Students find it difficult to conduct their business on campus with such limited office hours (DeWitt, p.2)
Campus offices closed for lunch: students frustrated with inconvenient hours

By Jack DeWit

The operating hours of many offices on campus are insufficient according to MSU students. Many are closed from 12:00 p.m. to 1:00 p.m. for lunch. The lunch hour is one of the few times that students have a break and can try to get some help from these offices. Also most offices are only open one evening per week. Students with night classes find it difficult to arrange their busy schedules around these operating hours.

Senior Charlie Korch said, "If they even open, the departments never seem to be able to help you with the problem you have. They just send you to another office."

The financial aid office is one of the offices that is closed from 12:00 p.m. to 1:00 p.m. Dr. Randall Richards Director of the Financial Aid Office, said that they close for three reasons. The office is experiencing a reduction in staff, undergraduate recipients for financial aid have increased 70 percent, and questions and inquiries during lunch could not be handled by a support staff on a rotational basis.

"When we are open...we try and provide all services. The result is better service for the vast majority who need attention," Dr. Richards said.

"The only free time I have is at lunch. It's like I can never get to solve the problems I have. It just gets me frustrated that I can never get the help when I need it," said Jennifer Falce, a small departments.

The Financial Aid office, they are open late on Thursday night.

This did not solve the problem for Colleen Eisele, a junior. "I had a problem with the I-Card Office. They just weren't open when I needed them to be open. I had to get things done before I left school for the day, and they weren't available."

Like the Financial Aid office, they are open late on Thursday night. The Office of International Services and Global Education is closed from 12:00 p.m. to 1:00 p.m. for different reasons. Ms. Iboya Szuroni, International Student Advisor, said "We decided to close the office because of legal immigration documentation and confidential documents in this office. It is closed so the office is safe."

Students like sophomore Tamsin Leavy must wait at the door for them to reopen. "It's a pain. It is the only free time I have and they are always closed."

While many offices close their doors at 12:00 p.m., there are some that stay open for the benefit of students. The Drop-In Center, which is sponsored by the SGA and located next to the Student Center, has a sign on the door that reads, "If we can't help you, we know someone who can, 24 hours a day, seven days a week."

Students can go to the center for peercounseling, information, and referrals. Their answering machine will even direct students to the Psychological Services office or a 24-hour hotline to meet the students' needs.

"It's good to know that there is always someone I can turn to if a problem arises," one student said.

Other offices that do not close for lunch are the Office of the Registrar, Undergraduate Admissions, and Student Accounts & Cash Control.

President Reid said that offices are probably closed because of a lack of staff. "Students on campus want to go to the offices during lunch, and are surprised to find them closed. We do not want offices closing for the convenience of the offices. If it is happening, I wish to know why. If it isn't justified then it will be changed. I will raise the issue with the departments to look into the hours for the convenience of the students."

All of the offices, however, offer a special convenience to students during holidays. They stay open and operate on a skeleton staff so that students have extra time when classes are not running.

SGA news

by Victor Carilo

A two and one-half hour discussion on whether the legislature should appropriate $7,500 dollars for a computer from the Capital Equipment line to 4-Walls, a class one of the SGA prolonged last night's SGA meeting.

4-Walls publishes a student magazine with poetic and artistic works of different students at MSU, and they felt that they were entitled to this equipment due to the nature of their work.

In the past, they reported that they have had several malfunctions with their current computer system causing them to postpone their publication. They explained that during the layout of the magazine, all of their three drives broke, leaving them with no way of saving the magazine that they publish. Representatives of the organization felt that it would make more sense, economically, if they purchased a new computer instead of fixing the old broken one. The legislature at one point felt that that was too big of an amount to spend for a computer and 4-Walls kept explaining that a system of this magnitude is needed to publish such a magazine.

Due the debate, legislator Lawrence Ramsey proposed a formal amendment to take the monitor and the printer out of the package so $3,781 could be saved. His amendment was turned down by the legislature.

After 150 minutes of back and forth arguments, the chair called bill #95S046 for a vote and it passed 12-4-3.

In another topic of importance, Dr. Steven Koepp of the Mathematics and Sciences Department, Dr. Robert E. Gilbert of the School of Professional Studies and Dr. Wilson of the Humanities and Social Sciences Departments were presented with Excellence in Education Awards. These awards show students' appreciation for their teachers.

In other SGA news, the College Life Union Board (CLUB) was awarded a Class One charter by a vote of 17-0-2. Caribso, a Class Three of the SGA was appropriated

Legal Studies Dept. announces new MA

by Victor Cirillo

The Department of Legal Studies at MSU announced last week that the first Master of Arts Degree in Legal Studies in New Jersey, and one of the few in the United States, will be instigated in September, 1995. Dr. Marilyn Tavler, Chair of the Department of Legal studies said, "This is the first new program to be approved since the creation of the University (receiving university status) and since the abolishing of the Department of Higher Education."

This degree will provide opportunities for career enhancement for legal professionals. It also provides graduate instruction in Legal Studies through a broad range of subjects which support the Master of Arts program, with a fifth faculty member to be hired in September as of Legal Research Coordinator.

Barbara A. Nagle, Graduate Advisor and a faculty member for the Masters program, said, "This program will give Montclair State broad recognition in the field of law at the graduate level." According to Mrs. Taylor there has already been a positive response to the program from faculty and students.

If you have any questions about the offerings, you can call the Department of Legal Studies at (201)655-4152. If you wish to apply, contact Graduate Admissions at (201)655-5147.

Delta Kappa Psi found not guilty

by Teri Ryan

The Greek Council judicial court found Delta Kappa Psi not guilty of conduct unbecoming the Greek community, after a hearing held last Thursday. Dean Harris, Associate Dean of Students charged the fraternity after a student's neck was cut during a party held off-campus.

The vote was 15-13, but three of the jurors left before casting their votes. The jury was light to begin with, having only 31 members as opposed to the traditional 35.

The prosecution charged that Delta Kappa Psi neglected to provide adequate security at their party. They also stated that the fraternity violated New Jersey law by charging money for alcohol without a liquor license, and by serving alcohol to minors.

The defense said that they took all the precautions they could for an off-campus party. Delta Kappa Psi contended that since students have to rent houses in their own names, they are the ones who are liable, not the university.

Mike Costa, President of the Greek Council, said that he "can't fault Delta Kappa Psi for doing off campus what it couldn't do on campus." He also does not "agree with the administration putting in a hand to negatively effect any organization."

Dean Harris said that the situation at the fraternity house was dangerous and that he was worried about students' safety. In his closing argument, according to several anonymous SGA jurors, Harris said that the only thing MSU is known for is the Confederate Flag that Delta Kappa Psi brought to campus.

Greg MacSweeney, a member of Delta Kappa Psi said, "I'm shocked that Dean Harris would build his entire case around student safety, but then in his closing argument, dredge up the Confederate flag issue. It makes one wonder why Delta Kappa Psi was really on trial. Luckily something positive should come of this with the Greeks taking a good hard look at this farce that some call a judicial court."

The Greek Community is responsible for monitoring its own conduct. The SGA executive board, the Dean of Students, and the Associate Dean of Students can also bring charges against a Greek organization.

There has been some confusion as to what conduct unbecoming the Greek community means. Delta Kappa Psi was charged with the same infraction during the Confederate Flag incident last Fall.

According to an anonymous SGA juror for the current case, "We need to outline rules stating what conduct unbecoming the Greek Community is. As it stands now, almost anything can be construed as conduct unbecoming."

Costa agreed that it was important to review the current guidelines saying that he is "happy it [the trial] started a dialogue without punishing anyone as an example."
Rape stats. shock students

by Candie Mayer

Recently another woman was attacked on campus. Since we live in a culture of violence against women, a self-defense course should be a mandatory part of our education.

It would be more practical than a large majority of the required GERs.

A film shown in Women's Worlds classes at MSU, Dreamworlds: Deitel Sex/Power in Rock Video examined people's attitudes about rape and gender roles. The director of film studies at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst, Susan Hall, made the film and included the results of a national survey of over 6,000 college students.

