Memorial dedicated to Jews slain in Holocaust

by Lisa Abdul

A Holocaust Remembrance was held in the Student Center by the Jewish Student Union Monday.

The Yom HaShoah Program was a memorial dedicated to the six million Jews who were killed during the holocaust.

Ron Hollander, director of the Journalism program at MSC, gave a lecture on the fact the American public did not have knowledge of the massacres happening to the Jews in Europe.

Hollander said, that contrary to the general opinion of today, the average American was informed of the genocide taking place in Europe at the time, yet failed to take any action.

Hollander said that as early as June 1942 there was news coverage of the Nazi slaughter. On June 1, 1942 The Seattle Daily News ran a front-page article titled “Jews Slain 200,000.”

Although all stories were not treated with gravity they deserve, Hollander said newspapers of the time did detail what was happening. Hollander also pointed out the reasons that the memorial was held on May 3. He stated that many horrible incidents have happened to Jews on May 3, on different years starting in the 11th Century.

On May 3, 1943 was the fourteenth day of the Warsaw uprising. May 3, 1945 thousands of Austrian and Hungarian Jews were shot and burned.

About 20 people attended the memorial including the president and vice president of MSC.

College Senate endorses graduate tuition increase

by Jincheng Liu

The College Senate had endorsed tuition increases for post-baccalaureate students as a way for the college to meet revenue needs.

If the proposal is passed, all the post-baccalaureate students who enrolled for certificate programs will pay the same regardless of the level of the course they take. Currently, their tuition fee depends on the level of course they take. If the course number is under 400, they pay undergraduate program rates. If it is above 400, they pay graduate program rates.

The difference between the graduate rate and undergraduate rate is $65 per credit for in-state students, and $66.25 for out-of-state students.

President Reid spoke about his trips to Austria and how fearful the people there are of something that horrible recurring. Reid also said, that memorials such as this one should be held more often so that horrors like this would not be repeated.

The program opened with the lighting of six candles for the six million who were killed. There was a reading of a poem about the Warsaw Ghetto. Jacob Krief, a member of the Jewish Student Union, read a prayer for those lost in the Holocaust.

Vin and Tone sign off after four years

by Glenn Steinberg

Tonight at 6 p.m., Vin Toscano and Tone Concepcion will be airing their last show of “Vin and Tone’s Excellent Radio Show” on 101.5 WMSC said Toscano.

Toscano and Concepcion were in the same freshman class together and since both were licensed to be on air, they decided to do a show together said Toscano.

Toscano said that both, he and Concepcion have had a reputation of being funny and crazy, so they worked the show around what they were good at.

About the radio show, Toscano said “It’s like a morning show at night.”

They do comedy bits, play music, talk about current events, entertainment, sports, TV and have contests in which they give away c.d.’s said Toscano.

Sometimes they (Toscano and Concepcion) will call up Toscano’s brother, Joe, who does an imitation of Bill Clinton and they tell the listening audience that they are really speaking to the president said Toscano.

Also, every week they have a music countdown, a Simpson’s report, a professional wrestling report and phone scams said Toscano.

He says that our (Toscano and Concepcion) aspirations are to be a morning team with stations such as Z-100 and WPLJ.

Both Toscano and Concepcion have worked on W-ABC with Curtis and Lisa Silva and Concepcion has done work with Bob Grant, also from W-ABC said Toscano.

Since 1983, Toscano has wanted to be in radio, said Scott Shannon as the reason.

Toscano said that though they (Toscano and Concepcion) have not done anything yet, they will be sending tapes out to different radio stations during the summer.

On tonight’s show, Sara Lee Kessler, broadcaster for channel nine news and MSC professor, Curtis and Lisa Silva from the Guardian Angels and Bob Grant will be appearing said Toscano.

Concepcion and Toscano decided to end their show one season.

gas as its fuel source. Inspectors from the N.J. Department of Community Affairs felt this was unreliable because the gas can be turned off at any time, for any reason, by the gas company leaving exit signs until. Inspectors insisted the building have an independent source of electricity for the signs before police could enter the building, or fines against the college would be imposed. Jerome said a battery-powered back-up was chosen.

Campus police were unaware of the problem and were in the process of relocating before being threatened with fines. The building needs four battery lights inside and two battery lights outside before the move can be completed.

