Roaches check into Bohn, will they check out?

Bohn Hall has a reputation as being one of the more unsani tory dormitories on campus and is legen d for its collapsing shower stalls, drainage problems and lack of basic amenities such as shower curtains in its communal bath tooms.

'The rotting ceiling of a shower in Bohn Hall'

by Glenn Steinberg

Complaints from residents about worms slithering from show er drains and armies of scurrying cockroaches occupying Bohn Hall Bathrooms have prompted the planning of summer bathroom renovations and another visit from exterminators for the mainten ance plagued domitory, according to Doug Cooper, Assis tant Director of Facilities.

Let the IFC Games Begin

by Glenn Steinberg

The college will be renovat ng the bathrooms over the sum mer at a cost of little more than $1 million, said Cooper. Seventeen of Bohn's bathrooms will be renovated. Cooper antici pates the bathrooms in the B and C wings of the building to be fin ished by August.

middle of the semester and acted upon. Exterminators were sum moned to the twenty-one-year old building, bathrooms were cleaned and shower curtains replaced in response to the complaints, said Cooper.

Unsanitary conditions, how ever, continued even after the re pairs. According to Cooper, re pairing the bathroom is simply not enough. "Repairing it [the bath room] would be just like putting a band-aid on it; it would just be like covering it up, not fixing it," said Cooper.

The underlying problem with Bohn Hall, said Cooper, lies in the fact the building was poorly constructed us ing substandard mate rial. At the time, con struction was done quickly and cheaply, resulting in prematurely-eged buildings.

Cooper said the college must replace the old drains, walls and floors to substantially improve Bohn's bathrooms. Repairs will simply not last in the shoddily built building.

The Second Annual Inter-Frater nity Council (IFC) Games started on May 12 and will end on May 17.

IFC is made up of eight fraterni
eties, all of whom are par
-taking in this year's games: Zeta Beta Tau, Alpha Chi Rho, Delta Chi, Theta Xi, Tau Kappa Epsilon, Tau Phi Beta and Phi Alpha Psi (Senate).

Since Senate is the returning champion of the IFC games, one of their brothers began the games by carrying the torch around the quad outside of the Student Center, where most of the events will be held.

According to Zeta Beta Tau's Tom "Pillar" Seadeck, the fraterni eties on campus did not feel that the Greek Games included every thing in it that it should, so the IFC Games were created with new and different events.

Some of the events included in the IFC Games are the Jello eating contest (who finishes first), hot-dog eating contest (who eats most in four minutes), 100-meter dash, arm-wrestling, quarter keg toss, home run derby, golf (accuracy test), football pass/punt, jave lin, leap frog and others.

Delta Kap
pa Psi's Joe Ellis, one of the participants and judge of the Games said "The whole idea is to promote IFC and to have fra ternities come out and have a good time." Ellis believes that the games are competitive, but at the same time not too serious an atmosphere is felt because the idea is for every one to have fun and a good time.

SGA hires new attorney at law

by Glenn Steinberg

The Student Government
Association's (SGA's) search for a new legal attorney ended on Tuesday.

The SGA selected Joseph Mecca as the new attorney be cause "he best suited our needs," said Rich Kunze, Vice President of the SGA.

The process of looking for a new attorney started with five law firms applying. After inter views with all five firms and after deliberations with this year's and next year's SGA Executive Board, an attorney was chosen said Kunze.

The job of the legal attor ney is to provide legal advice on matters such as higher education and contracts, anything out of the classroom such as libel and up to last year, free legal advice to students. Due to budget re straints, this service did not prove cost-effective and the free legal service has been eliminated for next year. Mecca will just serve as legal council to SGA next year said Kunze.

Anndon Shancupp, this year's lawyer has been with the SGA for the past seven years. Kunze said that he has done an excellent job as far as legal ad vice, but since they are revamp ing the service, they decided to look into other law firms.

Shancupp is an MSC pro fessor in the department of Law and Taxation in the School of Business.

During this past week, a report by six leading economic institutes predicting that the country's gross domestic product will shrink as much as 2% this year, marking the worst recession since World War II and saddling Germany with high unemployment and its biggest budget deficit in modern times. In the same week, the metalworkers' union went on strike in eastern Germany, demanding 26% pay increases. Nearly 40,000 of them had walked off the job by the weekend, and union leaders threatened to call out a total of 350,000 if employees don't show some flexibility.

In a nationally televised address 11 days after his strong showing in a national referendum, Yeltsin declared that those who do not share his aims "should simply leave," and called for new parliamentary elections by the fall. The President's prediction of a battle with the parliament over his new draft constitution, which would do away with the conservative Congress of People's Deputies, was immediately fulfilled: parliamentary leaders introduced their own draft designed to restrict the power of the President.

In an effort to limit the number of voters turning out in the election, Khmer Rouge rebels killed more than 20 people in raids on various Cambodian cities and against units of the 20,000 member U.N. peacekeeping force. On Monday guerrillas seized the airport in Siemreab, and eight Japanese and Dutch peacekeepers were wounded. These turn of events have increased fears for the safety of U.N. personnel. Fifty volunteer election supervisors outside Phnom Penh have left their posts, supervisors outside Phnom Penh have left their posts, adding to doubts that the U.N. force will be able to supervise the election throughout the countryside.

U.S. Intelligence is trying to find the beginnings of an alleged plot to assassinate former President Bush during his last month visit to Kuwait. Officials in Kuwait have arrested 16 people including 11 Iraqis nationals, and have seized high-tech equipment and hundreds of pounds of explosives. According to the Washington Post, Kuwaiti officials say three attempts were planned, first a remote-controlled car bomb set to detonate as Bush arrived in Kuwait City, a second car bomb near a theater where Bush received an honorary doctorate, and last, a suicide attack by a man wrapped in explosives. Clinton officials are debating how to retaliate if strong enough evidence traces the plot back to Baghdad.