Some of the responses were shocking. For example, of the respondents: one in eight college women were raped. One in four has experienced an attempted rape. Eighty-four percent of those raped knew their attackers. Fifty-seven percent of those raped knew their attacker. Thirty percent of those raped happened on dates.

Sixty percent of the men surveyed agreed that the women provoked it if dressed "suggestively" or if the guy paid for a date. Forty percent of surveyed women also agreed with that statement. Thirty percent of men surveyed said that, "rape would do some women some good." A rape is reported in this country every six minutes. One in four victims had multiple attackers. One in four women are raped in a lifetime in the U.S. The two exchanged harsh words. One man displayed a razor blade and the other's jacket was cut.

One man was punched in the face and suffered an abrasion and swelling. He refused medical attention.

The two had been friends for some time. Neither wanted to file criminal charges against the other. The dorm director asked one of the men to leave for the night. A discussion was scheduled for the next day.

Asian organization coming back to MSU

by Teri Ryan

There will be an Asian organization at MSU again. A constitution is being written up and is in the process of getting approved by the SGA.

The percentage of Asian students at MSU has been a rising figure in recent years and does not appear to be slowing down. Since the club representing this population at MSU dissolved years ago, Linh, a determined and ambitious student at MSU, is working hard to organize interested students and set up meetings once again.

The Asian Organization will be updated in several ways. The organization will welcome anyone interested in joining or attending functions, without discrimination of their race. Social activities will be held, as well as charity fundraisers. Tutoring will also be made available to members.

The objective of the new society is to promote cultural awareness and a sense of community between the diversified races on campus. The group aims to open opportunities for foreign exchange students or newcomers of the country. Organizers hope it will make meeting and socializing with Americans and other exchange students easier.

Other ideas are still under consideration. If you are interested, have suggestions, or just curious, stop by a meeting or call 667-2231 for more information.

Bookstore getting a face lift

by Anne Johansen

The campus bookstore is currently undergoing renovations so it can improve services to students and make the bookstore easier to use, said Richard Ammerman, bookstore manager.

There will be a wide array of cosmetic changes to bring the university bookstore up-to-date. Because there will be an increase in retail space, an area will be set aside for returns.

Some of the other improvements include the re-introduction of more general reading books, magazines, and the increase of the trade book department.

There will also be a textbook customer service representative on the floor to assist students.

MSU is not paying for the renovations. They are being paid for by Follett, the Chicago-based company that leases and runs the bookstore.

"It's part of the original proposal that Follett submitted to the college," said Ammerman.

Follett also runs the bookstores at Seton Hall and Bloomfield College.

Many students feel that prices are too high. "There should be more used books," said Kim Nucera, an English major. "And I like the clothing that they sell but I'm a college student and can't afford to pay those prices."

"The publisher controls the prices of the new textbooks," said Ammerman.

We prefer to buy back books and sell them used so that we don't have to pay the publisher for new books or for the freight."

The bookstore tries to have as many used books as possible for resale, said Ammerman. As for the price of clothing, Ammerman said that the bookstore has a "higher quality product that we've ever had in the store."

Students have complained about the low prices paid for book buybacks or that the bookstore won't buy their books at all.

"I bought $80 and $60 textbooks and they wouldn't buy them back," said Doreen Kruk, a political science major.

Ammerman said that when students sell their books back that many students get back 50 percent of what they originally paid.

In 1994 the bookstore paid a total of $115,000 to students who received half of their original purchase price.

If the book edition has been changed there is no market value for the previous edition. "Publishers are constantly bringing in new editions because they want to block the used book market," said Ammerman.

The condition of the book is also important. For example, if a student has written in a lab book or the cover is missing the bookstore cannot buy those books back.

Professors must also get their book orders in on time. If the professor runs the book order in late the bookstore won't be buying back books from students, said Ammerman.

Some students have complained that the used textbooks are still too expensive.

"We work on the margin that has been the industry standard for the past nine years," Ammerman said.

Follett has customer service cards located at the main registers. Students with complaints about prices or products should fill out these cards. "We read the cards and what students say," said Sue Wiggins, a representative for Follett.

Ammerman said that he maintains an open-door policy for students, and if they have any complaints they can go and talk to him.

The renovations are scheduled to be finished by mid-April, but the first phase is running ahead of schedule, Ammerman said.

Republicans and Democrats battle over education

by Dave Richards

Do you know about the contract with America? If your answer is no, then don't feel bad because fewer than 30 percent of Americans had even heard of it when they voted for a Republican sweep of Congress in November. The contract is a 10-point plan which includes proposals to balance the budget, reform welfare, restrict congressional term limits, and incorporate a series of personal and corporate tax cuts. But what does this mean to the average college student?

Middle class college loans appear to be the most vulnerable in the wake of the Contract with America. Currently, the government affords students a grace period on loan interest while they are in school.

Republicans plan to do two things: eliminate that grace period, as well as cut nearly $20 billion in student aid. If approved, loan interest would begin accruing immediately and the largest increase in the cost of college in the nation's history would occur.

These student aid proposals appear on a list of "possible offsets" to help pay for the GOP plan.

Rep. Marge Roukema (R-NJ) will introduce a bill that calls for eliminating the Pell Grant program. If this is enacted, an estimated 3.7 million students will lose grant awards.

Many are surprised by these bold proposals. They [the proposals] contradict the opinion of the general public. According to a Dec. 1994 Times Mirror poll by the Princeton Survey Research Associates, 41 percent of those surveyed would increase student financial aid if they were responsible for devising the federal budget. 43 percent reported that they would leave aid funding at its current level. Only 13 percent responded that they would decrease spending.

In a March 1993 CNN/USA Today poll by the Gallup Organization, 42 percent of those surveyed responded that the federal government should take a "great deal" of responsibility for providing college education for those who want it. 41 percent said that a "fair amount" was necessary, while six percent believed that the government had no responsibility in this area.

Students who rely on interest-exempt loans to attend college would see their cost of attendance rise significantly if they are charged interest while they are in school. In fact, removing the interest exemption would increase the amount of indebtedness by 15 to 50 percent.

According to the Alliance to Save Student Aid, "The government covers the interest on loans to help make college accessible for low and moderate income students, to encourage them to complete their education, and to insure that they don't face heavy debt burdens upon graduation."

In a speech to the American Council on Education in San Francisco on Feb. 14, President Clinton outlined differences with the Republicans.

He said, "I will fight these proposals every step of the way. The fight for education is the fight for the American Dream. It is the fight for America's middle class. It is the fight for the 21st century."

President Clinton vowed to protect 4.5 million current borrowers from paying the interest charges on their loans until after they finish school and start repaying their loans.

The Department of Education estimates that by ending this subsidy, a student who borrows $17,125 over a four year period would owe $3,150 more in interest, and have his or her monthly repayment amount increased by more than 18 percent.

Richard Riley, U.S. Secretary of Education, stated in the Second Annual State of American Education Address, "We intend to maintain and increase our commitment to the Pell Grant program because it is an essential statement of our commitment to access and equity in higher education."

He said, "I am concerned that in the rush to cut budgets, we can do unintentional but very real damage to the jewel of the American educational system-our system of higher education."

The Alliance to Save Student Aid has established a telephone hotline and Internet resource address to help students contact their congressional representatives. They can be reached at 1-800-574-AID1 which directly connects callers to the Washington, DC offices of their member of Congress.

The call costs $3.65 and can be billed to any major credit card. You can send an e-mail message to studentaid@nchcem.org.
Rothenberg speaks on Gender and Race

by Kristina Mathies and Erica Duncan

On Monday, Paula Rothenberg, Director of the New Jersey Project and professor of Philosophy and Women's Studies at William Paterson College, gave a lecture entitled "Gender, Race and Class in the 1990's: Is the Personal Still Political?"

Rothenberg stated in one of her books that only white Americans, especially white males, can be racist due to the American history of slavery. She also stated that all men and only men can be sexist in our current society.

Rothenberg wrote in her book entitled, Racial and Sexism: an integrated study, "While an individual person of color may discriminate against white people or even hate them, his or her behavior can not be called racist."

Rothenberg spoke of the impossibilities of making sense of the past, present and future without the concern and use of one's gender, race and/or class.