Jerome said that MSC officials had hoped that inspectors would allow them to use the building then reinspect it, but inspectors would not allow it.

The building was scheduled for occupancy on May 3, but now the police will have to wait until at least May 10 to occupy it.

The new police headquarters is larger than the former Chapin Hall headquarters and was paid for by the Job Education and Competitiveness (JEC) bond act and college resources.

The vacancy in Chapin will be filled by expanding the Curriculum Resource Center and developing a special purpose computer room for students.

Welcome, loyal readers, to another “first to you” installment of PROPHET BIGG! Once again, I was fortunate enough to be able to attend the screening of a great film. The film, Bound by Honor, is now playing and I will recommend the film for your viewing pleasure. I was also invited to a luncheon with Damian Chapa and Benjamin Bratt, two of the three central figures in the film, as well as director Taylor Hackford (An Officer and a Gentleman, Against All Odds, White Nights) as well as the acclaimed writer Jimmy Santiago Baca.

Q. How would you describe the film?

Damian Chapa. It’s about a family that grows up in East L.A. and it’s about a bond between three brothers, or cousins, and no matter what happens in the family you’re bound by your blood and you have to face each other. That’s what it is to me.

Taylor Hackford. I wouldn’t call it a prison movie, although we certainly spent a lot of time there. We feel that the idea of dealing with prison life is important. I think that doing a realistic picture of what life is like inside the joint has a lot of relevance. A lot of people may not realize the influence of prison on our society. It’s a hyper-reality of what’s happening outside in our society. Jimmy has a knowledge that very, very few writers, certainly writers in Hollywood, have ever had.

Q. The film seems to send a negative image, a push to the extremes. Was that the intention?

Jimmy Santiago Baca. You got it (laughter).

TH. The film is about these three guys on a journey. And what ever happens to them they are bound by the fact that they’re family. There is no attempt on our part to make Mijito (Damian Chapa) stand alone. Certainly, he’s the focus. We follow him. He allows us to show how a guy, who at the beginning of the film, is not a bad guy, not evil and you watch him become desensitized and dehumanized. And at the end of the film he had betrayed and destroyed the things that he is supposed to represent. That’s what that system does and it is negative.
Benjamin Bratt and Damian Chapa in Bound by Honor.

Q. What was the “White on the outside, Brown on the inside” theme present in the original script?

JSB. No. What Taylor and I did was to make this film go through all the levels of my culture. Metaphorically, like the seed turning into the bean stalk. One of the problems in my culture is that we have a lot of white people who speak perfect Spanish who are Chicano to the bone. And you enter into this whole idea of “am I good enough to be Chicano,” which I think is bullshit. I have to prove to my own culture that I’m Chicano. The reason I wanted to deal with that is because many children are trying to prove that they are and are getting killed. It’s like if you want to prove you’re Chicano the good way to do it is to go out and get shot by a policeman. You really have proven yourself this time. You’re great. You’re in a grave yard. And I’m sick of seeing children in grave yards. When I write, I don’t postulate the purity of life as much as I embrace the impurity of living.

Q. Did you grow up with the “white outside, brown inside” dilemma?

DC. Well, there are a lot of similarities and a lot of dissimilarities. My father is Mexican from Texas. I grew up in Ohio. My mother is from Kentucky. So I didn’t have the impurity of living.

Q. Did you grow up with the “white outside, brown inside” dilemma?

DC. Well, there are a lot of similarities and a lot of dissimilarities. My father is Mexican from Texas. I grew up in Ohio. My mother is from Kentucky. So I didn’t have the impurity of living. And he told Taylor, “Man, that was me, man. I saw myself up there. I never saw myself before and all my camarades, the way we live, that was us. I don’t want to look like that no more.”

Benjamin Bratt. I think it’s extremely clear by the end of the film that although the character of Miklo has risen to power at what cost, you ask yourself, and you see that the cost is his soul.

Q. Why were there so few women in the film? You struggle with this giant and if you were trying to represent all aspects of Latino cultures?

TH. Sometimes your ambition goes beyond what you can actually accomplish. We had a female Chicano character, Paco’s (Benjamin Bratt) love interest. She worked in a union and had her own story. The problem is she couldn’t come in till half way in the film. You struggle with this giant and ask yourself how long can this film be? (laughter) So, that idea was sacrificed for the good of the rest. That’s not an excuse. The film is very male oriented. We spent a lot of time in the joint where there are few women.

