Vice President Gore visits MSU

Reaction differs among 3,000 attendants at rally

by Genie Feran

Reactions to the Gore rally varied from total endorsement to disagreement with Gore's statements yesterday.

An informal sweep of the crowd garnered the following range of responses:

"Whether or not we agree with him, it's important to take the opportunity to see a world figure," said Chris Bruker, a senior with a double major in Biology and German studies.

"The education issue Gore mentioned gave me hope. He made me confident that things are being done for the benefit of students," said Edward Tierney, a sophomore in the Political Science Dept.

"It was a wonderful opportunity for MSU students to see the political process at work," said Dr. Gregory Waters, deputy provost and vice president for Institutional Advancement. "MSU is a resource to the community and

Gore security disrupts campus routine

by Tom Boud

Campus security was radically beefed up for Vice President Al Gore's September 11 visit at MSU. The U.S. Secret Service closed the Student Center Annex and the pedestrian walkway between College Ave and Webster Rd until 3 p.m. and cordoned off access to the amphitheater where Gore delivered his speech. Early morning traffic at all campus entrances was remarkably light.

As early as 8 a.m., Lot 9 (just south of the amphitheater) took on the air of a D-Day invasion staging point. Plainclothes US Army personnel, US Secret Service agents, New Jersey State Police, Essex and Passaic County Police, and Montclair Police milled about. The Department of Campus Safety and Security (DSS) was also out in full force.

Campus Police Director Philip Calitre, Lts. Michael Postaski and Paul Cell scurried about attending to last minute details.

At 8:30 a.m., DSS Officer Frank Marino evacuated the west side of College Hall as the Secret Service and Army people in civilian clothes secured the area with the help of a bomb-sniffing dog. Barely an hour later, Marino found himself fielding endless questions as about 3,000 ticket holders took over College Hall. The throng occupied both floors of College Hall and soon stretched outside towards the Sprague Library. Nonetheless, there was no disorderly behavior of any kind.

Around 10:30 a.m., Marino opened the west doors of College Hall and the crowd proceded to the amphitheater through a gauntlet of sawhorses and law enforcement personnel. Guests with red VIP tickets were the first to be admitted, followed by blue special guest ticket holders, and green general admission ticket holders. Upon entering the amphitheater, all guests were guided by ushers to their reserved seats.

Amphitheater security was extremely tight. Secret Service agents dotted the stage where Paterson Mayor Bill Pasarell, East Orange Mayor Cardell Cooper, MSU President Irvin Reid, Student Board of Trustees Representative Paola Ciappina and comedian Richard Lewis delivered some introductory remarks. A multiagency contingent of law officers ringed the entire amphitheater perimeter. There was also a barricade of

Gore stresses need for accessible education in speech

by Genie Feran and Lorren Magnus

Vice-President Al Gore visited MSU yesterday to speak about education, opportunity, environmental concerns and individual responsibility. He addressed a crowd of over 3,000 people in a political rally to raise awareness of the Democratic party's stance on these issues and to address the campaign platform President Clinton will take to the November election.

Gore began his speech by praising President Reid and the University for its hospitality and warm welcome, drawing a loud cheer and a flurry of raised Clinton/Gore banners when he asked the crowd, "How many students here need student loans?" He called educational assistance in the form of student loans and Pell grants "the bridge to the 21st century" and asserted the importance of making them more available to students.

Gore also described two new Democratic proposals; the Hope Scholarship Program which effectively makes community college tuition-free and the $1500-tax credit for education, making educational expenses tax-free for families.

Gore stated that although big government isn't the answer, neither is it ac-

Yeltsin Transfers Some Controls
Russian President Boris Yeltsin has temporarily transferred control of several key ministries while he is going on a “vacation” but the Kremlin says he is keeping control of the nuclear red button. Yeltsin announced last week in a television interview last week that he would undergo heart surgery later this month. His ongoing health problems have prompted speculation of a power struggle in the Kremlin and has worried Western leaders.

President Reid welcomes back professional staff and faculty for the Fall semester

by Genie Feran

MSU President Irvin Reid praised University faculty members for their nationally recognized achievements in the Faculty Scholarship Incentive Program (FSIP) during his general faculty and professional staff meeting on September 3 in the Student Center.

"Their achievements represent real opportunity for the students," Reid said in an interview Monday. "When you have faculty members who are producing scholarship at the level of their national peers, it creates quality for the students and means the value of their education is directly related to that quality," he said.

The FSIP, now in its third year, has expanded the definition of scholarship to include the scholarship of pedagogy and application in addition to discovery, integration and aesthetic creation. President Reid said in his speech to the staff.

This new definition recognizes the value of a broader range of faculty activities to the university and society, he added.

Faculty members who secure grants and contracts from a variety of public and private foundations bear special significance to students as well. "Because these grants keep the cost of education lower by supporting equipment fees, travel and supplies expenses, and where appropriate, providing an employment opportunity for students as research assistants," said Reid. Reid also gave some examples of grant recipients this past year, including the Life Skills Center, under the direction of Joan Bernstein and Joanne Core Bonanno, which secured grants and contracts totaling more than $1 million; Project Thistle, under the direction of Wendy Osman, which was funded for the 16th consecutive year to provide professional development in critical thinking for Newark teachers and Dr. John Speechin of Home Economics, who spent his third summer in China as a visiting professor in the area of Food Science and Safety at several Chinese universities.

Aside from the benefits to students, the FSIP and faculty-secured grants are critical, Reid said, in supporting MSU's doctoral programs which have been under development for almost two years now. Reid identified the four areas of study that would distinguish MSU's doctoral programs amid others in New Jersey as Applied Linguistics, Environmental Management & Science, Health and Wellness Promotion and Pedagogy for Classroom Teachers. According to Reid's speech, faculty task forces, the Board of Trustees and the Presidents' Council are some of the groups involved in the development and approval process of the doctoral programs. "Faculty involvement is crucial in developing the curriculums," said Dr. Wayne Bond, president of the University Senate, "because it is the faculty who's ultimately responsible for the doctoral programs' curriculums."

In his interview on Monday, Dr. Reid expressed MSU's main goal for the next 12 years as remaining competitive by being on the cutting edge of innovations, providing quality and service as a public institution. Vision 2008 was the term he used to name the opportunity for faculty, students, trustees and others in the campus community to come together in the strategic planning and direction which would be completed by MSU's centennial in 2008.

Reid said his personal goal for Vision 2008 is to offer more professional schools so that students have a wider range of choices and to depend less on classroom participation and more on interaction with faculty through computers and video conferencing. He said he'd like to see more programs involving life long learning, where a professional can take a specific program in language or technology to remain competitive in their position. He added that these ideas are all subject to validation by the students, faculty and others on campus.

SGA President Julio Marencio approved of Reid's goals for MSU and stressed the importance of shared governance in attaining them. "The faculty, administration and students have had more input into the decision-making process this year, but I think much more input is needed," Marencio said. "I give Dr. Reid a lot of credit for making necessary changes since he became president, but in the past two years he's been kicking into high gear."

Newman Center gets new Chaplain from Bayonne

By: Lorren Magnus

This semester, MSU students will be seeing a new face around and about campus. Father Al Berner will be taking over Father Arthur Humphrey's duties as Chaplain of the Newman Catholic Center after leaving his prior commitment at St. Henry's Church in Bayonne.

Father Al, born and raised in East Orange and Scotch Plains, was educated at Seton Hall Preparatory School and went on to Seton Hall University where he received his Bachelor's degree in Humanities. Upon graduation, Father Al attended Immaculate Conception Seminary in 1962 and was ordained in 1968.

Father Al also received a second Bachelor's degree in Sacred Theology from the Catholic University in Washington DC, and in 1974 earned his Master's degree in Pastoral Counseling from Seton Hall Preparatory School and Stevens Institute of Technology.

Most recently, Father Al was the part-time minister at both Keen College and Stevens Institute of Technology. When the opportunity arose for the position at MSU, Father Al applied for, was offered, and ultimately accepted the job as Chaplain of the Newman Center. "I was always interested in Campus Ministry," said Father Al, "and I had previously been a part-time minister at both Keen and Stevens. So, in 1995 when the position became available, I applied for it."