She gave examples from the New York Times of how women are portrayed in today's American society. She showed the audience ads of scantily clad women which appeared next to the major business news of the world.

Rothenberg also mentioned the philosophy of John Stuart Mill who believes that there is a distinction between the public and the private. For example, if a man beats his wife in the street, he can be arrested, but if that man abuses his wife inside his home, it is a matter that is supposed to remain behind closed doors.

Rothenberg reached the climax of her lecture when she discussed the differences in our education and how that ultimately effects our insights. She theorized that our schooling has taught us to see the world through the eyes of white, upper class, Christian males.

Also, Rothenberg said that we tend to notice what interests us. For example, she said that when a person buys a new car she sees that make and model everywhere she goes even though she may never have noticed that type of car before.

If one does not have the knowledge, then one does not have the ability to notice the difference between one's race, sex and class.

SGA Class I-IV make ASO “Culture Night '95” a great success

By Anthony O'Donnell

On Sunday, March 5 the Arab Student Organization presented “Culture Night ’95,” a campus-wide event involving the participation of all Class I and II organizations, and several Class III and IV groups. Held in the Student Center Ballrooms, the event featured readings, theatrical sketches, traditional dances and a live band playing popular and traditional Arabian music.

A spirit of “unity in diversity” prevailed as the various organizations made enthusiastically received presentations. Their subject matter varied widely. Among the offerings were African tribal dances performed by members of the O.S.A.U. A comical sketch describing the “pick-up” techniques of Frenchmen by Le Cercle Français, Caribbean dancing by LASO, and numbers from the musical Hair by players performers.

While the acts proceeded, guests were invited to help themselves to an abundant supply of food provided by the sponsors, the French Club and Le Cercle Français. Hors d’ouevres, croissant sandwiches, pizza and soda were followed by various desserts and coffee, and a large cake made to commemorate the event.

Dr. Hess’ lecture on “assault on Mars”

by Kurt Richardson

Dr. Fred Hess gave a very eloquent and charismatic speech, which was sponsored by the North Jersey Astronomical Group. He opened with a classical Greek quote from the king of the gods, Zeus, “Ares ranged the battlefield, striking deadly blows on all sides, his two squires, Deimos (fear) and Phobos (panic) accompanied him together with other sombre divinities eager to drink the black blood of the dying.” Ares was disliked not only for his thirst for blood and slaughter, but for his brutality and blind violence, yet Ares rarely emerged victorious from combat either with immortal Gods nor with minor ones, in his love affairs he was also unhappy, being laughed to scorn by the other Gods during his adulterous affair with Aphrodite, the Goddess of love and beauty (Venus).

Mars is the Roman name for the Greek god Ares. The ancients associated the planet Mars with negativity because of its reddish color.

Current interest in Mars is generated by the simple fact of its being so accessible to mankind. Mars is only eight-thousand miles away from the Earth and it would take approximately two months to travel there. Mars rotates on its axis every twenty-four and a half hours. It’s day is only slightly longer than Earth’s.

Newt Gingrich has recommended the colonization of Mars and would allow those who went to live tax free.

Nine mariner satellites have been sent to Mars for explorations and photographs to map out every square inch of this planet’s surface.

The craters on Mars’ surface are not impressive because of Mars’ atmosphere. Sand storms can last from three to seven months. Citrus Major is the greatest sand pile on Mars.

The next time Earth and Mars will be in perfect opposition will be June 13, 2001. This will lessen the time for the Mars destination. Beams will be shot down from ships to examine the surface of Mars and to detect the radiation of the sun’s atomic frequencies. Minerals will be scanned for their consistency to determine the safety in biological experiments with the soil. Mars is the target for tomorrow.

When the colonization of Mars is complete it is a must that the natural satellites will also have to be visited, to better understand the relationship of the two orbiting celestial bodies, Phobos and Deimos.

Interview: An anatomical perusal of Flesh

by Darla Bruno

Why Flesh? Drummer, Gonga gives an earnest answer in a heavy Boston accent, “It comes from the Bible. It tries to put aside differences. Flesh, everybody has that in common.” Hmm, a more introspective answer than I expected. I thought maybe a tribute to Jeffery Dahmer or some sexual reference.

DB: Recently someone described your album Flesh to me as “funk metal” how would you describe your music?

G: It’s not really a category. We vary our music as much as we can. The main thing is we put emotion into everything we can. Each song has a story behind it. Mark writes all the lyrics. For example, “Almighty Man” is about God. No one can be like him. So don’t try.

DB: Oh, (doubting my original suspicions) so you guys are religious?

G: Well, were not some Christian band but Mark is really religious. A lot of his inspiration comes from the Bible. He’s not into preaching, the bible is just a source for his inspiration.

DB: Aside from your obvious religious influences, what are some of your musical influences?

G: I ask my favorite question. DB: Describe your overall experience with the band?

G: It’s very educational. You learn a lot about everything. It’s a lot of work mentally. On stage it’s like working an eight hour day in that set. Our shows are based on a lot of energy. It’s very physically demanding, but there’s nothing else I’d rather be doing now.

Flesh is Gonga on drums, Marcus on guitar, Steven Powell on bass and vocalist, Paul Bettencourt. Flesh will be playing with Extreme at the Academy March 10.

- G: We got asked to do a track for the Highlander III film. It didn’t work out though. I don’t know Jesus Christ Superstar. That works. It would be a great challenge.

My last question of the interview is pretty generic but Gonga’s answer lends insight into the mechanics behind an ambitious band bulldozing their way to stardom.

DB: Describe your overall experience with the band.
The Fashion Boutique
by Deanna Mazza

Within the next few days I'm sure many of you will be gearing up for Spring Break '95. If you're looking forward to sun, fun, and relaxation one item will surely be needed. That's right, a bathing suit. I know...some cringe at this horrid word but this season is all about diversity. So, don't fret. If you're one who dares to bear it all or likes to leave a little to the imagination there's something stylish out there for you.

First off, you should consider the specific activities you intend to participate in while you're away. With this information you will make educated decisions based on your needs. For instance, if you plan on basking in the sun all week lean towards something with thin straps. However, if you know you're going jet skiing, snorkeling, waterskiing, etc. you should consider an athletic suit that will enable you to compete while looking feminine.

It appears that the colors ushering in the season at Macy's (Willowbrook) are the standard navy, white, and black. Juxtaposed to these traditional cruise wear suits, Vernessa Hodges, store manager of Water Wear in the Short Hills Mall, said "Soft colors will be in this season. A lot of pastel pink, light blue, neutral colors and yellow." The material suits are being constructed from according to Hodges, begin with the standard fabric - nylon/lycra - and delve into the cotton blend realm. To add to the overall appearance of a suit, Hodges said this as a large piece of rectangular fabric that is usually constructed from the same pattern in the bathing suit.

The pareo can be worn as a jacket, skirt, or dress because the cotton, chiffon, or lycra fabric is not pre-cut in any way. Hodges said this specific style is available from the manufacturers Gottex. As for bikinis there are many shapes and sizes to choose from. However, this season is littered with significantly more suits with trunks, briefs, and skirt bottoms than in years past. The overall sense is that the teeny bikini is getting a more athletic shape. So as the skirt lengths get shorter bathing suits seem to be getting more material.

C'mon feel The Noise
by Sydney Greenberg

When I first got assigned to review the band The Noise, I thought it would just be another crappy college band. I thought it would be very raw and rough. I was thrown for a loop. It's more professional than I thought it would be. I was thrown for a loop. It's more professional than I thought it would be.

The noise is very rock 'n roll, no new wave, it's very rock 'n roll way. Do you understand what I'm saying. The noise is very rock 'n roll, no new wave, it's very rock 'n roll way. Do you understand what I'm saying.

The song "Car Crash" is about as rock 'n roll you can get in the 90's without being dubbed as 80's glam rock. I still can't understand the vocals, but there's nothing I can do about that. The singer seems to have a good voice, me and my roommate like it. And I really like the bassist, he can play.

The band is in all, pretty good. It isn't really my type of music, but it's still good. For example, I won't cringe or cover my ears when I hear it. As a matter of fact, I might even see them play live if I could, just to see how good they really are...and maybe then I could understand the vocals.

