By Jennifer Nowicki

Residents of Bohn Hall waited outside for approximately an hour and a half Wednesday, February 15 after the building’s fire alarm was set off from one of the alarm’s pull stations.

The fire alarm, which occurred at approximately 1:30 a.m., was the fourth one to set off from one of the pull stations in the building, Director of Bohn Hall, Joe DiMichele said.

He said that a monitor showed from which floors the alarms were being set off but, there are no cameras to detect who set off the alarms.

DiMichele said that after Campus Police left, he decided to have the building’s residence life staff check all of the rooms.

DiMichele said that the main reason for checking all of the building’s rooms was that he heard a lot of talk that there were residents who were not leaving their rooms during fire alarms. “My staff and I went through the building and took about an hour, an hour and 20 minutes...and found approximately 40 people still in their rooms,” DiMichele said.

A routine check would normally take about 20 or 30 minutes.

DiMichele said that his main concern is for the safety of the building’s residents. “I take the fire evacuation procedures very seriously,” he said. “A lot of students take it for granted that nothing is going to happen,” DiMichele said.

DiMichele said, however, that he apologizes for “not going out and informing the students that room checks were going to be done or at least telling my staff that was outside that we were going to do room checks.”

Sybron Dennis, a resident of Bohn, said that the situation was “ridiculous.” According to Dennis, “It was 25 degrees out, and people got sick. They should find a better system. There were only six people checking 16 floors. All the R.A.’s should help [checking rooms] even if they’re off duty.”

There were also residents who stayed in the Blanton Hall Atrium during the alarm, DiMichele said. Residents of one building cannot be signed into another during a fire alarm.

One student said that the residents simply needed to know that room checks were going to be done.

If the situation should occur again, the residents will be notified, DiMichele said.

“The bathroom over by the Montclarion always smells incredibly bad,” said John J. O’Sullivan, a student at MSU. “I usually go to any other bathroom in the Student Center, including the new automatic flushing bathroom [next to the Rat], rather than go in there because of the stench.”

A number of students have expressed their discontent with the bathroom located in a Class One alley. Complaints range from the fact that these bathrooms are closed for long periods of time to the foul stench that never seems to go away.

According to the Acting Director of the Student Center, Connie Ford, the reason why the bathrooms are sometimes locked is because “there have been instances of criminal activity. Locking them at 6:00 p.m. prevents incidents like these from happening.”

Ford also mentioned that the bathrooms are sometimes locked while they are being cleaned.

Another issue concerns the newly renovated bathrooms next to the Rat. Many students are happy with the many novelties that come with the new technologically advanced service. A member of the SGA said, “It’s the nicest bathroom on campus. It’s a comfortable atmosphere.”

This new innovation, according to Connie Ford, is part of a renovation plan of the Student Center. She said there was a need to renovate the Rat, along with the gameroom and the bathroom.

Michael Orlando, a resident of Bohn Hall said, “These bathrooms are much better that the ones we have in the dorms. This, however, doesn’t excuse the fact that all the other bathrooms (in the Student Center) should be taken care of.”
Fire extinguishers are missing, should students be concerned?

by Nancy Thompson

Students have recently reported missing fire extinguishers in several rooms in the Student Center and Sprague Library, and have been concerned about the possible hazard.

How much danger does a missing fire extinguisher represent? Not a great deal, according to MSU’s Fire Safety Officer/Fire Official Dominick DiSimone.

“These fire extinguishers won’t handle larger scale fires, they are only good for small, contained fires,” DiSimone said. This was confirmed by Fire Inspector Kevin Allen of Montclair Township’s Fire Prevention Bureau who said, “Fire extinguishers are for a specific purpose.”

DiSimone said, “If there’s a fire in a garbage can or in the back of a computer, and the fire is discovered right away, or soon after it starts, then the fire extinguisher will help.” He went on to say, “They won’t help if there’s a room on fire, a closet or a larger space.”

The standard of how many fire extinguishers should be placed in a given location and where they are placed is at the discretion of the National Fire Protection Association. This standard, however, is a recommendation rather than a hard and fast rule according to Mr. DiSimone.

DiSimone will replace all the missing extinguishers as he can from his limited supply, but he is not replacing in every place they used to be because they keep disappearing.

Believing those missing extinguishers are stolen by pranksters, DiSimone said, “These fire extinguishers cost $40 to $80 each. The people who are stealing the extinguishers are hurting everyone.

“They’re hurting the University, they’re hurting my office and they’re hurting the safety of others.

MSU’s fire extinguishers are serviced and tested every 12 months by the Fire and Security Specialists of Roselle.

Judicial Court jury selected

by Brett Sicola

The Greek Council and SGA selected jurors Tuesday and Wednesday for the case against Delta Kappa Psi.

The jury for the March 2 hearing to decide whether Delta Kappa Psi is guilty of “conduct unbecoming a Greek organization” consists of 15 SGA jurors, 15 SGA members, 15 SGA legislators, and the SGA Director of Greek Affairs John Cvelic.

SGA Attorney General Paola Ciappina ran the selection process.

The jurors representing the SGA were chosen by lottery at Tuesday’s meeting. Six jurors came from the subhouses. The rest were chosen from the main body. Only one person per organization can serve as a juror.

The subhouses include: the Inter-Fraternity Council, the Inter-Sororital Council, the Panhellinic Conference, the National Panhellinic Conference, and the Professional House.

The jurors representing the SGA were chosen by lottery at Wednesday's meeting.

The Accuser and Accuse are permitted to strike three jurors with cause and two without cause.

MacInnes lectures on racial politics

by Donna Ferboni

Senator Gordon MacInnes said in his lecture yesterday, “White Liberals and the Politics of Race,” that there is a chill placed on open discussions of race problems and that those who believe in a progressive philosophy are out in the cold.

MacInnes said, “Americans have this wild vision of how much of their tax dollars go to welfare. In reality, it’s not even one-third of what goes to Medicare.”

He said that when politicians try to reform welfare, they are labelled unsympathetic and racist.

MacInnes also said that he believes that people should be given rights based on race, ethnicity, and gender and that people should not be shut out of job opportunities because of race. He said that minority quotas should be established on a temporary basis to insure equal opportunity.

MacInnes said, “These ideas are not greeted with universal acceptance by United States Democrats.”

He said that these progressive ideas stem back to the 1960’s when white liberals adopted policies that offended basic American values.

MacInnes said, “The basic idea that governs our society is that this is a land of opportunity where people are given a fair chance and whatever happens, happens.

MacInnes said that in 1965, during the commencement address at Howard University, President Lyndon Johnson said that he “wanted to rethink this idea as it applied to black Americans.”

Residence Life considers SGA referendum

By Kerri Mazzoni

The SGA and the Director of Residence Life came to a closure on residence life issues, at Wednesday’s SGA meeting held in the Student Center, after the SGA proposed a 13 point referendum to the Residence Life contract.

Director of Residence Life Marjorie Coleman-Carter talked about the thirteen points that were discussed at an earlier meeting. The first two points dealt with housing contracts. It was decided that students should be responsible for only one contractual document. The second point was about the rationalizing of the housing contract.

The termination of a housing contract was the next point. The issue dealt with the ability for students to withdraw whenever they want to. Giving two weeks notice is the appropriate procedure, Carter said.

The termination of contract by residence life, was also brought up. “Due process is granted in all cases,” Carter said. She also said that if a student were a threat to himself or the community then there would be no time to make an appeal. The student’s residence life contract would immediately be terminated.

Carter also brought up the issue of refunds. There is a 49 percent forfeiture if a student fails to hand in the intent to vacate policy. The rebate for tripled rooms was raised from $250 to $350.

Room entries were another issue. In an extreme emergency, a staff member of the residence halls is allowed to enter without permission, Carter said. Room entry for health and safety inspections has been changed from 24 hour notice to 48 hour notice. Carter also said that students can now make arrangements to set up a time when maintenance can do repairs.

Carter said that bags checks have stopped for the last two weeks and there will be no more random checks when entering the buildings. SGA Legislator Brian Cosgrove said that his bag was checked just the other night as he walked into Bohn Hall. Carter said that she was not aware of this and she will have a word with that director. A bag may be checked only if there is suspicion that it contains alcohol.

The filing limit for judicial and damage appeals has changed from three days in writing to five days in writing. In the case of unsafe rooms, Carter said that residence life will fix the problem or try to relocate the student.

Regarding the fire and safety issue, students must evacuate the building each time an alarm goes off. The final point was about the maintenance of building services.