Starting over at MSU may take some time getting use to, but the whole campus has welcomed Father Al with open arms. "It will be a whole new life here," said Father Al, "but I am excited and enthusiastic about it. The campus has certainly extended their arms and everyone has been welcoming."

While at MSU, Father Al plans to mingle around a while and find out what he would like to be involved with. "At this point I will blend into the campus and see what groups are here, find out their needs and work with the groups to achieve them," said Father Al. "I will continue with Sunday Liturgy and the Adult Education program, as well as start some new projects that I am working on."

Father Al's predecessor, Father Arthur Humphrey, is optimistic about his replacement. "I've known him [Father Al] for over 20 years," he said, "and I am pleased that someone I know and trust will be taking over at MSU. He is patient, understanding, and will be good for the university."

Mary Lou Vinges, Administrative Assistant to the Newman Catholic Center, is optimistic about working with Father Al. "I anticipate all good things," she said. "He is really nice and I believe everyone will enjoy him. The Newman Center is such a great place and I am positive Father Al will fit right in. He'll be great."

we're very happy to be a site for Gore's visit,” he said.

Vitaly Satanovsky, a sophomore in the Economics Department pointed out what he felt were some falsehoods, “Pell grants and student loans are being increased in the Republican balanced budget plan,” he said, “and Gore didn’t mention school vouchers because it gives people choices.”

Gore’s visit took place without any untoward occurrence. Associate Dean of Students James Harris said the MSU community took the security measures very well. “Of course, in any situation like this, you are going to have inconveniences. But you have to ask yourself, how many people ever get the chance to see the Vice President of the United States give a live speech? The answer is, very few. Therefore, it's most definitely worth any inconveniences,” Harris said.
MSU Campus Police offer self defense seminar starting September 30

by Tom Boudet

The MSU Department of Campus Safety and Security (DSS) will be starting the Fall ‘96 Self-Defense/Crime Safety Seminar on September 30 at 6 p.m., in the Student Center Room 419, according to Campus Police Lieutenant Paul Cell.

“The seminar will cover parking lot security, office security, dorm security, home security, and all aspects of personal security,” said Cell. “The seminar will also place special emphasis on instructing people on how to escape from potentially dangerous situations.”

Cell said he will be responsible for teaching self-defense techniques as a certified black-belt martial arts instructor. “Officer Timothy Webster will be in charge of the crime prevention aspect of the seminar,” Cell said. “And other DSS personnel will be on hand to assist with seminar presentations.”

Cell said the self-defense portion of the seminar has been further improved. “We have now the red man suit,” said Cell. “It’s a protective suit that covers the martial arts instructor from head to toe.” The benefit of this suit is that it allows participants to become more aggressive so that they can get a good feel of what it’s like to use self-defense techniques without being in any actual danger. “It’s really very useful for helping students learn pressure point techniques and target training.”

Cell said the crime-prevention part will reinforce proper safety attitudes. “For example one big crime myth is that you are supposed to yell ‘Fire’ if you are being attacked,” said Cell. “That really doesn’t make any sense. You yell ‘Fire’ and people will be more likely looking around for smoke instead of reacting to what’s really going on. You are much better off with yelling ‘Help, I’m being attacked’. I don’t think society has reached the point where yelling ‘Fire’ and people won’t respond to someone screaming when they are being assaulted.”

The Self-Defense/Crime Safety Seminar will accommodate at least 40 individuals, and said will be running for the entire semester. Anyone wishing to register can contact Lt. Paul Cell at 655-5123.

SA News: the 1st meeting

by Victor Cirllo

Student Government President Julio Marenco officially gave start to the new legislative year by giving his presidential report. Marenco, outlined tasks the executive board accomplished during the summer. First and foremost, he mentioned that the finances are safer than ever and that his executive board had saved the SGA close to $20,000 dollars by making changes in personnel and office procedures. The Student Government accountant, Ralph Fredricks from the firm Martin & Martin, then explained how they keep track of the money flow and the auditing process that occurs after the fiscal year end on May 31.

However, when Head Justice of the SGA Judicial Committee George Calle, inquired on whether monies for airline tickets used for the executive board conference to San Diego came from last year’s budget or this year’s, they couldn’t answer the question. When the question was directed at Marenco and the rest of the executive board, he said that the tickets were paid for by last year’s administration.

In a previous interview with the Montclarion, Marenco had stated “the tickets were a gift from last year’s administration,” which is different than a direct purchase from SGA funds. Fredricks said that there was no record of a purchase of airline tickets by last year’s administration when the audit was completed for the fiscal year ending on May, 31 1996. Calle then said, “The SGA may have gone over their conference line by 100 percent.” They promised a full audit of all the recent summer expenditures which occurred during a time when there was no bookkeeper in the SGA accounting office.

Marenco mentioned that the 1995 yearbook is out and that soon the 1996 version will be in distribution. He also promised to restructure Class One organizations to provide better distribution of the SGA budget. The SGA also has a new financial advisor in Louis Anderson. The present Director of the Student Center takes over for Chuck Feiner who held the position last year. When questioned by Montclarion’s Editor-in-Chief Tom Tracy on his recent legal matters, President Marenco replied that due to respect for both sides in the dispute, he could not comment at the moment, but would do so at a later date.

Legislator John Bost then inquired on the incident, Marenco said, “I don’t know, why don’t you ask Tom (Tracy)?” When pressed further about a decision on his disciplinary hearing he said, “I am not aware of any decision, this is a private matter between me and Dr. Wilcox.”

A new feature this year in the SGA of the World Wide Web, designed by Director of Services Cornelius Brown. The new slogan for the year was also revealed by Marenco, “Let’s get excited!”
Center for Health Services undergoing improvements

by Lisa Monaco

The Center for Health Services and Wellness Programs, formally known as the Health Center, is currently making changes and improvements to better serve the students at Montclair State. Located in Blanton Hall, the Center is available to all undergraduate, graduate, resident, and commuter students.

Last spring, Rose Bugis, director and head nurse of the center, announced her retirement, effective in August 1996. This prompted Helen Matusow-Ayers, Dean of Students, to look for ways to change and improve the health facility. She put together a committee of students, staff, and faculty to brainstorm and plot a course for the future of the establishment.

The Center for Health Services and Wellness Programs is in the process of hiring a nurse practitioner to be the new director of the Center. A nurse practitioner has many capabilities similar to a physician and can treat many illnesses without having to wait to see a doctor. “The University is refocusing their resources and trying to be more proactive and responsive to what the students want and need,” said John Davis, Acting Director of the Center for Health Services and Wellness Programs and Head Athletic Trainer.

The mission of the Center is to try to provide students with the same type of medical care they would get at home. The Center currently provides certain services, such as Mantoux tests (for Student Teaching) and pregnancy tests, for a nominal fee. In the next couple of months, the facility hopes to also have gynecological care available on a limited basis, as well as a small lab to perform certain blood tests.

Nancy Byrne, part-time nurse and acting health educator, wants to also see better coordination in programs on campus and to aid students involved in peer education. “I want to find out what everyone is doing and get more programs out on campus,” Byrne said.

The Center for Health Services and Wellness Programs is staffed with two physicians, two full-time nurses, one part-time nurse and a receptionist. The physicians from Mountainside Family Practice including a supervising physician and a third or fourth year resident, have a great deal of experience in this environment. The residents are also licensed and certified by the New Jersey Board of Medical Education to practice medicine.

The Center has changed its hours to Monday-Friday 8am-8pm, Saturday 8am-12pm or 9am-lpm, and closed Sunday. Although these hours have been cut from the original 24 hour per day availability, Davis said it will be more cost effective in bringing the students a greater quality of health care.

