AFT Reaches Tentative Contract Settlement

AFT Provides Professors with 14.5 Percent Increases Over Four Years

The American Federation of Teachers (AFT) has reached a tentative agreement with the state of New Jersey on their 1999-2003 contracts, said Dr. Catherine Becker, President of AFT Local 1904.

A strike authorization vote of Local 1904, originally scheduled for Sept. 14-16, was cancelled due to progress in negotiations after a contract proposal was issued by the state last week.

"The devil is in the details, but the devil can turn into an angel," said Becker on the tentative contract.

"People need to really read the fine print. On a scale of zero to 10, this contract, in my estimation, is a six," she said.

The tentative contract with the AFT provides professors with 14.5 percent in across-the-board salary increases over four years. Employees of the AFT will receive 2.5 percent in increases in Fiscal Year 1999, followed by increases of 3.5 percent in FY2000, 4 percent in FY2001 and 4.5 percent in FY2002.

AFT professors received a total of 6 percent in across-the-board salary increases over the five years of their previous contract, which spanned from July 1, 1995 to June 30, 1999.

The union asked for an eight percent across-the-board salary increase at the beginning of each year (40 percent in five years) in a list of bargaining demands given to the state in March by the Council of New Jersey State College Locals (CNJSCL).

In addition, the tentative contract provides for increases in overload compensation, alterations in health benefits, and the formation of a committee on the intellectual rights of professors. Associate and full professors making $775 in overload compensation in FY1999 are slated to make $825 in FY2000 and $800 in FY2002. Assistants professors, librarians and professional staff members received two overload step increases, going from $675 in FY1999 to $725 in FY2000 and $750 in FY2002.

Instructors making $625 in FY1999 are now gauged on the level of assistant professors.

AFT members will tentatively receive free NJ PLUS healthcare. HMO enrollees will now pay 5 percent of the cost.

52 Parking Violators Towed and Ticketed

By Alex Vallejo

From Sept. 12 to the 20, campus cars have been towed due to violations of the new MSU policy, said Lt. Cell of the MSU police.

According to the newly implemented MSU parking rules, any vehicle parked in any lot except lot 27 (for Clove residents) and lot 28, after 2 a.m. will be towed. Of the 52 cars that were towed within a week, 40 cars were from lot 28 and 12 cars were from lots 20-23.

MSU has contracts with two towing companies; Sam's Garage, located on Watchung Ave., and Roache's Towing Inc., located on Bloomfield Ave. Sam's Garage will charge $15 for each additional day that the car stays there.

Letters were mailed out to residents before the start of the semester informing students about the new parking rules, said Dr. Karen Pennington, Vice President for Student Development and Campus Life Students. They were also given a two week "grace period" at the beginning of the semester. During those two weeks, no cars were towed. In addition, fliers and signs were posted throughout the residence halls and announcements were made.

In an attempt to tighten security, MSU police has a marked car stationed in lot 28, and if you feel unsafe and would like to be escorted call police headquarters and ask to be escorted to the main campus.

"We are really trying to work and help students," said Cell. MSU police offers a free self-defense course. It takes place every Monday night from 6:30-8 p.m. in Kopens Lounge, Rous Hall. The class began last week and classes will run regularly until Nov. 8.

Lt. Cell said the MSU police, "supports fully" the administration's parking decision.

Lot 28 Rule Suspended on Weekends

By Nick Clunn

Resident students who have been forced to take a school bus to their parked cars, will not have to do so during weekends.

Starting tomorrow afternoon residents will be allowed to park in lot 19 after Karen Pennington, Vice President for Student Development and Campus Life, finalized plans with University Police, yesterday.

All students are not guaranteed weekend parking at the upper lot, however, since there are only 50 spaces there, Pennington said.

Those who are shut out of the lot behind Blanton Hall will be required to park in lot 28. Shuttle buses stopping there will still follow the current weekend schedule.

Any car parked in other lots besides 19 and 28 between 4 p.m. Friday and 2 a.m. Monday will be ticketed and towed, Pennington said.

"This is a trial," Pennington said. "If it is abused then we'll have to go back to parking only in lot 28."

New parking decals will be distributed this week to resident students. Pennington said. They will differ in color from all other decals to make enforcement easier.

Earthquake Shakes Taiwan; Death Toll Passes 2,000 Mark

By Christina Spatz

Assistant News Editor

At 1:47a.m. Monday morning an earthquake with a magnitude of 7.6 hit Taiwan, centering on Nantou county. Since then, three aftershocks and more than 2,000 others have shaken Taiwan. The three hardest hitting after-shocks took place on Wednesday morning, the first registering a magnitude of 6.8 and the second and third registering magnitudes of 6.1 and 6.0 respectively. This left Taiwanese citizens running for their lives and rescuers with even more difficult task. Nantou, located 90 miles south-west of the capital, Taipei, received serious damages from the 7.6 magnitude earthquake that hit. The three aftershocks all caused large-scale mudslides, along with cracks in the Sun Moon Lake Reservoir, which is one of the largest on the whole island.

Rescue efforts declared that the death toll exceeded the 2,000 mark with more than 5,000 additional people injured, and over 100,000 left homeless. In addition, the rescue members also said that they estimated a number of around 3,000 bodies still trapped under the rubble. Most of these victims have been found in the central city of Taichung and the area surrounding Nantou.

"We're pulling the dead out one by one, but it's hard to get an overall picture of the fatalities," said the rescue official for the central city of Fengyuan, Chen Wen-hsien.

Government spokesman Chen Chien-jen reported that $90 million had been allocated for immediate disaster relief, mostly for the worst-hit counties.

"After 30 hours we realized casualties were much greater than we thought. We were prepared, but more could have been done," Chen-jen said. He said some buildings were defective and "those responsible should be investigated." Idaho's governor, Dirk Kempthorne, was present in Taiwan as the head of a trade delegation. He was on the top floor of the Grand Hyatt Regency Hotel when Taiwan was struck by the quake.

"Many, many people are feeling emotionally sickened by this...this was absolutely the most violent thing imaginable," said Kempthorne.

As the rubble clears and the search goes on, the number of dead and injured continues to rise.

History of Contract Problems

The老师们' contract is not a new problem for the American Federation of Teachers (AFT). In October, 1973, negotiations have been ongoing since the expiration of the contract in June. Contract negotiations broke off between union representatives of state college teachers and the Department of Higher Education. The NJ State Federation of Teachers (NSJFT) decided that if no agreement was met in about a month, the union would call for a strike vote.

The union and the state both agreed that progress was not being made. The state had refused to "discuss salary issues and won't move on key issues," said Robert Barretes, AFT national representative and chief negotiator.

The director of state employee relations, Frank Mason, said that it was not the state stalling negotiations, but the union. He said they were being unrealistic and selfish to the state and students. In November, 1973, a vote to strike was postponed because the mediator was unfamiliar with the conflicts, and because the teachers desired to wait on the results of an upcoming meeting.

The New Jersey Student Association (NJSJA) was making an effort to "pressure the Board of Higher Education and the AFT to hold meetings and come to a decision," said current SGA president Angelo Genova.

Conflict between the state and AFT occurred in the fall of 1995. After contracts expired in June, the AFT and the Committee of America (CWA) protested outside the Student Center, for fair contracts. The contract denied the cost of living increase, reduction of health benefits, and lowering the standard of basic working conditions, which would replace the election of department chairs with administrative appointments.

The teachers did initiate a strike vote in the spring, said Joan Ficke Internal Vice-President of Affairs for the AFT and President of Local 1904, but there was no strike date set.
Women’s Studies Major to be Implemented in Fall 2000

A MAJOR STEP FORWARD FOR FEMINISM: Professor Linda Gould Levine, director of the new Women's Studies Major.

By Yasemin Tuncuint
Staff Writer

The Women's Studies minor has been approved to become a major by the Board of Trustees at their meeting on Sept. 9. It is expected to be in effect by fall of 2000, said Professor Linda Gould Levine, director of Women's Studies.