In other SGA news, there was much debate over the bill that would allow the Arab Student Organization (ASO) to hold a Culture night on March 5. The bill was passed even though some feel that there is not enough time for advertising.

ASO along with many other organizations of the SGA will sponsor a program to increase cultural awareness on March 5, in the Student Center ballrooms from 5 p.m. to 10 p.m. All proceeds will be going to the charity organization AWAIR.

“I give it [culture night] my blessing,” said Sal Anderton, SGA president.

The SGA also voted to give Four Walls Quarterly, OSAU and Players Class I charters for the 95-96 school year. The International student organization received a class II charter.

African-American Studies Program introduces new courses

by Jack DeWitt

The Director of the African-American Studies Program, Dr. Saundra-Collins, introduced some of the new courses offered in the area of African-American Studies.

The classes include Economic Development of Sub-Saharan Africa, Rap and Rock as Cultural Phenomena, and African-American Religious Experience. The new classes are added to the interdepartmental list of classes needed to receive a minor in this area.

"The future of the African-American Studies Minor" was the topic of discussion at the African-American Studies Network Reception held in the Student Center Ballroom A at noon on Wednesday.

Currently, there are 146 minors in the African-American Studies Program. The number of minors in this program is down from last year due to many African-American students.

Another major concern is the number of students across the globe, by flagging the flaw, Nicely is ready to put the past behind him and get on with his quiet life as a math professor at Lynchburg College.

"It's funny. I was simply doing research," says Nicely, adding that the constant phone calls from reporters have finally slowed. "A math professor usually has to shoot someone to get this much media attention."

Nicely became somewhat of a folk hero at the private liberal arts college, which is located approximately 180 miles south of Washington and has about 2,300 students. "I would have people calling me congratulating me," he says. "I really appreciated it, but I just don't know how much I deserved it."

Nicely insists he was just doing his job when he realized that the Pentium chip had a flaw. Last June, the 51-year-old professor was conducting a project on prime numbers. As part of his research, Nicely set up five computers one night to perform routine-at least routine for a math professor-arithmetic problems, like dividing 824,633,702,411 into 1.

When Nicely came to work the next morning, four of the five computers had wrong answers to the above problem, 1.21265929408666956. "The fifth computer produced a wrong answer as well."

Nicely's name, you've probably heard about his discovery in the newspaper. "It was all over the Internet, asking other Pentium users if their computers produced the wrong answer as well."

Within hour, he received confirmation from many other mathematicians and computer users.

The next morning, he received a call back from Intel.

After weeks of denying the problem, Intel officials spent the next month acknowledging that the chip was flawed but refused to replace it. Finally, after the Pentium chip controversy seemed to take a life of its own, Intel offered to replace the chip free-of-charge for more than 2 million affected computer owners.

Although Nicely agrees with the Intel officials who say the flaw would never have any impact on the large majority of computer users, he says that it could be "extremely damaging" to researchers.

The Pentium chip's flaw is based on five missing numbers on a division lookup of 4,000. Computer chips generate answers to long division problems, by using an alogarithm formula called SRT, which estimates what each number should be as the problem gets solved. To make sure that the answer is accurate, the chip checks the estimated result on the lookup table, which is the list of 4,000 possible answers.

The five missing numbers make certain answers to certain numeric combinations inaccurate. With any two numbers that are related to the missing lookup table numbers, the problem produces an error, albeit after the eight decimal place.

Intel spokesperson Howard High says that Nicely did "a fine and thorough job." And to prove the company has no hard feelings, Intel has offered Nicely a consulting job.

But after stints on CNN, National Public Radio and other news networks across the globe, Nicely isn't exactly ready to jump back on the computer fast track just yet. "I'm going to enjoy the quiet for a while," he says, "and get back to my research."
Download a slice of life from the Net: Anatomy comes to your computers

College Press Service

Want to brush up on anatomy? Download a cadaver from the Net. Students now are able to study human anatomy via the Internet, thanks to the Visible Man, a three-dimensional, computer-generated cadaver.

"This is the first time such detailed digital information about an entire human body has ever been compiled," said Donald Lindberg, M.D. "The Visible Man represents an incredibly detailed atlas of human anatomy, created from thousands of images of a human body."

Lindberg heads the National Library of Medicine, which worked on the project with researcher from the University of Colorado Health Sciences Center in Denver.

In order to make the numerous images, UC Health Science officials used the body of Joseph Paul Jernigan, a 39-year-old Texas man who was executed in 1993 with a lethal injection after being convicted of killing a man during a burglary.

Jernigan's body was frozen in gelatin at nearly minus-100 degrees. The body was then cut into one-millimeter slices with a high-speed rotary saw and photographed using 35- and 70-millimeter digital cameras.

"This data can be viewed in any plane and can be dissected and reassembled," said Dr. Victor Spitzer, a UC professor who worked on the project.

Downloading the entire body from the Internet would take up to 336 hours of computer time and 15 gigabytes of storage. Samples of the process, however, can be downloaded in much less time. Also, the NLM is making tapes available to the general public.

The project, which began four years ago, was competed at a cost of $1.4 million.

NLM officials plan to offer the Visible Woman next fall. The detail will be even greater than the current male display because the 59-year-old woman being used is being sliced into about 6,000 pieces instead of the current 1,800.

To learn how to access the Visible Man on the Internet, contact Michael Ackerman, associate director for Specialized Information Services of the National Library of Medicine at ackerman@nlm.nih.gov or by calling (301) 496-3147.

For fast relief from the nagging ache of taxes, we recommend TIAA-CREF SRAs. SRAs are tax-deferred annuities designed to help build additional assets — money that can help make the difference between living and living well after your working years are over.

Contributions to your SRAs are deducted from your salary on a pre-tax basis. That lowers your current taxable income, so you start saving on taxes right away. What's more, any earnings on your SRAs are also tax-deferred until you receive them as income. That can make a big difference in how painful your tax bill is every year.

Ensuring the future for those who shape it.

Also of special interest (we'll just let you find this one yourselves) is the interpretation of dancing sperm.

Ticket prices are $9 standard, $7 Senior Citizens, MSU Faculty, Staff and alumni and $4.50 for students.

For reservations and information, please call the box office at (201) 655-5112 Monday through Friday from 10:00 am to 5:00 pm.

Spring '95 is going to be a big season for pastel and neutral tone sweaters, according to the February issue of Bazaar. Pairing slimming sweaters with pencil skirts or slacks can be a great retro look. Most of the knits are nostalgic of the 40's yet achieve a 90's sense of power. "Second skin" sweaters in hip and cropped lengths are being accompanied by skinny belts. One popular look is creating a visible waistline with a belt that contrasts in color to the rest of the outfit. This look is most impressive if the whole outfit shares the same solid color.

The twin set is also very popular for spring. This is a fitted sweater with matching cardigan. Wearing a set earns you a smart layered look without appearing frumpy or disheveled. Many of the sweaters for spring are constructed out of silk-ribbed material. Bazaar pictures models wearing silk-ribbed tanks and turtleneck sweaters in earth tones by TSE Cashmere.

Banana Republic (Willowbrook) features similar looks in a short sleeved sweater. These knits are available in red, black, cream and brown. Cotton is another fabric being utilized for spring. Macy's (Willowbrook) has a whole department devoted to miniature sweaters by It's Our Time. The fixtures are stocked with short sleeve cropped sweaters under ribbed button-down cardigans. They come in a variety of muted tones like navy, cream and dusty pink.

The Gap also has ribbed sweaters. These cropped miniatures can be paired with vests and cardigans. Ann Thompson, manager of the Willowbrook Gap, said the early lines of spring '95 are going to be strong in pastels with neutral undertones. Presently, these knits are available in flat hues like white, blue, pink, tan and green. According to Thompson, the truly vibrant pastels will show up in stores in March.

Another interesting blend is linen and cotton which creates a delicate texture. Express utilizes this fabric on their version of the mandarin style sweater. If you prefer more of a simple style, Banana Republic offers a versatile linen blend vest that can be dressed up or down.

So when you see these tight, minia­ture sweaters, don't shy away. There are tons of ways to wear and pair them. If you don't care for vibrant pastels, look to classic neutral ones which are also popular. It seems retailers are using color schemes to attract both the classic and the trendy shopper.

Fleming) to come out with his movie Poly­ester (starring the late, transvestite Miss Divine). Polyester enabled the use of "Scratch­N-Sniff Odorama" cards. They were distrib­uted to viewers upon entering the theatre. Use of them was signaled at given times throughout the film. The first "innovation" was designed for Ray Dennis' "The Incredible, Strange Creatures Who Stopped Loving and Became Mixed Up Zombies" (also "Worst Title of All Time"). In the middle of the film, a "spiraling hypnotic wheel" appeared on the screen to cue the usher who were dressed as monsters wielding cardboard axes. This method began in 1965 and ended there too.