Q. We’ve heard where the basis for Damian’s character came from. Where did your basis and research come from?

BB. Well, it is interesting to note that Damian and I are more similar than we might appear. I too come from a bi-cultural background. My mother is Peruvian Indian from Lima and my father is Anglo-English from German descent. So, a lot of my mom’s family stayed in Peru and I was brought up around my father’s family. We got involved with the Native American movement. So my cultural identity is really in the Native American community. The Latino thing really wasn’t with me while I was growing up. My mom never taught us Spanish. But a lot of the basis comes from my strong family, which is a Latino thing. I mean, if you look at Latino culture the family element is very important.

And I got that from my mom. But I had to do a lot of research because Paco is Chicano to the bone. So, with Taylor’s prompting, the three of us actually moved into a house in East L.A. for two and a half months. We lived there for a month before filming began and it was there that I got to really absorb and soak up the angle I was looking for, you know, getting to know some of the gang members in that neighborhood. We were living with a reformed gang member who, at this point in his life, was giving back to his community through the Community Youth Gang Programs. That was quite an experience.

Talkin' dirty with Dr. Judy

Lorraine Rooney
Let’s talk about sex, B a by! That was the theme in the Ratt on Thursday, April 29 when Dr. Judy Korianski, sex therapist, host of Z100’s “Love Phones,” and popular talk show guest, visited Montclair State to discuss attitudes toward sex with students.

Dr. Judy, as she is called by her followers, emphasized being uninhibited when discussing sex by showing a close-up view of popcorn popping and asking audience members what they thought the abstract picture could be. She encouraged different views about the video and said that students should take the same creative attitude toward sex.

“Be open with your partner to say what you want,” stated Dr. Judy while telling the audience the importance of being honest with sexual desires. “Be comfortable enough with someone in order to work with them.”

Dr. Judy also discussed certain taboos that many students hold about their roles in sexual performance. She explicitly told the male portion of the audience that, “It is not a woman’s job to turn a guy on and a guy doesn’t make a woman have an orgasm.”

Women, according to Dr. Judy, need to become more educated about their own bodies. She said, “Women must allow themselves to look at their bodies,” and informed females that there is a ten week course to help women explore their bodies and sexuality.

Another aspect about sex women should take into consideration is investing in vibrators. Dr. Judy says vibrators can provide constant stimulation and build up a woman’s confidence. She also said that vibrators can be found in stores in the home appliance section (and yes, Dr. Judy owns one, too). Dr. Judy also addressed male inhibitions as well as female problems. She stated that men are too concerned with penis size and the length of time of an erection. This is known as “performance anxiety” and should be worked on with the male’s partner.

Dr. Judy also answered questions from the audience who wrote down their curiosities before the discussion. Some of Dr. Judy’s answers were reinforced by some disturbing facts, such as, “only one-third of women have an orgasm during sex,” and “it takes a guy three minutes to get to the point of excitement and it takes a woman fifteen minutes.”

A discussion about safe sex and AIDS wrapped up Dr. Judy’s visit to the Ratt. “A woman can get pregnant at any time during her cycle,” stated Dr. Judy. “Pulling out and the rhythm method do not work.” Dr. Judy suggests wearing a condom during intercourse for prevention of both AIDS and pregnancy.

What are your reactions to Clinton's first one hundred days in office?

I think he's done a half-way decent job so far, although it's still early. His policies still haven't taken effect and when they do, then I can have a better opinion about it.

I think the fact that he approved a study on Methane emissions from cattle says it all. This guy needs help.

I think that he's doing okay. It's better than Bush, so far.

Clinton is trying but not succeeding.

Remembering The Holocaust

This past Monday, there was a Memorial held in remembrance of all six million Jews killed in the Holocaust. The project, held in the Student Center, was funded by the Jewish Student Union and entitled The Yom HaShoa Program.

There was significance in the chosen date, May 3. In the Eleventh Century, eleven Jews were killed exiting a synagogue. On May 3, 1918, thirteen Jews were drowned. On May 3, 1945 thousands of Austrian and Hungarian Jews were shot and burned. Only for the "aggravating" reason of their religion.