Last Thursday, two murders took place, both by postal officers. The first took place in Dearborn, Michigan, by Larry Jaison who was upset at losing a promotion to a woman and killed one co-worker and wounded two others before killing himself. The other murder took place in Dana Point, California, by Mark Richard Hilburn who returned to the post office from which he had been fired and killed a letter carrier and wounded a clerk. Hilburn was arrested at a bar on Saturday morning and is also suspected of killing his mother, whose body was found at her home the same day of the post office murder, and of shooting four other people before he was apprehended.

Some G.O.P. Senators are threatening a filibuster against Clinton's new campaign-finance proposal. The plan calls for some public financing of campaigns, and would bar big donors from dodging contribution limits by funneling funds through a presidential candidate's political party. The problem is that the proposal is heavy on concessions to reform-shy Democratic leaders and on retreats from Clinton's pledge to reduce the maximum contribution by a political-action committee to a congressional candidate from $5,000 to $1,000.

In sports news, the New York Yankees have just split a four game weekend series with the first place Detroit Tigers. The series left the Yankees just one and a half games out of first place. The other New York baseball team, the New York Mets did not fare as well. They dropped their series with the expansion team, the Florida Marlins. The series left the Mets eleven and a half games behind of the first place Philadelphia Phillies.

On Tuesday, a Federal court ruled that the City University of New York had violated Dr. Leonard Jeffrie's right to free speech when it removed him from his position as chairman of the black studies program department at CUNY last year when he was charged with delivering a racial speech. The court left Judge Kenneth Conboy of Federal District Court in Manhattan to decide whether Jeffries should be reinstated or not. The jury is still deliberating on whether or not he should receive any monetary damages.

Impersonating a subway motorman on Saturday, 16 year old Kerin Thomas took control of the "A" train and took thousands of passengers on a three hour tour, a three hour tour. Thomas is being charged as an adult with reckless endangerment which is a felony that carries a maximum sentence of seven years, as well as forgery and criminal impersonation.

The Atlantic Division Champion New York Knicks opened their best of seven series against the Charlotte Hornets on Sunday beating them at Madison Square Garden 111-95.

Campus Police Report
compiled by Kelly J. Schab

Suspicious Activities
4/27 A female Blanton Hall resident was approached by a white male while coming out of the bookstore. He asked her to become a masseuse for him but when she asked him for forms of identification, he only gave her his phone number. She thought this was suspicious and reported it to the police.

4/30 The remains of two animals were found in a circle of rocks. Scratched in large rocks were the words: "I kill cops daughters," and "Keep the past in the past." The incident is still being investigated for the possibility of cruelty to animals, ritual acts and hazing.

5/10 A female Bohn Hall resident saw a white male with red curly hair sitting on the floor in one of the aisles of Sprague Library. When she came close to him, he began masturbating vigorously. This was the second Monday that she has seen him.

Theft
4/28 An anonymous letter was received by campus police that detailed the theft of baseball tickets from the mail room. The two suspected thieves worked in the mailroom. The tickets were received in a damaged parcel and the two suspects claim that they couldn't locate the owner. The investigation led to the identification of the victim who will sign a complaint in Montclair Municipal Court.

5/3 A credit card had been mailed to a resident of Freeman which was never received though it was reported that someone had been using the card.

5/4 Four hubcaps were stolen from a vehicle belonging to a Freeman resident parked in lot 21 over a two day period.

5/5 A female found that someone had spray-painted her car while it was parked in lot 14 between 3:30 and 9pm.

Assault
5/4 Officers arrived at Webster Hall and found a male restraining a female on the ground. The female is a resident of Webster and the male is a student. They had a verbal confrontation and the male was holding her down because she was trying to assault him. Neither wanted to file a criminal complaint against the other. The dorm director advised the male not to return.

Harassment
5/7 A resident of Blanton Hall complained that she received a threatening phone call. The caller threatened to hurt her and damage her car. Her car was secured in a faculty parking lot and she was escorted to and from her car by campus police officers.

Attempted Theft of a Motor Vehicle
5/8 A male resident of Blanton found that someone attempted to steal his Pontiac Firebird. There was damage done to the steering column, and the stereo and radar detector were stolen.

5/11 At 3:30am, an officer patrolling lot 28 observed two males exiting a parked car and entering another. Another male was laying across the seats in the parked car. This led to the arrests of three individuals, Michael Malone, Jon Jensen and Dwane Johnson, all non-students. They had been visiting a female resident of the Clove Road Apartments. They were all charged with the attempted theft of a motor vehicle and conspiracy to steal that vehicle.

Careless Driving
5/10 An officer reported that a member of the faculty was driving in a careless manner from lot 17 onto College Ave. passing the "Do Not Enter" sign. A summons will be issued.

Suspicious Activities
5/10 A female student who was working in a computer lab in Richardson left the room for a little while and when she returned her wallet was stolen from out of her purse.

5/10 A typewriter was stolen sometime over a three day period from Partridge Hall. It was left out in the open for faculty and students to use.

Damage to Motor Vehicle
4/30 It was reported that one of the trailers used by a contractor had been damaged by lot 30.

5/5 A female found that someone had spray-painted her car while it was parked in lot 14 between 3:30 and 9pm.

Prophet, Latest Amy Fisher Victim?