Recycle your Montclarions

La Di Da, a unique joint
by Victoria Cadles

Last Thursday night I was lucky enough to find a ride off this godforsaken campus. I went to The La Di Da Music & Song Post. "A gathering place for local songwriters and musicians to perform original material, to jam, and to meet other local artists," which meets every Thursday night in a basement (that used to be a meat locker) in ORY STUDIO located at 8 Park St. in Montclair. Admission is $2. So if you're looking for elegance, you should keep looking. There isn't a maître'd to seat you, or a waiter to serve you. La Di Da has a starving artist written all over it, but it has a unique style.

In the main, non-smoking, room there is a small stage, a long couch against one wall, and some tables set up with folding chairs. The tables are covered with funny curtains passing as tablecloths, and each table has a different candle. The candles are real candles not the gas kind that have become so popular. Seating is limited, so be prepared to stand if you come late. In the back room, you can smoke, and coffee and a variety of herbal teas are available for 50 cents a cup.

The La Di Da is open to all, you have to sign up to play, sing, or read (poets are also welcome). The first musician I saw scared me. He played a possessed electric guitar and screamed lyrics that I could not understand. But the next two guys played acoustic guitar and sang very well. People in the audience accompanied them with bangs and tambourines. There was also a mean saxophonist and a trumpeter who took requests.

Todd, a guitarist and songwriter, who has been featured before at The La Di Da Music & Song Post, played a new song that made me want to hear all his songs.

Three poets, Sean Hale, Chris Miguel, and Cindy Nagel, read their original works. Sean Hale read Coins of Gold, Stories Told, and Disco-like potpourri, which is a fantastic true account of the Six Brother's Diner. Cindy Nagel's piece about hot chocolate was intense, and made me desire whipped cream. She, too, had a piece about Disco Fries at the infamous Six Brothers. Chris Miguel's Unstuck is inspiring and chilling, sending shivers up my spine, giving me goose bumps.

In all La Di Da provided a great night out with many talented aspiring artists. Joy Thompson said the highlight of the night was the bathroom because "It felt like I was sitting on a throne because it was like raised off the ground and shit! So come to La Di Da all are welcome. Bring your instrument, poetry, or just come and listen and check out the bathroom. One warning dress warm it's cold in the basement! A galaxy of opportunity

by Tom Bond

What’s the easiest way to get a byline other than putting your pen and pad to work for the Montclarion? The answer can be found in Writer’s Digest Books’ 1995 Writer’s Market: a 999-page bible which for $26.99 not only covers the thou and thou shalls of the trade, but lists upwards of 300 places to get your pittance published.

The book begins with “Getting Published,” a short section spelling out the fundamental protocol for dealing with publishers and editors. Here, you will pick up on the finer points of writing from query and cover letters to mailing correspondence that will help your submissions flow like a pro.

Secondly, it’s onward to the “Business of Writing.” Here you will become acquainted with the nitty-gritty of contracts, copyrights, types of rights, and finance and taxes. This way, you can do more than stare blankly when a publisher says her or he wants to discuss first serial rights or subsidiary rights.

Next, 1995 Writer’s Market shows you where it’s at with “The Markets.” Scouring some 827 pages, you’ll discover an entire galaxy of opportunities to have your work shine. Far from a simple roster of names and addresses, this wondrous not only tells you the genre each publisher goes for, but also provides tips on what each publisher wants from their writers.

To be specific, this area encompasses book publishers, small presses, consumer magazines, trade and professional journals, scriptwriting, newspaper syndicated, and the greeting card and gift market. This even includes such odd-the-beaten-path outlets as Xenos Books which craves experimental fiction and unusual memoirs.

Lastly, 1995 Writer’s Market winds up with “Resources,” a compendium of information on writing contests, writer’s organizations, and other publications geared index cataloging publishers by genre, a short walk of the fingers can result in a fistful of leads.

What I found fascinating about “Resources” is that it lists competitions for money and academic fellowships throughout the United States and Canada. So, all you wannabe Stephen Kings need not fear. Writers Digest’s 1995 Writer’s Market is here. Given that it covers all the bases of getting published, buy it. If you must have it, you have if you want to improve your chances at bat. After all, aside from the Montclarion, it really is the easiest way to see your published.
Battle of the bands; A hodgepodge of musical talent

by Tami Morgan

Next. Here we have five, all original bands who have come to perform for our raging crowd of about fifty people, which by MSU standards is what we’d call a huge gathering, but it was good to see you there!

The first band onstage was Curious Works who consisted of Marissa Von Borgen on lead vocals, Ted Boyer on lead guitar, Fich Coccoli on keyboards, bass player Bob von Borgen (lead singer Marisa’s husband), and Roy Giordan on drums. They weren’t too bad, but they sounded like they listen to a lot of Rush in the early 80’s which is cool if you’re ... well, Rush. Lead singer Marisa had a great voice when you could hear it, but at times the band completely drowned her out. If you heard and liked them, I’d like to hear more. Write to the band at:

Curious Works

Paul Jones on drums. Very hard sounding band who cites Mother Love Bone and The Red Hot Chili Peppers as two of their musical influences. I wasn’t crazy about them, but to be honest and fair, I usually listen to stuff like Hootie and the Blowfish. If you like your music hard and heavy, this band is for you. They wanted the Montclarion to thank their stage crew for all of their help (they did have an excellent stage crew that night) and extend a warm middle finger to security for refusing to allow the audience to stand up and cheer for the band. Feel free to write to them at:

“Next up was the The Inbred. This duo consisted to Shikee on lead vocals and Marshall on guitar and keyboard. They were interesting. Marshall attends MSU. Both wore black clothes, played on an intense music, a haunted castle with secret passageways, hair-raising shrills and a wind-up monkey wielding an ax.

John, Louise’s husband (as I mentioned earlier) died in the opening shot. John’s mom, Lady Maloran, had some problems of her own. She was diagnosed insane by the good family doctor who was more of a lunatic than a physician. Richard was the hard-working son who was engaged to Kane, the dippy fiancée. Overall, I recommend this film but only if you’re willing to climb into the depths of... Dementia 13.

There will be no issue next week but stay tuned. The following week I will take you through a bizarre journey into the life of Ed Wood.

Film Fools of the Week: (Taken from Film Fools, More Memorable Movie Mistakes)

Lillian, the maid had about two lines, I almost totally darkened stage and set a deep, solemn mood with their music. Again, just not my musical style, but I could see this band performing at The Limelight on a Tuesday night and going over quite well. Write to:

Myrtle Strange

Myrtle Strange went on last, but I’ll mention them here before I mention the next to last band. Myrtle Strange was Dave Alcott on bass guitar and backing vocals, Tony Condon on guitar and lead vocals, Brian Dougherty on guitar and backing vocals, and Dave Collegrove on drums. They don’t go to school here, they are architectural interns, they are working on a CD and say “We don’t like to classify our music.” If you want to hear more, write to:

Dementia 13 (1963, B&W, 81min.)
Contrary to popular belief this is not Coppola’s first film. Regardless, it’s worth watching if you’re a fan of horror classics. Influenced by William Castle’s Homicidal, Coppola wrote and directed Dementia 13 with financial help from Roger Corman, the producer. The film had a simple but bizarre storyline, hence the title, Dementia 13.

The film is set around a haunted castle in Ireland. With the use of crooked credit captions and music similar to Psycho the viewer immediately knows they’re in for an eccentric tale. The opening scene mysteriously defies the laws of logic. Louise (Luana Anders) dunks her husband’s body into a lake along with a radio that continues playing even under water. The film contained all the necessary elements to make a good horror story, occasionally goes into trances singing, “Fishy, fishy, in the brook, daddy caught you by the hook.” I’m not sure where that fit in but there were a lot of missing links in this murder mystery. For instance, Lady Maloran falls into a fatal shock in the middle of the film and is seemingly forgotten about by the others. Louise is missing and nobody cares. And there is no further mention of the will that was the original focus of the plot.

A comedic balance is maintained throughout the film thanks to the absent-minded dialogue of Richard’s fiancée, Kane. Overall, I recommend this film but only if you’re willing to climb into the depths... Dementia 13.