The proposal for the Women's Studies major will be circulated among members of the New Program Review Committee and the Presidents' Council, including the presidents' of local state colleges. It has to be approved by them before going in effect at MSU, but Levine is confident and expects approval by them before going into effect at MSU.

According the the program announcement from the Women's Studies department, one of the seven objectives of the program is “to provide students with a knowledge of the history and evolution of feminist theory and practice; to situate Women's Studies within a cross-cultural context and to enhance students' comprehension and awareness of issues affecting women in different cultural, religious, ethnic, economic, and class settings.”

The core courses for the new major also include the following: Women’s Worlds, Feminist Theory, Women’s Studies, and Seminar in Women’s Studies. There will be 12 credits of required courses in total. Students can also choose seven electives (totaling 21 credits). Among the classes of the Women's Studies Electives are: Anthropology of Women, Women in Art, Special Topics: Black and White Women Writers, The Novels of Toni Morrison, Women in America, Women and the Novel, Women in Music, The Economics of Women, Women in Art, Special Topics: Women in Art, Women in Mathematics, Women in Science, Women in Technology, Women in Education, Women in Medicine, Women in Religion, Women in Sports, Women in Business, Women in Politics, and more.

Paid Students Set to Gauge New Shuttle Bus Schedule

By Nick Chann
Staff Writer

Some students will be getting paid for riding shuttle buses in an effort to create a more complete and user-friendly bus schedule after many students have suggested that a schedule would make intercampus travel easier.

The 15 to 20 students expected to perform the task will travel on the school buses to log departure and arrival times at each stop. Participants will take turns riding buses until one 24-hour weekday and weekend schedule are completed.

Each rider will be compensated $5.50 an hour, Board of Trustees Student Alternate Ned Gross said.

Although a schedule created by the Physical Plant was supposed to take effect on Sept. 20, Vice President for Student Development and Campus Life, Karen Pennington said that it was difficult to understand and “was not as complete as we would have liked them to be.”

Gross was appointed by Pennington to coordinate the student bus riders.

“I couldn’t understand it and I ride the bus all the time,” Gross said.

Gross said that a schedule would make the drivers more accountable for reaching stops on time.

Although Physical Plant Director Kiki Williams was responsible for creating the schedule, Pennington took up the task after she said she didn’t clearly communicate to Williams what was needed.

Williams could not be reached for comment after several attempts.

The schedule created by the Physical Plant is printed on 8x11-sized paper and reads horizontally, not vertically like most timetables. Arrival times are also color-coded according to the route, which would make the schedule incomprehensible for color-blind riders, Pennington said.

Pennington said she wants the new timetable to fold like a pamphlet, read vertically and contain a map with stop locations.

Both Pennington and Gross said the new schedules will be distributed sometime next week to all residence and dining halls.

Pennington said she wasn’t sure if buses ahead of schedule should continue at their pace or slow down to coincide with posted arrival times.

She said she will consult the SGA and Williams about the matter this week.

This year’s revised shuttle bus system, and having residents and overnight visitors park in lot 28 are both part of the university’s short-term parking plan.

Pennington called the shuttles a “work in progress” since she and last year’s SGA President Anton Wheeler ran out of planning time before school recessed for the summer.

“We worked on the plan last spring, but it took us a while to put everything into place,” Pennington said.

Other possible short-term solutions could include adding shuttle vans driven by students and the hiring of an administrator specifically in charge of parking.

Ultimately, the university plans on constructing an on-campus parking garage, but this will not come for a couple of years, Pennington said. She expects that the project will involve more planning and more money than garages elsewhere since she said the campus is “topographically challenged.”

Webster Draws Concern for Broken Doors and Alarms
By Kevin Mostre
Staff Writer

Residents and Desk Assistants in Webster Hall are complaining about feelings of insecurity. The students are wondering why the doors are not locked and why the newly installed $70,000 card swipe system is not functional.

Late night shifts are distressing due to the lack of an operational security system, and residents are claiming that people are being sneaked in and out at all hours of the night, said a two year Desk Assistant, Brenda Barrios. “We don’t feel 100 percent safe here and the identification scanner outside doesn’t work,” said Barrios. “Anyone could just come inside.”

In order for a guest to come into the building, the “D.A.” must get up and.uni-lock the door, said Sheria Mckoy, another Desk Assistant. She is concerned with her safety because of the many recent reported assaults on campus.

“Since the Fall semester began, the doors have not been locked in any of the residence halls, however, they can be locked manually, said O’Brien. “There’s no need for the Desk Assistants to feel they are at risk. If they do, they are welcome to speak to the staff member at their residence hall,” O’Brien said.

As a result of complaints made by students and Desk Assistants, the matter has been put at the top of the Director’s priority list.

The move comes after a Student Government Association Inc. suggestion. Pennington called the amendment a “concession” since police protection will be divided between two locations. “If you have to park in one place that’s the only place you have to concentrate patrols,” Pennington said.

Security was one of the major motivaters for police protection, said Pennington.

Overnight visitors must stop at the main entrance’s security booth to pick-up a temporary parking pass for a visitor lot.

Campus Water Safe After Floyd Contaminates Local Reservoirs
Though areas of Essex County Found Excessive Bacteria
In Water Sources, MSU’s Wells Remain Unharmed
By Dan Lombardi
Staff Writer

The water on campus is safe to drink, according to Amy Ferdinand of the Environmental Services Department, after making numerous calls to Montclair Water and Health Departments. This past week school officials, including members of the Health and Wellness Center, University Police and various Residence Assistants were bombarded with questions from students concerning the safety of drinking the water, however, the campus and the town of Montclair have been spared contamination from flood waters.

“The water source for Montclair comes from a separate source upstream and no alert has been issued for this area,” said Ferdinand.

Much of the concern about the water at school has been fueled by news reports that have advised the surrounding towns to boil their water before drinking it. The concern for the surrounding towns is warranted because most towns in this immediate area have to boil their water to eliminate contaminants, an after effect of Hurricane Floyd that hit the area last week and forced the canceling of classes Thursday.

If any student lives in an area which may have contaminated water they should boil the water for three to ten minutes, according to Donna Barry of the health center.

“If diarrhea, vomiting or stomach pain persists for more than 24 hours students should go to the health center immediately,” said Barry.

The contaminants could range from very fine dust known as sediments, up to dangerous bacteria such as E. coli.

“This is common in areas where there’s a flood,” said Tracy Clason from New Jersey Water Watch.

Contamination of drinking water from a flood can happen several ways. Fresh water can mix with sewer water from a flood and cause bacteria to get into the water supply. Also, sediment could get through the treatment plant’s filters due to the larger than normal amount of water barraging the system at one time.

percent. In response to union demands on the exclusive ownership of copyrights for professors, the state has proposed the formation of local committees to consider issues relating to Intellectual Property and Distance Learning.

In related news, the tentative contract of MSU’s adjunct union, AFT Local 6025, provides for a $25 salary increase, raising the wage from $500 to $525 per credit hour.

The state issued no response to union demands until after their current contracts expired on June 30. Negotiations were slow to start, said Dr. Bonnie Lustigman, AFT Vice President of Personnel and Chairperson of the Department of Biology.

“The negotiations are in summer dorms,” said Lustigman in a prepared statement at the July 8 session of the Board of Trustees. “It’s hard to understand why there’s no money for higher education.”

Dr. Richard Franke was hired as Strike Coordinator for Local 1904 in March, though the only strike authorization vote scheduled was the one that was cancelled last week.

Dr. Richard Wolfson, President of the University Senate, met the arrival of the tentative contract with relief.

“I’m glad that we’ve come to a swift completion in negotiations,” said Wolfson. “We can now go back, without distraction, to the business of the university: educating the students.”

Dr. Richard Wolfson, President of the University Senate, met the arrival of the tentative contract with relief.