Welcome, loyal readers, to this very special installment of PROPHET BIGG! As a treat for you, in this last installment of this year, I give you Amy Fisher: The Musical. The "mock opera"—based on over a year's worth of hyped-up "news" about the teen tragedy is playing now at the off, off Broadway Wings Theater in Manhattan. When myself and my charming companion arrived at the theatre we were given a program and a "Test Your Amy Fisher I.Q." test, which we found simply hilarious.

The creators of the show, Bill Wheeler, Morgan Marvin and C. Coddy Sachs, were nice enough to send me two complimentary tickets to the show and allowed me to ask questions of the cast after the show...

Prophet: Are you guys really big Amy Fisher fans? How did you develop a musical from this?

Bill Wheeler: No. It's sort of developed from Vulgarities: A Tasteless Review (Which was performed before Amy Fisher) which is a bunch of sketches and songs about current events. And at the time, the Amy Fisher story was real hot. So, I wrote a story about it, a sketch, you know. And it evolved into a musical. So, that's how we came up with Amy Fisher: The Musical.

P. So, when Bill approached you guys and said, "Get this. We're gonna do Amy Fisher: The Musical," what did you do?

BW: Well, they had quite a laugh over it! (laughter)

P. And then you said, "No, no, no. Really?" (laughter)

Patrick J. Kinsella (Eric Naiburg, Amy's Attorney): Well, before her sentencing it was getting so ridiculous. Everyday, the whole summer. She was on the cover of every magazine, every newspaper. It was just so pathetic that it wasn't real anymore. It was just a big joke and it fit perfectly into what Vulgarities is. It was vulgar how it was becoming such an obsession.

Ellen McQueeney (Amy Fisher): And they just keep giving us more and more material! (laughter)

P. So, has the show gotten longer as a result of the never-ending material?

Cast: Yes.
I}

May 20, 1993 marks the last episode of Cheers, and while I'm not sad it's going, I'm not too pleased, either. Cheers has been a mainstay in NBC's lineup for the past decade, and when a show that's this successful goes off the air, it leaves a big gap to fill. Not only do the powers that be at NBC have to find a show to fill the timeslot, but they also have to worry about playing it safe with a complete and total bomb, like a television version of Ishtar. All in all, there is still life in Cheers, even after the taps run dry. Good shows with a long run behind them can look forward to a happy life in syndication. That's how Cheers will be reborn, and have an even stronger following than now. When M*A*S*H was on CBS, I rarely watched it. Then again, some of the shows were a little over my head back then. After the two-hour finale, I began watching it on Channel 5 when I had nothing else better to do (like homework), and that's when I really began to get into it. Now, I attempt to watch it whenever I can, but I stop by my girlfriend's house after work. I have to fight for which show to watch. She's a big Cheers fan.

So, now Cheers is in syndication. I wonder just how big the following will be as the years tick by. Lucille Ball became even more legendary as the original I Love Lucy was syndicated. Likewise for The Honeymoons, The Tonight Show (specifically the Best Of series), and last we forget the king of syndication, Star Trek. Tekkies flocks conventions wearing pointy ears, Starfleet uniforms, and doing the Vulcan hand salute. I suppose huge fans of Ralph Kramden would wear Raccoon Lodge hats, but can you imagine a roomful of people wearing Kamikazes? The Magnificent turban or red hair and penciled eyebrows of Lucy? I'm going off on a tangent here. My point, plain and simple, is that Cheers has a permanent shelf in the Great Television Library, along with many other notables, not just those mentioned above. I never really got into it, but like M*A*S*H, I have plenty of time to catch up. I'm genealogizing it, but if you figure that Cheers has been on for 11 years, multiplied by 26 episodes a season, you come up with 286 episodes. Dust out the videotape, because some VCRs have a lot of mileage ahead of them.

With that, I conclude this semester's edition of Couch Potato Update. For those who are interested, I'm in the house stretch, with only about a year left at MSC, which will be a sad day for some, and a cause of celebration for others. Well, you're not getting rid of me that easily! I'll be back!

The Musical Life

BWW. The I.Q. test came out in a paper because May the 19th is the one year anniversary of the shooting and since it's been a year and there's so many details in the show, I just wanted to, sort of, refresh everyone's memory about that.

P. Haven't touched the other women they slept with Joe, which seems to be Amy's cousin, who claimed to be Amy's friend. It's the part, you know so many people that it was just a matter of calling and saying, "Do you want to do this?" Cast. Laughter.

P. What has been the reaction from the audiences?

Cast. Laughter.

BWW. A lot of people from Long Island come, with all their hair. (laughter)

P. Have you guys heard any reaction from Amy Fisher about this?

BWW. How could she not know about it? (laughter) Cast. No. (laughter)

P. Are you packing the house or is it a sparse crowd?

BWW. We've been trying to get Dave Letterman to come see it because he's such a big Joe fan, but we'll have to send him a video because he doesn't go out anywhere.

P. Any final words?

Cara Connors (Maria, Amy's friend) It's the good time, it was just a show like a Dennis Miller joke played out live in front of your very eyes. (laughter)

I never did like coming up with headlines. So there.

Listen and dig. You can tell the end is near. The end of the Spring semester swarms around like so many gnats fostering in a pool of stale rainwater. The pounding heat, the inescapable sweat that drenches your forehead, head, weighs your body down like a slab of molten lava thrown from the center of the earth.

Wow. Listen and dig. Many of our fellow archons will be passing across the abyss, leaving behind this mountain of mystery nestled between Clifton, Little Falls and Montclair. They will be entering the netherworld, a place liberated of term papers, oral reports, and final exams. It is a gallery of oddities out there, where drooling fellow urchins will be passing across the abyss, wondering at which end is near. The end of the semester swarms around the center of the earth.

