Baccalaureate students as a way for opening to the Jews in Europe.

Six million Jews were killed during the Holocaust.

A memorial dedicated to the Jews slain in Holocaust.

American was informed of the genocide taking place in Europe at the time, yet failed to take any action.

Hollander said that as early as June 1942 there was news coverage of the Nazi slaughter. On June 1, 1942 the Seattle Daily News ran a front-page article titled "Jews Slain 200,000."

Although most stories were not treated with gravity they deserved, Hollander said newspapers of the time did detail what was happening.

Hollander also pointed out the reasons that the memorial was held on May 3. He stated that many horrible incidents have happened to Jews on May 3, on different years starting in the 11th Century. On May 3, 109,611 Jews were killed while exiting a synagogue. On May 3, 191,813 Jews were drowned. May 3, 1943 was the fourth day of the Warsaw uprising. May 3, 1945 thousands of Austrian and Hungarian Jews were shot and burned.

About 20 people attended the memorial including the president and vice president of MSC.

President Reid spoke about his trips to Austria and how fearful the people there are of something that horrible recurring.

Reid also said, that memorials such as this one should be held more often so that horrors like this would not be repeated.

The program opened with the lighting of six candles for the six million who were killed. There was a reading of a poem about the Warsaw Ghetto. Jacob Krief, a member of the Jewish Student Union, read a prayer for those lost in the Holocaust.

College Senate endorses graduate tuition increase

The College Senate had endorsed tuition increases for post-baccalaureate students as a way for the college to meet revenue needs.

If the proposal is passed, all the post-baccalaureate students who enrolled for certificate programs will pay the same regardless of the level of the course they take. Currently, their tuition fee depends on the level of course they take. If the course number is under 400, they pay undergrad rates, if it is above 400, they pay graduate program rates.

The difference between the graduate and undergrad rate is $65 per credit for in-state students, and $66.25 for out-of-state students.

Karen Todd, the graduate advisor of the Department of Home Economics, this proposal is based on the assumption that once a student has received his or her bachelor degree, he or she would have a job and be able to pay more.

"We do need money to meet our revenue needs," said Todd, "but the assumption was not right, many people who come back to school don't necessarily have the money to pay more.

For example, the paralegal program was designed to attract minority students many of these students come from low-income families. Currently, there are 3,595 students enrolled as post-baccalaureate students. This includes graduate and certificate students.

"It's not fair because the course is the same. Everybody who sits in the same room should pay the same," said Adam Yezer, a graduate and certificate student.

Gas as its fuel source. Inspectors from the N.J. Department of Community Affairs felt this was unreliable because the gas can be turned off at any time, for any reason, by the gas company leaving exit signs unlit. Inspectors insisted the building have an independent source of electricity for the signs before police could enter the building, or fines against the college would be imposed. Jerome said a battery-powered back-up was chosen.

Campus police were unaware of the problem and were in the process of relocating before being threatened with fines. The building needs four battery lights inside and two battery lights outside before the move can be completed.

Jerome said that MSC officials had hoped that inspectors would allow them to use the building then reinspect it but inspectors would not allow it.

The building was scheduled for occupancy on May 3, but now the police will have to wait until at least May 10 to occupy it.

The new police headquarters is larger than the former Chapin Hall headquarters and was paid for by the Job Education and Competitiveness (JEC) bond act and college resources.

The vacancy in Chapin will be filled by expanding the Curriculum Resource Center and developing a special purpose computer room for students.

Another ADA student Joanne DeCandia said, "It's not right because after we get our certification, we are going to earn the same amount as a person with a bachelors in dietetics, yet we have to pay more to take the courses."

Because concerning this proposal is going to affect all certificate students, particularly those who come from low-income families, it is still on hold. However, the school is supposed to set fees for next year's programs before June 30, therefore the decision will be made soon.

Todd emphasizes with the low-income students who it will hit the hardest, but she believes they will continue their studies by working more and taking less credits per semester.

Tom Auch, the vice-president for Administration and Finance, refuses to give any comment regarding this issue at the moment.

Welcome, loyal readers, to another "first to you" installment of PROPHET BIGG! Once again, I was fortunate enough to be able to attend the screening of a great film. The film, Bound by Honor, is now playing and I will recommend the film for your viewing pleasure. I was also invited to a luncheon with Damian Chapa and Benjamin Bratt, two of the three central figures in the film, as well as director Taylor Hackford (An Officer and a Gentleman, Against All Odds, White Nights) as well as the acclaimed writer Jimmy Santiago Baca.