“We [the SGA] and the Department of Student Activities have been working together to gain student satisfaction and to build a relationship that will continue to do that on the weekends,” said Griffin.

The list of new movies should attract MSU students and ensure the success of movie nights. Because this is the first time new movies are being shown at MSU, student involvement and input is needed, said Griffin.

Analyzing This and Cruel Intentions were the first two movies that were already shown. While student support has yet to be determined, Director of Student Activities, Charles S. Peiser plans to continue promoting movie nights.
Enrollment Numbers Soar with Freshman Class of 2003

By Lakia S. Curtis

Staff Writer

The class of 2003 is the largest freshman class at MSU in ten years. We are at the highest enrollment level that we have achieved in a decade," said President Dr. Susan Cole.

According to Dr. Cole, enrollment is up at least 20 percent, increasing from 1,132 in 1998 to 1,361 in 1999.

"The extraordinarily successful recruitment effort has yielded a class that has slightly higher SAT scores, greater diversity with approximately 37 percent students of color, a 10 percent increase in Bloorstone Distinguished Scholars, a 15 percent increase in Outstanding Scholars." said President Dr. Susan Cole, MSU President.

Cole also said that the new class of Honor students with an average high school class rank at the 92 percentile and average SAT scores of 1260.

"The director of Admissions, Alan Buechler said that the university's reputation in US News, and updated brochures which were sent to the homes of prospective applicants.

According to the MSU Department of Research and Assessment, 60 percent of all New Jersey guidance counselors have been trained at Montclair State University. "I think we are becoming more and more successful in getting out the word that MSU is an excellent place to get a quality undergraduate education at a relatively low cost," Buechler said.

The increase in 1999 enrollment has augmented the number of residents on campus.

"We are full and in the process of de-tripling rooms," said Melinda O'Brien, Director of Residence Life.

Currently, there are 240 residents who occupy triple rooms in Bohn Hall.

"We've tried very hard to accommodate those issues, our priority is to have adequate space," said O'Brien.

There were also attempts to ease the transition into college for freshmen, such as Freshman Welcome Week, Major Orientations, and First-year counselors.

"All of these successes significantly exceeded our goals for enrollment growth at the undergraduate level," Cole said, "and that means that MSU will have a rich and talented student population. It also indicates that we are beginning to achieve our goal of communicating to the larger community in the state the richness of the educational opportunity represented by this University."

From the Dorms to a Zoo, Christine Nagy Works Her Way Up

By Tiffany Klabin Parisi
Staff Writer

ome of the most successful careers begin by chance. Just ask Christine Nagy, the sexy siren whose voice slinks through radio speakers each morning on Z100's Z Morning Zoo. Nagy, a recent graduate of Montclair State University, let her fingers do the walking and her talent do the rest.

"I pulled out the Yellow Pages and I called five or six stations and nobody would talk to me, but Shadow Traffic did," explains Nagy. "They liked my voice and suggested I do a tape and that was it."

Nagy, who was raised in New Jersey, attended Montclair State University's Broadcasting Department while pursuing an acting career. But it wasn't until she went to Shadow Traffic that things began to happen.

"When I was at Shadow, I was doing traffic reports for NBC TV where I was live. They really liked my work (and) encouraged me to pursue a career as a news reporter," remembers Nagy.

Nagy decided to search for a position that offered her more creativity than television reporting would, and walked away from that opportunity to play her hand at radio.

"Radio to me is so much more creative," asserts the morning co-host. Before joining the Z Morning Zoo, she began at Q104.3, whose format has since changed.

"This is when everything turned around for me. They like me a lot and then they hired me on to co-host their morning show," says Nagy.

She remained at Q104.3 until they changed formats and seven days later, she was whooping it up with the Z Morning Zoo. For over two years, Nagy has spent each weekday morning chatting it up with Elvis, Elliot (who recently moved to their Washington DC affiliate), and the Zoo whose primary players are Danielle Monaro, John Bell and Greg T, the frat boy.

Nagy is stunned that she is so popular.

"It's unbelievable. I always feel like I'm not worthy," she remarks while doing her best impression of Bill and Ted (from Bill and Ted's Excellent Adventures). She is brutally unaware of her star status which is what makes her that much more appealing. She did, however, recall one incident when she was mobbed to the point that security had to be called in to rescue her. It was during last year's Jingle Ball concert presented by Z100 when Nagy was spotted and quickly swarmed by admiring fans. "I wanted to sign every autograph and take every picture with every person who wanted a picture," reminisces Nagy, who truly embraces her audience. "It's an amazing feeling."

Christine is also a hard-working actress. She spent two years as Tina, a lead role in the hit off-Broadway play, Tony and Tina's Wedding, which still has a place in her heart. Having to wake up at 3:30 a.m. each weekend, though, along with performing each weekend, took a toll on Nagy, who chose to split from the play. She sadly explains, "After two years, I was just really, really exhausted."

However, Nagy still continues to split her time between the airwaves and acting, now opting for plays with shorter runs and independent films. She recently performed in a play that was a limited run which was part of the Fringe Festival in New York. "They offered me the role of a girl who has multiple personalities," explains Nagy. She has also completed four independent films, including The Rules for Men in which she plays the romantic lead. "I love performing," says Nagy, her voice thrilled with excitement. "To me, that's my heart and soul. It's acting!"

All this from a girl living just a stone's throw away from the dorms where many students reside. But success didn't come quickly or easily for the radio personality. Nagy's flourishing career can be accredited to the endless hours she has spent pursuing something that she earnestly wanted in combination with a talent that she was born with. However, Nagy recognizes that the education she received from Montclair State University was time well spent.

"The Broadcasting Department at Montclair is excellent. I know that Montclair has a stellar reputation because so many people who have graduated from Montclair's Broadcasting Department are working," declares Nagy. "If you want to get into news or radio, or anything in the field of Broadcasting, you're in the right place!"

How to think of yourself as a savvy student, not a cheap one

By Jennifer Cannataro
Staff Writer

Are you looking for ways to save every last penny? Finding yourself short on funds this semester? This is a familiar problem for most college students. There is plenty of money at the beginning of the semester after everyone worked hard all summer, but now the money has been squandered on books, new clothes, etc.

Many students are working to pay for tuition and other living expenses, and have little leftover for pleasure. But there are many ways to live well on a limited budget. Consider the frugal life to discover ways to save money in small places that really add up.

If you do not already have a job, you should look into a part-time position. Many retail stores need help on weekdays, and offer a flexible amount of hours. This time of the year is the easiest time to find job openings. You should consider working on campus if you really hate the thought of commuting to work. Now that you've been helped in finding a job, you can afford to eat. When grocery shopping, remember that convenience foods like microwave popcorn and cereal are expensive. Try to prepare your own snacks and batch cook, and always use leftovers for the next day's lunch or dinner.

If you live in a dorm and are unable to cook, a good idea is to make a trip to a wholesale outlet to buy foods like cereal and snacks in bulk so you'll always have something on hand. To save yourself extra money, shop above or below eye level because these products usually cost less. Generic brands or store brands are generally less expensive and can be nationally advertised brands.

Never shop when you are hungry, and only buy what is on your list of needed goods.

A new program for incoming freshmen has just arrived this year here at MSU. It’s called the Stars Program, and for those who choose to participate, the integration into campus life should become both easy and fun as they find new friends in places other than their core classes.

The Stars Program is made up of approximately 140 first year students, three Stars Orientation Workshop Leaders (previously OWLs during the summer orientations), and is lead by June Giardina. The students are divided into 10 cohorts, or learning communities, with about 20 students per group.

Each student in a particular cohort takes the same section of Freshman Composition, Fundamentals of Speech and Communication, and Freshman Experience. They also live together in particular wings or sections of Bohn Hall, on floors 10, 11, or 12.