The world knows you're coming. So let's behave accordingly shall we?

Paint your face. No, better yet, paint your entire body one color. Red or green or something.

Bang.

Boom.

Crash.

You are red, naked and expressionless. Life is good.

Get onto campus. The moment you step foot into the Student Center cafeteria, make the following announcement...

"GREETINGS AND SALUTATIONS! I am Harvey! I am graduating! These are my friends, Harriet and Ray. The elephants fly by night. There are no losters in the House of Toast. According to the Law of Conservation of Matter and Energy, there is no more energy in the universe now than there was 10 billion years ago. THIS GIVES ME DISCOMFORT. I will now chew on Harriet's head..."

Climb onto the nearest table and above Harriet's head down your throat. Make certain there's a terrible amount of saliva and bodily fluids spewing from your mouth during this procedure. In the midst of this, swing Ray over your head like a helicopter and sing the following praises:

"RAY RAY RAY! You've got a nice name RAY. It kind've goes to trial, well, do your time quietly. 18 months isn't forever."

"RAY RAY RAY! It kind've rolls off the tongue doesn't it RAY? But you don't need a tongue to say it do you RAY? RAY RAY RAY."

This might be difficult with Harriet in your mouth, but that's no reason not to try...

The next step is to run man, run like an rabid animal across the room and into the kitchen and French kiss every single worker in there. Make it passionate, even if they resist. Moan and belch and make hideous noises with your amputals.

When the Campus Police arrive, gaze at them with unabandoned astonishment that they've even consider arresting you. Pretend that you are unaware of the fact that you're red and naked with your mother's pantyhose over your head. How you justify your self in court is an entirely different matter. Hopefully, by then you'll have become a wealthy industrialist who can hire high profile attorneys. If you majored in English or History or something and don't have a job by the time the incident goes to trial, well, do your time quietly. 18 months isn't forever you know...

Make sure your 4, 5 or 6 years at Camp Montclair were all that and a bag of chips. If not, the days are numbered my fellow urchins. Dig that. Happy G-Day.

Coral reefs in peril: who is to blame?

by Anne Caldiero

Their colors reflect an underwater rainbow. Corals masaveness create mountains that at a glance appear to be rocks, trees and grasses blowing in the wind. After evolving over thousands of years, these ancient calcified skeletons have now become endan­ ered. Biologists are debating the extent of global damage and are unsure of the coral reefs greatest enemy.

Coral reefs comprise a large ecosystem which house many marine creatures such as fish, mollusk, sea anemones and octopuses. Their biological diversity compares with that of rainforests. Any major threat to them could cause an ecological tragedy.

They could be shattered by the same gulf their rivals and by using specialized digestive juices, rid them of their competitors. Others grow tentacles which have the ability to sting their neighbors. These toxins have the promise of becoming pos­sible treatments for major human diseases such as cancer and AIDS.

Many scientists feel this hope could be shattered by the same animals it would save. Human assaults like global warming, overfishing and pollution are probable causes. Others propose that human destruction is minimal compared to natural forces in nature like lack of sunlight due to rising water levels and hurricanes.

Scientists generally agree that human activity is putting stress on some reefs. Determining the extent of the damage to this fragile ecosystem will be difficult because few have looked at reefs all over the world to compare the damage and individual stressors.

Recently, corals have been turning white and dying. Corals are nourished and colored by carbon compounds produced by algae. This algae dies when water temperatures rise, possibly, because of global warming. The overfishing of natural predators for the destructive crown-of-thorns star­ fish is also a probable cause.

Coral reefs, the most ancient and fragile of animals have survived many catastrophes throughout time. But, if they are forced to live with continuous serious stres­sors, the beauty of the coral reefs die forever.

Digable swimmable oceans?

by Lynn Landano

A dip in the ocean sounds good right now with the end of the semi­

Dance and finals upon us. But if we continue to neglect and abuse our oceans and beaches as we have in the past, this image may not remain a reality.

In 1991 alone, the International Coastal Cleanup collected 3.7 million pounds of garbage along the world’s beaches. One of the most common forms of debris found is plastic.

The Center for Marine Conservation collected over 34,000 six pack holders alone in their 1991 cleanup alone. This is only a portion of the garbage found on the beaches and in the oceans every year.

Combine this with organizations and corpo­rations that dump waste in the oceans (approximately 41,000-57,000 tons of toxic organic chemicals and 68,000 tons of toxic metals, according to the Envi­ rimental Protection Agency). It adds up to one huge problem.

New Jersey alone lost an estimated $1 billion dollars in 1988 from beach closures. The Wash­ington State department of fisheries estimated $3 million is lost annually on pollution related restrictions on fishing. This is to say nothing of the many marine animals that die annually from the fifth that human beings are dumping in their homes.

This year is the 20th anniversary of the Clean Water Act. The goals of that act, to make all the waters in the United States “fishable and swimma­ bles,” are still a long way off.

Also in 1993, the Magnuson Fisheries Con­servation and Management Act, the Marine Mammal Protection Act and the Endangered Species Act are up for reauthorization. For nearly 20 years, these laws provided the foundation for ocean protection in the U.S. The present administration has a unique opportunity to positively influence these reauthori­ zations by revitalizing the conservation principles of

From sludge to crystal clear water

by John Kodjak

Imagine a world with crystal clear crivers and oceans smelling

clean, fresh and teeming with fish and other life. This fantasy may soon become a reality as researchers find new ways of treating sewage. The present system barely alter the sludge before it’s dumped into our rivers and oceans. The result is foul-smelling rivers without fish and oceans that are a health hazard. But there is hope for change.