The sobering reality is that the past is not dead, that survivors of the Holocaust are still alive today. This brings a chilling truthfulness to how little has changed in the fifty years since the Holocaust. Examples such as the L.A. Riots, the beating of Rodney King and the tortures present in Bosnia are grim reminders of the dark underbelly of humanity.

Dr. Ron Hollander, a professor at MSC, spoke of the importance of not forgetting the Holocaust. He also stressed the role of the press's responsibility to inform the public, and how not all the information during this travesty was reported on.

It is also important that MSC, as a student body, remember the horrors that happened fifty years ago this year, and to be aware that these same atrocities have occurred through and up until today within wars, revolutions, as well as the racial and religious fighting found all over America today.

The Klux Klan, a known prejudiced and racially violent organization, is more prevalent today than it was fifty years ago. Nazism can be found in underground magazines and some overt Skin Head organizations pledge their distaste for Jews, and other 'minority' groups.

With all the functions held on this campus, Elections, the Mardi Gras, etc., it is relevant and pertinent to take a somber step toward reducing the violence in our own country today. Functions held like this one, are well worth the student fees we give every term if that is what it takes to reduce prejudiced hatred.

No matter what the fight, there should always be held a value of human rights. Though the Holocaust was, and always will be remembered as horrific, it would desecrate the dead not to learn from the past. The reason for Memorial events, is not only to lament the dead, but to avoid further occasions to remember.

The program ended in a poetry reading and the lighting of six candles to remember the six million Jews that were tortured and killed. Let them not go forgotten.

Quote of the Week by

"Memorials such as this one should be held more often so that horrors like this would not repeat itself."

Letter..
Powder keg mentality still in inner city

I remember driving home last spring when a voice interrupted the song I was listening to on the radio. The man was obviously trying to retain both composed and opinionated as the audience of two rear speak-ger game this voice in monotone, that all so that all I could decipher was my own resurging thoughts of nuclear war and emergency broadcast system beeps, was that somehow Los Angeles exploded in flames, and was burning out of control.

I readed home and immediately turned on the television. The California sun had not sought refuge yet, making the scenes before me seem like visions of another world trapped in constant twilight. Black smoke curled in great plumes of malignance and painted in the horizon, obscuring the city. The camera cut from some scene after scene, and it slowly dawned upon me what that was so unerring about the images was the fact that amidst all this destruction, there was not one person to be found. Stares willed in the distance, as though they were chasing some mysterious being that had swooped from the heavens to wreak havoc upon L.A.

Just as I began to doubt my senses and reach for the LSD flashback survival manual, I was answered by a woman reporter who stood before a row of gutted stores. The people of a little suburban town north of L.A. had only a few hours before acquitted the four police officers that were unlucky enough to be immortalized by the magic of video technology as they swung Billy clubs at a prone black man named Rodney King. Three days later, over fifty people were dead and nearly one billion dollars in property damage was done. On top of all this madness, the violence spread as a siege mentality took hold of America. Everyone was watching, except the president and David Gates, as the National Guard exchanged fire with L.A. gang members, and Korean shop owners sat on the roofs of their businesses like bad actors in a cheap Kung Fu movie just waiting for a fight. The stores were flooded with people buying guns, and tension ruled the day, smiling as its emissaries of anger and fear found easy prey across America.

In New York workers scurried off hastily toward their homes as employers anticipated the worst and boarded up shop. Why? Because for the first time in many years, America was right in being scared, and although every major city was in revolt, New York sat quietly, tranquill waiting. Today, almost one year since the riots we had nearly forgotten, the good old siege mentality has returned. The country waits, biting the precious nails of one hand while the other fingers a loaded nine millimeter pistol, the knuckles white and shaking. Three days later, over fifty people pronounced this a problem limited to "gifted" students. Everybody does this. Nobody, including myself, really knows how to live. The answer is really quite simple: just do it and don't think about it. The solutions to problems often just fall in our lap if we don't try too hard. I have found this to be true, and yet it is so hard to live this way in our society. Everything has to be perfectly planned in advance, and we panic if something doesn't go according to plan. Why do we limit ourselves? If something doesn't work out, it doesn't work out. No sense pouting over it.

Don't worry about whether or not it comes out right - if it doesn't you have plenty of time to either fix it or start something new. To sum up in the words of Jack Kerouac, "I don't know. I don't care. And it doesn't make any difference."

Reminder, only one more chance this year to voice your opinions! Send in a letter or be unheard.