Of the more convoluted methods, there was "Doo-Vision" developed for the film Wicked, Wicked in 1973. The process involved a split movie screen. On one side of the screen the actress (Tiffany Bolling) was involved in her ordinary life, on the other a killer stalked her through the city. Apparently, not very effective. This method may have sent me back to watching the tube. "Emego" was developed in 1958, "the wonder of modern science." It was in­vented by William Castle and applied to the movie The House on Haunted Hill. In the middle of the film, as the audience sat unsuspecting, a plastic skeleton was cast from the prosenium of the theatre to the back balcony. The fall of this method came when the 15 lb. skeleton fell from it's wires and dropped into the lap of Eugene Martin, chief of studio operations. "Psychorama" evolved in 1960 flashing subliminal messages on the screen that were intended to imprint on the subconscious mind of the viewer. My World Dies Screaming was the goonie pitch to this tech­nique. The only message that got through to the audience was headache and confu­sion. Presently, these knits are available in flat hues like white, blue, pink, tan and green. According to Thompson, the truly vi­brant pastels will show up in stores in March.

Another interesting blend is linen and cotton which creates a delicate texture. Express utilizes this fabric on their version of the mandarin style sweater. If you prefer more of a simple style, Banana Republic offers a versatile linen blend vest that can be dressed up or down.

A friend of mine once told me that you can’t appreciate Paris’ beauty until you go there. Well, this was before I ran into Eyewitness Travel Guides Paris: a 432 page doozy that, in spite of its $24.95 price tag, truly lives up to its front-cover motto to “show you what others only tell you.” The first category, entitled “Introducing Paris” gives a brief overview of the city’s history from 4500 B.C. to the present. Any visitor to Paris can appreciate the history of the city, whether they are interested in art, architecture, or history.

The second category, entitled “Introducing Paris” provides maps and timelines, and colorful vignettes on places that can help the traveler around those dreaded “rough spots.” For instance, dialing 911 will get you nowhere fast in Paris; dialing 17 will. Need to use a public telephone? Don’t fancy hotels? Then check out the lowdown on art galleries, museums, churches, monuments, gardens, hotels, cafes, restaurants, recommended scenic walks, museums, nightlife, and then specific organizations catering to specific needs. Don’t fancy hotels? Then see the listings of lodgings and eateries.

The third category, “Traveler’s Needs”, fills you in on where to stay and what to do. Besides the usual list of lodgings and eateries, you’ll learn about specific organizations catering to specific needs. Don’t fancy hotels? Then see the listings of lodgings and eateries.

The fourth category, “Survival Guide”, contains vital knowledge that will steer the traveler around those dreaded rough spots. For instance, dialing 911 will get you nowhere fast in Paris; dialing 17 will. Need to use a public telephone? Then you better have purchased a telecarte (standard French calling card) — if not, you’ll be out of luck.

Finally, Eyewitness Guides wraps up with “Survival Guide”. This crucial section contains vital knowledge that will steer the traveler around those dreaded rough spots. For instance, dialing 911 will get you nowhere fast in Paris; dialing 17 will. Need to use a public telephone? Then you better have purchased a telecarte (standard French calling card) — if not, you’ll be out of luck.

In all, Eyewitness Guides Paris is a publication par excellence. Between its in-depth description and its dazzling graphic layout, it’s a wonder that the MSU French Department hasn’t used it as a teaching guide. Just do yourself a favor and get the guide. You’ll get a kick out of it, whether you’re in Paris, France or Texas.

Hey, Whatever happened to....???

by Dave Richards

The release of the new Brady Bunch movie, has managed to stir up memories of all of my favorite old television shows. But the thing that bothers me is that I don’t know what happened to some of my favorite characters.

What ever happened to...

Oliver from the Brady Bunch
Uncle Jesse from Dukes of Hazard
Blair from Facts of Life
Skippy from Family Tia
Mr. Bentley from the Jeffersons
Roger Thomas from What’s Happening
Murdoch from the A-Team
The Helicopter from Riptide
The Dad, Edward, from Silver Spoons
Sam from Diff’rent Strokes
Miss Dípesto from Moonlighting
Larry from Three’s Company
KITT from Knight Rider
Rooce Piko Train (and his dog Mook)
Flash from Dukes of Hazard
Rick from Magnum P.I.
Horshack from Welcome Back Kotter
Mr. Kotter/Mindy from Night Court
Issue from the Love Boat
Garry Gnu from The Great Space Coast
Mr. Green Jeans from Captain Kangaroo

would think that an actress with her experience would be more creative with her delivery, but you live and learn. Another element I didn’t dig was the ending. It was like a typical formulaic ending, topped with a cherry cliche. Okay, now that is what I did, in fact, dig. Hackman and DiCaprio display great acting talent. So does Keith (Platoon) David, as a hired gunslinger. And last, but definitely not least, the inimitable Lance Henrikson. It’s a damn shame he isn’t given a larger role. The pacing is very good, and there are numerous ingratiating characters. The showdowns are very well orchestrated and Raimi’s direction is just so damn good! The choreography between the actors and the camera is flawless. This is a film in which flashy camerawork is appropriate; hear that, Mr. Rocco (Murder in the First)? Raimi’s shots and setups are inspired and creative, and the positive points outweigh the negative. Yet, it isn’t quite worthy of four stars. Maybe if Stone was in it less, and Lance was in it more, then, oh., forget it- 1/2.

Oh yeah, Best Supporting Actor Nominee (Forest Gump)? Sensitive has a small but significant role as well.

MG: “For the most part, I would have to agree with Mr. Jaworski. ‘The directing is exciting and appropriate, Leonardo DiCaprio is a great actor (the next River Phoenix?), and Gene Hackman is good as usual (he does a little twist on his Unforgiven character here). My favorite though, was Lance (Alien) Henrikson - I think I would have rather seen a movie all about his character! Sharon Stone, on the other hand, fell into the “Let me imitate Clint Eastwood” trap that most actors in second rate westerns do. As for the story, it was fairly original, but also somewhat predictable. It was a fast paced tale; I would like to see Raimi do something a bit more of a story next time.”

Marsha, Marsha, Marsha! J.S.: The Brady Bunch Movie was great! The theater was packed, the energy level was high, and a group of teenagers in the front row were in period clothing. The movie was funny, but not at the expense of the story. The screenplay writers were as much giving tribute to an era as they were making a parody. The actors sounded and looked incredibly like the originals and the set was perfect. It made me want to go back to the seventies when washing your hair was a valid excuse for not going out and the phrases “groovy chick” & “fat out” were in. But the movie left me with one unanswered question: whatever happened to Tiger?

MG: If I had to describe this movie in one word, it would be “FUN!” It’s an extremely enjoyable film, obviously made by people who loved the original series. It’s somehow a parody and a faithful remake at the same time, an almost perfect big-screen adaptation of a series that I thought just wouldn’t work in the theaters. In fact, my first reaction to ever hearing the phrase “Brady Bunch Movie” was to scoff and laugh at the idiots who dreamed up such a preposterous idea. But I was wrong! I went to the theater expecting to be one of the few who would actually submit myself to seeing a cheap atrocius piece of trash before it died at the box office; but I walked into a theater packed with Bradymaniacs (a “Bunch” of fans who seem to faithful’s Trekkies)! I found myself unknowingly and instantaneously steeped in a feeling of nostalgia as soon as I saw the Brady house (designed by Mr. Mike Brady himself?). The actors, directing, and music are all perfectly preserved (as are many of the plot points). One of the best features of the movie is the concept that the Brady family was also well preserved - they are stuck in the 70’s while the rest of the world is in the 90’s (in an Addams Family sort of twist). There is plenty in the film for avid Brady fans (which I did not even know existed!), but is also just as enjoyable for the filmgoer with simply a casual acquaintance with the TV series. Somehow, everyone involved in this film managed to turn a movie that I wasn’t supposed to like into one of the most enjoyable films I’ve seen in months! ****

Darla and I had nothing else to put here, and I’ve been meaning to write a column, but I haven’t been able to decide what I should write, so it’s my fault. Blame me. Maybe next week I’ll come up with something. Until then, have fun.

