritu waltzed away quietly, a mass of black hair and passion for the Multicultural Fair vibrating above her head.

I ended up at Mountainside Hospital, convinced the surgeon on duty to not amputate my foot, and started making plans for the 24th...Life is good.

The Multicultural Fair in the ampitheater the weekend of the 24, 25. It’s Cool Like That.

Men's tennis (5-5) struggles to finish season above .500

by Maureen K. McLoer

As the end of the season nears, the MSC men's tennis team is struggling to keep its record at .500. After dropping their last two contests, the Red Hawks currently sit at 5-5.

The Red Hawks showed promise as their record was 5-3, but their recent setbacks have sidetracked them. One of the team's major goals at the beginning of the season was to finish above .500.

With improved talent and a new coach there has been reason for optimism in Upper Montclair. The most recent loss came at the hands of conference rival Trenton State on Monday. The Lions easily handled MSC, 8-1.

Trenton clearly outplayed MSC during the impressive showing. The only victory that MSC picked up in this one was from the third-doubles tandem of Wade Whitehead and John Morolis.

Whitehead, a top NJAC team, left an undeniable impression on MSC head coach Barri Pollner. "They're one of the best teams we've played all year," she said.

Prior to Trenton loss, MSC was upended by New York University, 7-2 on Saturday, April 10. The Red Hawks picked up only two victories in this non-conference match. The first-doubles team of Jason Cuomo and Jeff Clemente, and second-doubles partners Dan Kanowith and Craig O'Connell kept MSC from being shut out.

Pollner is pleased with the performances of these two new doubles teams. "I knew I needed to re-arrange the doubles teams, and the new partners seem to work well together. They've definately boosted our overall team strength," she said.

MSC's last victory came on Friday, April 16 as the Red Hawks edged Ramapo, 5-4.

This was a tight match that included hard-fought singles victories for Cuomo and Clemente. Kanowith and O'Connell also picked up a doubles win. MSC's Doug Sede lost his match, but was impressive in his first varsity outing.

Sede is expected to be a key contributor in the future for the Red Hawks. The varsity experience as a freshman can do nothing but improve his game and boost his confidence.

MSC closes out its' season with a two-match set this weekend against the United States Merchant Marine Academy and New Jersey Tech. Both are non-conference opponents. Check the MSC Sports Schedule for dates and times.

CLUB is a Class One Organization of the SGA
Knicks' superguard John Starks also a mild-mannered man

You could liken the difference in his demeanor on and off of the court to the story of Superman, minus the wardrobe change in the telephone booth.

When he's playing in front of huge crowds, New York Knicks' guard John Starks is a tough, emotional, fearless star who's been an integral part of the team's rise to the top of the Eastern Conference this season.

He drives to the basket with reckless abandon, sacrifices his season. He gets into classic trash-talking battles with opposing players, body by drawing offensive fouls, and is the epitome of what hard-nosed basketball and everyone around me seems to be very happy with my play.

So, hopefully this will be a permanent home for me.

I think that this will all really hit me when my basketball career is over.

JS: It feels real good to be able to take care of my family. I don't have to worry about which bills are going to be paid and which bills aren't going to be paid and that's a great feeling. The financial security gives me peace of mind and it allows me to rest easy at night.

KI: To what extent has Pat Riley had an influence on you?
JS: He's had a tremendous effect on myself and Anthony Mason. His reputation has given us some added credibility to what Anthony and I have accomplished on the court. He's won four World Championships and has coached one of the best players to ever play the game in Magic Johnson, so he knows what it takes to be successful.

One of the best things about Pat is that he relates to players so well and it's like having a player-coach out there. Also, he's taught me some things that I need to learn because I never had the opportunity to learn them in college and in the CBA. Being under his tutelage has certainly helped me become the player that I am.

JS: The "Bad Boy" image that the Knicks have been branded with justifiable?

JS: We've got a team that plays hard and physical. I think that when you play as aggressively as we do, you're going to be labeled as a dirty team. The old Detroit Pistons were the "Bad Boys" because they used to go out and take cheap shots on people. We're not like that. We just play hard-nosed basketball and try to win games.

KI: What would you like people to know about yourself that's not related to basketball?
JS: I give a lot credit to God for giving me a chance and making life a little bit easier for me. When I'm off of the court, I'm a family man first and foremost. I love my wife and kids dearly and spending quality time with them is very important. Due to the fact that an NBA schedule is so hectic, those times are very precious.

KI: You've reached a level of success that could put you on an NBA All-Star team in the future. Is that a personal goal for you?
JS: At this point I'm just concerned with winning. I just want to remain patient, the individual honors will come in due time. I'll just take the accolades as they come.

KI: Can the Knicks get past Chicago and go on to win an NBA Championship this season?
JS: That's a realistic goal for us. The Knicks organization did a great job over the summer getting the players that we needed to reach the next level. We've also added some leadership to the team. So, now we'll just have to wait and see.

One of the best players to ever play the game in Magic Johnson, so he knows what it takes to be successful.
Red Hawks shot down by York, William Paterson

by Brian Falzarano

Are the Red Hawks overstated? Or do they just have one of those weeks?

After exploding out of the gates at 14-2, MSC (16-5) has lost three of its last five including a 9-8 loss to York College (Pa.) at Pittser Field on Tuesday.