Heresy

Philosophy can really blow your mind. Four out of my six classes this semester are philosophy, and I was beginning to feel the strain. Philosophers spend a lot of time trying to figure strange things out, like whether or not a chair is really a chair, or if everything could conceivably disappear tomorrow.

H.L. Mencken once said, "We are here and it is now. Further than that, all human knowledge is moonshine." He certainly has a point. The more we try to know, the less we know. I think that somehow in trying to find reality, we gain the place that it is right in front of us. This is a common complaint that people have about me: I'm "gifted," I give them a simple problem, and the problem looks too easy to them. So, instead of stating the obvious answer, they go through a very complex reasoning process to come up with the wrong answer.

Believe it or not,

R e a l i t y  i s  m o o n s h i n e

Today, almost one year since the riots we had nearly forgotten, the good old siege mentality has returned.

Americans have seen that video, which oddly enough has vanished in recent weeks, one too many times. We can deny it and buy guns to wish it away, but America is confronted with a problem it has yet to face. Our inner cities are powder kegs of violence that only blow sparks on the average day, small warning signals of their decay that we dismiss and blame on crime and poverty. If we follow this train of blaming far enough, however, we discover that it is a system that breeds economic and social disproportion that is to blame, and it is of no use to blame its inventors. Ultimately, it is the youth of America who must come to terms with the mistakes of the past, and only then will the problem be solved in a way that benefits all.

Radical reform is necessary in this case, and it is the responsibility of the next generation to implement the changes that are so desperately needed if America is to avoid destroying itself and dragging the rest of the world with it into conflict.

In the meantime, Los Angeles braces itself for war, and we shiver at the thought of sixty thousand gang members united against a force of twelve thousand police. In the streets of New York people speak in hushed voices, watching, waiting.

Fisticuffs in sports..too much

I am writing in reference to your article entitled "Fisticuffs in Phoenix could cost more Knicks than fines and suspensions." Unnecessary violence in sport is escalating to an all time high, it seems. Otherwise non-contact sports (baseball) are turning into contact sports due to brawls and "fisticuffs." I know basketball is a contact sport, but the line should be drawn somewhere. The media coverage of such events wormets the situations. Young kids watching the news on TV with their parents often see replays of the fight or brawl. What does that tell them? Number one - it's okay to be unnecessarily violent in sport; number two - people will notice you, and remember you better if you are violent. Those participating in unnecessary violence in sport should be subject to fines and suspensions in an attempt to curb this violent trend.

Sincerely,

Kimberly M. Brady

3. With college soon to be behind you, it's time to trade in your greasy snacks for something with dual overhead cams and sequential multi-point fuel injection. Of course, we're talking about the fun-to-drive Nissan NX 1600, one of a full line of very special Nissan cars we're offering to graduating college students at some very special leasing and financing rates. The program is called the Nissan College Graduate Financing Program and you'll find complete details (in other words, eligibility requirements and legal jargon) in a brochure that we have conveniently placed in your cap and gown package.

It will explain how getting into a styling, new car like the NX 1600, 240SX, or Sentra is easier than you might have thought. (Not as easy as ordering a pepperoni pizza. But easier than Biophysics 401.) Also, look for details about our sweepstakes, which could put you behind the wheel of an NX 1600 — free of charge — for an entire year.

Now that you're graduating from college, perhaps it's time to redirect your pizza budget.

MSC lacrosse's season of disappointment comes to an end

by Nicole Festa

Disappointing is certainly one way to describe the MSC lacrosse team's recently concluded season.

The Red Hawks finished with a sub-.500 record for the first time during Doug Alsofrom’s six-year stint as head coach.

The Red Hawks' 5-6 record also created a post-season road-block. The Red Hawks were initially invited to the ECAC Metro New York–New Jersey Division III Men’s Lacrosse Tournament. However, MSC was not allowed to participate because of their record and was replaced by Drew University, the eventual winner of the tournament.

Despite the team's record, Alsofrom was pleased with the way his team handled itself on the field.

"As far as wins and losses are concerned it was a disappointing season," he said. "But the way the team responded wasn’t. They had two options. They could have quit trying or they could have just done the best they could do," Alsofrom added.