Q. How would you describe the film?

Damian Chapa. It’s about a family that grows up in East L.A. and it’s about a bond between three brothers, or cousins, and no matter what happens in the family you’re bound by your blood and you have to face each other. That’s what it is to me.

Taylor Hackford. I wouldn’t call it a prison movie, although we certainly spent a lot of time there. We feel that the idea of dealing with prison life is important. I think that doing a realistic picture of what life is like inside the joint has a lot of relevance. A lot of people may not realize the influence of prison on our society. It’s a hyper-reality of what’s happening outside in our society. Jimmy has a knowledge that very, very few writers, certainly writers in Hollywood, have ever had.

Q. The film seems to send a negative image, a push to the extremes. Was that the intention?

Jimmy Santiago Baca. You got it (laughed).

TH. The film is about these three guys on a journey. And whatever happens to them they’re bound by the fact that they’re family. There is no attempt on our part to make Mijo (Damian Chapa) stand alone. Certainly, he’s the focus. We follow him. He allows us to show how a guy, who at the beginning of the film, is not a bad guy, not evil and you watch him become desensitized and dehumanized. And at the end of the film he had betrayed and destroyed the things that he is supposed to represent. That’s what that system does and it is negative.
Benjamin Bratt and Damian Chapa in Bound by Honor

Q. Was the “White on the outside, Brown on the inside” theme present in the original script?

J.B. No. What Taylor and I did was to make this film go through all the levels of my culture. Metaphorically, like the seed turning into the bean stalk. One of the problems in our culture is that we have a lot of white people who speak perfect Spanish who are Chicano to the bone. And you enter into this whole idea of “am I good enough to be Chico,” which I think is bullshit. I have to prove to my own culture that I’m Chicoan. The reason I wanted to deal with that is too many children are trying to prove that who they are and are getting killed. It’s like if you want to prove you’re Chicoan the good way to go is to go out and get shot by a policeman. You really have proven yourself this time. You’re great. You’re in a grave yard. And I’m sick of seeing children in grave yards. When I write, I don’t postulate the purity of life as much as I embrace the impurity of living.

Q. Did you grow up with the “white outside, brown inside” dilemma?

DC. Well, there are a lot of similarities and a lot of dissimilarities. My father is Mexican from Texas. I grew up in Ohio. My mother is from Kentucky. So I’d wake up sometimes hearing Dolly Parton and sometimes my father’s wake up sometimes hearing Dolly Parton and sometimes my father’s

Q. Why were there so few women if you were trying to represent all aspects of Latino cultures?

TH. Sometimes your ambition goes beyond what you can actually accomplish. We had a female Chicano character, Paco’s (Benjamin Bratt) love interest. She worked in a union and had her own story. The problem is she couldn’t come in till halfway in the film. You struggle with this giant and ask yourself how long can this film go on? (laughter) So, that idea was sacrificed for the good of the rest. That’s not an excuse. The film is very male oriented. We spent a lot of time in the joint where there are few women.

Q. We’ve heard where the basis for Damian’s character came from. Where did your basis and research come from?

BB. Well, it is interesting to note that Damian and I are more similar than we might appear. I too came from a bi-cultural background. My mother is Peruvian Indian from Lima and my father is Anglo-English from German descent. So, a lot of my mom’s family stayed in Peru and I was brought up around my father’s family. We got involved with the Native American movement. So my cultural identity is really in the Native American community. The Latino thing really wasn’t with me while I was growing up. My mom never taught us Spanish. But a lot of the basis comes from my strong family, which is a Latino thing. I mean, if you look at Latino culture the family element is very important.

And he told Taylor, “Man, that was me, man. I saw myself up there. I never saw myself before and all my camarades, the way we live, that was us. I don’t want to look like that no more.”

Benjamin Bratt. I think it’s extremely clear by the end of the film that although the character of Niklo has risen to power at what cost, you ask yourself, and you see that the cost is his soul.