MONTCLARIAN
On the night of February 21, yet another sexual assault took place on campus. The victim was a female resident of MSU and the circumstances were especially disturbing. The attack took place not at some secluded spot at an ungodly hour, but only a few yards from the Campus Police station, at the amphitheater, between 9:14 and 9:24 P.M.

Campus women must now recognize that they face an even greater threat than they had previously thought. And they must reflect that little defense has been offered to them up until now except advice on how they ought to modify their behavior to prevent their falling victim to predators.

While we are confident of the good intentions of Campus Police, we must ask ourselves whether they have their priorities in order in addressing their mission of campus security. They continue to campaign for firearms while at the same time a vicious crime can happen on their doorstep where the mere presence of an officer would have sufficed to prevent it. Campus Police should be encouraged to improve their effectiveness, but the responsibility to act is not theirs alone. MSU administration and the SGA must also respond.

Some fundamental improvements should now be considered with greater seriousness. Improved lighting, expanded escort service, and police and student patrols are just a few suggestions which might be discussed. It is also necessary that the dangers that exist be more aggressively publicized so that the MSU population is adequately informed.

We fear that there is a perception that crimes of this kind are inevitable and must somehow be expected. Perhaps the frightening closeness of this incident will awaken the campus to the reality that stoicism will just not do; urgent action is needed.
Fraternities defended

I am outraged over recent actions that have been taken by Assistant Dean of Students, James Harris. He has taken it upon himself to lead Montclair State in prosecuting Delta Kappa Psi over an incident that occurred at a private residence, off campus, in Clifton. Doesn’t the Dean realize that every member of any organization is an individual with his own ideas and behaviors?

The students involved have taken up their complaints with the police. Dean Harris is showing great arrogance by deciding that the law is not enough to properly punish the students involved. If a football player was involved in a fight would the whole football team be brought up on charges? I think not.

In a recent article in the North Jersey Herald and News, Dean Harris criticizes local fraternities because they are not supervised like National fraternities. He goes on to say that more independent groups like Delta Kappa Psi could appear - as if a group such as Delta were some type of evil organization - because “Dues in such locals can be as little as $30 a year compared with $150 in a national fraternity.”

I would like to let the Dean in on a little secret: some people (such as myself) would have a very hard time paying $150 in dues. Is the Dean suggesting that if you can afford to pay more than you must be a higher class of person? Montclair State is a University which promotes harmony between people of all races, creeds, and ideals. But I believe that Dean Harris, and anyone who supports his position, is participating in a kind of prejudice against fraternities. Events that happen off-campus are just that: off-campus. Dean Harris should keep his concentration on happenings on-campus.

Remedy suggested as staff clears soiled honor

Once again the usual suspects have been rounded up for their regular dose of character assassination. We refer to the letter submitted in the February 9th edition of The Montclarion by one Mr. Ross Peterson. To say that Mr. Peterson is a loose cannon shooting indiscriminately is an understatement. As members of the building staff charged with the responsibility of maintenance and upkeep, we take great offense to unfounded accusations made or implied by Mr. Peterson.

We would like Mr. Peterson and all residents to know that contrary to popular belief, staff members do not have keys with which to gain unlimited access to student’s rooms. We resent the inference made by Mr. Peterson that we do. To set the record straight, only those individuals authorized by management to possess keys of any kind have access to student’s rooms. These keys are not casually handed out like candy.

Mr. Peterson also suggests that we should be about the business of putting fires out. Again Mr. Peterson’s sources of information have risen to the occasion because he obviously has access to the fire department’s written report concerning the cause of the fire. Our job description doesn’t include the title of fireman.

Time and time again the building staff has come under attack because we’re easy targets who have taken it on the chin consistently. Words like theft, pilage, and burglary roll off of Mr. Peterson’s pen with the greatest of ease.

In this era of media-fed lynch mob mentality, one’s good character becomes an even more valuable commodity. No one defends or when such accusations are made because obviously we’re not worth the trouble. We declare here and now that without substantiated proof beyond any doubt, we strongly suggest that Mr. Peterson and anyone else on this campus cease and desist and find some remedy for their oral diarrhea.

Thatcher choice “disgusting”

I am writing to ask your help in a campaign the Irish Political Education Committee is presently organizing. During the 1960’s it was college students that changed the direction of this nation by effectively demonstrating to end the Vietnam War. I mention this to highlight your power and ask you to put that power to work for just 3 months.

Boston College (and the Wall Street Council Alumni) have decided to award former Prime minister Margaret Thatcher their prestigious Ignatius Medal to “Honor Persons of Outstanding Accomplishment by a Religious Dimension.” This award ceremony is scheduled for May 5, 1995 at the New York Waldorf Astoria.

To those of us of Irish descent the award to Margaret Thatcher is offensive because her administration was responsible for endorsing numerous human rights violations in Northern Ireland that have been documented by Amnesty International and Helsinki Watch. But the most appalling aspect to this award ceremony is that it falls on the 14th anniversary of the death of Bobby Sands.

Bobby Sands was only 26 when he died on hunger strike in Long Kesh Prison. He was the first of 10 men that gave their life for something they held dearly, the rights of their fellow Irishmen in Northern Ireland. Bobby Sands was a writer and an artist, a gentle soul that some considered a terrorist, others considered a freedom fighter along the lines of Nelson Mandela. But whatever his political beliefs, he believed in them so strongly that he decided to starve himself to death rather than see his fellow countrymen suffer as they had. He knew that his death would bring light to their cause. In Irish culture there is a tradition that states, that if a man should starve himself on the doorstep of the King, it will bring shame upon the King. Bobby Sands starved himself on the doorstep of Margaret Thatcher, for two months she turned her back as Bobby slowly disintegrated and finally died for his belief. She went on to do this for 9 more deaths. She brought shame upon herself and her administration, the world was outraged that she did nothing to prevent these deaths, nor make any effort at compromise.

I am begging my fellow students, particularly those of Irish descent, please remember your ancestors that have given you the opportunities you enjoy today. Remember them and speak up for Bobby. He was just a few years older than the majority of the student body. Imagine yourself just a few years from now. Imagine then what kind of courage it must have taken for him to put his life on the line for something he believed in. Please be his voice and tell them of your disgust at their choice of winners as well as their appalling choice of dates. Please call or write to the following individuals:

If you would like to do more, please call the Political Education Committee at 914-947-2726. If this event is not cancelled, protest demonstrations will be taking place at the Waldorf Astoria on the evening of the awards ceremony. Please consider going.

You can call the PEC for any information regarding the demonstration. If you personally know Boston College students, alumni etc., please contact them and advise them of this situation. Your help is greatly appreciated.

Imposture causes wrong

In my letter to the editor on Feb. 16, 1995, I made mention of a conversation I had with Mr. Kevin Rakowsky’s secretary. I was mistaken. My discussions had actually been with the “bookkeeper” of Mr. Rakowsky’s office. I would like to offer my deepest apologies to Ms. Brown, the real secretary.

For future reference, concerned residents inquiring about their contracts are referred by an “operator” to the “bookkeeper,” although the former will refer to the latter as Mr. Rakowsky’s “secretary.” That is, at least, until the real secretary steps forward and puts the bookkeeper back to her keeping-with-books status.

Next Week: Erica’s Beat, by Erica Duncan
Rubino rant rates rasberrry

I thought it was safe to finally put behind me the memories of all those unpleasant manifestations Jesse Helms and the endless recitations of the First Amendment. I was even naive enough to believe that we were beyond debates on the worth of Robert Mapplethorpe and Andres Serrano’s “Piss Christ.” I even thought that the NEA had modified its standards to the point that cries of obloquy were obsolete. I was wrong.

Michael Rubino’s column, “Paranoid demands from the cultural elite,” (Feb. 16, 1995) was an unwelcome reminder that the debate continues. It has unfortunately become more difficult, since now supposed “cultural elitists” need to defend the validity of the art not only of Andres Serrano (who is incidentally no longer funded by the NEA), but also that of “American institutions” such as Sesame Street.

Mr. Rubino has erred on two counts in his column. First, he argues that the loss of NEA funding would not “stifle the creative mind of America”; that when faced with feeble shortages, corporations will provide the shortfall of funding for the arts. While this might be what Mr. Rubino would like to believe, it is far from reality. If corporations are so willing to fund PBS, then why haven’t they saved the system from budget cuts already? If they haven’t acted to fill the gap so far, what basis do we have for supposing they will in the future?

Second — and more importantly — Mr. Rubino’s emphasis on questions of taxation is misleading. He seemed to use it to dilute reference to questions of differences in social philosophy or ideology. But it is on this ground that the matter is really being contested. And I would advance that Mr. Rubino is in grave danger of committing “cultural elitism” himself when he presumes to be able to judge exhaustively over what is, and is not, art.