Back in February, Alsofrom knew that the season would be filled with complications. The Red Hawks altered their original schedule by replacing four mar­ginal opponents with four tough ones. Then the team began to lose players to either ins­ignificance, injury or illness. "That’s the hardest thing to deal with. The players on the roster change from the begin­ning of the season until the end of it," said Alsofrom.

The Red Hawks did have their share of outstanding perform­ers, even though their record doesn’t indicate it.

Senior goalkeeper Ken Kane will be the toughest to replace ac­cording to Alsofrom. "Ken is defi­nitely the best goalie in our league and he has a shot to be an All­American," Alsofrom said proudly.

The "heart" of the team this season was its midfielders. Chris Bill, Neil Blaney and Keith Van Ness will all return next season with hopes of burning things around.

The Red Hawks will also have a hard time replacing two of their top defensemen. All­Knickereebocker Conference per­formers Jim Brunton and Heath Piscaskie will be lost to graduation.

Alsofrom was also pleased with the mile players who performed so­duty. Mike Brunton, Jim Nuggesth, Rich Skalaski and Roger Welton all filled holes that weren’t anticipated at the start of the season. The added experience should help all of these returnees to be key contribu­tors next season.

Speaking of next season, things are looking much brighter for the Red Hawk lacrosse pro­gram.

"We should be outstanding. Our guys are stepping up in class and we have many returning play­ers. Also, we’re expecting a few recruits," said Alsofrom.

When asked to sum up this season, Alsofrom said, "It was a learning experience."

RED HAWKS NOTES...

Alsofrom’s career record at MSC currently stands at an impressive 66-21. This season MSC played only 11 games. In the previous five seasons, the team had averaged 15 games played per year.

Sportsworld hit hard by week of tragedy and misfortune

Every once in a while the (often fantasy) world of sports is given a dose of reality. This past week was certainly proof of the preceding paragraph's theory.

The death of legendary basketball coach/television commentator Jim Valvano didn't come as a shock to anyone. Jimmy V was suffering from the advanced stages of cancer and his condition was getting worse with every new report.

Yet, when the news reached this writer last Wednesday night, a chill feeling as well as one of loss was inevitable.

You see, even if you never met Jimmy V, he made you feel like you did. He was one of those people that almost everyone could relate to.

Whether he was coaching, covering a game on television or just sitting in a room with his outgoing personality and sense of humor, everyone wanted to be around him. He was just one of those special people that could make you feel good.

Jimmy V was so full of life, right up until the very end of his. Even when he was in a terrible physical state, he refused to alter the personality that had made him so likable.

That's probably why it was so difficult to watch him at this spring's first annual ESPY's. He struggled to walk and was very weak but still let everyone know that he would never give up.

He taught us all a very valuable lesson that night. The strength of one's character can be more powerful than any disease.

Jimmy V, thanks for the memories.

Calling the shots....

Last Friday gave us all a wake-up call. There are some real sick individuals in this world. Why would someone try to kill someone else? The answer is, for what ever reason.

Monica Seles is lucky to be alive after being stabbed by a spectator at the Citzen Cup tennis tournament in Hamburg, Germany. What's really troubling, aside from the fact that the incident took place, is the lack of effort that was required to attack Seles. Security has to improve at these events.

Perhaps everyone should move the stands further away from the court or add more security personnel. Otherwise, as Seles can attest, someone could be killed....Reggie Lewis' collapse in the Celtics-Hornets playoff gamenight week brought back a horrible memory. On March 4, 1990 a similar incident occurred during a college game in California. Only Hank Gathers wasn't as fortunate as Lewis was. Lewis, 27, is one of the top shooting guards in the league and the heart of Boston's team. However, he has a heart ailment similar to the one that Gathers had. Gathers' death should provide Lewis with all of the evidence he needs to make his decision. Basketball or Life? The choice is rather simple.

"Todd has really turned it around. He is pitching very well right now," said Schoenig. BCSU (16-8-2) charged to a 2-1 advantage behind Richie Clegg's two-run single in the second. But the Red Hawks jumped all over BCSU starter Matt Sommerski (1-1) for four runs in the third, which for all eyes and ears, put the game in the safe. Mike Micucci (2 for 3, 3 RBI) drilled a two-run home run in the inning to pace MSC's 10-hit attack.

Chris Roof added a two-run blast, his second of the year, to put the game out of reach for BCSU. Dippold, Andrew Maira and Scavalla combined to close things out. Scavalla, best known for his offensive production, got the final out to get his first save.