“When you have the facts, argue the facts. When you have the law, argue the law. When you have neither, holler.” –Dr. Irvin Reid quoting Al Gore.
Al Gore visits MSU: The Students’ Reactions

by Paul Jones

On Wednesday, September 11th, Vice-President Al Gore visited the MSU campus to promote the Democratic campaign for the 1996 Presidential election. Approximately three-thousand people attended the event which was held at the campus's outdoor amphitheatre. Many students were eager to share their opinions of the Vice-President’s visit with the Montclarion.

“I felt that it was a very good speech. It helped me even more to make a decision.”

Terence Hunter, Senior

“The Democratic party seems to care more about people—especially students. I’m overwhelmed to hear here—I think it’s not every day you get to meet the Vice-President.”

Nicole Harmon, Senior

“I felt that it was a very good speech. It helped me even more to make a decision.”

John Zisa, Senior

“The Vice-President’s visit had quite an effect on many students who are undecided regarding the upcoming election. The visit gave voters a first-hand account of issues that are often de-personalized by radio or television.”

The Campus Beat: What do you think of the new security booths at all campus entrances? by Tom Boud

The security booths are definitely an inconvenience. I’ve been waiting on line for five minutes because of the security guys handing out those papers warning that you got to have a proper sticker. –Don Russell, Junior

It makes sense. I’m not inconvenienced because it’s good for the safety of the campus. –Dena Grant, Staff Employee

I can tell you the traffic at the booths will be heavy. Imagine yourself trying to get on campus to get your daughter or son. I don’t know how people will handle it. –Charles Venescac, Junior

The booths don’t bother me at all. –Pedro Macedo, Freshman

I’m glad they moved the booth by the Clove Rd. bridge because it was very difficult to make a left hand turn (from Carlisle Rd.). I do think it’s a good idea. I don’t really notice any waiting because I come to campus so early. –Ken Mix, Senior

The booths are not going to reduce crime because anyone can still walk onto campus. I think the campus police are naive to believe that the booths will have any effect on crime. But then again, they are ninncompoops as police officers. Perhaps they should get some real training in law enforcement. –Dr. Robert Olick, French Department

I’m glad the new security is in place. –Holly Forbes, Junior

Well, did you hear from President Clinton? I did. Bill's never too busy to respond to potential voters in an election year. The White House also has an autotransponder that sends out the replies. (I could use one of those for my homework.) Let's look at some of the other features on the Alpha node.

At the $ prompt type in MENU<enter>. Type L to go to the Sprague Library On-line Card Catalog. MP is Maple, math program for working with matrices. MA displays your email address. D, the Directory Listing, shows what files you have. Forgot your watch this morning? Type ST<enter> your name<enter> for Show Time. U is for Users, see who is logged on to Alpha at the moment. If I were you, I'd be real cautious about using PD for Purge Directory or R for Remove/Delete files until you are more experienced. M brings you the Mail program.

S is for Status - Space Utilization. Each person has a limited amount of space on Alpha. Max it out and you won't be able to do squat until you delete. This tends to occur with those packrats who have never deleted old email. L gets you to LYNX, a text web browser. LUG is the LYNX User's Guide, relatively easy to use. Enter MSU for the text version of Information Services' home page via LYNX. H is for Help. All this does is instruct you to type in the letter beside the option to access it. Choose EX to return to the $ prompt. $Help will get you something resembling real Help. It presents you with a list and prompts you for a topic name. Type in the topic name and read the Help info for it. A word of caution is in order here. You are not working in a Windows or Mac system. Your reaction to the Help information may be, "What the %$#?" Get used to it. < sigh >. However, there is a FAQ to assist you!

FAQ is the acronym for Frequently Asked Questions. This facilitates the use of the system by new users (newbies) and hopefully keeps thousands of them from emailing the person in charge with the same question. $FAQ displays the answers to questions about Alpha written in plain English, thank heavens. Also new is $ANNOUNCE. Gives you the Fall'96 hours for the computer labs, the library, and for the Campus Recreation facilities.

Are you aware that you can use the Alpha system from your home computer? All you need is a modem, phone line, and communications software (not just fax). The dial-ups are 201/655-7580, 655-5450, and 655-5434. At the InfoServ prompt type in Alpha<enter>. If these are NOT a local call from your home, your next phone bill may be delivered in a truck.

What is the above-mentioned LYNX? It's a text-only web browser. What's a web browser? It's software (e.g., LYNX, Netscape, Mosaic, MS Explorer, Cello, etc.) that allows you to view files that are created with HTML (Hyper Text Markup Language), a type of programming code. These files can be on your floppy disk, on your hard drive, on one of the MSU servers, or anywhere else on earth. Really.

A text-only browser, such as LYNX, displays precisely that: text. The disadvantage is that there are no graphics. The advantage is speed. You get the info you need quickly, without waiting for the graphics to load on screen.

The most famous graphical browser is Netscape Navigator. It's available in the MSU computer labs, both on PCs and Macs. Created by 20-something Mark Andreessen - now a gazillionaire and deservedly so - it's absolutely the most idiot-proof, user-friendly software ever created. Let's do the crash course on Netscape. On a PC, find it in the Windows/Communications software. Double-click on its icon to open. Depending upon what lab you are in, it will open to different locations. Where it is set to open to is called the default. Just below the button bar is the word Location followed by a white box. The information typed in that box is the URL (Uniform Resource Locator), i.e., the address of where you want Netscape to go. Use the mouse to place the cursor in the box. Delete what's there and type in: http://www.whitehouse.gov<enter>.

Depending on Internet traffic, in moments you will be at the White House. Look around using the scroll bar on the right. Note the colored text. This indicates a hyperlink. When you place the cursor over hypertext it turns into a hand. Click once on any hypertext and you will go to the web site it refers to. Hyperlinks can also be icons. See the oval next to each topic? The cursor turns into a hand on those also. They are clickable. Want to go back a step (or more)? Click on the BACK button on the bar. Or FORWARD to go the other way.

The good news is that this is wonderful, fast, and easy to use. The bad news is that you can do this indefinitely and it is addictive. I'll leave you now to go my 12 Step Program meeting for Internet addiction. We hold 'em on-line, naturally. CU next week.

Public Telescope Night at MSU

by Jim Boud

PublicTelescopeNight began September 5th in front of Richardson Hall. Dr. Mary-Lou West of the MSU Physics Dept. and Mark Ivanovic of the New Jersey Astronomical Group (NJAG) met with about 15 adults and children.

Ivanovic elaborated on our solar systems largest member. Jupiter looks shiny and clear tonight in our telescope. You need a little bit larger of a scope if you want to make out Jupiter's Red Spot, but you still can see the planet with a good eyepiece. About 15 adults and children.

Looking through Galileo's brainchild, Jupiter appeared as a striped orange-yellow ball with a distinct flatness at its north pole. No Red Spot was visible, although Jupiter's three largest satellites were visible as tiny white specks. "Jupiter is so far away that it makes little difference whether it is at perihelion or aphelion (respectively, nearest and farthest position from the sun)," Ivanovic said.

Ivanovic explained that some planets such as Venus and Mars are better viewed near perihelion because the distance from the sun is shorter. (respectively; nearest and farthest position; perihelion and aphelion.) PublicTelescopeNight began September 5th in front of Richardson Hall. Dr. Mary-Lou West of the MSU Physics Dept. and Mark Ivanovic of the New Jersey Astronomical Group (NJAG) met with about 15 adults and children.

Public Telescope Night ended with a look at Vega, a bluish-white star 26 light years away. West said Vega has recently the source of keen interest to the astronomical community. "What's exciting about Vega is that it has an asteroid belt, which raises the distinct possibility that Vega could have planets," West also said that Vega could be in the process of forming planets since it is a young star.

Dear Career Services...

Q. I really like the part-time job I've had since high school. My supervisor is great, the hours are flexible, and the money is good. Why should I get a different job before I graduate?

A. Unless you're planning to pursue a career in retail management, finding a part-time job, internship, or co-op position that fits in with your post-college employment plans would be a smart thing. Convenience shouldn't be your primary consideration; rather, you should concentrate on acquiring new skills while continuing to use the skills you've developed in your current job.