The idea behind all this togetherness is to help the new students get to know one another more quickly than they otherwise would, since they tend to see each other often throughout the day. However, the Stars Program is also designed to not exclude anyone. Many of the cohorts include commuter students, and for those who did not place into Freshman Composition, there are also cohorts in which Freshman Seminar replaces this class.

The Stars Program was introduced to Residence Life this year allowing freshmen students to take a cohort of classes together while at the same time residing on the same three floors in Bohn Hall.

Students are encouraged to meet outside of class or to form study groups, and the classes they take are made up of almost exclusively Stars Program participants, giving them the advantage of a smaller class size and closer teacher attention than many first year core courses tend to offer.

According to Giardina, head of Stars, this program came about solely to help incoming freshmen get adjusted to life away from home. She said that freshman often have a hard time getting involved around campus, and that being involved generally makes the transition from home to school much easier.

Although there have been similar programs in the past in which freshman were divided into groups, this is the first time that they have also lived in such close quarters with one another.

The Stars Orientation Workshop Leaders (S-OWLs), including Nore Ojogun, Susie Magro and Angela Mirante, perform many functions integral to the success of the Stars Program. They act as friends and mentors to the freshman, and listen to any of the students’ problems. They also put together activities for the freshman to attend, hopefully drawing them out into social situations.

The Stars Program recently started a new weekly program called Tuesday’s Tips, which meets in the main lounge of Bohn Hall from 7:30 p.m. ‘every Tuesday night. Each week, different academic departments come and give their advice on how to make the first year at school easier to handle.

Currently scheduled are programs on how to choose a major, how to avoid gaining the terrifying “Freshman Fifteen,” and how to get connected on this confusing campus. Though Tuesday’s Tips has only been implemented with the beginning of the Stars Program, all students are encouraged to attend and get to know their fellow freshmen.

Even though it is only in its beginning stages, everyone involved seems to be very happy about the way the Stars Program has been going.

“I’m really excited about the program. I think it’s going to change the way freshmen are viewed and the way they get involved on campus. I want students not just to go through college, but to let college pass them through,” said Giardina.

According to several freshman, some of the best benefits of the Stars Program include priority registration, help with scheduling, and the fact that the Bohn Hall computer lab is strictly open to the Stars students at certain times.

Freshman Heather Ossandom, said that, “It’s good because you get to know a lot of the kids easier.” She said that since they are all going through the same basic experiences while getting accustomed to college life, one of the best things is that you have “someone else to depend on.”

Other freshmen included lots of friends and help in classes as their favorite part of the program.

The S-OWLS were also very happy with the progression of the Stars Program. According to Susie Magro, the floors on which the Stars freshmen are located are very active, with most doors open for the majority of the day, and students floating in and out of each other’s rooms.

Many of the commuters have also been known to stop by, thanks to the encouragement of their teachers. When I asked Nore Ojogun how she felt about her involvement with the Stars Program, she said that everything was going great and that she hoped the program sticks around MSU for a while.

All in all, the basic premise behind the Stars Program is that if students are happy, they are more likely to stay in school. For this reason, they stress community friendship and involvement.

“Want to see everybody get involved,” said Giardina. Hopefully, within the next couple of years, involvement will grow and the taking the Stars Program up to new heights, and many of the new freshman along with it.
Musician Encourages Students With Star Wars Wisdom

With intelligent wit, professor and pianist David Witten lives up to his name. He maintains a connection with his students by possessing a barrage of funny phrases, toys, and movie quotes. When Witten’s students need encouragement the infamous Yoda phrase, “Do or do not; there is no try,” comes in to play. “I like it when my students ask questions,” admits Witten. The easygoing teacher brings his inflatible refrig to class, supporting his theory of, “avoiding gravity” at all times. In other words, when playing the piano one should distribute an equal amount of energy in each section of a piece.

Witten attracts and holds the attention of his students in unique ways. Whether he makes them feel at ease while keeping them interested. To be able to entertain and teach your students at the same time, is indeed, a rare gift.

Along with teaching piano, Music of the 20th century, and the History of Keyboard Literature for two years here at MSU, Witten was recently made Deputy Chair of the music department.

Perhaps having traveled to over a dozen countries has lent Witten a worldly aura, Said O’Brien. “It always seems like he’s talking to us and not reading from a text. Like it’s his personal experience and knowledge.”

From having roses thrown at his feet in Russia, to teaching piano in various Brazilian Universities, the acclaimed pianist’s greatest pleasure in traveling is, “The challenge of trying to get along in a foreign language.” Of course, “Even while I’m feeling distant in a remote place and living in isolation, sometimes I’ll sit in front of the 88 keys—I’m home.”

Whitten was part of a Duo Clasico in Boston in which he as a pianist paired with a flutist, Suellen Hershman to perform unusual Latin American Music. Witten is a devotee to Latin music, having also recorded in Latin composers for Marco Polo Records and Musical Heritage Society.

In Russia he had, “the most attentive audience.” The renowned scholar obtained a degree in psychology from Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore, attended SUNY at Buffalo, Boston University, and The Rubin Academy of Music in Jerusalem.

Walking into his office, there are many indications of his colorful personality; his black and white photographs, a copy of the book he edited and contributed to, Nineteenth Century Piano Music: Essays in Performance and Analysis, and his toy cycle performers. He brings personal images with him into his classroom, adding more flavor to the language of music. “He can transpose an entire symphony to piano,” relates awed student, Chris Nam. Listening to him teach, it appears as if the historical musicians he speaks of are still alive. Maybe this is because he has visited some of the places where many a European artist grew up. He brings his experiences into the classroom therefore giving life to the material and his students.

After Witten plays, “The images linger.” Hopefully, his lesson plans also linger, along with his enthusiasm and creativity.

Edu.com is a new site for “students only” containing student discount prices, twenty-four hour customer service online or by telephone, online banking and free enrollment.

For students who live on their own, another way to save is to try to run major appliances during off peak hours, which are from 9 p.m. to 7 a.m. Sunday through Saturday. If utilities are not included in your monthly rent, check to make sure the apartment has proper insulation. Always remember to turn off lights and other electronics in the rooms you are not using to save a few dollars. Purchase a thermostat with a timer so that your heater is on only when you come home. For more tips on how to conserve energy, call the Department of Energy at 800-363-3732, and ask for a free energy savings guidebook.

Looking to save a little money to go out for a dinner? The Internet has many sites with the best deals on airline tickets and hotels. Many airlines send weekly emails with last minute travel deals. Amtrak offers student discounts. Many of us tend to spend the bulk of our money on entertainment spending. Going out to eat all the time is extremely expensive. Opt for a coffee, and save the dinner for a date or a needed break. If you are just checking out a movie with a friend, go before 6 p.m. to cut the cost in half and try to see one playing at a discount theater instead of a multiplex. As for nightlife, get to the bar or club before 10 p.m. Admission is usually free and sometimes they run special drink promotions during this time. At happy hours, you get free food while you drink.

If you want to look in style without spending hundreds of dollars, buy a few quality items such as sweaters, shoes, and accessories to update your wardrobe. Shop at discount outlets and thrift stores to find the best bargains. Be wary of using credit cards. Credit card companies target college students for “pre-approved” credit by doing continuous mass mailings and advertising at schools and bookstores. Consequently, many students are manipulated into excessive spending, and are finding themselves into serious debt. Did you know that increasing your minimum payment by five dollars will take 10 years off the length of the loan repayment, and will cut interest charges in half?

If you need help with personal finances, go to Quicken.com for a free evaluation and payment plan to pay back your debts efficiently.

For those students who love cosmetics, there are ways to look your best with the makeup that you already have. Although you may be dying for the new lipstick color from Mac all your friends have, you need to conserve your money. By improving skills and application techniques, you can custom-mix inexpensive colors to copy the shades that are new for fall in all the expensive department store cosmetic lines. Do not be afraid to experiment! Think of it as a form of art.