The NEA met with little controversy before Robert Mapplethorpe. Then an “expose” revealed to a hitherto contentedly unaware public that some miniscule part of the funding was being used to subsidize “offensive” works. It was at this time the NEA became the elitists, bending under heavy pressure from the likes of Jesse Helms. They decided that works by people such as Serrano and Mapplethorpe were not art and consequently not worthy of support. This we might argue, was a kind of cultural elitism masquerading as superior morality.

A few isolated examples (such as Serrano) became the justification for elimination of all funding. Because of the public uproar over “obscene” art (which was a charge made against Francisco Goya’s work, to name just one artist), limitations in funding also damaged “acceptable” institutions, such as museums, art and dance programs, and even Big Bird. Any demands to restore funding, even to this “acceptable” art, are now met with accusations of cultural elitism.

While I agree that the funding of art is a privilege rather than a right, I believe that it is a privilege which reinforces the importance of freedom in artistic creation. Art from Serrano to Big Bird defines, for better or worse, stages which our society has passed through. And such art may carry some insight which would otherwise be lost. The Marriage of Figaro, we should remember, was also unacceptable to the official point of view.

These creations leave behind a kind of artistic history of where we’ve been and where we’re going. Elimination of the funds necessary for such projects would not only be an act of cultural elitism itself, but also an assault against America’s artistic vitality. Jean-Marie Navetta, Philosophy major

Grunge style to make fashion comeback on Blanton runways

I am surprised that no one else has written about this subject before, but I feel that it needs to come to light. While I appreciate the effort that Residence Life has made for on-campus students by installing free washing machines, the residents of Blanton Hall have been having a major problem with the washing machine in the building being vandalized.

At first, the selector knobs were taken off only a few washers, but the problem was easily corrected. We just interchanged the existing knobs and used them on the broken washers and dryers. This was the problem one month ago. About a week after that, every single knob on every single washer and dryer was removed. I am a flexible person, so I used my trusty SGA bottle opener to turn the washer on. The only problem with this is that I can’t tell where I am turning it to, since there is no longer an indicator. The load size on the washer could be set on small or extra large for all I know and the dryer could be set on ten minutes instead of fifty.

So now all I have to do is check on my laundry every five minutes. At least I don’t have to pay 75 cents a load anymore, right? Wrong. I am a very patient person, but I am absolutely sick of this situation! People stalk the dryers to find one that is running so they can take the existing clothes out and put theirs in (they obviously don’t have a SGA bottle opener). I don’t have a car, but if I did, I would gladly take my clothes to a laundromat.

My hometown is three hours away, so I can’t bring them home to mom either. The process of doing two loads of laundry can take up to eight hours and amount to a lot of wasted soap.

Melissa Gaskill, English major

Tables turned on “snide” Veggian

In Henry Veggian’s rebuttal of my column on funding for the arts (Paranoid demands from the cultural elite, Feb. 9, 1995,) he reiterates my point that “there is no justification for citizens being forced to subsidize material which demeans their country, culture and religion.” Mr. Veggian goes on himself to question only mainstream culture and to assume that my religion must be. He fails to give any reason why we should be forced to subsidize the arts.

Mr. Veggian’s letter concentrates not on any plausible arguments, but rather nasty attacks on my character. He obviously abhors conservatism, yet he salutes the “famous conservative” Charlton Heston for being wise enough to support Mr. Veggian’s side of the debate. With his snide comments Mr. Veggian gives the impression that he feels he is intellectually superior to anyone with an opinion contrary to his own. He thereby demonstrates the kind of supercilious elitism that I was referring to in my article. We can only wish that he were slightly more open-minded to others’ opinions and a little more critical of his own.

Michael Rubino, Montclarion columnist

Affirmative action now moribund

"Attempts to eliminate minority preferences in hiring, government contracting, and school admissions in Califórnia are completely racist."

This statement was uttered by California’s Democratic State Assembly Speaker, Willie Brown, in reference to the possible and probable end to affirmative action.

"Yes, the end of affirmative action is near. There is a growing movement in the country to end the practice of judging any person on the basis of skin color. Jim Crow laws were ended, de facto segregation was stopped, and now the latest race-based law, affirmative action, is going to be done away with."

On the surface, especially if you ask the self appointed “civil rights leaders,” this movement seems to be racially divided - with whites (especially “angry white males”) supporting the end of affirmative action, and blacks being against the end of it.

These leaders will tell you, accompanied by their lap dogs in the press, that “their people” are behind them. They will tell you, as Jesse Jackson has, the end of affirmative action will have a “poisonous setback” on civil rights. They will tell you that they want to help the “minorities”, and they sound honest - on the surface.

However, a little research presents a very different story. Polls show that while 70% plus of civil rights leaders support affirmative action, 70% plus of all blacks (“their people”) oppose it. A majority of blacks believe that they should not get special rights because of their skin color, despite the atrocities done to them in the past. Normally, though, you won’t hear their side of the story.

Why, you ask? They are too busy earning a living and achieving goals. Additionally, their views are not shared by elite liberal media, which controls what you see and hear, and therefore is suppressed for as long as possible - until now.

The California Civil Rights Initiative is a proposed amendment to the California state constitution that will be on the ballot in 1996. The main text of the initiative states, “Neither the state of California nor any of its political subdivisions or agents shall use sex, race, color, ethnicity, or national origin as a criterion for either discriminating against, or granting preferential treatment to, any individual or group in the operation of the state’s employment, public education, or public contracting.” Hallelujah!

As for the opening quote by Speaker Brown, Glynn Cusred, co-author of the initiative said it best, “Willie Brown wants to judge people by their skin color. We’re the kind of people, like Martin Luther King, who would prefer to judge people by the content of their character.” I couldn’t have said it any better myself.

Elder statesman challenges Elders’ statements

by Nelson Alonso

The scene: In this imaginary dialogue, the former Surgeon General Joycelyn Elders is conducting a speech on condom distribution at Planned Parenthood headquarters in New York City and is now prepared to answer questions from the audience. A familiar figure stands by the podium.

Socrates: Excuse me, I have a question.

Elders: What’s your name?

S: Socrates

E: Interesting. Are you named after the philosopher?

S: You could say that. I know you are for the distribution of condoms to young people in the high school and college, correct?

E: Yes

S: Don’t you think this is encouraging young people to have sex?

E: Everyone knows that they are going to do it anyway. It’s best if they do it safely rather than spread unhealthy diseases.

S: So your argument is that since people will disobey anyway, we must provide them with the means to do the act so as no harm comes to them.

E: Exactly.

S: So since people will continue to use needles to inject drugs, we should provide them with clean needles and a hospital room to do the act so that no harm comes to them.

E: I do not agree with that.

S: So your position is inconsistent.

E: Not at all. There is nothing wrong with sex. Sex is pleasurable and harmless.

S: Did you not say that people need condoms because of sexual diseases?

E: Are you saying that young people are going to wait until they get married to have sex? You have got to be kidding.

S: Why do you say that?

E: It is old fashioned. We are living in the 90’s, Socrates. Abstinence is outdated. So unenlightened, so medieval.

S: Do you tell time with an argument?

E: What do you mean?

S: When you want to know what time it is, what do you look at? An argument or a clock?

E: A clock of course.

S: And what do you use an argument for if not to tell time?

E: To prove something. Or to try.

S: So you tell time by a clock and truth by an argument.

E: Yes.

S: But you were trying to tell truth by the clock a minute ago.

E: Truth by the clock?

S: When I want to disprove an idea, I try to prove that it is false. Your argument against my idea was that my idea was old. Outdated, I believe you said. Those are clock words, or calendar words. (Calenders are only big long clocks after all.)

E: You are arguing with fifth century morals. These are different times, which require a different approach.

S: Are not morals absolute?

E: There are no absolutes.

S: What if I were to tell you “There are no English sentences.”

E: You would be contradicting yourself. The statement “There are no English sentences” is an English sentence.

S: Applying this to your last argument, would you not say that the statement “there are no absolutes” is an absolute statement?

E: Don’t trap me Socrates.

S: I am not trapping you. Logic is doing that quite well. Should we not, then, consider absolutes when considering the distribution of the condoms? You obviously must have a great respect for the law and for the people nation wide. What then would be the most scrupulous position?

E: Condoms reduce the risk of AIDS by 46 per cent. What else is there?