Employers are looking for generalists, that is employees who are computer literate, have excellent oral and written communication skills, and are flexible team players. Since it's unlikely that you're entirely competent in all these areas, finding a part-time job that helps you acquire these skills would be to your advantage. Although the hours might not be as flexible or the salary quite as high as in your current job, gaining experience in a new work setting will pay big dividends in the future.

The Career Services office is the place to start your job search. We have hundreds of listings of currently available jobs from area employers and a computerized part-time job matching program that allows you to receive job listings by mail. You'll be doing yourself a favor.

Q. My friend showed me his resume and asked for my opinion. The first thing that struck me was that he lied about his GPA and that he had expanded his job description well beyond anything that he really does. What should I tell him?

A. It sounds as if your friend is not feeling very confident about his qualifications. He may feel that he has to lie or exaggerate on his resume in order to get his dream job. Please tell your friend to beware of this practice. Although he may think it will increase his chance of landing a great job, lying sets him up for a potential disaster.

First of all, your friend should be aware that a skillful interviewer may discover his exaggeration and that will prove to be embarrassing. Some interviewers have been trained to employ a patterned interview technique in which they intentionally ask the same questions more than once during the interview. These individuals can be quite adept at disguising such questions and spacing them throughout the interview so that they are not easily detected. The purpose of this "pattern" technique is to uncover specific inconsistencies that suggest exaggeration and embellishment. Nothing can destroy an interview faster than blatant dishonesty!

Additionally, if your friend gets through the interview process and is offered a position, he should know that companies do check college transcripts and business references and have detailed discussions with past supervisors to verify specific accomplishments. In cases where credentials are misrepresented, offers of employment are often withdrawn. Lying on a job application or resume can also be grounds for firing a later date.

Telling the truth fully and creatively is much more effective than lying. If your friend seriously wants a particular job and truly believes he can do it, I am sure that he can find evidence of ability in his background that will convince an employer to consider him for the desired position. He most likely also received skills from such activities as volunteer work, internships, and relevant courses. Misrepresenting his qualifications to a prospective employer is not worth the risk.

As many of you have noticed, Food Focus has not been featured recently in The Montclarion. This is due to the fact that a writer had not been located to take care of the tremendous task of bringing interesting nutritional information to the students of MSU.

However as this edition goes to press, I now have good news. Food Focus will return in the upcoming weeks with a new exciting writer. My prayers have been answered! Look for it soon.

I am also pleased to announce that a new section will also begin soon featuring Lisa Ertle and her experiences studying in Austria. As many of our dedicated readers might recall, Lisa was our beloved copy editor. She is definitely missed. If anyone is interested in filling her shoes, stop by Student Center Annex 113. We would love to see ya. I'd also appreciate any comments or ideas you might have for the Campus Life section. I'm pretty open-minded. Thanks!!!

The tale of the three-legged cat and an appeal to animal lovers for compassion

The purpose of this letter is to thank the students who called Campus Police and the PAWS animal shelter regarding the so-called “three-legged cat” who was living behind Blanton Hall this past spring and summer, and tell those interested parties of his fate.

I encountered this unfortunate soul hobbling around one night early in the summer semester as I walked to my car after classes. As a cat lover and animal rights activist for the past 30 years, I had to make an attempt to catch him. Unfortunately, I was unable to get near enough to him. I saw that he did indeed have all four legs, but was holding his right hind leg up because of an injury.

I began bringing food to this poor little guy the next night in an attempt to gain his trust. I named him “Braveheart” because he was such a tenacious little cat. He had some visible wounds that appeared to be bites and I wanted desperately to get him to a veterinarian.

At this time, I enlisted the help of the PAWS shelter, who loaned me a humane “Hav-a-Heart” trap and Campus Police who gave me permission to set the trap. I set the trap on a Monday, and after five days I trapped Braveheart.

I took him to Cameron Animal Hospital immediately, and after a thorough investigation, Dr. Cameron informed me that the cat had been hit by a car, bitten by a fox, had worms, had toxoplasmosis (a dangerous blood disease), and most disturbing of all, he had been neutered. This is disturbing because it tells me that he had been somebody’s pet and had been turned loose. This leads me to believe that he must have been a “dorm cat” and was dumped when a student was told not to bring him home at the end of the spring semester. Cats tend to stay close to the place where they are dumped, and as he was living behind Blanton Hall, I must come to this conclusion.

Braveheart’s prognosis is good; although his mobility is improving, he will always be crippled to some degree. The toxoplasmosis will eventually be treated and a complete recovery from that is expected.

I do have another reason for sharing this story. I wanted to take this opportunity to remind my fellow students that pet adoption is a lifelong commitment. I appeal to you to use your common sense and not adopt any pet if a lifetime commitment to that animal is not possible. It’s not fair to the animal and could cost him his life. Also, it is a violation of animal cruelty laws to turn a pet loose. If the person who dumped the little man is ever found, he will be prosecuted, fined, and could be sent to jail.

To those people who were concerned enough to call Campus Police or PAWS, I appeal to you to make a donation in Braveheart’s name to PAWS, and I thank you for showing concern for the little man. He will have a home with me for the rest of his life and will never set foot outside again, nor want for anything as long as he lives. Of course my deepest gratitude goes out to Campus Police, especially Officer Kuhn, to the PAWS animal shelter, and to Dr. Cameron for everything they’ve done and continue to do.

A brief lesson in history proves that the Dole-Kemp tax plan will work

Bob Dole and Jack Kemp have proposed a tax plan with lower rates to get the economy growing. The tax cuts include a 1 percent across the board federal tax cut, a repeal of the Clinton Social Security tax on seniors earning less than $28,000 a year, a $500 per child tax credit, and a cut of the capital gains tax cut from 28 percent to 14 percent. Critics of their proposal vary in their arguments. Some claim that it will inflate the deficit. Some say that we cannot afford it. And yet others claim we will need to cut social security and Medicare. All these critics will unfortunately mistake every tax cut as a revenue loser. However, throughout history, we have seen only positive effects of tax cuts.

In 1963, JFK urged a large tax cut. He claimed that reducing taxes would improve the economy. In the long run, Kennedy said the lower tax rates would actually produce more income for the government. He proposed a series of tax rate reductions in 1963 which led to legislation that dropped the top tax rates from 91 percent in 1963 to 70 percent in 1965, and between 1963 and 1966 tax rate reductions more than 16 percent. Kennedy said that, “Our true choice is not between tax reduction on one hand and the avoidance of federal deficits on the other. It is increasingly clear that an economy hampered by restrictive tax rates will never produce enough revenues to balance our budget just as it will never produce enough jobs or enough profits.”

President Reagan presided over two major pieces of legislation that together reduced the top tax rate from 70 percent in 1980 to 28 percent in 1988. Boosted by this large tax cut, income tax revenue increased by more than 54 percent by 1989 (28 percent after adjusting for inflation). The share of income taxes paid by the top 10 percent of wage earners climbed to 57 percent in 1988 from 48 percent in 1981. The top 1 percent saw their share of the income tax bill rise even more dramatically, to 28 percent in 1988 from 18 percent in 1981.

The imposition of higher tax rates in recent years, however, has weakened the economy. Ironically, even though tax increases in 1990 and 1993 were supposed to make the “rich” pay more, the changes have backfired. In 1991, for instance, income taxes paid by those earning more than $200,000 a year fell 6.1 percent while income taxes paid by those with lower earnings rose 1 percent.

America must adopt lower taxes in order to maintain a high level of jobs, economic growth, and opportunity. During the 1980’s, 19 million new jobs were created, and under Ronald Reagan, real family income increased 15 percent. However, family income fell under the Carter, Bush, and Clinton administrations which all were marked by periods of high taxes.

America has the lowest tax rates in the world and the highest standard of living, but the average family is paying more today than it ever has before. During the Clinton administration, tax rates increases while the average wages have declined. These statistics make it clear than we need to adopt lower taxes to ensure a prosperous America.

A pro-choice who believes in everyone’s right to choose responds to the “Native American”

I applaud you, Mr. Paternoster, for your stand on abortion. It’s nice to see someone take a stand for what he believes in.