The key is using biological meth­ods instead of the steel and crude structures that are so prev­ sent today. In Arcada, California, Montrey, Virginia and many oth­er places in the United States, biological waste management systems are successfully being used. These systems take longer to process the sludge, but the result far outweighs the added time. The result is in about ten days black stinking sewage comes out as crystal clear water. Untreated waste is passed through a sequence of marshes each with its own job in decomposing the sludge. Microorganisms liv­ing in the marshes feed on waste. These tiny creatures are the power house behind the whole process.

In addition to sludge, microorganisms have also been found effec­tive in detoxifying hazardous industrial waste as well, although further research needs to be done.

Besides microorganisms, the marshes are a home for a variety of birds, fish and other creatures—all needed for the marsh to survive.

Biological waste management systems do not only benefit rivers and oceans, but also they provide a habitat for many species of wildlife. These systems are a dream that is rapidly becoming a reality,

Scientific warning, warning, warning...

by Dawn Kelly

The Scientific Community has issued a “World Scientist’s Warning to Humanity.” The “Warning” is an appeal to people of all nations to “take immediate action” to halt the accelerating dam­ ge threatening humanity’s life support systems.” The 1575 scien­tists from 649 countries are urging us to work towards sustainability, particularly in the areas of energy, transportation, international security and agriculture. Among those concerned scientists were 99 of the 196 living winners of the Nobel prize in science.

Project Bohn under Construction

When a campus like MSC sets out to achieve a goal, their haphazard ways of attaining status may cause one to wonder where the leaders of this institution’s mind’s are. With new atriums being built to decorate the new, (yet, well needed) library, the wonderfully new donut hole for Campus police, and of course the well used Access Road, with these responsible editions to our college, why are six hundred students living in a skyscraper tenement called Bohn?

Cockroaches reign there, amidst tom shower curtains, confirmed worgis crawling throughout bathrooms, and wasted, rotted food clogging sinks. This has been going on for many years, continuing in what was thought of as an endless cycle of disintegration.

The B and C wing bathrooms, under a one million budget, will be done by August.

Alas though, fellow oppressed, a band-Aid will have to do. Over the summer, the renovation of Bohn will begin. The showers will turn to stone, with added fixtures, but as of yet, no word on any permanent riddance of the insect population.

The B and C wing bathrooms, under a one million budget, will be done by August.

As experienced students, we know what that means. Move over A, the rest of the dorm needs to shower. The Bohn Projects could use a little paint too. And how about a little soap and water in those enticing, like electricity fixed in the afternoon, not in the middle of the night, disconnecting all halls? If chewing gum was recyclable, you could set up shop just on the ceilings, not to mention those fuzzy little corners filled with unrecognizable entities in each room.

If chewing gum was recyclable, you could set up shop just on the ceilings, not to mention those fuzzy little corners filled with unrecognizable entities in each room. Perhaps with a little more care to where State and Student money goes, Bohn would be filled, with people and not empty rooms. Perhaps, with a little planning, dorm life could be more enticing, like electricity fixed in the afternoon, not in the middle of the night, disconnecting all alarms. All this and more could be accomplished if we could just find out where the heads of our administration are.

He continues to enlighten us with a point that had gone unnoticed. “The buildings are made poorly, the halls are narrow and the ceilings are low.” With this information, the only solution seems to point to a bulldozer. Perhaps we could borrow one till the ground to make room for the new gardens?

Letter.. Hold your Breath for Clinton

My family was beaming and huddled around the TV set. President Clinton's appent face occupied the screen. Poignant words filled through his glinting teeth and echoed throughout the room. "Immediate action is being taken to restore the environment, the homeless are being housed, jobs will now open for the unemployed, healthcare will be made available to those in need, our nation's hungry will be fed, and everyone will be given an equal chance at obtaining an education." My eyes lit up, my heart sped, my family hit the floor. Stepping over my dumbfounded father, I peered out the window. The sun was shining and the earth was emitting a healthy glow. A wave of optimism filled the air. Smiling, I awakened from my dream.

When I think about the present condition of America, what we've become, I can't withstand the feeling of despair. Nothing is improving or so it seems. I am truly concerned with the welfare of present generation and those to come. It appears we, as a nation, need to give our government a crash course in life support mechanisms. Let's stop and think about some simple strategies towards transformation. Firstly, we can reinforce some positive thoughts about our country for a change. Remember our founding theme...Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness? Secondly, we need to empower each individual by giving them an equal voice in our democracy. Individuals and stable environment in which to live. What it really comes down to is getting our government leaders to channel their energy into developing a successful life support system for our country. You can't expect tell a sick, hungry, homeless, unemployed, uneducated individual to work in a group effort with healthy, well-fed, housed, employed, and educated individuals. It is essential that we take care of the immediate needs of our society before change can come. In dealing with such an immensely diverse society, we should expect aberrations. But I believe our collateral worries - crime, drugs, violence, and so on will greatly decrease when a feeling of equality is established between individuals.

So am I pointing fingers? Not necessarily. If you recall, we live in a democracy. We are all victims, but we can help each other become survivors.

Letter.. Sprague violates handicapped

To the editor,

Recently, I have become aware that our new library is not accessible to the handicapped. Despite the millions of dollars for our new library, there is still no ramp for those in wheelchairs. There are plans to construct a ramp on the side of the stairs, but to date, (few semesters after the library's opening) this has not been executed. The area for the proposed ramp is still littered with concrete rubble, with no evidence of any attempted excavation. (The last time I checked wheelchairs didn't come in off-road models.) A simple wooden ramp could easily be built at little expense to temporarily substitute for the promised permanent ramp.