In Star Trek II: The Wrath of Khan (1982), when told that Spock is dying, Kirk runs to the engine room with his jacket buttoned all the way up. But when he reaches the engine room, it’s opened all the way back up 70’s style clothes, and it was a winner for me when they broke into a long Allman Brothers influenced instrumental.

The crowd yelled for more when they finished. ‘Nuff said. They don’t go to school here, but I wish they did. Stone blue asked for The Montclarion to thank whoever did the write up on them when the band played the Rat. They say “We are not grunge” (nope, they’re not!) Write to the very cool Stone Blue at:

OUT TO LUNCH

When some important task of business has to be done, the busy student asks not when he or she would like to do it, but when he or she can do it. This often means either during their allotted lunch time, or following their afternoon classes. Unfortunately, during these times students may find the appropriate office closed.

For instance, students stopping at 12:01 P.M. at the office of Financial Aid, ID Services or International Services and Global Education will find themselves having to wait an hour before they can be attended.

The managers of these offices give reasonable-sounding accounts of their supposed necessity to close. But students must wonder why other important offices continue to function throughout the day. If the offices of the Registrar, Undergraduate Admissions and the Business Office can remain open, then why can’t the others?

President Reid has said, “we do not want offices closing for the convenience of the offices. If it is happening, I wish to know why. If it isn’t justified, then it will be changed.”

We thank President Reid, and we note his careful wording. We do not suggest that any office is being closed to suit any manager’s convenience. But we do insist that any claimed necessity to close be thoroughly examined. Perhaps some solutions could be found if they were more arduously sought. We trust President Reid will see that they are.

A request for such solutions would not be frivolous at any university. The fact that at this university many of our students work and/or commute makes the request all the more appropriate.
Rabbi extends Purim greeting to campus

More than twenty-three centuries ago, when the Persian Empire dominated the civilized world, an evil chamberlain, Haman, devised a diabolical plot to annihilate the Jewish population. But on the thirteenth day of the month of Adar, they were delivered from the wicked Haman's decree. Each year on Purim we celebrate our victory and amid feasting and merriment. Purim is not only one of our most joyous festivals. It is also a day of great significance, a day whose lessons remain relevant for all times.

At first reading, the Megilla (Scroll of Esther) which recounts the miracle of Purim, seems more like an epic tale of espionage and suspense than sacred scripture. In fact, throughout this carefully woven story of evil ambition and palace intrigue, we do not find the name of G-d mentioned even once! Yet within the intricate details of the Megilla, we can detect the unmistakable hand of Divine Providence. The closer we look into the events of man, the more we discover that every "coincidence," every seemingly insignificant event is precisely arranged by the hand of the Almighty.

The overturning of this evil decree was accomplished through unity and prayer. The power of unity and of prayer which attacks have occurred? If so, what were its conclusions? 5. Montclair State Community College if idiotic practices like this continue. Maybe while President Reid and his colleagues are making their Lexus and BMW payments they can order more copy paper. I think we paid enough to deserve it.

Piqued by paper paucity

Recently I was reminded of a terrible situation that exists on our beautiful campus. While sitting in class, I was informed by my professor that he would like to have given us a study guide for a test, but could not because there was no copy paper available. Can someone please give me an explanation? Is this not the new state university? Is there a wood shortage that I failed to hear about in the news? I find it hard to believe that with all the equipment this institution goes out to buy - with our tuition money - they can't buy a few thousand more reams of paper so I can get a stinking handout from my professor.

I hope Convocation Day comes soon so I can be reminded that we were really made a university. With problems like this we are a laughing stock to the whole university system. We better watch out or maybe they'll be forced to make us

Cannon fodder welcome, gay or straight: Columnist questions usefulness of military Recently, a TV movie entitled "Serving in Silence: The Margarethe Cammermeyer Story," starring Glenn Close in the title role, aired on NBC. It's somewhat strange that I should mention this, seeing that, admittedly, I didn't watch it. Nevertheless, I gathered enough information from NBC's promos to discover that it was based on the true story of a female combat veteran who was released from her high ranking post in the army when it became known that she was a lesbian. This movie appeared in a timely manner, considering the heated debate centering around this issue, particularly during the Clinton presidency. In my view, however, people on both sides are overlooking the real issue.

I find that few people on either side bother to consider the merits, or lack thereof, of the military in the first place. Moreover, I disagree with those who say that this is beside the point.

Few would argue that the military is one of the most idealized and glorified institutions in society, be it in this country or abroad. We're bombarded with propaganda urging people to enlist. These ads are generally targeted at young men in their late teens or early twenties, and appeal to a sense of adventure and machismo. Slogans such as, "Be all that you can be", "Full Speed Ahead," and "We're looking for a few good men" are typical examples. In the case of television or magazine ads, romanticized images are used, showing men congratulating one another after having scaled a steep cliff, generally with a magnificent sunset in the background. Radio ads use dramatic, "Go get 'em boys!" music to entice the young listener. Likewise, for as long as anyone can remember, miniature soldiers, in one form or another, have been the toys of choice for many young boys.

Several minor details are omitted from these ads. For instance, the question, "Are you prepared to take another person's life if one of your 'superiors' deems it necessary?" is never asked. Other questions not posed include: "Do you have faith in Joe Senator's or Corporate Big Shot's ability to establish whether or not you belong at the scene of the conflict in the first place? Are you ready to reconcile yourself with the fact that your opinion on these two questions becomes irrelevant the moment you enlist? Do you realize that many soldiers become desensitized to violence and are left emotionally scarred once they return? Do you know that the very government officials sending you to "restore democracy" in some third world country are often the same ones who put the country's dictator at the helm in the first place?"

Having read these questions some of you might respond, "Yes, but enlistment in the military is an effective way for those who lack money to get their share of the pie. It also offers the possibility of promotion to more prestigious posts." It seems to me, however, that the same can be said about organized crime. Though I know many will disagree with me, I feel that the distinction between the two is much more subtle that people would care to admit.

All things considered, can the homosexual community play an effective role in the military? The answer is yes. This is also the case with women and children, as shown by Iran during its recent war with Iraq. Yes, they too can be exploited for military purposes. You'll forgive me if I find nothing worth celebrating in any of these facts.

Likewise, when faced with the question, "should gays and lesbians be banned from the military?", I choose to answer it on different terms: people throughout the world would be better off if they avoided self-defeating "Us and Them" cliches. Human life is not expendable. You say you want to serve your country? There are crises such as inadequate health care, homelessness, and the decay of the public school system, to name but a few. All need and deserve more than the lip service that they've been given. "nuke the bastards!" heroes are not likely to make a dent in them any time soon.

Replacements' attitude inspires nostalgic fan

May I toss an unsolicited point of view into the proverbial ring re the baseball strike? Not all of us understand the intricacies of this strike. As a matter of fact, the only thing that is mentioned is the financial "this and that" of what is going on. I, like so many others, was brought up on baseball. We played it, we talked it, we flipped it and traded it, we watched it and we read it. We knew the stars because we were them for breakfast with our Wheaties. We treasured it, not because the cards were an investment, but because the game was part of our lives.

I'm sad for the players that now have a chance to stand at the plate of a real stadium. They are being scorned and laughed at and called names that they don't deserve. Haven't they stuck with the game all these years without six-or-seven-figure salaries and product endorsements? They personify baseball's spirit of old. The school lunch is not part of welfare, but it is worth the time to consider: if our children could buy a children's meal and then propose more expenditure in the military and a tax break for businesses.

Gingrich's welfare reform bill will require states to eliminate welfare benefits and the work programs to recipients after two years, even if they do not find a private job. Conversely, Clinton's plan does not chastise recipients for not finding a job in the private market. His proposal provides that recipients can work for the government if they do not find a private job in two years. Most important is Clinton's offer that if a welfare recipient's salary can only cover rent and miscellaneous needs, the mother will still be eligible for food stamps. We have to be realistic that most welfare recipients are uneducated single mothers, the majority of whom have been abandoned by their husbands. It is difficult for a single mother to earn enough money to support her children and pay rent and medicine alone. If we want single mothers to work and her salary is not sufficient to cover medical care, we must guarantee health insurance for children and aid her with child care. Unfortunately, a provision by Democrats that would guarantee childcare for welfare recipients who work was defeated in the House Ways and Means Subcommittee last week. Republican representative Jim Nussle's callous response to Democrats was, "Child care is not the government's responsibility."