Q. How will inner city children feel about your role?

DC. Well, I know how they feel about it because I was a Chicano and I was brought up around my father’s family. We stayed in Peru and I was brought up in a way, a way I grew up fast. I quit school in the ninth grade. I went into the Navy. I served a little time. I went to the right way. I grew up fast. I quit school in the ninth grade. I went into the Navy. I served a little time. I went to the right way. I grew up fast. I quit school in the ninth grade. I went into the Navy. I served a little time. I went to the right way. I grew up fast. I quit school in the ninth grade. I went into the Navy. I served a little time. I went to the right way. I grew up fast. I quit school in the ninth grade. I went into the Navy. I served a little time. I went to the right way. I grew up fast.

Q. What will you do after the film is over?

TH. Well, I think it’s exciting to note that Damian and I are more similar than we might appear. I too came from a bi-cultural background. My mother is Peruvian Indian from Lima and my father is Anglo-English from German descent. So, a lot of my mom’s family stayed in Peru and I was brought up around my father’s family. We got involved with the Native American movement. So my cultural identity is really in the Native American community. The Latino thing really wasn’t with me while I was growing up. My mom never taught us Spanish. But a lot of the basis comes from my strong family, which is a Latino thing. I mean, if you look at Latino culture the family element is very important.

And I got that from my mom. But I had to do a lot of research because Paco is Chicano to the bone. So, with Taylor’s prompting, the three of us actually moved into a house in East L.A. for two and a half months. We lived there for a month before filming began and it was there that I got really absorb and soak up the angle I was looking for, you know, getting to know some of the gang members in that neighborhood. We were living with a reformed gang member who, at this point in his life, was giving back to his community through the Community Youth Gang Programs. That was quite an experience.
Talkin' dirty with Dr. Judy

Lorraine Rooney
Let's talk about sex, Ba-by! That was the theme in the Ratt on Thursday, April 29 when Dr. Judy Korianski, sex therapist, host of Z100's "Love Phones," and popular talk show guest, visited Montclair State to discuss attitudes toward sex with students.

Dr. Judy, as she is called by her followers, emphasized being uninhibited when discussing sex by showing a close-up view of popcorn popping and asking audience members what they thought the abstract picture could be. She encouraged different views about the video and said that students should take the same creative attitude toward sex.

"Be open with your partner to say what you want," stated Dr. Judy while telling the audience the importance of being honest with sexual desires. "Be comfortable enough with someone in order to work with them."

Dr. Judy also discussed certain taboos that many students hold about their roles in sexual performance. She explicitly told the male portion of the audience that, "it is not a woman's job to turn a guy on and a guy doesn't make a woman have an orgasm."

Women, according to Dr. Judy, need to become more educated about their own bodies. She said, "Women must allow themselves to look at their bodies," and informed females that there is a ten week course to help women explore their bodies and sexuality.

Another aspect about sex women should take into consideration is investing in vibrators. Dr. Judy says vibrators can provide constant stimulation and build up a woman's confidence. She also said that vibrators can be found in stores in the home appliance section (and yes, Dr. Judy owns one, too). Dr. Judy also addressed male inhibitions as well as female problems. She stated that men are too concerned with penis size and the length of time of an erection. This is known as "performance anxiety" and should be worked on with the male's partner.

Dr. Judy also answered questions from the audience who wrote down their curiosities before the discussion. Some of Dr. Judy's answers were reinforced by some disturbing facts, such as, "only one-third of women have an orgasm during sex," and "it takes a guy three minutes to get to the point of excitement and it takes a woman fifteen minutes."

A discussion about safe sex and AIDS wrapped up Dr. Judy's visit to the Ratt. "A woman can get pregnant at any time during her cycle," stated Dr. Judy. "Pulling out and the rhythm method do not work." Dr. Judy suggests wearing a condom during intercourse for prevention of both AIDS and pregnancy.

Remembering The Holocaust

This past Monday, there was a Memorial held in remembrance of all six million Jews killed in the Holocaust. The project, held in the Student Center, was funded by the Jewish Student Union and entitled The Yom HaShoa Program.

There was significance in the chosen date, May 3. In the Eleventh Century, eleven Jews were killed exiting a synagogue. On May 3, 1918, thirteen Jews were drowned. On May 3, 1945 thousands of Austrian and Hungarian Jews were shot and burned. Only for the "aggravating" reason of their religion.

The sobering reality is that the past is not dead, that survivors of the Holocaust are still alive today. This brings a chilling truthfulness to how little has changed in the fifty years since the Holocaust. Examples such as the L.A. Riots, the beating of Rodney King and the tortures present in Bosnia are grim reminders of the dark underbelly of humanity.