I am appalled at this overt violation of the Civil Disobedience Act, which states that all newly constructed buildings must be handicapped accessible. The lack of regard shown for our small, yet present, handicapped minority is very disconcerting. I hope that this situation will soon be remedied so as not to shame our supposed "equal opportunity" institution.

Very Sincerely,
Pericles John Lantz II

Iron Heel

This is a rare moment for the Editor of the Editorial page to get to speak her own mind. I have sat here, listening to the fools of this campus complain about the trivial. "Oh, my personal ladder is too short. Come on guys let's all get along." People...you are sheep. Why don't you stop trying to work things out and hate each other? I hate a lot of people and it feels awful good. Like nice juicy sex, you dry uneventful idiots. You are all disintegrated ignoramuses. Ha.

Once upon a time, life needed order. The idiots above created politics, government. It wasn't me, I would have been the one controlling the staker to paint you. And it was thought to be good. Never, never is mass thought good. Individualism will reign.

Out of this muck filled monstrosity has been created a monster called urination, as all monsters must do, and that was named SGA. Needing to attend our recent Monticlarion budget session was appropriate. It was a madhouse computer and a fax machine, I got to realize the full amount of ludicrously running my school. In this reveling, I am sorry, we have inebriate number two complaining that during a personal column the author got a little too personal. What the hell do you think a column is, you punk? We have genius trimming her split ends, a million smoke breaks, and finally, out of forty plus legislators by eight o'clock, only fifteen are left.

Ah, the allegiance.

Timing there, I could feel my temperature rise realizing the full depth of idiocy we as the Monticlarion, would have to endure. The sheep have to ask if they can ask a question. Yes, I realize this is policy. But it is also stupid and you look ridiculous. "Ah, excuse me, point of order..." Merely a popular gracing pasture created for sheep. Oh, if I could only attain that stature, I too, could change things. Change things!! Does the SGA really think they make things happen? How many of you abated, belittled into small brained sheep? Make a choice, stand up. Or is it getting to difficult to figure out what your neighbors think?

Conditions for not giving us our computers were justified with comments like, "Understandable, you have no life. Do you realize, basing decisions by personal opinion is against the law? We can sue your ass (don't think we were not trying) and with any luck we will. In answer to your trite criticism, "Don't take this personally", of course I do, you muddled protozoa. I give everything here. But being a lowly, insignificant legislator, how would you know? Your ignorance is not forgiven.

To those who listened, and heard us, I would like to say a sincere thank you. I remember who you are and I, personally, am grateful. The SGA is a scummy place to wallow through, and the fact that we were heard by some was more than appreciated. As far as those who voted no, I remember you. To but to me , you are wrong, you always will be wrong, and as far I judge are anything.

To those who abstained, I also remember you. Every fucking one of you. To me you are lower than fools, you are wimps, you are spineless idiots unable to reach a state of decision. I have no respect for you, ever. I would rather hear no, than realize the blatant depth of your incompetence. You are the recipient of all my hate and may you rot in your ignorance.

By the way Inverso, yes, I can say this. It's an editorial. That's what it's here for. Get it...yet?

So when you have pen in hand, but sleep on the brain, make it a Vivarin night!
DiLaurenzio defies the odds on the field

Red Hawk infielder hasn’t let physical obstacles stand in his way in athletics

by Michael Frasco

"Rob is outstanding. He is our most versatile player and has excellent discipline as a leadoff hitter. He’s somebody we have to have in our line-up," said Schoenig. Schoenig should be very thankful to have such a talented player in more ways than one.

Success stories always seem to capture people’s hearts for one reason or another. Perhaps it’s because we’re always seeking inspiration or motivation to face the tough challenges life offers. It seems as though the people who have the will to sacrifice everything to get to their goals are always the ones who will inspire others.

Succeeding is what Rob DiLaurenzio, an infielder for the MSC baseball team, is all about. The junior from Hazlet is one of those players who is willing to sacrifice everything to get to his goal of playing college baseball.

Taking the course of this season, DiLaurenzio, a leadoff hitter with significant versatility, could be seen playing three different field positions, stealing crucial bases and even barrelling over the opposition’s catcher. Anything it could be seen playing three different in-field positions, stealing crucial bases and even barreling over the opposition’s catcher. Anything it DiLaurenzio, a junior, has been a vital part of MSC’s success this season.

After all, DiLaurenzio walked on to the team as a freshman back in 1989 and midway through the season became the team’s starting second baseman.

"I always wanted to play college baseball," said a humble DiLaurenzio.

MSC Sports Information Director Al Langer assessed DiLaurenzio’s case in a different perspective. He said, "For a walk-on to play for MSC and start midway through his freshman year is remarkable."

The 23-year-old Business Administration major has worked through his freshman year is remarkable.

The hard work has paid off for the 5’8”, 175-pounder and his special ability has helped MSC to an impressive 28-9 record, with a .491 percentage.

NJAC in hits (50) and on-base percentage (.362) and is near the top of the hitting category. He is also near the top of the scoring 10 runs in the seventh, the most important win of the season for MSC. In their 14-9 comeback win over Rowan, the Red Hawks scored 10 runs in the seventh, the most important win of the season for MSC.

The most important win of the three came against William Paterson. MSC wallowed the Pioneers, 9-1. Although the Red Hawks lost to William Paterson on Monday in the double-elimination tournament’s championship game, the win gives MSC a world of confidence. A floor loss to WPC nine straight times, MSC knows that it can overcome one of its biggest NCAA obstacles.