The GOP also proposes to make $40 billion in cuts on other programs which include housing, WIC, and most importantly, school lunches and breakfast programs. The school lunch is not part of welfare, but it is worth mentioning it because it also strikes at disadvantaged children. It is just too disheartening to sacrifice these children's meal and then propose more expenditure in the military and a tax break for businesses.

Dutch wisdom may apply to American woes

Like many film makers in the 1980's, Jonathan Blank was disturbed by what he perceived as Reagan's emphasis on economic freedom at the expense of civil liberties. Blank left the United States in search of a society that was more tolerant of problems, a society which had an almost religious view of civil liberties and the right to privacy. He found it in Holland, and made Dutch society the subject of his documentary, Sex, Drugs, and Democracy. Holland is a civil libertarian's dream, and its totally uninhibited views of drugs, sex, crime, and privacy would probably give Newt Gingrich a heart attack. According to Blank, the Dutch view the United States as a negative test case to their ideas. Interestingly, Holland has fewer social problems and a much lower crime rate than almost any other industrialized nation.

Sex is treated as it should be: a natural human function, with different variations for individual tastes. Pornography, with the exception of child pornography, is completely legal, as is prostitution. Adult theaters abound, and sex manuals covering every topic, from AIDS prevention to tips on how to masturbate, are readily available.

As with sex, drug use is completely legal. Marijuana is sold everywhere, from the street corner to gourmet marijuana shops. There are Drug Advice Bureaus to tell holders how potent the marijuana is and to remind them of the risks and responsibilities of any particular drug. Holland was also the first country to implement a government-run clean needle exchange program for IV-drug users in order to stem the spread of AIDS - and it has worked. Holland has the fewest cases of AIDS of any country.

Holland also has a different way of dealing with crime, a way that would have William Bennett pulling his hair out. Capital punishment has been abolished in Holland, and sentences for violent criminals are short. The jails they stay in are like country clubs compared to prisons in other countries. Holland's crime rate is also very low.

The wealthy in Holland pay their fair share in taxes. Holland has a very progressive tax system, and the revenue that is gained, instead of being spent on a wasteful criminal justice system, is invested in social problems.

Can Americans learn something from the Dutch? We can, but we won't, unless there is a change of mind from the old Judeo-Christian idea of punishing sin and delaying pleasure. I believe that it would be a good idea just to study Dutch society. After all, with the lowest AIDS, drug abuse, and crime rates, the Dutch must be doing something right. Some will ask if we should adopt such policies in our country. Should we allow people to indulge in their own excessive and potentially self-destructive behavior? To quote the poet Blake, "The road of excess leads to the palace of wisdom."

Liberal contempt for family values wisely rejected

"Family values suck."

This message adorns a sticker pasted on a Bohn Hall resident's door. It is probably a typical view of college students today - and even more typical of younger children. Of course, this idea has been around with children for a long time. However, today this idea is being advanced by people far more influential.

The political left, the liberals, have adopted this phrase, or a variation of it, as part of their platform - "middle-class values suck." The motivation behind the disdain that liberals have for family values is that they make people conform. That it stifles creativity and creates a society of people that are repressed and "old-fashioned." That it judges people based on "your morals." In short, it doesn't go with the liberal cry of "free to be me, free to be you."

This ideology has been advanced for the past thirty years or so, and the effects are now being felt. Recently, Mr. and Mrs. George Bush gave speeches to a group of Japanese and American women in Washington, DC. What's that? You haven't heard anything about it? Well, that's probably because it was about the faith and values that have marked their lives and his presidency. You see, that's not consistent with the elite liberal media's view on things.

"I'm an optimist." President Bush began, "but I have one serious concern about the future, the breakdown of the American family." I suggest that the future that Mr. Bush spoke of is now. The values that helped shape and mold families have been under assault for quite some time by the liberals, and it would seem as though they have won. According to the latest Statistical Abstract, the United States leads the world in divorce rate. Also, the percent of out-of-wedlock births has steadily increased in the past three decades. In fact, thirty percent of all the children born in the U.S. are born to a single mother, including 68 percent of all black children. In 1992, there were over 1.5 million abortions performed in this country. When the rebellion against these principles took place, in the past, it was dealt with via punishment and/or extremely long lectures on the virtues of the middle-class values.

Over the past few decades the trend has been not to lecture or punish, but to accept the rebellion. With no correction of their actions, these teenagers did and still do whatever they want. If parents do discipline their children they are eagerly attacked as child abusers or close-minded by the liberals.

Often, these parents are sued by their children at the prompting of liberal organizations such as the Children's Legal Defense Fund. Consequently, parents left the raising of their children up to the schools, where their children can learn how to put on, use, and receive free condoms - but where they are not guaranteed the ability to read, write, or do basic math.

However, the recent nationwide move to the right may be a shift back to morality. A new youth rebellion is afoot; 500,000 teens and young people have joined True Love Waits, and taken a vow of abstinence until marriage. Churchgoers, though constantly under assault, are becoming more numerous and vocal. Parents are getting more involved in their children's education. And everyone is being forced to take responsibility for their actions.

Middle-class or family values may indeed be thought of as "sucking" by young people and liberals. But without them we will be missing ,as Mr. Bush stated, "the rock-solid foundation of integrity and ideals that guides how we live our lives..." And boy do we need it.

Affirmative action advocate cites personal success story

There is a movement across America to put an end to Affirmative Action. It is troubling that these elements are so close to home, as in the case of those students who for the past several weeks have written letters to the Montclarion supporting the annihilation of Affirmative Action. It is not surprising that the ones who are vehemently opposed to it are "angry white males," as Joe Paternoster (Mailbag, 2-23-95) puts it.

Affirmative Action opponents argue that it is both racist and sexist. Jason Alders (Mailbag, 3-2-95) calls it "ethically and constitutionally wrong." Is Mr Alders referring to the Constitution of the United States of America, which states that "all men are created equal"? America, which has for over 400 years oppressed blacks, various minority groups and women alike? The American plutocracy of a white-male elite, who has always denied these groups of civil, economic, political and basic human rights? Affirmative Action was installed to watch over this institutional racism/sexism, and ensure that it could no longer be practiced. It is not surprising then that, according to Mr. Paternoster, the "angry white males" are the ones against Affirmative Action.

The sentiment is that they are being discriminated against. They feel that their jobs and opportunities are going to minorities and women. I do not deny that Affirmative Action has its flaws, and that it is in some isolated cases, used as a discriminatory tool. However, the percentage of minorities and women who do attain jobs through Affirmative Action is very small. We all understand what blacks and women have been feeling agree that discrimination is indeed a terrible thing, and it should not be very difficult for you gentlemen to recognize the fact that America, which has provided a good education that as an American, as a human being, I deserve.

Since being a student at MSU, I have been actively involved in several organization on and off campus. I have been awarded numerous academic awards, was honorably inducted into Epsilon Omega Phi (an honors fraternity), been on the Dean's list several times, studied abroad in England, maintained a GPA of 3.5 or better, and am now about to graduate in just three-and-a-half years.

Do you think that Affirmative Action failed in my case? There are so many other students exactly like myself, who only need the equal opportunity to succeed. There are students who need the chance that the inner-city fails to offer. If we were to do away with EOF and Affirmative Action, we may never find these students; they will be lost in the streets, in gangs, in jails and cemeteries.

My friends, Affirmative Action is a crucial policy that we must not abandon. It is a necessary investment in the future of America.
Travesties will only cease with institution of SGA Judicial Branch

Last Thursday, MSU was again treated to another legal comedy. The Greek Council Judicial “Court” was called back into session by the Associate Dean of Students James Harris.

One may recall that Delta Kappa Psi was charged last Fall by Greek Council President Mike Costa with “Conduct Unbecoming the Greek Community” for possessing a Confederate Flag.