Dr. Ron Hollander, a professor at MSC, spoke of the importance of not forgetting the Holocaust. He also stressed the role of the press's responsibility to inform the public, and how not all the information during this travesty was reported on.

It is also important that MSC, as a student body, remember the horrors that happened fifty years ago this year, and to be aware that these same atrocities have occurred through and up until today within wars, revolutions, as well as the racial and religious fighting found all over America today.

The Klu Klux Klan, a known prejudiced and racially violent organization, is more prevalent today than it was fifty years ago. Nazism can be found in underground magazines and some overt Skin Head organizations pledge their distaste for Jews, and other 'minority' groups.

With all the functions held on this campus, Elections, the Mardi Gras, etc., it is relevant and pertinent to take a somber step toward reducing the violence in our own country today. Functions held like this one, are well worth the student fees we give every term if that is what it takes to reduce prejudiced hatred.

No matter what the fight, there should always be held a value of human rights. Though the Holocaust was, and always will be remembered as horrific, it would desecrate the dead not to learn from the past. The reason for Memorial events, is not only to lament the dead, but to avoid further occasions to remember.

The program ended in a poetry reading and the lighting of six candles to remember the six million Jews that were tortured and killed. Let them not go forgotten.

Quote of the Week

Memorials such as this one should be held more often so that horrors like this would not repeat itself.

Powder keg mentality still in inner city

I remember driving home last spring when a voice interrupted the song I was listening to on the radio. The man was obviously trying to retain both composure and opinion and the absence of two rear speak-ers game this voice in moron-sounding tone, so that all I could decipher amidst my own resurfacing thoughts of nuclear war and emergency broadcast system beeps, was that somehow Los Angeles exploded in flames, and was burning out of control. I raced home and immediately turned on the television. The California sun had not sought refuge yet, making the scenes before me seem like visions of another world trapped in constant twilight. Black smoke curled in great plumes of malignance and painted in the horizon, obscuring the city. The cameras cut from some scene after scene, and it slowly dawned upon me what that was so unserving about the images was the fact that amidst all this destruction, there was not one person to be found. Stares waited in the distance, as though they were chasing some mysterious being who had swooped from the heavens to wreak havoc upon L.A.

Just as I began to doubt my senses and reach for the LSD flashback survival manual, I was answered by a woman reporter who stood before a row of gutted stores. The people of a little suburban town north of L.A. had only a few hours before acquired the four police officers that were unlucky enough to be immortalized by the magic of video technology as they swung Billy clubs and although every major city was in revolt, we had nearly forgotten, the good old siege mentality has returned. The country waits, and tension ruled the day, smiling as its emissaries of anger and fear found easy prey across America.

In New York workers scurried out hastily toward their homes as employers anticipated the worst and boarded up shop. Why? Because for the first time in many years, America was right in being scared, and although every major city was in revolt, New York sat quietly, tranquill, waiting.

Today, almost one year since the riots we had nearly forgotten, the good old siege mentality has returned. The country waits, biting the precious nails of one hand while the other fingers a loaded nine millimeter pistol, the knuckles white and shaking. Three days later, over fifty people were dead and nearly one billion dollars in property damage was done. One of all this madness, the violence spread as a siege mentality took hold of America. Everyone was watching, except the president and David Gates, as the National Guard exchanged fire with L.A. gang members, and Korean shop owners sat on the roofs of their businesses like bad actors in a cheap Kung Fu movie just waiting for a fight. The stores were flooded with people buying guns, and tension ruled the day, smiling as its emissaries of anger and fear found easy prey across America.

Philosophy can really blow your mind. Four out of my six classes this semester are philosophy, and I was beginning to feel the strain. Philosophers spend a lot of time trying to figure strange things out, like whether or not a chair is really a chair, or if everything could conceivably disappear tomorrow.

"H.L. Mencken once said, "We are here and it is now. Further than that, all human knowledge is moonshine." He certainly has a point. The more we try to know, the less we know. I think that some-how in trying to find reality, we damn the fact that it is right in front of us. This is a common complaint that people have about those who are "gifted"; you give them a simple problem, and the problem looks too easy to them. So, instead of stating the obvious answer, they go through a very complex reasoning process to come up with the wrong answer.