So if you find yourself continuously checking the bottom of your purse or under the couch cushions for money to fill up your gas tank, eat dinner, etc., don’t worry. You now have some ways to spend all that change in a way that will eventually add up.## Help

S tudents gain vast education and career opportunities while attending college. They are constantly absorbing knowledge and being fed information in their classes. This is not the only form of gaining many college students receive. A common side-effect of college life for freshmen is the dreaded “freshman 15”, or the tendency to gain 15 pounds during the first year away from home.

If you’ve noticed your jeans getting tighter chances are you’re falling into this trap. Be honest—do you constantly skip meals and then binge on cheese fries after midnight? They may taste good, but remember a baked potato is not only more healthy, but usually cheaper as well. Here are some additional tips which hopefully will help you avoid the “freshman 15” before you have to buy a complete new wardrobe.

• When going out to eat try to think healthy—especially late at night when your metabolism tends to be slower. Order a salad, egg whites, soups (always avoid cream with soups and salad dressings), baked potato (opt for salsa instead of sour cream and butter), vegetables, etc. Always ask for butter, sauces and dressings on the side.

• Ward off late night binges by always eating when you’re hungry. Don’t skip meals, it will only lead to over eating later.

• Always eat breakfast!

• Stock up on bulk sizes of healthy snacks such as granola bars, pretzels, cereals, etc.

• In need of a pick me up snack while you are out? While it often happens, try not to head to the vending machine. Eat yogurt or fruit instead.

• Try nutritional bars and drinks if you tend to be hungry and have to eat eating normal. They should curb your sweet tooth and supply needed energy.

• Remember to fill fat foods like pizza and fries are tempting, but can make you feel sluggish and bloated. It’s okay to treat yourself once in a while, but stick mainly to fresh vegetables, fruit and grilled lean meats like turkey or chicken.

• Salad bars can be deceiving. Avoid the potato salad and don’t pile on the cheese or dressing in lettuce salads. Choose the fresh veggies, beans, fruit, etc.

• Avoid large amounts of carbohydrates!

• Avoid deep fried foods like chicken fingers and mozzarella sticks, which can contribute to clogged arteries in addition to gaining weight, but if you’re going to eat them, do it sparingly.

• Drink at least eight glasses of water a day, it helps to flush your system out. If you want add lemon juice for flavor.

I t's hard to believe that someone can be accomplish so much when they leave school at the age of ten. Yet, Granville T. Woods did just that, educating himself in practical skills for his future. Born in Columbus, Ohio on April 23, 1856, Woods literally learned his skills on the job. During his youth he went to night school and took private lessons while learning valuable skills at work. Even though he had to leave formal school at the age of ten, Granville Woods realized that learning and education were essential for developing the critical skills he would need to be a success in the future.

Woods obtained a job as a fireman on the Danville and Southern railroad in Missouri, in 1872, eventually becoming an engineer. He invested his spare time in studying electronics. He later moved in 1874 to Springfield, Illinois, and worked in a rolling mill. He moved back to the East Coast in 1876, and worked part time in a machine shop. All the while, he kept taking classes in technical schools, focusing on engineering. In 1878, he became an engineer aboard the Ironsides, a British steamer, and, within two years, he became the chief engineer. Granville T. Woods was becoming a great electrician and an inventive genius. His talents did not go unnoticed. Woods invented fifteen appliances for electric railways, and received his first patent in 1884 on an improved steam boiler furnace. By 1880, he had established his own shop in Cincinnati, Ohio, creating many more inventions to revolutionize the railroad industry. His most noted work was in 1887, when he patented the Synchronous Multiplex Railway Telegraph, which allowed communications between train stations from moving trains. Train accidents and collisions were causing great concern to the public and the railways at the time. Woods' invention made it possible for trains to communicate with the station and with other trains so they knew exactly where they were at all times. This invention made train movements quicker and prevented countless accidents and collisions.

Granville T. Woods attained great fame as an electrician and inventor in America in the late 18th century, and is considered by many black historians as the African American version of Thomas Edison. He benefited mankind through his inventions to the world of communications and science. Granville T. Woods died in New York City on Jan. 30, 1910.

Santana Builds a Mystical Musical Bridge Across Generations

By Anna Lawrence

This is not your parent's Santana.
Scratch that. This is exactly your parents' Santana, but this is also your Dave Matthews, Everlast, Rob Thomas, Lauryn Hill, Cee-Lo, Wyclef Jean, Eagle Eye Cherry and Eric Clapton (okay, maybe he's your parents' too). Whoever this is, and whatever generation we're coming from, it all adds up to the most magical, musical experience of 1999, appropriately entitled "Supernatural," released by the greatest guitarist of all time, Carlos Santana.

Carlos Santana is a veteran of rock 'n roll. He played Woodstock back before MTV was around to capitalize on it. He's had hits with songs like "Oye Como Va," "Black Magic Woman" and the instrumental "Soul Sacrifice." He is also, very keenly, telling us to put our lights on on 92.3 KROCK, MTV was around to capitalize on it. He's ten to "Put Your Lights On" and "Smooth" for good measure. (What's scat? Remember, it's almost tribal, and heavy on the percussion; "El Farol," a slow, groovy tune; and "Bamba," something to get you out on the dance floor with your honey; "Migra," which is almost tribal, and heavy on the percussion; "El Parol," a slow, groovy tune; and "Primavera," an easy listening tune which is not about any sort of Italian dinner.

CD Review
Carlos Santana enlightens a new generation with his latest CD, Supernatural.

"Supernatural" moves you, whether it moves you to dance, to groove, to love, to reach a higher plane, or just to learn another language. And, hopefully, these humble words will move you to give the CD a listen. Music this great just can't be captured on paper. There is a quote somewhere that reads, "Writing about music is like dancing about architecture." Santana's CD "Supernatural" is living, breathing, mystical proof of that quote.

Stigmata Lacks Godly Graces

By Andrew Ruiz
Assistant Arts Editor

One of the most highly anticipated films of the year has turned out to be one of the biggest let downs of the decade. Stigmata, which opened Sept. 10, is one of the most irritating films produced in recent memory. Rupert Wainwright’s inane direction of a horrendously compiled cast, working with a completely dead-brained script, produced a horrible movie experience.

The film opens with the introduction of Father Andrew Kiernan, portrayed by Gabriel Byrne. As a special attachment to the Vatican, Kiernan investigates supposed miracles. On one such investigation in Brazil, he comes across a weeping Madonna, whose validity he can’t easily explain away. With the patriarch of the church having recently passed away, no one can answer questions of the statue’s history or cast any light on the mysterious church itself.

Kiernan returns to the Vatican with a new quest; to prove that the bloody tears of the Madonna are genuine. However, his superior, Cardinal Daniel Houseman, removes him from the case, citing that no such church exists, and that the statue must therefore be a hoax.

Warning! Warning! Major plot stretch ahead! A rosary belonging to the departed priest is stolen, and finds its way into the hands of young Franke Paige (Patricia Arquette), a hairdresser in the United States. For reasons that become evident, this links her to some sort of spirit. She begins to display the Stigmata, or the five wounds of Christ.

This sudden phenomenon attracts attention from the higher echelons of the Vatican, who dispatch Kiernan to investigate the rumor, and to keep it quiet. When Kiernan fails the second objective, Houseman gets involved in the case, leading to the inevitable showdown between the old and new ways of the church. Kiernan discovers that there is much more to this case than first believed.

Before the film closes, the validity of the Catholic religion itself comes into question. That sounds like a great premise for a film, along the same lines as the Exorcist. Unfortunately, the film totally degrades itself into the first half-hour.

The movie carefully builds a background from the higher echelons of the Vatican, who distance himself from the competition when it comes to some terrific CGI fire at the “climactic” moment, the altered shots were completely unnecessary. When one is telling this kind of story, it’s always best to stick to the old truism, “Less is more.”