"He had arm problems earlier in the year," said Schoenig, of why he hadn't previously used Scavalla, who pitched sparingly last year. "Hopefully he can help us down the road."

On Friday, the place was Alumni Field in Newark and the specialty was comeback. In fact, it was a sonic boom of a comeback, to say the least. MSC scored eight runs in the fourth inning and scored two in the ninth to pull out a 10-8 victory.

Things looked horrendous early in the game, as Rutgers-Newark's been rolling hot early, jumping out to a big third inning lead. But MSC exploded with an eight-run flurry, the most notable contribution coming from Roof and his three-run homer.

Rutgers-Newark quickly knotted the game at 8-8 with sacrifice flies by Jason Himich and Rich Scalabrini off of MSC's John Pallino (.381, 10 HR, 48 RBI) tripled to start the ninth, Micucci stepped to the plate. Previously hitless, he saw a drawn in infield and singled through it, scoring Pallino with the winning run. Scavalla (3 for 5) added an RBI single, which scored Micucci, to produce the final outcome.

This past week was one of ugly games, but beautiful outcomes - the Red Hawks won three of four - which is not lost on Schoenig.

"We're doing a great job offensively," Schoenig said of his crew. "But we can't hold a lead. It could hurt our chances later on, but we'll be able to use fewer pitchers," Schoenig added, of the NJAC playoffs and the Mid-Atlantic Regionals.

A team doesn't go 25-7 and not be cognizant of its capabilities. This team can go far in the playoffs if it plays well.

"We are confident we can play with anyone. Now we just have to go out and execute," Schoenig said.

Sometimes that is easier said than done.

A view from the pressbox

by Keith A. Idec

A mark of 25.60.

In the upcoming NJAC Championships, Brame will defend her 200 meter championship of last year's meet in which she ran a strong 25.40.

She also looks forward to taking first in the 100 meters because of her disappointing performance last season in the same event when she was disqualified for jumping the gun. She feels that her improved performance during the outdoor season as opposed to her disappointing indoor season, can be attributed to improving her training habits.

Head coach John Blanton stressed the need to stay mentally focused as well as physically sharp. His coaching has payed off for Brame.

On the men's side it was Dewayne Stevens, who once again qualified for the National Championships with a mark of 47.16. The time was even more impressive because it was Stevens' first open competition in the 400 meters.

In the 200 meters Stevens ran a 21.4 and took second behind a member of the Jamaican Olympic Team in the 4 by 400. Stevens considered the time slow for himself, but was still in the race until the very end. The men's mile relay team, showed a new look this week and took second with a time of 3:17.10 to qualify for Nationals. The new team consisted of Joe Bass, Jacinto Alayon, Jenabu Williams and Stevens.

"We have a good balanced squad that allows us to perform well in events with different runners," Stevens remarked regarding the new-look mile relay squad's performance this past weekend.

With Stevens, Brame and the rest of the MSC team looking forward to this weeks NJAC Championships and the upcoming National Championships it looks as though Blanton may finally have the focused team he has been looking for all season.

Now, if only Neal Ruiz could remember what time the bus leaves the MSC team could make some real waves in the upcoming weeks.

Real, your opponents should be chasing you to the finish line instead of you chasing one of NJ Transit's wonderful modes of transportation.

Costly Red Hawk errors force split with Rowan

by Brian Falzarano

The MSC baseball team’s season can be summed up in a three-prong description. They’re never pretty, usually diligent and almost always get the job done.

While the aforementioned describe the Red Hawks, it was of no use at MSC claved out a split of a double-header against NJAC rival Rowan College on Sunday, winning the opener 6-4 and losing the finale 7-4.

However, the stakes will be much higher this time around. That’s because this game will be part of the championship round of the New Jersey Athletic Conference tournament.

The tournament will be played at Rowan College in Glassboro and switches from single-elimination to double-elimination in this round. The championship game is tentatively set for Sunday afternoon. The tournament could be over on Saturday due to the double-elimination process.

The winner of the tournament receives an automatic bid to the NCAA Division III National Tournament.

In Friday’s other matchup, top-seeded Rowan will play William Paterson at 12 p.m.

The losers of both games will meet on Saturday at 2 p.m., while the winners will meet at 4 p.m.