S: Abstinence reduces the risk of AIDS by 100 per cent. You should be careful when using prudential arguments instead of moral arguments.

E: I am sorry Socrates, but I must take other questions.

S: But...

E: Any other questions? (An eerie silence fills the room).
Dave's world
by Dave Richards

He reaches for the phone. This action in itself is the conclusion to a great mental battle. His heart races, his head whirrs and his palms are sweaty. He punches in the seven numbers he put into memory the second they were given to him. There's a ringing on the other end of the line. His heart skips a beat. He clears his throat, takes a deep breath and waits for an answer.

She's sitting at home flipping through an endless stream of channels not watching anything and basically waiting for that stupid Bon Jovi video to get off MTV. She wonders if anyone is going to call her or if she's going to have to go with her friends to this party where she will know nobody, or only people she rather not see.

"Hello?" (The hell could this be?)

"Hi, is Amy there?" (I know it's her, just be polite.)

"This is me." (Who the hell is this?)

"Oh hey, what's going on?" (Oh hey, wanna go out?)

"Nothin'. Who is this?"

"Oh, sorry, it's Dave... Richards. You know, that guy from..." (Shut, she doesn't remember...)

"Yeah, from Religion class." (Is he the guy who sits in the back or the guy who sits in front of me? Oh yeah, it's the guy in the back. I gave him my number last week. Why is he calling me?)

"What are you doing?"

The 1996 election promises to be dominated by spirited debate and intense reflection. Forget about Bill Clinton. This election will feature the California Civil Rights Initiative (CCRRI), a state constitutional amendment headed for the California ballot. This initiative seeks to mandate the elimination of all race-based programs in the state government and state agencies. Its passage will mean the end of racial, ethnic, and gender preferences in state hiring, promoting, contracting, and admission to public universities.

Paradoxically, the term “civil rights” no longer means what it is supposed to mean. Minority leaders stand on their platforms and spew incoherent diatribes about their pursuit of “equal rights.” Someone should inform the Willie Brown and Jesse Jacksons that equal or civil rights does not mean reversing discrimination from one group to another. Since its implementation some 25 years ago, this, unfortunately, is exactly what affirmative action has done.

Willie Brown, the California State Assembly leader advocates racial preference programs. He apparently believes it to be beneficial for programs that advance persons based on skin color, rather than on merit. How does an elected public official possess the audacity to admit being in favor of discrimination? Since the Clinton Administration supports it, I suppose it is easy for others to do so as well.

In addition to the obvious discrimination practices, the authors of the CCRRI have presented the economic costs of affirmative action. In California alone, the state government itself spends roughly $200 million per year on affirmative action and other race-based programs. Remember that this is just the state government. This number pale in comparison to the costs incurred by the private sector and the state’s economy in general.

Proof of this travesty is the recent State Supreme Court decision, Domar v. Los Angeles. Despite the low bid of $3.3 million for a public contract, Domar Electric Inc. was dismissed in favor of a “minority” firm - even though this firm’s bid was $650,000 bill; a racial surplus of about 20 percent. The authors noted that spokespersons for the contracting industry admit such decisions are all too common.

Another area that affirmative action has adversely affected is in higher education. At Berkeley in California, one half of all students are admitted under some form of entitlement program. In an article in The New Republic, the author notes that only one out of 280 black applicants to the University of Texas Law School in 1992 had a score high enough to be admitted without racial preference. Most astonishingly all, black conservative Shelby Steele notes that the drop-out rate of students admitted under affirmative action nationwide is 72 per cent! The liberal notion of lowering standards has proven to be nothing more than a “feel-good” action, rather than its noble intent as a “do-good” action. Public sentiment for race-based quotas has been and continues to be outrage and disgust. Not surprisingly, minorities themselves react distastefully when presented with the idea that the only way they will succeed is with the help of a federal program. In a recent poll 77 percent of black leaders favored preferential treatment, while in contrast, exactly 77 per cent of average black Americans rejected this notion.

As we grow closer to the 1996 election, the California Civil Rights Initiative will serve as the reference point for political realignment. I say to affirmative action: good riddance!

Positive Controversy
by Ericka Perez-Jaquez

Columbia University, Yale, and Harvard are supposedly the aristocratic schools from which the geniuses of society derive. But if we look at the curriculum of these Ivy League schools, we will realize that the majors they offer require very similar classes - and many times the same classes - as MSU. Then what is it that makes them so "prominent"? It is the stringent criteria they set for students to maintain a good academic standard. So why not have all the colleges promulgate similar standards and, thereby, halt the unscrupulous discrimination by employers who might decline a MSU student over a Columbia University student without honoring the former’s intelligence. MSU can become a more prominent school if it fosters a higher principle to determine students’ acceptable academic performance. Under MSU’s present standard, any undergraduate student who has completed more than 90 credits is automatically on probation if his cumulative grade point average is below 1.8. The stringent criteria is enforced if the GPA is under 1.4. For students who have 58 to 89 credits the requirement is 1.6 and suspension is at a 1.2 GPA. For those with less than 57 credits the requirement is 1.6 and suspension is at 1.0. This standard is harmful to college students who need to compete in the job market. But if MSU increases the required GPA to a minimum of 2.7, it will be recognized as an affordable and competent school. I speculate that many students will reject this suggestion because many of them work or have family difficulties. But there are many services on campus to help us when we encounter academic difficulties. For instance, we have the tutorial center and a writing lab which offers assistance on research papers. Professors have office hours for any inquiries students may have.

Most importantly, there is free psychological counseling on campus for students who have family problems or academic stress. We must acknowledge that a modified version of our democracy is the stringent criteria they set for student acceptance to the college of their choice. I understand that universities consider these two subjects to be of most importance, but we are required to take English and Math courses in college anyway. The SAT is an English and Math section, but a student who is not fluent in one of the sections might end up with a low score, and this will unfairly infringe upon his acceptance to the college of his choice. I understand that universities consider these two subjects to be of most importance, but we are required to take English and Math courses in college anyway.

"Is there any movie out that you wanted to see?" (Now let's play this tennis match of ideas that stink.)
"I don't care."
"I don't care either."
"Well, let me get the paper and I'll read them off." (Oh man, this stinks! Not only don't I have a plan, I don't...know...where the paper is...)
"Okay," (God, this is annoying.)
"Okay, I'm back. How about...Billy Madison?"
"Um, no. How about Boys on the Side?"
"Um, not really. How about The Brady Bunch?"
"Um...maybe. How about Legends of the Fall?"
"Is that the one with Arm Pitt? No thanks!"

"Hey, watch it, buddy. He's beautiful."
"Yeah, yeah, yeah. How about Pulp Fiction?"
"Seen it. But I'll see it again." (Though I would prefer not to.)
"Yeah, I saw it too. It was awesome. How about Miami Rhapsody?" (Please say no; it looks like a real "date" movie.)
"Nah, that doesn't look too funny." (And it's a "date" movie.)
"Well, that's all there really is to see. So it looks like The Bradys are all that's left. Unless you want to do something else, like get something to eat?" (Please say no. That's an awful lot of talking.)
"No, The Brady Bunch is cool. And besides, I already ate." (And that's an awful lot of talking.)
"Okay, so I'll pick you up around 9:00?"

"Sounds good to me. I'll see you then. Buh bye."
"Buh, buh bye."

He hangs up the phone. He's sweating. He's been pacing the floor so fast that the carpet is matted down. He takes another deep breath and realizes what has just happened. He is overjoyed that he won't be spending another Friday night fighting with his friends over who is going to drive home from the bars.

She hangs up the phone and sighs. Now she has to turn off the TV and get ready. Was it really necessary to read off every single movie made since Star Wars? But at least she's got something to do other than sip warm keg beer and hide from that guy she went out with two weeks ago. What did they see again? Oh yeah - Dumb and Dumber.

"Dave, you look really pale. Are you all right?"
"It's nothing. I just...needed some fresh air."
"Fresh air? What happened?"
"Nothing, just...needed to think."

"Dave...what's wrong?"
"Oh, nothing. Just...thought about how much better things would be if we...were together."

"Dave? Are you sure you're all right?"
"I'm fine, really. But...it's just...if we...were together..."

"Dave! Are you okay?"
"Yeah, I'm fine. Just...needed to think."

"Dave, I'm not leaving until you tell me what's going on."
"Fine. But...it's just...if we...were together..."

"Dave...what are you going to do?"
"I...I don't know. I just...thought about how much better things would be if we...were together."

"Dave, I'm not leaving until you tell me what's going on."
"Fine. But...it's just...if we...were together..."