Normally, one tries to find some high point, something to counterbalance all of the negativity. After thorough searching, I found the one high point of the film. I never have to see it again. Quite honestly, there is absolutely no saving grace. Even the casting of Jonathan Pryce as the evil Cardinal Houseman was unbelievable. His portrayal was lukewarm, quite a shocking disappointment from such a talented and experienced actor.

Unfortunately, the hype cannot be stopped. People will go to see this film. People will enjoy the film. People will think they’ve learned something from the film. Well, they haven’t.

The messages are clear-cut, and yet they conflict at the same time. Leaving the theater, I wasn’t sure whether I was supposed to love the church or hate it. The film has no closure, but not in that wonderfully intelligent way that some films end, allowing the viewer to think. This is pseudo-intellectual Jell-O that has no right to be consumed. Instead, why not take another shot at the genre? There is no higher message, no one clear moment, where the purpose of the film comes ringing through. It’s just one long headache for anyone with enough brainpower to see through the “message.”

The message that should be seen before viewing the film is: Don’t waste your time and money on this movie. It’s not worth the nearly nine dollar admission ticket. Instead, why not take another shot at The Sixth Sense, or one of the new movies coming out this week? Odds are, just about anything currently playing is a safer bet than Stigmata.

Besides, when a director’s only other claim to fame is Blank Check, one shouldn’t be surprised.

The production end of it is not without its faults. Arquette and Byrne are both terribly miscast. Their shared lack of talent for the genre is so jarring that shortly into the film they both become completely unbelievable. Wainwright’s direction is cliché at times, giving a lot of ammunition to the critics who’ve branded the film as a cheap Exorcist knock-off.

Scenes that could have possibly been very minimalistic and eerie instead become familiar, and down right laughable. One of the finest examples of this can be seen in the messenger scene from the previous. Evil making up applied to a young woman “channeling” an ancient spirit? Have we seen this before, Linda Blair?

Weekly Wainwright has been trying to distance himself from the competition when he made the decision to include so many special effects shots. From cheap lightning effects to some terrible CGI fire at the “climactic” moment, the altered shots were unanimously cheesy. Worse yet, they were completely unnecessary. When one is telling this kind of story, it’s always best to stick to the old truism, “Less is more.”

Question of the Week:

How do you feel New Jersey prioritizes higher education?

to respond.

A Step In The Right Direction,
But Where Do We Go From Here?

So it all boils down to this. Out of nowhere, a breath of fresh air after a few long and tense months of negotiation proceedings. Or, as Dr. Lustigman stated before the Board of Trustees in June: Negotiations resembling “summer doldrums.” The union waiting and waiting and waiting. Students beginning to wonder if professors would walk out of classrooms, leaving MSU with strike-breakers or stalled graduation dates. And, seemingly out of nowhere, the AFT’s tentative contract for the next five years is on the table. A ratification vote is set for the first week of October. One week the threat of strike and the next ... closure? What does this say for the state of higher education in New Jersey?

While it is almost never the case that the state gives the union what it demands, the current tentative contract is incredibly fair. The Council of New Jersey State College Locals, the bargaining unit for the local chapter of the AFT, asked for eight percent in across-the-board salary increases every year, or 40 percent over the entire contract period. While an early response from the state put the five-year total increase at six percent, the current offer of 14.5 percent over the next four years seems luminous in comparison. Dr. Catherine Becker, President of AFT Local 1904 here at MSU, referred to the state’s terms, on a scale of zero to 10, as a six. We would have to agree.

There are some other brief compromises in the proposed settlement. Overload compensation will see steady increases throughout the coming contract term. NJ PLUS healthcare will be provided free of charge; those enrolling in HMO programs will only pay five percent of cost. Local committees will be formed to debate the intellectual rights of professors, calling into question why universities would hold copyright over the works of their employees. And, in related news, the icing on the cake:
Members of MSU’s adjunct union, AFT Local 6025, as well as adjuncts around the state, got a $25 per-credit-hour raise. Keep it up, sweatshop workers, if you take four classes a semester under your belt, you’ll be a step closer to that poverty line! How’s that for the state saying, “Keep up the good work?”

So, with the contract on the table and waiting for the October vote to set it into motion, the threat of a strike has been averted. The students’ collective faith in the endearing commitment of the state to higher education has been restored! Hurray for Governor Whitman! Hurray for the New Jersey legislature! Well, doesn’t that sound right?

The fact of the matter is that the state’s fair offer came after several months of silence, a period when teachers returned to the classroom without a contract. When the threat of a strike seriously loomed, though, Governor Whitman quickly exited stage left from her run for Senate and decided, “Higher Education is the key to tomorrow! Yes, give the teachers what they want!” We’re sorry ... just too little and just too late.

While the tentative AFT contract is a step in the right direction, it is hardly a glowing tribute to the state’s love for its academic employees. Let’s face it... Until fiscal trends start moving toward the classroom and away from prison cells, state funding to higher education will remain what it has been for far too many years: A front to keep voters complacent, an insult to those who choose to attend public schools in New Jersey, an issue that those signing contracts on behalf of the state hope will just someday go away.

So it all boils down to this. A step in the right direction with a long mile ahead of us. Better than nothing? Only time will tell.
Speaking Out: Taking Personal Responsibility in Today’s Society

This past summer I committed what may amount to sacrilege for anyone living in the tri-state area. During the NBA playoffs, I was hoping on a very minute level for the New York Knicks to win, and if they did win, I would win. While I do find David Robinson to be an honorable man, it was because of the presence of Latrell Sprewell on the New York Knicks that his team held my interest. For this, I was only given a short suspension for punishment.

Even though this could be attributed to the special status sports stars seem to enjoy, there is a pervasive attitude wanting to be able to do whatever we want to do, without having to deal with any of the logical repercussions or implica­tions.

We want to eat as much as we want without getting fat, have as much sex as we want without dealing with the pos­si­bilities of disease or children, and, in the case of Mr. Sprewell, if we wake up one morning and notice the choice each individual must make for the betterment of oneself and society at large.

Residential Living Leaves Much to be Desired

As the High School seniors head back to school, they begin the long process of selecting a college or university. These la­dies and gentlemen may begin looking through the many different programs, both academic and athletic, that an institute of higher learning has to offer in order to narrow down the hundreds of schools around the country. However, everything from location to extra-curricular programs may also be used to narrow down options. As a second year college student, I have encoun­tered many things that I wish I had thought of before I chose a school, one of those being resident life.

Leaving home for the first time this year, I was quite disappointed with the living condi­tions. All but two of the residence halls offer air conditioning, the rugs in the halls are disgusting stained and don’t look like they have been changed or cleaned in years. Many times the communal bath­rooms were dissatisfactory, paint on the walls was peeling and giving an exceptional reason as to why this should be. To me, this seems quite simple. If we are to live in an organized society, we must be willing to accept responsibility and not allow people to do what they desire with abandon. It is for this reason that a justice system exists in this country in the first place.

It is a clear misconception that Christianity condones escaping from the outcome of our actions. Moreover, it is a gross principle that an institute of higher learning is to be a fruitful and beneficial environment, not a place to indulge every ap­petite and base desire but not have to think about them later.

I am a female commuter student who is 51 years old who has been attending MSU for over 12 years part-time. As a young teenager, I dreamed of going to this school. At that time, due to financial instability in my home, I was not able to attend.

I finally went back to school at 27 and have been going to school part time for 25 years in order to get my bachelor’s degree in Art. Therefore, you can tell my education means a lot to me. I will hopefully graduate in May of 2000 (if the school doesn’t screw that up also). In all my years at MSU I cannot say that my time here has been well spent.

The school does not care about the safety of the students at large, and more importantly the female students who are at a greater risk. The school does care about making money and exploiting those they claim to help.