Last week, Delta Kappa Psi was again brought up on charges of “Conduct Unbecoming the Greek Community,” but this time for having a party.

This time, although there was no flag involved, Delta Kappa Psi held a party where some students were injured during a fight and were charged with the same identical charge that landed them in “court” last semester.

This raises some serious questions about the process of a “court” that can charge an organization with the same charge for two entirely different actions. For instance, under the Greek Council’s system of Justice, jaywalking and murder would both be “Conduct unbecoming the Greek Community” and both could receive the same punishment.

“This vague charge is nothing more than a loophole that fraternities/sororities continually fall into for a lack of more specific statutes.”

“Conduct Unbecoming the Greek Community” decidedly favors the prosecution. Nowhere in the Greek Council bylaws does it state that the prosecution must be more specific with it’s accusations. If Delta Kappa Psi hadn’t pressed for an answer to their charge before they came to court last week they would not have known exactly why they were being brought there. Imagine being called into Clifton municipal court and not knowing exactly why you were there. Worse yet, imagine finding out your charge after you have presented your case. This is not a far fetched scenario. It could have happened last week. In fact, the jury was not sure of the charge even during the closing arguments during the last “court.” Hardly a way to run a fair trial.

To the best of my knowledge, the SGA is supposed to resemble the workings of the actual Federal Government with a three branch system (executive, legislative, judicial) and is supposed to give the students hands on experience with the political process. The only problem with the MSU SGA is that it missing one of the big three branches, the Judicial Branch (until next semester). The closest thing that we as students have is a judicial court that has no records kept, no appeal process and a jury that is made up of 35 jurors, all of whom do not have to be present at the trial. A trial can proceed with an incomplete jury, (as did last Thursday’s trial; 28 jurors) but there would be no appeal process if, say, an organization was found guilty by one vote. I don’t think that Supreme Court Justice William J. Brennan, Jr. would be smiling.

Fortunately, the SGA and Greek Council have finally realized that their system of justice has some major bugs in it and have agreed to restructure and amend the bylaws to bring about a smoother judicial court.

Unfortunately, it took numerous trials and countless wasted hours for our leaders to realize that their system is not fair and does not work.

It is said that justice is blind. Justice at MSU can not be blind until the necessary changes are made with the Greek Council Judicial Court bylaws. Until then our judicial system will remain “legally blind.”

Despair and denial must be resisted in the struggle with AIDS

I’ve been talking to people about their feelings towards Greg Louganis’ announcement that he has AIDS. While I listened to the different opinions, I couldn’t help but realize that the things I was hearing were strikingly different from what I remember people saying when they found out four years ago that Magic Johnson was HIV positive.

The most frequent observation that people have made is that the shock isn’t as intense because Louganis, unlike Johnson, is a homosexual. Once again, the extent of my naivete became clear. Even though the disease had forced itself into mainstream awareness so that it could no longer be marginalized as an exclusively homosexual phenomenon, people were still ready to adopt the old stereotype: the “gay plague” stigma had reappeared. This assumption made by so many people - that it is to be somehow expected that Louganis would develop AIDS - sadly proves that the revelations and work of the “normalized” face of AIDS by individuals such as the late Elizabeth Glazer and Magic Johnson have changed very little.

Another response to the announcement has been a sense of resignation. The Village Voice ran an article a few weeks ago which revealed that the AIDS rate, particularly among gay men, is increasing due to a sudden outbreak of unsafe sex. The column suggested that many people are suffering from hopelessness, no end seems to be in sight and the overwhelming loss that many of these people have suffered have in some way driven them to find unsafe sex a kind of outlet for this hopelessness.

When I originally read the column, my initial response was complete understanding. I too have seen a staggering number of friends, acquaintances and heroes die of AIDS. I’ve seen too many people receive their “honorary” section on the AIDS quilt, and I’ve seen too little progress in finding a cure. I couldn’t help feeling sympathy for the desperation that many must have felt.

But on reflection, I couldn’t sanction this reckless response from anyone, gay or straight. The reality is that AIDS remains one of the most preventable diseases in existence. Not knowing how to prevent it - for heterosexuals or homosexuals - is no longer an acceptable excuse. Neither is hopelessness or resignation.

I’m not to feel the deepest sympathy and support for individuals who are suffering from the disease. The fight for increased research and education will continue to revive my support until the day a cure is discovered. But I refuse to accept any resignation or hopelessness. To reach the cure, we have to keep ourselves safe, healthy, and most importantly, alive.

A friend of mine recently lost his brother to AIDS. He called back into session by the Associate Dean of Students James Harris.

I’ve been discussing the subject, and I asked him what he thought about this situation. We agreed that everyone must rediscover their hope, courage, and action that marked the AIDS activism and awareness movement at its onset. He summarized it perfectly: “If we let ourselves become numb to these deaths, then they might as well not happen at all. We can’t let this once again become a ‘not me’ phenomenon. You know, it’s the old saying - silence equals death.”

Learning a lesson the hard way
Men's hoops schooled in NCAA first round by Rowan, 70-45

by Michael Conen

In the NJAC Playoffs two weeks ago, MSU upset Rowan to advance to the finals of the conference tournament. But its hopes of a second-straight upset were crushed last Thursday as the Prof's soundly defeated the Red Hawks, 70-45, in the first round of the NCAA Division III Tournament before 692 fans at Esby Gym in Glassboro.

Early in the game, which finished the 1994-95 season at 17-10, jumped out to a 6-0 lead by scoring on its first three possessions of the game.

The Prof's, ranked No. 4 in the nation and the No. 2 seed in the NCAA's Atlantic Region, answered back with a 14-4 run of their own to take a 14-10 on a Charles Grasty layup from Andrew Kennedy with 13:23 to go. Grasty, one of the top players in the NJAC, had a game-high 21 points, 16 of them in the first half.

"They shot the ball extremely well," said MSU senior guard Dean Spinogatti of Rowan, which shot 47.9 percent (23-for-48) compared to a 39.2 percent clip (20-for-51) for the Red Hawks.

However, MSU was able to hang in for a few more minutes before the Prof's went on a 15-6 run to go into halftime with a 31-22 advantage.

Rowan dominated the second half, shooting a blistering 55 percent from the floor. It began the half with a 10-4 run to up 41-26 with 16:54 remaining in the game. Following NJAC Player of the Year Terrence Stewart's 3-pointer, the Profs' lead to 41-34.

Terrence Stewart's 3-pointer.

However, a 14-4 run by Rowan officially put the game out of reach. "I wanted to do as much as I could to help us win," said Spinogatti, who was a part of the team in some of the lean years.

"We weren't as intense as the first time," said Spinogatti. "It's not too long ago that head coach Nick Del Tufo was recruiting to kids to play for a dismal team by posting flyers in the Student Center cafeteria. Today, people know all about MSU men's basketball. After missing the NCAA Tournament for 10 years, the Red Hawks made a trip back there last year. This year, they were able to go back again. Right there is a sign of how much respect and how credible the Red Hawks have become.

"In my four years here, this team has become a national contender.""RED HAWK NOTES: How much has Fowler meant to the Red Hawks. Sure he is their leading scorer (13.8 ppg), but he is also the only MSU player averaging in double figures in scoring. In the 27 games he played in, he led the team or tied for the lead in points scored 14 times, putting up a season-high of 28 from Trenton St. Also, he led the team in rebounding nine times, including a season high of 14 versus Rutgers-Newark on Jan. 11.

The junior swingman from Plainfield also led the Red Hawks minutes (30.6 per game), steals (35), disqualifications (four), blocked shots (15).

One tell-tale stat for MSU: they shot a measles 62.4 percent from the free throw line (335-for-537). In the final Rowan game, the Red Hawks were only 4-of-8 from the charity stripe. Conversely, the Prof's were 17-of-20.

On the season, MSU shot 44.9 percent (23-for-48) compared to a 39.2 percent clip (20-for-51) for the Red Hawks.

Junior forward Greg Fowler, the only MSU player named to the All-NJAC first-team last Monday, scored a quiet 10 points on own court. But he did pull down nine of MSU's 28 rebounds.