Believe it or not, this is not a problem limited to "gifted" students. Everybody does this. Nobody, including myself, really knows how to live life. The answer is really quite simple: just do it and don’t think about it. The solutions to problems often just fall in our lap if we don’t try too hard. I have found this to be true, and yet it is so hard to live this way in our society. Everything has to be perfectly planned in advance, and we panic if something doesn’t go according to plan. Why do we limit ourselves? If something doesn’t work out, it doesn’t work out. No sense pouting over it.

Now don’t start accusing me of being carefree and lazy until you’ve tried this. Most people get annoyed at this sort of thing; after all, how can you go through life not caring and not having a set direction? Well, first of all, not caring too much is not the same as not caring. Secondly, nobody’s life has a set direction. Even the best laid plans are fouled up. When we plan too much, we complain when things don’t work out accordingly. And even if they do, we find something to complain about anyway.

So, keep on doing whatever you’re doing. Don’t worry about whether or not it comes out right - if it doesn’t you have plenty of time to either fix it or start something new. To sum up in the words of Jack Kerouac, "I don’t know. I don’t care. And it doesn’t make any difference."

Reminder, only one more chance this year to voice your opinions! Send in a letter or be unheard.

With college soon to be behind you, it's time to trade in your greasy snacks for something with dual overhead cams and sequential multi-point fuel injection.

Of course, we're talking about the fun-to-drive Nissan NX 1600, one of a full line of very special Nissan cars we're offering to graduating college students at some very special leasing and financing rates. The program is called the Nissan College Graduate Financing Program and you'll find complete details (in other words, eligibility requirements and legal jargon) in a brochure that we have conveniently placed in your cap and gown package.

It will explain how getting into a styling, new car like the NX 1600, 240SX, or Sentra is easier than you might have thought. (Not as easy as ordering a pepperoni pizza. But easier than Biophysics 401.) Also, look for details about our sweepstakes, which could put you behind the wheel of an NX 1600—free of charge—for an entire year.

Now that you're graduating from college, perhaps it's time to redirect your pizza budget.

MSC lacrosse's season of disappointment comes to an end

by Nicole Festa

Disappointing is certainly one way to describe the MSC lacrosse team's recently concluded season.

The Red Hawks finished with a sub-.500 record for the first time during Doug Alsefum's six-year stint as head coach. The Red Hawks' 5-6 record also created a post-season roadblock. The Red Hawks were initially invited to the ECAC Metro Division III Men's Lacrosse Tournament. However, MSC was not allowed to participate because of their record and was replaced by Drew University, the eventual winner of the tournament.

Despite the team's record, Alsefum was pleased with the way his team handled itself on the field.

"As far as wins and losses are concerned it was a disappointing season," he said. "But the way the team responded wasn't. They had two options. They could have quit trying or they could have just done the best they could do," Alsefum added.

Back in February, Alsefum knew that the season would be filled with complications. The Red Hawks altered their original schedule by replacing four marginal opponents with four tough ones.

Then the team began to lose players to either ineligibility, injury or illness. "That's the hardest thing to deal with. The players on the roster change from the beginning of the season until the end of it," said Alsefum.

The Red Hawks did have their share of outstanding performers, even though their record doesn't indicate it.

Senior goalkeeper Ken Kane will be the toughest to replace according to Alsefum. "Ken is definitely the best goalie in our league and he has a shot to be an All-American," Alsefum said proudly.

The "heart" of the team this season was its midfielders. Chris Bill, Neil Blaney and Keith Van Ness will all return next season with hopes of turning things around.

The Red Hawks will also have a had time replacing two of their top defenders. All-Knickerbocker Conference performers Jim Brunton and Heath Pisicarka will be lost to graduation.

Alsefum also was pleased with the mile players who performed so well. Mike Brunton, Jim Nugent, Rich Skalaski and Roger Welton all filled holes that weren't anticipated at the start of the season. The added experience should help all of these returnees to be key contributors next season.

Speaking of next season, things are looking much brighter for the Red Hawk lacrosse program.

"We should be outstanding. Our guys are stepping up in class and we have many returning players. Also, we're expecting a few recruits," said Alsefum.

When asked to sum up this season, Alsefum said, "It was a learning experience.

RED HAWKS NOTES...