This school wants your money and gives you very little in return. The majority of the administrative and teaching staff I have dealt with have a bad attitude, probably be­cause they are civil service employees, and their jobs are Secure. The shuttle service is a joke. Shuttles are never on time and the drivers have always been less then courteous, for the most part. In addition, their driving technique has left me with my heart in my throat more than once. Why are there no seat belts on these buses? I have fallen off the seats more than once when they go spinning around a corner. I could go on and on, but I’ll just be happy to get out of here in May. I wouldn’t recommend this school to my worst enemy—or maybe I would. No, I’m not that cruel.

So my dear younger students it’s not just your impetu­ous youth...I think the school sucks too!!

I lived in Bohn Hall for a year and I am horrified by this parking situation. Students who live on campus should have priority parking and if I was a freshman or sophomore living on campus, I would transfer.

Jen Mattaliano, Senior/Commuter - Oppose

This school has always been a commuter school, so commuters should have some advantage in parking.

Christine Stepniak, Senior/Commuter - Support

Switching the parking lots around did nothing to help the parking problem. There are still not enough spots.

Karen Turkowsky, Senior/Resident - Oppose

Of course I support it. But I don't live here! Not competing with residents [for parking spots] is phenomenal.

Susan Finan, Sophomore/Commuter - Support

There is not adequate parking to support the student body as a whole.

University officials announced plans yesterday to turn the campus into an amusement park entitled "ChickenHawk Land." Attractions will include the Bland Hall WaterPark, the Shuttle Bus O’Doom, the Parking Maze, and the Garlic Road Catapult. The park is scheduled to be completed by May, 2001.

"Actually, most of the attractions are pre­existant," of Budget Blowing, Barney Flutophone. "But we figure that we can make more money if we convince students that it’s actually fun. Naturally, tu­ition will be converted into a floating café. We don’t think those exposed electrical conduits will give us any reason for concern. We’ll be very, very careful," said Dean Lovemachine.

The waterpark will undergo a transforma­tion - it will be converted into a floating café. Students will swim up to the pool side for food and beverages. "I got the idea during my last trip to Acapulco. But there won’t be any so-called "water." Students aren’t allowed to drink because we can’t trust them. Hell, I don’t trust them to change a dollar," said Lovemachine.

VP Flutophone denied the rumor that Bland Hall WaterPark would be stocked with trout and local fishermen would be al­lowed in. "They might snag an employee," he said.

"Garlic Road will be the scene of four attractions: the Catapult, the Terror Walk, the Shuttle Bus O’Doom, and the Obstacle Course. The Catapult is exactly what its name implies - a medieval weapon of de­struction designed to launch heavy loads long distances. Students will be loaded five at a time onto the contraption and fired at the campus."

"We had originally hoped to have the Catapult running every five to seven min­utes, but that won’t happen. Fifteen to sev­enteen minutes is more realistic," said Lovemachine.

"We think most of the students will make it, but we have clean-up crews and buzzards standing by when they don’t," VP Flutophone added.

The Obstacle Course is designed to get students’ blood flowing. Students will be required to dash from main campus to the Garlic Road lot one mile away, along the Terror Walk, past the narcotelope guard, avoiding the barbed wire, and then across the meat filled with bloodthirsty piranhas. They will then have to move their car from the Forbidden Zone before the police re­move it. To add to the excitement, a fleet of cars will stalk the students, looking for a parking spot.

The Terror Walk is nothing new, nor is the Shuttle Bus O’Doom. "One or the other, they have to choose. They either take their chances with the Catapult, or they ride a rickety, stinky bus," said VP of Whiny Stu­dents, Esther Cornedbeef.

Should students elect the Terror Walk, administrators will hide in the bushes dressed in black from head to toe. When students walk by, they will jump out and yell, “BOOGA BOOGA BOOGA!” Once again, clean-up crews and buzzards will be standing.

"The Parking Maze will test students’ ingenuity, resilience, and patience. Once again, too many parking passes have been sold, so students must navigate the maze in the vehicle of their choice to look for spots. "Dummy drivers," non-students who have been hired at the rate of $8.00/hour, will add to the challenge as they also compete for spots. Students who successfully find a space are awarded nothing, must hike up Cardiff Hill, and settle for being twenty minutes late.

On main campus, students will find many more attractions. One that is sure to keep the heart beating fast is "The Fire Alarm." All residents will be required to participate between the hours of 1 am and 5 am. A random employee will yank the fire alarm and force residents to evacuate their dorm no matter what the conditions.

"The Revolving Door" is another on­campus ride that should keep the adrenaline pumping. The ride, located in front of the Wench Center Information Desk, requires students to escape two mechanized revolving doors. They have been outfitted with motorcycle engines and will spin at approxi­mately 2.000 revolutions per minute, creating a “centrifuge” effect.

"It’s like being in a cuisinart," said VP Cornedbeef. "I think I’m gonna honk," added a stu­dent who tested the ride.

"No students will attend class. Food and beverages will be served at a waterfall. "We don’t think those exposed electrical conduits will give us any reason for concern. We’ll be very, very careful," said Dean Lovemachine.

"I would buy a bunch of ponies and charge residents a quarter a ride back from Clove Road."

- Chester Whipple
- Freshman, Nude Recreation

"I would sell all the students’ cars while they were in class and use the money to put an extension on my office. Ha ha ha. I am the boss of you."

- Dr.Bootsy Pfefferneuse
- Tantric Sex Department

"T and what better place to find easily exploitable work than the student body?”

"We need Sea World parking signs like Dolly the Dolphin and Wally the Walrus."

- Ed Poodlehumper
- Freshman, Sponge Science

"We want to save on construction costs," said VP Flutophone. "And what better place to find easily exploitable work than the student body?"

"Not all attractions are rides and not all are intended for students. "The Administration Fun House" will be located in Krapp Hall and will test students’ resource­fulness. All stu­dents will be required to attend at least once a week. They will complete a course laden with mirrors, dead ends, booby traps, and irate employees in order to graduate/register/drop-add/attend class. Food and water are not allowed."

THE FIRE STATION

(A short play)

By John Fruscianti

Bring me your tired, your poor, and are you gonna finish those curly fries?

Setting: The inside of a fire station. "B" is the fire chief, "C" is another fireman, and "A" is a rookie fireman. "B" and "C" are playing cards when "A" bursts in in a panic.

A: The station's on fire!
B: Which station?
A: The fire station! This one! It's on fire!
B: This one?
A: Yes!
B: On fire?
A: Yes! What'll we do?
B: I'm not sure, I'm still fascinated by the situation.
C: It is interesting.
B: The fire station catching on fire. Who ever thought that would happen?
C: Not me. It's awfully ironic.
B: I don't think we've planned for this.
A: Well now it's happening! What'll we do? Should I get the men into the trucks?
B: Well, it doesn't make much sense to get the fire trucks involved. We'll just be dragging them across the street to the hydrants.
C: Seems like a waste of time. We could use buck...
B: Now there's an idea! Why don't we...
C: I don't know. I don't think it ever crossed my mind.
B: Well, it doesn't make much sense to do that neither.
B: We'll definitely have to install them grease fire.
A: The fire station! This one! It's on fire! (B and C are vacant.)
B: That's for hurricanes, sir!
A: Tornadoes, sir!
B: Well, don't just stand there, man, everybody move into a doofeframe!
C: That's for earthquakes!
B: Oh. (Pause)
C: This isn't the one where the tide suddenly gets sucked out to sea—?
A: Tornado, sir.
B: Tornado, yes right. We don't even have a sprinkler system in here.
C: We'll definitely have to install them in the next station.
B: Well there's obviously nothing we can do about it. It's just going to have to burn. Maybe the next one will be nicer.
C: Yes, with a pool. If the nice of us had a pool now.
B: We sure could use the water.
A: Sir, you're supposed to be the fire chief!
B: Well I'm only the volunteer fire chief! My wife suggested I take up a hobby, and being a librarian was too much of a nuisance, all that standing up. I don't want to get varicose veins over some lousy book fines.
A: All those years of teaching fire safety and we've plum forgotten it ourselves.
B: Tell them is don't put water on a grease fire. Maybe the next one will be nicer.
A: That was for hurricanes, sir!
B: Oh. Get everyone to the southwest corner of the basement, then.
A: Tornadoes, sir!
B: We'll just stand here, man, everybody move into a doofeframe!
C: That's for earthquakes!
B: Oh. (Pause)
C: This isn't the one where the tide suddenly gets sucked out to sea—?
A: Tornado, sir.
B: Tornado, yes right. We don't even have a sprinkler system in here.
C: We'll definitely have to install them...
val game. Administrators will bop them on the head with mallets as they pop up from holes in the ground.