However, I think your stand could use some adjusting so you don’t fall.

I’m pro-child, pro-family and pro-choice. I believe my choices need not be limited by others especially when it does not concern anyone outside of myself. I believe that in a democracy, choices are abundant and you as an individual – a citizen of that society – have the right to choose without restriction. I wouldn’t force my beliefs upon another because their beliefs are different from mine – that would be rape or manipulation.

That’s why I’m pro-choice. I don’t believe that just because I don’t support abortion (for whatever personal reasons) that I have the right to force others to feel the same way. As individuals and citizens of a society we act according to our own set of values and morals. However, not everyone acts the same, but this doesn’t exactly mean that a majority of people act deviant.

I believe in the human race and the human mind being capable of making compassionate, reasonable, and assertive decisions and actions. Obviously you and the majority of the Republican platform don’t believe this.

“The murder of innocent people is wrong and unacceptable in all forms, that is what the Republican platform states.” Who defines the meaning behind these words? “Innocent people” under the age of 18 aren’t truly considered people or citizens of our society until they are able to vote and be productive citizens. However, we provide weak protection to the nation’s underage possessions. We still get away with poor education, health care, malnutrition, and abuse with our “underage possessions.” The law still believes in returning these possessions to the biological abusers.

Abortion is not a cure for this, nor a reasonable form of birth control. Abortion is a medical service provided as needed. I’m not sure if I was raped, that I would want to go through with a pregnancy just because the Republicans say abortion is murder. Abortion is a private decision. Frankly, it’s none of your business or anyone else. Abortion is a medical procedure service provided by a licensed doctor to his/her patient. Rules of confidentiality establish that. If you want to change something, start by taking a stand for children’s rights and better education.

Defense of Marriage Act
defies the true pursuit of happiness to gay couples by Greg Geiger

After slavery was abolished in our country, black citizens were denied the right to marry. Allowing them to wed was construed by many as an affront to the institution of marriage. The Fourteenth Amendment rectified this demeaning position. Today, the Republicans and the Religious Right have revived this dead notion and applied it to same-gender marriage, seemingly ignoring the content of our Constitution.

The manner in which our government is handling “The Defense Of Marriage Act” (DOMA) is evidence for a deterioration of the boundaries between church and state. As passed, this bill will limit the definition of marriage to a union between a man and a woman. As federal legislation, it will override the capacity for individual states to pass judgment on the issue.

One of the purposes of the government is to protect the rights of the individual, regardless of race, color, creed, gender, and so forth. Ideally, all people are considered equal in the eyes of the law. Marriage, as a secular institution, is a union between two individuals that has economic and medical ramifications, including line of inheritance and visitation rights in hospitals. Traditionally the government’s only concern for acceptance of a marital request was that the two individuals were single consenting adults. Consequently, on this secular level, DOMA is unconstitutional. It denies the right of the individual the ability to marry whom they wish. It chooses one group of people to reap the benefits from the institution while denying the other access.

Proposal of DOMA is against the Republican’s traditional platform of small government. They are wasting hours upon hours of legislative time to enact a bill that will prevent individual state decisions. DOMA will neither pay our deficit nor end strife in Eastern Europe.

If Constitutionally there is no efficacy to this legislation and it contradicts one of the tenets of the party which has sponsored it and it fails to have any effect on the real problems facing our country, why are the Republicans wasting their time (and ours) with their proposal? The answer lies in the reality that the primary reason for their succession to a majority position in Congress is that a large part of their voting constituency is made up by members and supporters of groups such as the Christian Coalition. Like any party within the American democratic system, the Republicans have to cater to those who pay their bills.

The Religious Right is using its tax-free dollars to imprint their theological tenets upon the American legislative structure. The Religious Right does not hold a monopoly on religio-social thought as it hopes to. Many Episcopal Churches, some Reformed Jewish Synagogues, as well as the Lutheran and Unitarian Universalist faiths, condone and perform same-gender marriage. However, these more liberal faiths do not have the organized political machine that the conservative faiths do.

The division between church and state dissolves when the government fails to discern how far it can stray from the basic philosophy of the written law that governs our nation. “The pursuit of happiness” implies a nation that allows the individual to strive for personal fulfillment as long as that path does not impinge on the rights of others. If it harms none, do what you will.

God and space oddities
by Nelson Alonso

Over the summer, there was much excitement caused by the discovery that life exists or has existed on Mars. Though I am convinced that the origin of life defies a naturalistic explanation, I was not surprised that life, or the remains of life, has been discovered on Mars. My reason has nothing to do with spontaneous generation. It has everything to do with Mars’ proximity to Earth.

In 1989, on ABC’s “Nightline” with Ted Koppel, two astronomers and a science journalist declared that the discovery of life on Mars would provide virtual proof that life does indeed originate and evolve quite easily by natural processes. Such a finding would suggest that life is abundant throughout our universe because of spontaneous generation.

However, the remains, at least, of many microorganisms are likely to be found on Mars for no other reason than that Mars is only thirty-five-million miles away from Earth. Solar wind is capable of wafting tiny life forms outward through the solar system and perhaps beyond. In the laboratory, several microbial species can survive in the vacuum conditions of space for long periods of time. Especially if they are protected by graphite. Meteorites large enough to make a crater greater than 60 miles across will cause Earth rocks to escape Earth’s gravity. Out of 1,000 such rocks ejected, 291 strike Venus, 20 go to Mercury, 17 hit Mars, 14 make it to Jupiter, and 1 goes all the way to Saturn. Traveling the distance with these rocks will be many varieties of Earth life.

The discovery of life and creatures perhaps as large as nematodes on Mars, a discovery we can expect as technology advances, will probably be touted as proof of a naturalistic evolution. But in truth it proves nothing of the kind. It will prove something, however, about the amazing vitality of what God created.

One issue that will last longer than the presidential campaign
by Angela Daidone

At a time when political arenas are bustling at the seams, when caricatures of “the true voice of the people” don their elephant and donkey costumes, it’s so sad to find that pushed into a little corner of the newspaper somewhat in the tragic story of Samuel Graham. For those of you who missed it, and turned to the campaign update instead, this twelve year old Ft. Lauderdale, Florida youngster hanged himself rather than face another day of humiliation for his obesity. However, the details are meaningless at this point.

Will the Samuel Grahams of the world, and other taunted young people, now be spared verbal ridicule as a result of this tragic suicide? Will any lessons be learned so as to change our perspective on extending common decency towards our fellow human beings, no matter their appearance? Or will this be soon dismissed as a shame, and forgotten about until the next unthinkable situation arises?

I think the latter might be true, although I am sick about admitting it. How can we expect otherwise when we are bombarded with “stay trim, look beautiful, dress for success, outdo the other guy” thinking day after day? The “beautiful people” in today’s society serve as sensationalized models for our children to emulate. They are the success stories we dangle in front of our children’s noses like carrots. And why not? Don’t we, as parents, want the best for them? Of course we do, but at what price? Even to the extreme point of no return? It’s become a double-edged sword.

I’ve heard for a long time that children can be cruel when it comes to dealing with their peers, but I disagree. They had to have learned it from somewhere, heard it from someone. Children are not born into this world inherently mean-spirited, so I don’t buy that argument.

We are so busy trying to get ahead, stay in front, and care for number one that we have all but forgotten the basic rules of humanity. First, love your neighbor as yourself. Second, do unto others as you would have them do unto you. And if that doesn’t say enough, we might add rule number three: for best results, install the first two rules into the hearts of your children.

If one child discoversthe rewards of treating others with respect it will be a start, but only a drop in the bucket. It is up to us, the parents, to make this a priority in our own and our children’s lives. Help of helpful hints. I hope we can do it. And I pray that the family of young Samuel Graham will find peace somehow.
The following is the true journal of two Republican editorial writers and the visit of Vice-President Al Gore.