Alsefum's career record at MSC currently stands at an impressive 66-21. This season MSC played only 11 games. In the previous five seasons, the team had averaged 15 games played per year.

Will MSC baseball find the promised land?

by Brian Faizaran

The show. The dance. The mad to Battle Creek. All are synonyms for the journey which MSC is about to embark upon in the ultimate quest of Division III baseball–a College World Series Championship.

Sure the Red Hawks are 25-7 (13-3 NJAC). Names such as Rob DiLaurenzio, John Pallino, Ralph Yezza, Jason Scavalla and Joe Critelli make pitchers sweat and give them reasons to call in sick. But like the Detroit Tigers of recent, pitching is a bit thin.

In this column, I will examine why MSC will or will not "make noise" in the post-season, supported with fact and sour reasoning.

Reasons why the Red Hawks could be the toast of the party:

1. Hitting. First and foremost, the Red Hawks would not be 25-7 without their legion of bats. The top seven of DiLaurenzio, Tony Martinez, Critelli, Pallino, Yezza, Mike Minuce and Scavalla combined for 25 homers and 201 RBI. Add Chris Roof and Mike Murphy and you have a deep and fearsome lineup. A "Murderer's Row" in Division III of sorts.

2. Starting pitching. Drew Yocum and Chris Rampone are the two constants. Combined, they went 10-0 with an ERA near two. Add highly touted freshman T.J. Consello (3-3) and the surging Todd Sak, who has won his past two decisions and will give head coach Norm Schoening some options.

3. Relief Pitching. Shaky, inconsistent, scary. They have been erratic at best. "The Freezer" Frank DiDoppio is the reason why they are as good as they are. Schoening needs Scavalla, John and Carlos and a cast of currently underachieving arms to keep MSC in the hunt.

2. The Pioneer Factor.

The Red Hawks have not beaten William Paterson in their past nine tries. The Pioneers have pitching as deep and talented as Flipper-20,000 Leagues beneath sea level. And the hitting can set off a fire alarm at a moment's notice.

Will MSC have revenge on its mind, or will it be as timid as the 90-pound weakling against the 250-pound bully?

MSC has had a very successful season. But unless the relief pitching, aside from DiDoppio, gets better, the Red Hawks could become an endangered species early in tournament play.

MSC should beat Rowan again. WPC will be tough, though. Look for the Red Hawks to end the Pioneer hex in the NJAC playoffs as both teams prepare for the NCAA tournament.

But when all is said and done, WPC will defeat MSC in the Mid-Atlantic Regionals of the NCAA's, continuing its dominance over the Red Hawks.

Brame, Stevens bring back memories at CTC meet

This past weekend marked the return to form of one of MSC's best athletes.

Shaunay Brame answered any questions concerning her willingness to recapture the form of the world's fastest woman.

Brame was outstanding at the CTC Championships last weekend.

old that led to her being classified among the most feared runners to step on the track in recent years.

Brame, though slightly smaller and able to form sentences of more than two syllables, barred a line from the world's finest ever talking steroid, Arnold Schwartzenegger. She let her actions speak for themselves and her point was well taken. She's back!

Brame won the 100 meter race this past weekend at the CTC Championships, held at Trenton State College in Ewing Township. She won with a time of 12.21, which qualified her for the National Championships.

"Todd has really turned it around. He is pitching very well right now," said Schoening.

ECSU (16-8-2) charged to a 2-1 advantage behind Richie Clegg's two-run single in the second. But the Red Hawks jumped all over ECSU starter Matt Sonnecki (1-1) for four runs in the third, which for all eyes and ears, put the game in the safe. Mike Micucci (2 for 3, 3 RBI) drilled a two-run home run in the inning to pace MSC's 10-hit attack.

Chris Roof added a two-run blast, his second of the year, to put the game out of reach for ECSU. Dipold, Andrew Mair and Scavalla combined to close things out. Scavalla, best known for his offensive production, got the final out to get his first save.

"He had arm problems earlier in the season," said Schoening, of why he hadn't previously used Scavalla, who pitched sparingly last year. "Hopefully he can help us down the road."

On Friday, the place was Alumni Field in Newark and the specialty was comeback. In fact, it was a sonic boom of a comeback, to say the least. MSC scored eight runs in the fourth inning and scored two in the ninth to pull out a 10-8 victory.