Stewart and Grasty found a way to haunt the Red Hawks again, though, combining to score 36 points - more than half of Rowan's offense - in the win. Stewart, who Fowler once acknowledged as the NJAC opponent he respected the most, scored 11 of his 15 points in the second half.

MSU can still hold its head high. It was not too long ago that head coach Nick Del Tufo was recruiting to kids to play for a dismal team by posting flyers in the Student Center cafeteria. Today, people know all about MSU men's basketball. After missing the NCAA Tournament for 10 years, the Red Hawks made a trip back there last year. This year, they were able to go back again. Right there is a sign of how much respect and how credible the Red Hawks have become.

"I wanted to do as much as I could to help us win," said Spinogatti, who was a part of the team in some of the lean years.

"In my four years here, this team has become a national contender."
Second-half run squashes Red Hawks, 75-58

by Brian Falahara

This year was certainly a good one. Unfortunately for the Red Hawks, this season is over.

Seeded seventh in the NCAA Women’s Basketball Tournament, MSU pulled off an “upset” by defeating Elizabethtown in the first round, 77-68. But time caught up with the Red Hawks as they succumbed to No. 3 seed Johns Hopkins, 75-58, in Baltimore this past Saturday.

Senior guard Amy Dodrill poured in a game-high 24 points, 13 of them coming in the decisive second half for the Blue Jays (22-6), who move on to the “Sweet-16” against defending national champion Capital (Ohio).

In the Red Hawks defense, travelling back and forth to games and a string of tough contests finally caught up with them. Fatigue set in, causing at least six players, including guards Lisa Villalta, Robin Berrios and Aidill Borrero. Berrios suffered worse than her teammates, though. “Robin was so bad that she didn’t come down (to Baltimore) with us the day before, she came down the day of the game,” said MSU coach Gloria Bradley, who noted that the team doctors advised keeping Berrios away from her healthy teammates for fear of them being afflicted.

MSU, which finished the season at 20-7, kept the contest close for most of the way. The NJAC school led 8-0 to start off the contest as sophomore guard Heidi Klingert dropped in seven of her 15 points in the game-opening run. Even after Johns Hopkins went on a 12-2 run, sparked by Dodrill’s four-point play, to take a 36-34 halftime lead, the Red Hawks were very much alive.

Borrero (15 points, eight assists and six rebounds) hit an off-balance jumper with 12:38 left in the game to tie the game at 46. However, the Blue Jays put the game out of MSU’s reach with a 13-2 spurt that gave them an insurmountable 61-48 advantage with 5:47 to go.

“When they had that run, we just had nothing to answer them back with,” said Bradley. “I really don’t (think we’ll get more respect next year), because we went to the second round and you could almost look at it as they upset Elizabethtown and then after that ... I don’t think that they’ll look at that.”

Johns Hopkins hit 33-of-43 free throws in the contest, including 14 straight in the final minutes to clinch the victory, while MSU shot a subpar 6-of-13.

Maggie Misiejuk, MSU’s star freshman center, was saddled by fouls and spent most of the first half on the bench. The native of Poland finished 2-for-10 from the field, garnering only four points. Junior forward Kim Kovar scored all 10 of her points in the first half before fouling out of the game in the second half.

The future looks to be very much like the season which just ended. With only four juniors on the squad, MSU obviously relied on underclassmen such as Borrero, Misiejuk and Klingert to get things done. So next year should be an encore of this year.

In spite of injuries and the lack of respect they received throughout the season - a 10-game winning streak was the only thing which enabled them to be ranked in the NCAA’s Atlantic Region - the Red Hawks may have succeeded in opening the eyes of many Division III women’s basketball observers.

Unless you listen to Bradley, that is. “I really don’t (think we’ll get more respect next year), because we went to the second round and you could almost look at it as they upset Elizabethtown and then after that ... I don’t think that they’ll look at that.”

Brian and Tom pick the Final Four

Brian: Even I have not seen the brackets yet. But I know who will be in the Final Four. Here they are:
1. Kansas. I think they'll win it all. Roy Williams produces winners, and with that frontline and some solid play from his guards, you're looking at the National Champion.
2. Kentucky. Always a dangerous squad under Rick Pitino. If they're hitting their 3's, the Wildcats will be able to outgun many teams.
3. North Carolina. Dean Smith will lead Stackhouse and Wallace to the promised land in their final NCAA Tournament before going pro.
4. UCLA. Perennial NCAA choke-artists primed for a run. Ed O'Bannon is having a nice season for Jim Harrick's Bruins.

Virginia is my dark horse, followed by Villanova and Penn.

Tom: It is hard to pick a final four and a dark horse team without seeing the brackets. But that is a sacrifice I have to make in order to go on Spring Break next week. My Final Four is as follows:
1. North Carolina. With Jerry Stackhouse and Rasheed Wallace, this team looks to go deep into the tournament. And Dean Smith is a great coach.
2. Arkansas. They did not have a great year, but this team has something other teams don't - experience.
3. Connecticut. The Huskies will not disappoint Big East fans who look to finally put a team back into the Final Four.
4. Kansas. Aren't they there every other year? Despite a lack of recognition, the Jayhawks are a safe bet to get to Seattle.

Wake Forest, Memphis, and Xavier are my darkhorses. Happy betting.

Which of these famous quotes does not belong?

a. “Carpe diem”
b. “Be all that you can be”
c. “Write for sports”
d. “I think, therefore I am”

Obviously, the quote that is out of place is c. But that is because you have not come down to write for this esteemed section. There are several positions available: feature writing, copy editing, and the opportunity to cover a sport on a “beat” basis. Also, we could use a dependable assistant sports editor.

LT should be “Saved by the Bell” from the WWF

At one point in time, there was no one like Lawrence Taylor. The big blue behemoth known as “LT” used to run full steam across a football field, stalling a poor, unsuspecting running back or quarterback. For Giants fans, those were days were comparable to a sort of football utopia. LT from a publicity standpoint. Apparently saw the X-Men jump out to a 44-43 lead at halftime. However, the Def Squad was able to get more scoring from more of its players. Tyrone Rolle, a wide receiver for the football team and a reserve guard for the men’s team, dumped in another 11 for the victors. Also, MSU freshman football sensation Brian Cooney poured in 10, as did tight end Rob Colt. In defeat, Brian McNair, a former wide receiver for the Red Hawks, dropped in a game-high 26 points for the X-Men.

Def Squad outduels X-Men, 83-78

In the final of the S.I.L.C. basketball league, the Def Squad emerged victorious over the X-Men by a 83-78 margin.

Keith Hines, an All-NJAC first-team player last season for the MSU men’s basketball team, poured in 19 points, and Marty led all scorers with 22 for the Def Squad.

This was a close game, which actually saw the X-Men jump out to a 44-43 lead at halftime. However, the Def Squad was able to get more scoring from more of its players. Tyrone Rolle, a wide receiver for the football team and a reserve guard for the men’s team, dumped in another 11 for the victors. Also, MSU freshman football sensation Brian Cooney poured in 10, as did tight end Rob Colt. In defeat, Brian McNair, a former wide receiver for the Red Hawks, dropped in a game-high 26 points for the X-Men.

PARTING SHOTS

VIRTUAL REALITY: We’re not even real members of the team, yet we resemble their futurity in an uncanny way. Aren’t the Mets scabs awful? They play against other replacement players and still find a way to get no-hit. It doesn’t look like baseball is going to come back, does it.

Despite looking at my picture and getting the impression that I am a happy go lucky guy, I’m getting ticked off, too. If you Mets fans think that signing DEXTER CARTER was good, than I shudder to think of how happy you are with BOBBY BRISTER. Please tell me we are not going to have a quarterback controversy between Brister and BOOMER ESIASON.

That would be like debating who is a better coach, RAY “?” HANDLEY or JOE “MUST GO” WALTON. Do you think I could petition Congress to have SHERRY CROW banned? Her remake of Led Zeppelin’s “D’Yer Maker” is just plain awful. If the Devils have a chance of moving to Nashville like reports say could happen, then I have a chance to play centerfield for the Mets when the plumbers and carpenters stop playing.

DENNIS RODMAN is even weirder than I thought. I took a huge risk with that one, huh. See you in seven.