Monday, September 9
12:00 p.m. Joe hears from Chuck Feiner that Al Gore will be on campus to speak on Wednesday.
12:05 p.m. Joe calls Jean-Marie to tell her the news.
5:00 p.m. The news hits the Montclarion office, but we can't get any confirmation on the details until later that night via announcements in Blanton Hall.

Tuesday, September 10
11:00 a.m. We meet to get tickets for the event. After being asked by an anonymous woman if she would like to hand out Clinton/Gore signs, Jean-Marie replies, "I'd rather rot in Hell."
2:20 p.m. We get the notion to call the Dole/Kemp headquarters to get some signs. After a dozen phone calls, we find a place to get them. Tom Tracy (our fearless Editor-in-Chief) tells us that if we're going to have the signs, he fears for his life and will sit somewhere far away from us. We love him anyway.
8:00 p.m. After an hour of driving, Joe and friends find the Dole/Kemp headquarters. They pick up the signs from the thriled chairwoman who is happy to know that college students are getting involved.
10:00 p.m. We distribute the signs and get ready for a fun and exciting rally. Jean-Marie's friends start to call her room and make jokes about the Secret Service guys taking her Dole signs away and removing her from the amphitheater.

Wednesday, September 11
8:30 a.m. Joe and Jean-Marie meet up to look for the Montclarion staff, who is nowhere to be found. We receive directions to go 15 different ways to get on line.
9:30 a.m. After an hour of wandering, we finally find the head of the line in the bowels of College Hall. We also find the rest of the Montclarion staff there.
10:30 a.m. The line runs half the length of the building. A Democrat on line behind us strikes up a conversation with Joe. After a few minutes of talk, the Democrat realizes that he cannot change Joe's mind and suggests to people around us that they sacrifice the two Republicans to the "line gods" so that the line might move a little faster.
PS. Democrats in line are pushing and fighting each other. We thought that this was the party of unity.
11:30 a.m. The line finally moves. We find our seats - fourth row, dead center. We place our signs on the ground in front of us.
11:40 a.m. Julie, (who we now find out is a White House staffer and the woman that Jean-Marie made the "hell" comment to yesterday) tells us that she has to confiscate our signs. When we ask why, she informs Jean-Marie that, "You're very rude. We're glad that you're politically active, but you can only use signs that were made at the sign-making party...you had the opportunity to do that last night." However, we (nor anyone we knew) had heard of or been invited to that party. After we mentioned a thing called the First Amendment, she continued by telling us that, "And besides, you'd be right in the shot of the camera." Joe informed her that some Toricelli supporters had campaign signs that were clearly not made at the aforementioned party. She quickly told us, "Oh, just forget it. How did you get a blue ticket anyway?" After a bit more bantering, she gave up, but was promptly followed by a real-life Secret Service agent who runs by us and steals our signs.
12:00 p.m. More brave young Republicans join us. They brought more signs, and (unbeknownst to them) someone who we later learned was from the Sheriff's office. He informs us, "You might want to put those signs away before the Secret Service comes to take you away."
12:10 p.m. An anonymous MSU employee says to our group (who has been making a conscious effort to keep a low profile) "Why don't you go over there [points to exit] and make a spectacle of yourself?" When asked how we were a spectacle, she ignores us. Another employee sitting nearby offers some choice words that were not appropriate to print here.
12:15 p.m. One member of our group stands to stretch, and another anonymous campaign thug stands in the place he was sitting and informs him that he will remain there, "unless you give me those signs." Jean-Marie inquires (in her best airhead voice) "Why can't we have the signs?" The thug informs her, "You can have free speech, as long as its not on TV. You can have whatever you want, honey." Jean-Marie advises him not to call her "honey".
12:30 p.m. We notice that our old pal Julie is conversing with another Secret Service agent and pointing towards us. Moments later, an earth-flag bearer is assigned to hang a flag over us. He states, "I'm just taking orders. I'm supposed to wave this flag over these Republicans."
12:35 p.m. Comedian Richard Lewis says the Democrats are, "not like the other party who, if somebody disents from them, they put them five blocks away." We all get a good chuckle from that.

12:40 p.m. President Reid states that there was a quote from Al Gore that he really enjoyed. He read, "When you have the facts on your side, argue the facts. When you have the law on your side, argue the law. When you have neither, holler." We would like to add, "...or send your thugs after the opposition."

Mayor Cardell Cooper of East Orange then took the stand and stated, "This tent is wide enough for all Americans to fit under." Unfortunately, it must be a pop-tent.
1:15 p.m. The vice-president takes the podium and the gentleman from the Sheriff's office leaves over to us and threatens, "One minute of foolishness can cost you your careers." To this point, we have not stood up, chanted anything, or even held up our signs. Jean-Marie then inquires about her First Amendment rights, and the sheriff-guy tells her, "What you're doing is illegal. You can't yell 'Fire!' in a crowded theater." Jean-Marie tells him that this is not a crowded theater but an opportunity to incite revolution. In the meantime, another open-minded liberal member of the MSU campus community informs a female member of our group that he would like to, "Kick your a onto the sidewalk."

During the course of the vice-president's speech, we hold up our signs only when the Clinton/Gore supporters hold up theirs. Our signs are either forcefully taken, ripped, or covered by the earth-flag. At this time, we are also subjected to more rude comments (all unprintable) by fellow members of our campus community.

After the Vice President finishes his speech, Joe asks the sheriff-guy if he feels good about terrorizing a bunch of college kids. He responds by saying that we were "annoying," but rather than be specific, he walked away.

While this whole episode was exciting and may sound funny and unbelievable, it is a serious one. The Democratic Party (and liberals in general) champion themselves as defenders of the First Amendment, but the vice-president's visit told a different story. Private property was stolen, free speech rights and the right to peaceably assemble were discarded, and young people were harassed and threatened - all from the compassionate, open-minded Democratic Party.

We are very disheartened to see that our worst fears about the Democrats have been proven to be true. Conservatives and Republicans do not want a world where everyone thinks, talks, and acts the same. We welcome an honest debate about the issues, and though we may disagree, we still believe that everyone is entitled to common decency. Unfortunately, this is not what the Democrats want. If it is, why would they have harassed, stolen from, and threatened a bunch of young Republicans? When you go to the ballot box this November to vote, please take into account what kind of world you want in the 21st century. If it is the kind where everyone must agree on everything, then vote Clinton/Gore. Fortunately, we believe that the American people support freedom, and will vote for Bob Dole and Jack Kemp.
Brush with New Mexico, Worthy of the Land of Enchantment

By Erin Perry

On September 2nd, MSU’s Gallery One opened its fall semester featuring Rose Mandala’s Brush with New Mexico. Inspired by her trip to Albuquerque with her husband, Charlie, in 1993, Mandala’s 17-piece exhibit captures the atmosphere and mystical characteristics of an entire state with originality and accuracy.

The artist’s favorite painting, Windows of Antiquity, done with acrylics, recreates the windows of a building in a Pueblo village. This impressionistic painting illustrates Native American tradition of decor of the Acoma Indians. Mandala explained to me that the people garnish their windows with a bow and arrow. Then they paint turquoise around the frame to ward off evil spirits. This unique painting was best described by my friend, Bridget, who said, “I wanna take this one home with me.” I did too. A larger view of the village can be seen in Mandala’s Pueblo of Acoma “Sky City,” which is also done in acrylics.

Mandala paints vivid reflections of New Mexican architecture in her representation of the State Art Museum (watercolors) and the San Miguel Mission (acrylics) with playful ease. Prickly Pears “Fruits of the Cactus” (acrylics) and Tumbleweed (acrylics) feature western vegetation of the desert where Mandala has put her notepad and subnose pistol. No brain has ever figured out who fitted Rogers for a harp and a pair of wings. Her one daughter Phoebe Mather, whose spelling was left spinning in the Seine. We see Mary Rogers being described as a (sic) femme sole when the correct term is femme sole (woman who has to go it alone). All things aside, The Mysterious Death Of Mary Rogers is a book in a class by itself. Srebnick’s work will give you an indelibly tart taste of early 19th century Gotham. That is to say, you are bound to go away feeling as if you really lived there in a previous life.