"Finally, those damn Greeks are good for something!" said Dean Crabmeat.

I just wish they'd get rid of the wooden mallets and get some rubber ones," said president of Delta Mu Beta, Peter Braynfreesz.

The president's hand-picked "rock garden" by Numbers Hall will also serve as entertainment. Turns out, they are state-of-the-art animatronics. Every hour on the hour, they will perform a 15-minute skit that includes dancing and lip-syncing to popular music.

"They dance a mean rumba," said VP Cornedbeef, "and you won't believe how cool they look doing 'La Vida Loca.'"

The president added, "You didn't really think I'd spend thousands of dollars for a bunch of pretty rocks, did you?"

Criticism from some groups has been aimed at the Board of "Trust-Me's" for concentrating on something other than academics. In response, administrators have announced plans for four new majors and the construction of a new building. Starting in Spring 2000, students will be allowed to major in Obfuscation, Sumo Wrestling, Finger Painting, and Yodeling. Two of these, Sumo Wrestling and Yodeling, will offer doctorate work.

The new building, Yogi Bear Hall, will be built on what is currently the Garlic Road parking lot. "Residents will just have to accept this. We all have to make sacrifices," said Dean Crabmeat.

Regarding where residents would be allowed to park, Crabmeat said, "Are we supposed to think of everything? There's gotta be a parking lot somewhere on Valleygirl Road in downtown Clairmont. Honestly, I don't know what gets into these kids sometimes."

Doubts have been raised as to the nature of ChickenHawk Land. Reaction on the whole has been one of wariness concerning the administration's motives. Dean Reddtayp said of students' concerns, "They should thank us. Those ungrateful little sumbitches would be living in caves and wearing burlap if it wasn't for us. We don't get paid nearly enough for the job we do. My Rolls Royce is almost two years old. I need another one, pronto!"

Students have responded thus far by doing absolutely nothing.

Editor's note: The preceding article is a work of fiction. Any similarities are purely coincidental. But they're still funny. It's called satire, okay?

Starting next week, students will be flung at main campus on a catapult similar to this one. They will probably reach speeds of 110 mph. Helmets are recommended.

Alex Luna, MSU Men's Soccer Goalkeeper

By Pius K. Essandoh III
Staff Writer

Preparation is the key to success. Preparation is what helps keep Alex Luna on top of his game. For those who do not know, Alex Luna is the goalkeeper for the MSU men's soccer team. This is his second season at MSU, but Alex has been playing soccer since he was in the eighth grade.

If you want to talk about preparation and staying focused, then Luna is a good example at that. "I focus and prepare visually two days before a game to know what I have to do for each and every game," said Luna. This focusing has led him to a 16-4-4 record and he has given up only 18 goals. That is three fourths of a goal a game that he gives up, and that is a really good average.

The 6-1 native of Newark has come a long way. Like many kids who played sports at a young age, Luna sometimes sees himself as arrogant in thinking he was invincible. Now giving up goals bothers him, but not to the extent that it will dwell on him during the rest of the game. "This sport is more mental than physical and you cannot let things bother you that much," said Luna.

Luna has one goal that he shares with his teammates, and that is to win a ring. Alex and his teammates are more than a team. They are close to each other on and off the field. They go beyond the call of duty. It is not all fun and games because they still have a few kinks to work out. Like everyone else on the soccer team, he has high praise for his coach. "Coach Chesney is the best coach that I ever played for, because he knows when to be serious and when to have fun," said Luna.

Other than winning a championship, Alex has one goal, which supersedes making it to the next level. This is to get his degree, "because sports will not always be there but education is something that no one can ever take away from you." Good luck to Alex in all his endeavors.

The 1999 Intramural Season kicked off this week with 10 teams vying for the coveted Championship T-Shirts. The season opener, which was delayed by Tropical Storm Floyd, was held between Delta Chi and Bayonne’s Finest on Monday.

Delta Chi, the returning undefeated champions from last season, were stunned by the upstart Finest by the shocking final tally of 22-6.

Also taking place on opening day, 33rd shut-out the Braves in a dominating fashion 37-0. The nightcap game saw the Blanton Bearcats surging to a 21-0 victory over the Timberwolves behind three throwing touchdowns by quarterback Todd Briggs.

On Tuesday, the rest of the teams took the field. The Bohners used the long ball and a series of intricate option plays to overpower Theta Xi 24-12. Later that evening, ONN shut down the Pike offense on their way to a 26-0 victory.

The league, which consists of ten teams broken into two divisions, will see a total of 35 regular season matches. Each team plays every team in their conference (four games) and then three games from the other conference for a total of seven games. This quick season makes each individual game that much more important as the competitors jockey for playoff placement.

The league will play all of its contests on the all-purpose field in the middle of the track by the Field House. The regular season will end on October 14. Eight teams, four from each conference, will be advancing to the playoffs.

As the action heats up this week, the game to watch is between 33rd and Bayonne’s Finest for bragging rights and control in the Eastern Conference on Wednesday night at 8pm. In the Western Conference, ONN and the Bohners square off in a Thursday night game for the lead in the standings.

Men’s Soccer Loses to Long-Time Rivalry

The Montclair State men’s soccer team dropped to 3-3-1 as they were defeated by the William Paterson Pioneers 2-1 at Montclair State’s Pittser Field. The Red Hawks got a strong game out of sophomore forward Atiba Yusuf who accounted for the Red Hawks only goal in the game.

The Pioneers were the first to score when senior midfielder Anthony Saladino booted the ball into the upper right hand corner on a penalty kick at 56:00. William Paterson’s second goal of the day came off the foot of senior forward Rueben Pleasant on an assist from Saladino’s corner kick at the 64:42.

MSU refusing to give up, put their first and only points on the board when Yusuf, on a pass from sophomore back George Mendoza, booted the ball past Pioneer goalie John Nacarlo from 17 yards away. The rest of game was played evenly with both sides getting opportunities to score with neither capitalizing.

Montclair and William Paterson each had 10 shots on goal. Sophomore Red Hawk goalie Alex Luna had eight saves while William Paterson’s Nacarlo had three. The failure of the Red Hawks to capitalize on scoring opportunities and their attitude in the second half was what led to their defeat yesterday.

Yusuf and senior Chris Cifrodello did an outstanding job of putting pressure on the Pioneers goalie in the first half, but just could not seem to put the ball in. The Red Hawk midfielders also did an excellent job in the first by keeping the ball on the Pioneers side of the field.

As they did in the first half, the Red Hawks controlled the ball for most of the second half but could manage only one goal as the Pioneers got two. The inefficiency of the Red Hawks offense was troubling to watch but even worse was the conduct in which the Red Hawks handled themselves when the game got tight. It is common that in the heat of battle things get hectic and emotions ride extremely high. However, this is no excuse to yell and curse at teammates and get silly fouls because of dirty play.

William Paterson was playing just as dirty, if not more, and I think that the officials lack of control over the game had a lot to do with the constant cheap shots on both sides.

The game was exciting to watch and the Red Hawks did put out a great effort, but the lack of maturity that some of the players exhibited needs to stop. MSU will return to action this weekend when they travel to St. Louis, Missouri, to take on Webster University and Washington University. Their next home game is next Wednesday afternoon against Rutgers-Newark at 3 pm.