For them to do it again, the Red Hawks will need a well-rested pitching staff. Dippold cannot be overpowered or the MSC bullpen is down to one reliable arm, Chris Rampone.

So, the questions remain. Will WPC be overconfident after Monday’s win? Will the Red Hawks beat WPC again? These questions will surely be answered in the Mid-Atlantic Regionals in Pennsylvania next week.

But who will win? One can only ponder. Call it a toss-up, but MSC can do it. However, if they meet again William Paterson will win. Take experience in big games over youthful talent every time.

The glory days of boxing seem long gone; will they ever return?

Championship prize fights that actually lived up to billing are now a distant memory. The number of quality fighters that are entrenched in the minds of boxing fans seems to be a non-growing collection.

Why, you ask? Because the politics of boxing today have virtually ruined the sport. People don't want to wait years before seeing the best two fighters step into the ring against each other. Patience is a virtue, but the state of boxing is bordering the ridiculous.

Promoters like Don King and Bob Arum continue to struggle for supremacy and in the process try to manipulate the public into thinking that they are presenting the best boxing matches known to man. Enough is enough already. This past weekend many people paid $34.95 to watch three fights that were mediocre at best. The best fight of the night, between Julio Cesar Chavez and Terrence Ali would hardly be considered a classic. Yet, King billed the card as a great night of entertainment.

Grandez, Chavez and Lennox Lewis are two of the top fighters in the sport, but fought typically overmatched opponents.

What was entertaining about watching 34-year-old Tony "TT" Tucker get pummeled by Lewis for 12 rounds? In fact, Lewis turned in a lackluster performance and still easily handled Tucker.

Surely Tucker didn't mind, because he still walked away with slightly over $1 million. If anyone rushes to Tucker's defense over his lack of effort, look at the tape of the fight.

How does winner-take-all sound? It's not realistic to expect someone to receive no money if the loser is a fight, but percentages of purses to winners and losers is an intriguing concept.

It has to go wrong before it gets better. You need to look no further than this Saturday night's fight on HBO between Heavyweight Champion Riddick Bowe and Jesse Ferguson to back the previous statement.

The champion is going way beyond the call of duty in taking on all comers with this fight. Ferguson is basically the one-hit wonder of boxing. He defeated Mr. Overrated, Ray Mercer, who was not a major accomplishment. Now he gets a shot at the title. What gives? Either Ferguson is better than everyone thinks, or Rock Newman and Bowe are avoiding a fight with Lewis for as long as possible. Let's face it, win or lose Ferguson and Michael Dokes do not make up a glorious reign as champion for Bowe.

And what's even more bewildering is that Bowe has yet to step into the ring with Lewis. After the Tucker fight opinions quickly changed on Lewis. From what I was told in the ring, if Lewis fights the way he did on Saturday night, Bowe would own him.

Bowe probably does want to fight Lewis. But he won't say so. It's all about politics. Promoters nor managers want to give in to one another so, the mediocre "Rip You Off" (pay-per-view) shows still exist.

The fans of the sport need to speak out. Don't pay for overpriced sparing matches, whether it's at the gate or on television. Hit the box offices when it hurts, in the pocketbook.

There are other options for your entertainment dollar. With no cooperation from the paying customers, promoters could be forced to produce good boxing cards once again. The losers enough money, "only in America" could take on a whole new meaning for Don King.

It's been one hell of a ride
Beat columnist bids farewell to MSC track team

On May 20 the most renowned bar in America will serve its last beer to an overweight, out-of-work accountant named Norm Peterson. Cheers, with its cast of unforgettable characters, will depart from the airwaves leaving millions of Americans in search of a new security blanket.

Track Talk
by Mark Alan Belnay

I will be in front of the TV, as will nearly everyone else in this country, bidding a fond farewell to my favorite bar. It seems funny that the day after I say goodbye to Sam, Norm and the walking Inabotomy known as Cliff, I will say goodbye to MSC forever.

This is my final article for The Montclarion I would like to take the opportunity to strike off on a slightly different path than the usual one I take when I sit down and type my weekly summation of the track team and whatever records they saw fit to crush.

So for the final time I would like to lead you on a trip that may cause a few of you to stop and question whether or not you are really reading the sports section. Here we go! First I would like to say a few things about those members of the track and field team that don't usually get the headlines, but are nonetheless out there busting their butts each and every day in practice.

To Lew Wright I would like to say only two things. To begin with, Lew had been helpful ever since I have begun following the team affording me the insight and the expertise to write my articles.

To Dewayne Stevens, Wayne Dennis, Sharon Lindo and Shanray Braune, I would like to say that it has been one of your fondest pleasures writing about the performances you have turned in since I have been covering the team. Perhaps the funniest thing that I have seen happen regarding this team is something that occurred just last weekend.

One of the team's hottest runners, Neal Ruiz, seemed to forget what the bus left and was left chasing a New Jersey Transit bus instead of taking home another first place finish.

The last person I would like to mention is head coach John Blanton. Since the day I was assigned the track and field team as my weekly article, he has been my reservoir of information concerning the team's successes and failures. It has been an advantage working with someone who actually told me how it was, instead of candy-coating everything that occurred.

I can think of numerous times when your humble narrator and Blanton spent hours on the phone discussing the past weekends' performances and what the expectations were for the upcoming week. Sometimes words don't allow you to say everything you want to, but it has been one hell of a ride to work with these guys.

I look back on something that Blanton pointed out to me regarding talent and atonement. He said that whether the level of talent is beyond reproach or in need of serious tutelage, it is the level of desire that the athlete holds within that marks a true champion.