The only downside to The Mysterious Death of Mary Rogers is its 2020 depiction of 1840s life. For example, you’ll learn first hand just how sensationalist the early 19th century press was, how prostitution had the entire city in its grip, and how crime and public safety was even a major concern back then. You also learn how the Rogers case spurred reforms in police procedure and brought about anti-abortion legislation.

Moreover, I really fancied the feel of Srebnick’s sparkle. It flows better than a fine-misted mug of frothy, foaming root beer. It’s perfumed with a heady aroma of antiquity, which is further enhanced by old-style illustrations. You can sense the yeast of yesteryear fermenting between the lines.

All Day & All Nite

Seeing a band perform live is probably one of the greatest thrills for any music lover and I am no exception. In fact, I am a concert junkie. I live for music and I am no exception. In fact, I am a concert junkie. I live for music.

I decided to go to my first festival. It seems some hick named, R.K. Rooney holds an annual Bluegrass festival on his mountain. For forty dollars you can camp out for the entire weekend. (I was camping alone with seven guys but that's another story in itself.) Traveling with Pat's intuitive sense of direction, we made our way to Deposit, N.Y. for the 20th Anniversary of "Rooney Fest '96." I knew I was in for a crazy time when I saw the festival's bumpersticker: Leavin' 'Till We're Heavin'!

I was right.

When my wacky friend Steve called and said, "Erin, there's gonna be dudes playing washboards and fiddles," I decided to go to my first festival.

It was tough for me, the poor college student and the show is only one act, sixty minutes running time. So basically, we are talking about a dollar a minute to see Al in a theater that seats around 600 people. Sounds crazy, huh? Well, obsession wins out over money any day. With little funds left, we had to take the bus to New York. After some help from a new friend, Andy, we finally made it to the Circle in the Square Theater. It was worth enduring the "bus smell" and every dollar we paid for our golden tickets because our seats were awesome.

I have to say it, Al Pacino is the play. Hughie, originally intended by O'Neill to be part of an eight play collection of monologues entitled, "By Way of Obit," is a one man show. Pacino, who also directs Hughie, plays the compulsive gambler, Erie Smith, complete with a straw hat and two-tone shoes. The entire play is composed of the cathartic ramblings of the crapshooting Erie to a hotel night clerk, played by Paul Benedict. O'Neill originally had written Benedict's part as non-speaking but under Pacino's direction the clerk's scattered thoughts are presented in an ominous voice-over.

Taking place in the late 1920's, the duration of the play occurs in the lobby of a hotel in Times Square, where ErieMy only real criticism was the length of the play which seemed rushed at times. However, the best part of the play, for a Pacino lover, is after the show. Bridget and I hung around the back door for a glimpse of our hero. Fighting the crowds got to be too much, so we decided to climb a tree. When Pacino emerged, Yankees cap and all, I yelled, "Hey Al! We're in the tree!" Then I almost fell out of the tree when he made eye contact with me and smiled. I actually felt it in my toes. It was too cool.

So if you are among the many who are tormented with the "Pacino Plague" give Hughie a try. Even if you hate the play, at least you'll have the opportunity to see the man up close and maybe you'll even get a grin that will last a lifetime.

Pacino is a One Man Show
by Erin Perry

Al Pacino, yesss even his name is so cool. Yes, I can admit it, I am a drooling Al Pacino fan. So when my friend, Bridget (who is a bigger fan, almost certifiable) and I heard that Al was starring on Broadway in Eugene O'Neill's play, Hughie, we decided we HAD to see him perform live.

The tickets were $60 a piece, (which was tough for me, the poor college student) and the show is only one act, sixty minutes running time. So basically, we are talking about a dollar a minute to see Al in a theater that seats around 600 people. Sounds crazy, huh? Well, obsession wins out over money any day. Cabbage Predicts End of World Calamity if Not Elected by Tom Jones

"Earthquakes will erupt around world unless the Cabbage is President," declared sleazy campaign manager John J. O'Sullivan. O'Sullivan, who is ardently trying to get a head of cabbage (namely "Fred" the head of cabbage) elected as President of the United States appeared at a Vegetable Cynic's Party Rally near Vice President Al Gore's Rally. O'Sullivan, who channels mysterious psychic energies from the cabbage, told of huge calamities. He told the small crowd of onlookers the terrors that will happen if "Fred" isn't elected. "A volcano will split New York City into two, airplanes will blow up in tune to the '1812' Overture, anvils will fall from the skies—and let us not even mention the 'Dole Alien Invasion Force'. You must elect 'Fred'—he is your only hope!"

When asked about the authenticity of these "psychic channelings", O'Sullivan yelled and spat at the crowd. "You ingrates! You fools! You total no-brains! You shall pay!" Campus police took him away as he writhed and as he foamed at the mouth. While he struggled to stay out of the police car, cabbage in hand, he babbled in a strange foreign language, which "Fred" supporters claim to be a New-Age Psychic Trance™. They towed his car away as he struggled to stay out of the police car, cabbage in hand, he babbled in a strange foreign language, which "Fred" supporters claim to be a New-Age Psychic Trance™. They towed his car away as he writhed and as he foamed at the mouth.

Coach Chesney looks for third trip to NCAA Tournament

By Billy Costain

On September 4th, the Montclair State men's soccer team started off their 1996 season with a bang by shutting out NJIT 2-0. Montclair State was led by fine performances from junior goalkeeper Seth Korman and sophomore midfielder Scott Pohlman who not only scored MSU's first goal, but also assisted on the second goal. Rob McNamish, a senior defender who scored the second goal, offered an offensive dimension to help the team in striving towards another winning season.

Under head coach Rob Chesney, the all-time winningest coach in the history of Montclair State, who has twice been recognized by the Collegiate Soccer Association of New Jersey as "Coach of the Year", MSU has compiled an impressive 66-32-3 record. Even more astonishing than his five year record was the immediate impact that he brought to the team in 1991. Over his first two seasons, his Red Hawk teams compiled a massive 29-9-5 record to their way to two straight trips to the NCAA tournament.

This season, the Red Hawks look to capture their 30th all-time victory with the teamwork of nine returning starters from the 1995 season, which unfortunately ended with a 3-0 loss to the number one seeded Kean Cougars in the ECAC championships. The Red Hawks will look to avenge the loss when they meet the Cougars on September 25 at Kean's home field in Union, New Jersey.

This past Saturday, MSU brought their 1-0 record into the Rowan College Tournament coming off their uplifting victory over NJIT earlier in the week. In the second game of the tournament, Montclair State fell to Ithaca College of New York by a final score of 2-1, with the Red Hawks only goal coming off the foot of sophomore standout Sebastian DiBello on his third shot of the contest. If the Red Hawks are to be successful this year, they will need DiBello to surpass his tremendous freshman season in which he was named NJAC's Rookie of the Year. In 1995, Sebastian led the team with 11 goals, a record for goals in a season by a freshman. He also led the team in assists and points, with 10 and 32, respectively.

The team will also look to returning players Ian Myles, Rich Meyer, Jim Gelpke, Marlon Pollard, and Mario Lukin for help in reaching their potential for the season.

In the words of head coach Rob Chesney, "The 1996 season looks to be one of the most promising in Montclair's history, and the team is determined to be in the challenge for the conference championship and the NCAA tournament."

Women's Tennis team aiming for perfection this year

By Dennis L. DeMercurio

"A major accomplishment for our program would be to upset one of the top three schools on our schedule this season." That was the goal for the 1995 Women's Tennis Program at Montclair State according to coach Brian McLaughlin. Coming off a 7-3 season in '94, the Red Hawks were looking to improve that season, and they accomplished even more, finishing 10-1.

Paige Fuller, who finished first last season, returns this year as an assistant coach. Filling in her position will be Jenna Switzer, who has transferred from Syracuse University.

Also returning is Sophomore Christina Jakober and Senior Wendy Saladino, who finished second and third, respectively. For a program that was nearly terminated, Coach McLaughlin has brought new life to the team.