This game started out as if MSC, which beat York (10-9), 6-5 last year in the Mid-Atlantic Regionals, was in complete control.

Baseball

After all, Chris Rampone had a 4-1 lead in the fifth and was taken out.

The relief pitching should have held the lead. But three innings and eight runs later, MSC was down 9-5, as York took its sword and stabbed the Red Hawks in their Achilles Heel - their relief pitching.

Of the infamous middle relievers, John Blachansky (1-1, 15.43 ERA) was tagged with the loss, after another brutal outing from those weeks?

Three of its last five including a 9-8 loss to York College at Pittser Field.

Although lost beneath their powerful hitting, their middle relief has been unsatisfactory. T.J. Costello (2-2) walked Paul Bumbaco and gave up a single to John D'Addetta, prompting Schoenig to bring in erratic right-hander Todd Sak, who responded the way many view a freshman - devoid of poise and out of control.

Sak then threw two wild pitches. The latter scored Bumbaco with the game-winning run.

"Our middle relief isn't very good right now. Games are won and lost in middle relief," Schoenig said emphatically. It has let too many games get away and must improve if MSC has any hope of overtaking WPC.

"This is what we see them (WPC) at least two or three more times. "We're not done yet," Schoenig said.

If MSC is going to reach its expectations, its middle relief had better shape up. Or the Red Hawks may ship out.

Lacrosse wins, improving as post-season nears

by Nicole Festa

A season of high hopes and aspirations has turned into one of disappointment and hope of salvation for the Red Hawk lacrosse team.

Following last season's cause for optimism, a 11-3 record and an ECAC Metro Tournament Championship, MSC's sights were set on a first-ever NCAA tournament bid. It didn't seem as if those hopes would turn into reality. After last week's defeat against NYU-Albany, the Red Hawks bounced back and dominated Fairfield College, 13-5, which may be a painful reminder of what could've been.

MSC (4-4) was in control from the outset, taking an 8-2 lead at halftime. There were several quality performances, four of which stood out.

Top-notch junior midfielder Keith Van Ness led MSC with five goals and sophomore mid-fielder Mike Bruton added a hat trick (three goals). Freshman attacker Jim Nugent added a goal, but his key contribution was his game-high four assists. Ken Kane, MSC's All-America candidate in goal, stopped eight shots for the win.

This victory could help the Red Hawks for the rest of the season, as the drive towards a chance to defend their ECAC Metro Championship comes on Friday, April 30 when the ECAC Metro NY/NJ Tournament begins.

However, MSC must face two conference consecutive opponents at Sprague Field before the tournament.

Saturday's match-up with Manhattanville at 1 p.m. and April 28's contest with Pace University will help prepare the Red Hawks for post-season play. These games will prove crucial to the Red Hawks as they try to salvage a season that could have been.

Sophomore shortstop Tony Martinez fields a ground ball in Tuesday's 9-8 loss to York College at Pittser Field.

Can past glory be recaptured?

This upcoming weekend marks the onset and completion of one of the most spectacular events in the sport of track and field - the Penn Relays. It is here that athletes from every level of the sport meet to display the talent that they spend hours each day refining and developing.

For the MSC track and field team it is another chance to atone for all the lost steps and strides that they have spent many long hours of time spent watching others who fail to achieve their dreams.

For the team it is a chance to atone for all the steps and strides that they have spent many long hours of time spent watching others who fail to achieve their dreams.

Although the team is still enough left to leave a trail to the finish line and disheartening seconds that the team it is a chance to atone for all the steps and strides that they have spent many long hours of time spent watching others who fail to achieve their dreams.

Track Talk

by Mark Alan Belnay

For a handful of individuals this weekend it will be a moment they will hold close to their hearts until the day they pass. For others who fail to achieve their magic moment it will be another run on the ladder that will one day lead them to their dream.

For the MSC track and field team it is a chance to atone for all the lost steps and strides that seem to have plumaged this talented team throughout the season.

For head coach John Blanton and his staff the culmination of hours of time spent watching films and motivating their athletes to reach the pinnacle of their talents.

To be brief, it is their magic moment.

With the MSC team headlining into the Penn Relays following a somewhat stronger performance than turned in during recent meets it is quite possible that the team may at last be hitting its stride in terms of putting it all together.

Blanton, however, warns of being too optimistic based on this past weekend's results. "It may look good on paper, but in reality we are still lacking the fundamentals needed to perform at the Penn Relays," he said regarding the promise displayed statistically this past weekend at the Monmouth Relays.

It has been this precise problem that has hung over the team since the onset of the season. The performances are, for the most part, good, but the practices are definitely comparable to watching paint dry as far as intensity is concerned.

With the MSC team being represented in the relay sections in the 1600 meters, 400 meters, 800 meters, and the sprint medley it has the talent to leave a lasting impression upon its Division I foes.

With the team awaiting the return of Sharon Lindo from injury, the brunt of the leadership duties as far as the women's squad is concerned have fallen on the capable shoulders of Shantay Brame. This past weekend she let her rival Danielle Humphries of William Paterson know that there is still enough left to leave a trail for Humphries to follow to the finish line and disheartening seconds that the team it is a chance to atone for all the steps and strides that they have spent many long hours of time spent watching others who fail to achieve their dreams.