Well, the trip's over and we only lost one passenger along the way. I think Neil missed the bus again. So in closing, I'd like to say that its been one hell of a ride and that each and every one of the athletes and coaches that I've worked with have been as integral to these articles as my typewriter has been.

I'll join you all on May 20th the first time last season before graduation as we all turn to the nearest window and shout "Norm!' in unison as the season fades to black one final time.

into the sixth. He then turned the ball over to Dippold. But Dippold was kept in the game too long as he pitched the final six innings. He was tagged with the loss.

DI La Rienzo gave MSC a 2-1 lead in the eighth with solo home run, his second of the year. But Rowan's Anthony Bartolomeo singled home the tying run to force the additional innings.

RED HAWKS NOTES...
Freshmen Carlon, Costello (2) and Sak have accounted for all four of MSC's complete games...Yeazza leads the team in hitting (387), hits (53) and doubles (15)...Paulino leads the team in nearly every other offensive category. He currently leads in home runs (10), RBI (50), slugging percentage (.649) and total bases (96). He also is near top in hits (52) and runs (41)...MSC will receive word this week on its seeding in the NCAA Division III National baseball tournament. They'll be in the Mid-Atlantic region and will begin play on Thursday, May 20 at a site to be determined. MSC is hitting .321, while opponents are hitting only .260...Why is MSC currently sporting a 28-9 record? They average 9.1 runs per game. Enough said.

The credibility that the New Jersey Nets have attained over the last year could all be for naught soon. They got one of the top coaches in the league and showed promise this season before they were sabotaged by injuries. Now it seems that the organization is going to take several steps backwards. Drazen Petrovic is threatening to bolt to Europe and the Nets aren't exactly coercing him to stay. This all may be part of Petrovic and his agent's plan to get more money from the Nets. However, if he does leave, Willis Reed and Chuck Daly may have a trick up their sleeves. Joe Dumars is an unrestricted free agent beginning this summer and don't be surprised if the Nets sign him if they lose Petro. That would be a blessing in disguise. Why? Dumars is better.

The Chris Dudley contract situation must also be resolved or the Nets' center rotation could get ugly. If they are healthy and if everyone comes back, the Nets could make plenty of noise next season. You should never count on ifs, but sometimes it is unavoidable....Since this is the last edition for the spring semester, here are some things to expect over the summer. The Knicks will want the NBA Championship in the summer, as predicted in this column in November. The Yankees will be batting for first place come September. The Mets will not...Well, have a great summer and we'll chat again in September.

Calling the shots...
Viges fires WPC past Red Hawks for NJAC tourney title

by Brian Falzarinaco

As Brian Sasso stepped to the plate for MSC, the tension mounted as he faced Tim Vinges (2-1), who owned the nation's eighth best ERA at 1.59. With two runners on base, the bases loaded and the top of the ninth inning, a win or a loss could determine which team would be advance to the NCAA Tournament.

But in the ninth inning, Vinges walked Vanges and Sasso, stranding the runners and giving the Red Hawks a 3-2 lead.

The Red Hawks will rely heavily on the left arm of junior left-handed pitcher Drew Yocum (6-0, 2.59 ERA) in the NCAA playoffs next week.

The Trenton win was impressive considering the state of the Red Hawks after Friday's tournament opener against Rowan. Neil Johnsson singled home a run in the 13th inning to lead the Profs to a 3-2 win over MSC.

Drew Yocum started for the Red Hawks and took a no-hitter into the 14th inning to lead the Profs to a 3-2 win over MSC.

MSC's quest to return to Division III World Series begins

After being ousted from NJAC tourney, Red Hawks seek glory in NCAA's

by Keith A. Idee

The long journey towards the Division III College World Series begins this morning at 10 a.m. for the MSC softball team.

That's when the Red Hawks (28-9) are second seed in the NCAA tournament's Mid-Atlantic Regionals, which take place in Newport College of Virginia.

Newport College of Virginia (29-9)

There are 24 teams that are split up into six regions with four teams apiece. The winner of each region proceeds to the World Series. The finals will be held at the Borg-Warner Sports Complex in Newport, Virginia beginning on Thursday, May 20.

The Red Hawks enter the NCAA's on a down note after a disappointing showing in the NJAC Tournament.

Trenton State easily won the tournament and defeated MSC, 4-0, in the first-round game last Friday. Since this tournament was also double-elimination, the Red Hawks were still alive.

MSC went on to defeat Rowan, 3-2, on Saturday but was bumped from the tournament by Rowan, 3-0.

The confidence should come in handy because Rowan is one of the roadblocks in MSC's path to the World Series.

MSC, ranked No. 7 nationally in the Division III coaches poll, has a good chance to pull off some post-season magic. With the two-pitcher rotation of Denise Warnock and Michelle Serio, a solid defense and a potent offensive attack led by Kristi Kuchinski, Kim Drager and Jennifer Flinn, the Red Hawks are sure to make some noise in the tournament.

Predictions often don't hold true, but this team is certainly talented and deep enough to win the entire tournament. Of course, it's going to be a long and bumpy road to the title land. Some favorable bounces and luck will also be required to reach these lofty heights. Only time will tell, but these next two weeks should be showcased with success for MSC.

RED HAWK NOTES...

Kuchinski, was named the co-Player of the Year in the College Division by the New Jersey Inter-collegiate Spring Coaches and Sports Media Association, along with Trenton State catcher Marie Cerrano...Kuchinski was also named to the All-NJAC A Division first team, as were teammates Flinn, Shannon Malone and Keri O'Meara...Warnock was named Rookie of the Year by the NJAC...MSC's 28 wins are already the most by an Anita Kubicka-, NJAC Player of the Year in the College Division...The conference...