"Dave, I'm not leaving until you tell me what's going on."

Aries (Mar. 21-Apr. 19) The stars urge you to sue for libel when a local paper calls your model train enthusiasts' club a "cult."

Taurus (Apr. 20-May 20) Taking a road trip? Why not play the name game until your throat becomes sore, your larynx flakes off with each syllable.

Gemsini (May 21-June 21) Don't try to kick a devilish poisonous sea lamprey. Ordinarily, this goes without saying, but it doesn't hurt to be reminded.

"Students Serving Students"

By Candice Meyer

Since I spend a considerable amount of time with the SGA, I decided to articulate why. Why? Why not! I've learned so very very much from it. Why? What?? Well, here it goes:

1. You look better live then you do in person.
2. TO DIG!
3. Never address things to your mother unless you are under twelve.
4. Don't ever let a fat person borrow your clothes.
5. How to be a hypocrite and then justify it.
6. Write as many notes as possible and relive your third grade fantasy.
7. Rain is a good excuse to cancel a meeting.
8. The art of filibustering.
9. The spew you spit carries more weight than the work you do.
10. How to sit around for five hours, scream and yell and do nothing more than scream & yell.
11. How not to listen.

Obviously much thought did not go into this since I am on a plane as we speak to New Orleans. Sec ya in two weeks!!!

Peace.

Candice.

JO'S Theatre of the Absurd.

A Wacky Romp Through Insanity by John J. O'Sullivan

Well folks, the creative well is running a bit lower than usual tonight. I was tempted to put a huge "Waste-o-Space", but then Greg, Chris, or Tom would have lynched me. So, in hopes that this will actually get some yuks, I have attempted to write:

THE MOST OFFENSIVE ARTICLE EVER WRITTEN.

Now, I know what most of you are thinking. Why the hell would I, loveable and cuddly John J. O'Sullivan, attempt to write:

THE MOST OFFENSIVE ARTICLE EVER WRITTEN.

The answer is quite simple: Gobs of money.

When it all comes down to it, I want lots and lots of money. I figure after the huge trial, the book, the t-shirt, the G.I. Joe figure, the toaster, the Pop-Tart, the movie, and the official video game, I'll be swimming through the dough. Yes siree Bob, I want to be loaded. Rich. Famous; not unlike Buttafuoco and O.J. And this would all come from:

THE MOST OFFENSIVE ARTICLE EVER WRITTEN.

from conventional combat. It would be a much better weapon than say...bullets made of Nerf.

Plus, think of the benefits.

THE MOST OFFENSIVE ARTICLE EVER WRITTEN would create jobs, end hunger, stop Sitcoms, fight hopelessness, build homes, cure the common cold, and make MSU's food ACTUALLY EDIBLE. THINK OF THE BENEFITS!!!!

Well, for all of you who are wondering what THE MOST OFFENSIVE ARTICLE EVER WRITTEN contains, here is the actual

THE MOST OFFENSIVE ARTICLE EVER WRITTEN:

"Barney came over with a Swiss Army knife and cut off (BANG)"

(John J. O'Sullivan, killed, drops to the floor)

Well, JOHN J. O'SULLIVAN tried! It had to be better than SNL...right? C'mon, it wasn't THAT BAD, was it?? I know, but I can't do "Brady Kombat" every week!

Four in a row scores NJAC playoff berth

Reilly drops in 18 as MSU heads into showdown with Rowan

by Michael Cooper

"They're playoff bound!" After wins over conference rivals William Paterson and Rutgers-Camden, the Red Hawks became the fourth-seed for the NJAC playoffs. Rutgers-Camden (0-24, 1-17 NJAC) came into Panzer Gym with 83 straight losses.

In order for the Red Hawks to go to the NJAC playoffs, they would have to hand Rutgers loss number 84. The Red Hawks would do just that as they defeated the Pioneers, 78-66 on Saturday night at Panzer Gym for their fourth consecutive win. Rutgers’ losing streak is now the second-longest in the history of college basketball.

MSU (16-8, 12-6 NJAC), which is tied for seventh in the NCAA’s Atlantic Region, now has to play No. 1 Rowan, the NJAC Champion, yesterday evening. Freshman guard B.J. Reilly came off the bench to score 18 points, while four other players keyed the Red Hawks by scoring in double figures.

Senior forward Evan Carlson dominated the first half scoring 11 points and nine rebounds before leaving the game due to injury. Carlson was one of only three Red Hawks to score in the first half.

"Evan played extremely well, his injury was very unfortunate," said Red Hawk acting head coach Jose Rebimbas. "When he was in there he was able to dictate the game from the inside."

MSU allowed the Pioneers (9-15, 4-14) to get back into the game in the first half. After starting the game with a 7-0 advantage, the Pioneers busted out, going on a 19-6 run to get back into the game. However, with 6:38 remaining in the second half, Fowler exploded for 14 points and turned the game around for the Red Hawks.

"Greg knows what is expected of him," said Rebimbas of the junior forward. "I was happy to see that he turned it on for the second half? Fowler started the second half with a thunderous slam that even brought Pioneers forward John Jones to his feet. MSU was coasting along throughout the half until the Pioneers started storm back. But Fowler put an end to the Pioneers hopes as he converted a four-point play to extend the MSU lead to eight.

"We wanted to get the ball underneath," said Reilly. "In the first half we were able to find Evan (Carlson) open. Coach didn’t want too much outside shooting."

RED HAWK NOTES: MSU trounced Old Westbury 101-66 this past Friday in Panzer Gym as seven of the eight Red Hawk players scored in double figures.

The Red Hawks set a team record with 37 assists in the contest. Fowler had 18 points, while Chris Jackson and Travis Pettiford chipped in with 15 each.

Senior guard Dean Spinogatti, who has been slumping of late, added 13 points after going scoreless in the first half. Senior forward Jason Geleski, who has been slumping of late, added 13 points after going scoreless in the first half.

Whatever Rebimbas said worked because after going scoreless in the first half, Fowler exploded for 14 points and turned the game around for the Red Hawks.

Women’s hoops loses two without Misiejuk
Red Hawks head to playoffs on down note after 10 straight wins

by Glenn Steinberg

It was theirs for the taking. A team who had won 10 games in a row only had to win their remaining two games to become NJAC champions.

Unfortunately, the Red Hawks had themselves standing in their way to ending the season with a 12-game winning streak. One of the things that detailed MSU’s winning ways was the severity of center Maggie Misiejuk’s ankle injury.

Misiejuk reinjured a chronic ankle problem last week causing her to miss the final two regular season games, both of which the Red Hawks lost. Though they lost their last two games, MSU was good enough to be the number two seed in the NJAC tournament with hopes of still making the NCAA tournament.

Misiejuk still did not think her ankle was strong enough for her to play the final game of the regular season against Rutgers-Camden on Saturday after missing Wednesday’s game against William Paterson, the top-seed in the NJAC tournament. The team suffered a beating at the hands of the Pioneers, 77-64.

Also plagued by injury and forced to limited play was freshman guard Aidill Borrero who was suffering from a thigh contusion that occurred against William Paterson. On Saturday she was limited to only 17 minutes, though she still was able to pour in 12 points and four assists.

According to head coach Gloria Bradley, she is expected to be ready for tonight’s playoff game against Rowan College. Misiejuk however, is considered day-to-day and it won’t be known whether or not she will be ready to play until closer to game time.

Bradley said another big reason for her team dropping their final two games besides the fact that their opponents were two of the top four in the conference was their mentality. The fact that they had two starters injured got into the other player’s minds and disrupted their play, especially in Saturday’s game.

“They were not mentally prepared and Rutgers took 100% advantage of it,” said Bradley referring to the drubbing that her team received on Saturday.

Because her team was not mentally focused, they wound up doing things they normally don’t do such as throwing blind passes and getting caught for violations on in-bounds passes.

In order for her team to bounce back for the playoffs, they need to get their confidence back.

“They need confidence in themselves, not the starters,” said Bradley, acknowledging that her team has the ability to win with or without some of the starters if they only start to believe in themselves.

Bradley also said that it may be do or die for her team come playoff time. Since the rankings of the regional teams were not available at press time, it was not known whether or not they got an automatic bid into the NCAA tournament.

The top eight teams in the region automatically make it and the Red Hawks were ranked number eight last week before their last two defeats.

“The team must realize there is no tomorrow,” said Bradley.

If MSU is not ranked in the top eight, then the NJAC tournament will determine whether or not they will make it to the NCAA’s. All three of the Red Hawk’s possible opponents (Rowan on Thursday, and either William Paterson or Rutgers-Camden on Saturday) have played each other twice during the regular season. MSU split the series against all three teams.