In fact, the varsity team is so strong that two of the players, Junior Jessica Carotenuto and Senior Sharon Scott, play on the Junior Varsity as well. This is also the second year in which the team has been invited to the Rolex Tournament to be held at The College of New Jersey.

Jen Kolodziej, JV coach, had this to say: "I look forward to Jessica and Sharon to add strength and leadership to the JV line-up. Sophomore Jen Jemas and Junior Stacey Dowling come to every practice with positive attitudes and are constantly working to improve their games."

About Nicole Fredericks, a freshman who edged out other upperclassmen for a spot on the varsity team, Kolodziej said, "She, too, has a great attitude. I think it's the lack of fear, the confidence she has in herself to play on a varsity level, being just a freshman, that I admire about her. She has the potential to move up."

Also adding their talents to the team are exchange students Dayana Soudin, from Switzerland and Milagros Urbina, from Peru.

The Red Hawks' next home game is Tuesday, September 11th, against Ramapo College at 3:00pm.
Women’s Field Hockey and Lacrosse have new full-time coach

By Dawn DeKosko and Jeff Ehrlich

Under new head coach Andrea Whitcomb, the MSU field hockey team has set many goals for the 1996 season, one of which is to score in every contest this year. In the first game of the season, on Thursday September 5th, the Red Hawks fell to Sacred Heart 5-1. Contributing an all-around effort and scoring the lone goal for MSU was sophomore Kristen Eiselle. Taking over a team with a 3-13 record last season, coach Whitcomb, who comes to MSU after holding the assistant field hockey coaching position at Smith College in Massachusetts, hopes to start a winning tradition for the Red Hawk field hockey team. This week the Red Hawks participate in the Vassar Tournament on Saturday and Sunday September 14th and 15th at 1:00 p.m.

Whitcomb, with a B.A. from Cortland State and a masters degree in women’s collegiate coaching from Smith College, was named the university’s first full-time field hockey coach on September 3rd, 1996. She has also been an assistant women’s basketball coach at Mt. Holyoke and Amherst Colleges. This is her first head coaching position. In addition to her duties as the head field hockey coach, she will also be the women’s lacrosse coach in the spring.

Says Whitcomb, “I’m really excited about both programs and the upcoming schedules. I look forward to using the turf and lighted field as a recruiting tool. I think it’s an ideal position for any coach because expectations are not enormously high as of yet. With Montclair’s reputation in athletics, the challenge is bringing the program to that level is very exciting.”

Men’s and Women’s Cross Country take first at meet

The Montclair State men’s and women’s cross country teams both finished in first place this past weekend in the MSU invitational, finishing with 23 and 31 points respectively. Leading the team for the men was senior Scott Patterson who broke his own course record from last year finishing in 26:46.0. For the women, Cathy Grosvenor finished 2:31 in front of the second place finisher with a time of 20:36.0. This week the Red Hawks travel to Fordham University for a meet on Saturday September 14th and 15th at 1:00 p.m.

Giancola says, “Success is nothing more than surrounding yourself with good people. I am very fortunate to have had everyone around me.”

Giancola also has an impressive record as an assistant coach, his offenses having averaged over 300 yards per game. He runs an offense with many sophisticated running plays, so look for MSU to continue their successful ground game.

Bill Johnson, also entering his fourteenth season under Giancola, is the defensive coordinator. Very vocal and animated on the sidelines, he coaches an aggressive defense that is consistently ranked among the top teams of the NJAC in fewest yards allowed. He is an excellent evaluator of talent of both his own players and among high school athletes.

Because of his vocal style, his leadership qualities are always a big part of the defense’s success.

At the ex-Washington Redskins coach George Allen once said, “Winning can be defined as the science of being totally prepared.” This team of coaches for MSU football would certainly agree.
Are you a football fan?

by Dennis L. DeMercurio

Do you like football or do you love it? Are you a football fan? What’s the difference you ask? Simple. Those who like football know the rules of the game. They follow their favorite team. They know who the starters are on their own team, and maybe some of the more famous players on other teams.

Fans (short for FANATICS, by the way) are those you see at the outdoor stadiums in the winter, bare-vested, body painted in team colors or wearing a costume in effigy of their franchise. These fans believe their team is going to the Super Bowl every year, no matter how bad the team usually is. (Hello, Jet fans) But, the most admirable quality of the fan is that they truly believe their team will make it into January. They never give up hope. (Hello again, Jet fans)

And then there are those who love the game. These individuals try their best to know everyone and everything about the game. They know the penalty before the referee announces the call. They can tell you not only the starting players on every team, but who plays 2nd, 3rd, and 4th in each position. Lovers of the game also work the numbers. Who has the most yards? How many touchdowns? What is the average yards per carry for a running back? Who has the most yards per catch? Those who love the game not only follow their own team with passion, but have great admiration and respect for those players on opposing teams as well.

Now I’m not saying that if you don’t follow the stats, you don’t love football. What I mean is that there is a love for the game itself. Those who like it, love it, and fans of the game know. The excitement. The passion. Feel the Power.

Shots go over the head of MSU’s goalkeeper and the goal came about two minutes into the contest when an intended lob pass went out. Freshmen Dania Ramirez, Sylvia Lehmann, and Merideth Redner helped the RedHawks win 15-11.

In match four, it was MSU showing signs of fatigue. Again, it was Gheilerman and Cerroto dominating the play for Rowan. Zaida Polanco, Edithe Lubion, Nadion Burton, all juniors, helped revive the team for a strong comeback from 11-6 late in the match. It was too late, however, as Rowan went on to win 15-11.

With the series tied 2-2, the fifth game would be played by “rally” scoring. This means (as I also learned) that there would be no more side-outs. Points would be given instead. Therefore, a team would score with a successful volley, whether they were serving or not.

Starting from behind, MSU soon advanced past Rowan with steady serving by Sophomore Christina Barnett. K. Gastelu and Koshy added to the scoring with perfect sets by Sophomore Daria LaConte. As the tension mounted, members of the football and soccer teams who had begun trickling in during the fourth match, helped create an atmosphere of excitement usually found at professional athletic play-off games.

I watched as the parents cheered their daughters on as while Head Coach Sandy Sanchez-Lombeyda and Assistant Coach Henry Martinez advised their players on the court. Burton brought MSU back from a seven point deficit to lead 11-10. After a brief time-out, the RedHawks went on to victory.

After the game, I spoke with Coach Sanchez-Lombeyda and asked her about how she felt about the team this year:

“We’re very lucky to have a young team (only one senior), and very talented, too.”

Women’s soccer opens with win

By Billy Castalino

On Saturday, September 7, MSU’s Women’s Soccer Team coached by Pamela Barboto, and two sport athlete Victoria Zolotaryov, Kristen Slivka, Pamela Barboto, and two sport athlete Manager Jill Gastelu. Gastelu, gaining a 5-1 lead, causing Rowan to take an early time-out. Rowan’s Jane Gheilerman came back blasting her serves. MSU’s backfield of freshmen Rene Farley and Porscha Chambers, lead by last year’s Defensive Player of the Year Lauren Mazurkiewicz, volleayed every shot. The RedHawks held the lead and won the match with a stunning block by sophomore Jill Gastelu.

The second match saw Rowan’s Sara Cerrato emerge as a formidable spiker to give MSU a run for their money. With

by Jeff Ulrich

MSU head football coach Rick Giancola would feel much better about turning fifty later this week with a win under his belt on Saturday. The RedHawks play Cortland State at 1:30 p.m. at Sprague Field. Giancola is entering his fourteenth season as the head coach. As assistant coach for five years prior to becoming head coach, this will be his nineteenth season overall on the sidelines of the gridiron at Montclair State. Giancola has an extremely successful record as head coach. His overall record is 91-41-2 for a winning percentage of .687. Giancola has 75% of those games. Giancola has proven to be an impressive coach. He is considered a players’ coach, one who is driven to get the most out of his men. He gives his team the credit they deserve for a win, yet will assume responsibility for a loss. Giancola holds his players and the university in high esteem. He shows them tremendous