Things looked horrendous early in the game, as Rutgers-Newark chased Red Hawk starter John Carlson, by scoring six runs in the first three innings. But MSC exploded with an eight-run flurry, the most notable contribution coming from Roof and his three-run homer. Rutgers-Newark quickly knotted the game at 8-8 with sacrifice flies by Jason Himmich and Rich Scalabrin off of MSC's John Blachard. Brian Sasso and Frank Dipold went the rest of the way, with Dipold picking up the victory (4 2/3 shutout innings, 5 strikeouts).

Micucci had to bring the victory into the trenches of the Red Hawks. After John Pallino (381, 10 HR, 48 RBI) tripled to start the ninth, Micucci stepped to the plate.

In the bleachers... a mark of 25.60.

In the upcoming NJAC Championships, Brame will defend her 200 meter championship of last year's meet in which she ran a strong 25.40. She also looks forward to taking first in the 100 meters because of her disappointing performance last season in the same event when she was disqualified for jumping the gun. She feels that her improved performance during the outdoor season as opposed to her disappointing indoor season, can be attributed to improving her training habits.

Head coach John Blanton stressed the need to stay mentally focused as well as physically sharp. His coaching has paid off for Brame.

On the men's side it was Dewayne Stevens, who once again qualified for the National Championships with a mark of 47.16. The time was even more impressive because it was Stevens' first open competition in the 400 meters.

In the 200 meters Stevens ran a 21.4 and took second behind Todd, who owns the current national indoor record. Stevens qualified for the National Championships with a mark of 47.16. The time was even more impressive because it was Stevens' first open competition in the 400 meters.

They meet again. After finally defeating Trenton State for the first time under head coach Anita Kubicka last week, the MSC softball team will take on the Lions again this Friday at 10 a.m.

However, the stakes will be much higher this time around. That's because this game will be part of the championship round of the New Jersey Athletic Conference tournaments.

The tournament will be played at Rowan College in Glassboro and switches from single-elimination to double-elimination in this round. The championship game is tentatively set for Sunday afternoon. The tournament could be over on Saturday due to the double-elimination process.

The winner of the tournament receives an automatic bid to the NJAC playoffs Friday at 12 p.m.

The losers of both games will play in the NJAC championship round by defeating Kean University and moving on to the double-elimination process.

 MSC's one-two punch. Denise Warnock (15-1, 1.33 ERA), at left and Michelle Serio (12-5, 2.11 ERA) have kept opposing hitters in check.

Red Hawks have an impressive record, both overall and in the conference (5-3). They have also played one of the toughest schedules in Division III softball.

Costly Red Hawk errors force split with Rowan

The MSC baseball team's season can be summed up in a three-prong description. They're never pretty, usually diligent and almost always get the job done.

While the aforementioned describe the Red Hawks, it was of no use at MSC claved out a split of a double-header against NJAC rival Rowan College on Sunday, winning the opener 6-4 and losing the finale 7-4.

Baseball

This loss gave William Paterson the NJAC regular season title, giving MSC, ranked No. 9 nationally in Division III, the second seed in the NJAC playoffs Friday at William Paterson. The Red Hawks will play the very same Profs of Rowan in Wayne.

Sophomore Jason Scavalla continued his consistent play, winning in the game-winning run in the eighth inning to lead the Red Hawks (25-7, 13-3 NJAC) to a 6-4 victory over Rowan.

"We are playing very well," head coach Norm Schoenig said.

And Scavalla is doing a great job for us," Junior left-hander Drew Yocum (6-0, 2.67 ERA) had yet another solid outing, hurling 7 2/3 innings for the victory. It was the Red Hawk offense that had to battle back, though.

Down 3-1 in the sixth, the Red Hawks scored three runs, two of which scored on centerfielder Chris Roof's two-run single. The Profs tied it in the top of the seventh, but Scavalla struck Rowan from the top of the game's mountain.

Frank Dippold, he of the iron arm who has kept the Red Hawk bullpen aloft, got the final four outs to gain his NJAC-leading fourth save. Doug Dreyer (1-1) took the loss for Rowan after giving up five runs (all earned) on eight hits.

The second game led to the double-header being capable of being dubbed "A Tale of Two Games."

MSC, a very strong defensive team, committed two errors in the critical eighth inning, which allowed the Profs to score three unearned runs to lead them to a 7-4 triumph in the second game.