“The loss to William Paterson should not be a big deal since they are ranked number two in the region,” said Bradley, whose team did not make the NJAC playoffs last year because they lost a coin flip. “But the Rutgers-Camden game could have hurt us.”

According to Bradley, a few of her players had spurts of good play including center Kim Kovar and forwards Robyn Berrios and Tara Perez, but when their play faltered, so did the rest of the team.

“When they went down, no one stepped up,” said Bradley.

Tonight’s match-up against Rowan College will mark the third time that these two teams will have played this season, with the teams splitting the series.

Bradley said that while her team is a little banged up, Rowan has a very deep bench.

“They have 10 or 11 players that can do some damage,” said Bradley.

She believes that if they were to lose their first playoff game to Rowan they shouldn’t take it out of contention for an NCAA bid since Rowan is ranked higher than them at No. 7.

RED HAWK NOTES: Borrero, a contender for NJAC Rookie of the Year, leads the Red Hawks in scoring (15.9 ppg) and assists (94), while also averaging 5.2 rebounds per contest.

Misiejuk, a freshman from Poland, is averaging 11.6 points, 11 rebounds and over blocks per game.

Wrestlers turn tide of season with solid showing in the Mets

by Nick Gantafis

Placing four wrestlers in the finals of a major tournament can make up for a disappointing dual meets season. This past weekend, the Red hawk wrestling team was able to do just that as they finished fifth out of 10 schools in the 1995 Division III Metropolitan Wrestling Tournament held at Trenton State College.

MSU was led by Mike Flammer, a senior from Parsippany, who captured the 142-pound weight class with a 7-6 decision over Ryan Crookham of Trenton St. senior from Parsippany, who captured the 142-pound weight class with a 7-6 decision over Ryan Crookham of Trenton St.

The Red Hawks also received second place finishes in their respective weight classes from sophomore Mike DeLuca and senior Chris Beagan. DeLuca, a Lyndhurst native, dropped a 14-3 decision at 118 pounds to Anton Arterbury of Trenton St. while Beagan lost 9-8 to another Trenton St. wrestler, Randy Pataky.

All four of the wrestlers who reached the finals for MSU-qualified for the 1995 NCAA Division III Championships on March 3-4 at Augsburger College in Augustana, IL.

As a team, MSU finished fifth with 69.00 points, while Trenton St. defended its Metropolitan Wrestling Tournament championship with 188.50 points, including seven wrestlers win their weight classes.

“Things are looking good with getting athletes into school,” said Strellner.

“Admissions here are difficult,” added Strellner, an MSU graduate who was named an All-American in the only year (1977) he wrestled here. “The reason why Trenton State is so successful is because they have athletes in their lineup who are on special admissions.”

MSU coach Steve Strellner, who has been coaching here for 16 years, feels that this year could eventually become a good one despite the disappointing dual meet season.

“We’ve had a struggle for a season and a bad recruiting year,” said Strellner, who added that he expects Flammer, Rea, DeLuca and Beagan to place in the upcoming NCAA Tournament. “But this could turn into a successful season with all four of our wrestlers returning to the NCAA’s.”

As far as next season, Strellner feels that everything is falling into place.

“We’re not going to get better with getting athletes into school,” said Strellner.

“Admissions here are difficult,” added Strellner, an MSU graduate who was named an All-American in the only year (1977) he wrestled here. “The reason why Trenton State is so successful is because they have athletes in their lineup who are on special admissions.”

Point/Counterpoint

Five advantages of the baseball strike

Brian: There’s nothing like a good strike to make you appreciate some of the finer nuances of a sport. In baseball especially, there are so many things to look forward to. Here are five of them:

1. They are coming out with new scab baseball cards. Instead of a pack of gum, these cards come with a free band-aid.
2. Remember the guy who worked behind the counter at your local 7-Eleven. Well, now you can get his autograph at Fan Appreciation Day.
3. Little League players are gaining confidence, demand to scrimmage the “best” the Mets have to offer.
5. Finally, the opportunity to meet a guy like Don Mattingly on the picket line before going into Yankee Stadium and taking his place in the lineup.

Tom: There are some benefits of scab baseball games, and here are just a few:

1. No longer will the baseball fan have to fight to get the autograph of his favorite baseball player because the player will be on the picket line outside of the stadium.
2. When watching replacement games at home with your friends, you could scream, “I could have made that catch,” and won’t be lying.
3. Won’t it be cool to see the starting infield double as the grounds crew between innings of the games?
4. Giveaway days will no longer be something stupid like a hat or a pennant. Now teams will give away starting lineup spots to the lucky fans.
5. Beer kegs will be strategically placed in the outfield for the ex-softball players. They’ll play much better smashed.

On the Ball

Not adding fuel to the fire

A cancer starts out small. But the Nets were never a small, benign growth. It always seemed as though they were that large, malignant growth that even chemotherapy could not get rid of.

Trading for Vernon Maxwell would have made the Nets inoperable. On a team that is chock full of lunatics running the asylum, the last thing they needed was for someone else to come in to make things worse.

When one New Jersey newspaper broke this story on Saturday, it was based on pure speculation. At first the story said that the trade happened. But if you read on, that same story said that the trade was close to happening.

If you have been paying attention to WFAN or whatever other sports outlet you obtain your information from, you would be wise to know that Maxwell is not a New Jersey Net.

It's a good thing for many reasons. First, the Nets really don't need a mother-loose cannon. They already have Derrick Coleman's "Whoop-de-damn-do's" and Kenny Anderson skipping practice to go to strip clubs. The last thing they need for is for a wacko such as Maxwell to be charging into the stands to punch a fan for what he is entitled to do - jeering a member of an opposing team.

Secondly, Maxwell will not give them anything that the oft-maligned Chris Morris has not given them. He only shoots about a paltry 41 percent from the field. Those are not numbers that you want out of a shooting guard. Besides, as hard as this has been to admit, Morris has played respectfully and also acted as such the past couple of months.

Next, there is the factor that you are trading Jayson Williams, one of the few guys that can actually play in the post. He's not afraid to put a body on some of the NBA's best big men. Maybe the reason that the Nets (Are they still the Nets?) are not playing him is because they will owe a first-round pick if his minutes and points averaged goes over 19 per game.

If the Nets were smart, they would be playing the former St. John's star more often. But they are not completely stupid - they did not trade for Maxwell after all. Maybe things will get better in the second half for the Nets. Anderson, despite his criticism from Rex Walters (?), has grown up somewhat. Coleman is coming back from his injury and with fellow forward Amon Giauilliam, they could be a tough tandem to handle. Also, if players such as Morris, Benoit Benjamin and P.J. Brown can give the Nets some consistency, this is not such an awful team. They have an easy second-half schedule, which can guide them into the playoffs.

PARTING SHOTS

VIRTUAL REALITY: If you don't know me, you must be living in a cave. I am one of the most charismatic, if not big, athletes to come along in a long time.

My problem is that I believe I am a rapper. I couldn't wrap a Christmas present. Also, I was just cited for disturbing the peace. They said my "Van of Def" was too loud.

Is SHAQUELLE O'NEAL serious? Who in their right mind names their car? I get it. This sets a precedent. Now I could ride my "Fly-cycle".

That is just silly. Shaq may be a great player, but I think that NBA players need a dose of reality. They are not rap stars.

I have a few comments on Deion Sanders. He's the one and only DANNY FERRY to sing, whatever you choose to call it. Sanders should not have been the focal point of skits when he can't read off of cue cards.

Secondly, what the hell was the space-skirt shit about?

Next, the fact that they let him rap (or sing, whatever you choose to call it) was a bad choice. He was awful - not VANILLA ICE awful - but bad nonetheless.

Can we please bring baseball back?

You know, there is no time like the present.

I would say that the Knicks are my choice to win it all, but their loss to an undermanned Cavalier team was, to say the least, awful.

It's tough to favor a squad that allows the one and only DANNY FERRY to score 20 points.

I was really happy to see Seton Hall knock off Syracuse on Saturday. The Pirates should get into the NCAA Tournament.

I should have tried out for the Yankees. After all, just because I have no talent and am out of shape wouldn't mean that I don't belong.

Quick, try and name 10 guys taken in the NFL Expansion Draft? If you can do it, you have too much time on your hands.

Wasn't TOM GUagliotta just on Golden State? Or was that Washington?

I'm feeling stress right now. Does anybody have a quart of buttermilk on them?

See you in seven.
