Mission to China: A Student’s Journal

By Justin Vellucci
Editor-in-Chief of The Montclarion

Justin Vellucci is a student representative on MSU's delegation to China, taking place on Oct 11-24. This article was wired to the Montclarion from Beijing.

It was like waking up from a dream. The bronze statue of Buddha stands 88 meters (234 feet) tall, towering over the rolling hills of Wuxi. The hundreds of steps leading to the base of the statue are laced with pagodas, and shrines, endless turrets where people flock to the burndown to burn candles and pray. The intricate engravings and calligraphy are from another world, crafted with attention to the finest detail and running over every surface like rivers.

When one stands in the shadow of the statue, so massive it almost swallows the entire mountainside, the Buddha looks as if it is holding the sun. As I walk into a nearby embankment, the horizon seems endless, filled with a million different stories and a million different silent stories, a thread entwined with thousands of years of history. It is then, and only then, that I begin to realize that I am in China.

Oct. 13-15 Shanghai:

Shanghai is an explosion in progress, a massive, living city where skyscrapers built in the last 10 years fight for space among clouds of city smog with old cement apartment buildings, clothes lines draped from one window to the next like lines connecting tiles in a mosaic. Billboards for Volkswagen and neon lights proclaiming the fervor of the cola wars and store-fronts, the vitality of times square in between that is the most fascinating - merchants attempting to draw westerners by shouting the few words in English that they know, pharmacies filled with remedies including tincture of opium, venison root and deer antlers, store fronts offering hand crafted figurines and traditional Chinese paintings, pieces of a city growing so rapidly yet trying not to lose hold of its history.

"Shanghai is an explosion in progress, a massive, living city...

-Justin Vellucci

Oct. 16 Nan Jing:

Though the population of Nan Jing is considerably smaller than our last stop - only three million to Shanghai's 13 - the streets tell a very similar story. Skyscrapers and recently constructed hotels tower over local shops and bus-stops filled with people. Bicycles fill the streets and pagodas with precisely crafted corners declare their presence among the chaos of daily life.

A short drive outside of the city, where tall trees tower over the roads like arches, is the mausoleum of Dr. Sun Yat-Sen, a leader and acting as corner stones. What is more impressive to the eye, however, is the massive, living city where tall trees tower over local shops and bus-stops filled with people. Bicycles fill the streets and pagodas with precisely crafted corners declare their presence among the chaos of daily life.

RACIAL STUDY CIRCLE—Montclair intends on expanding racial study circles, which were created to gain a better understanding of the ethnic diversity in this area, and to gain a perspective of how life has been for them in this community. The study consists of small groups ranging from eight to 12 people, but as the population expands Montclair is consistently looking for new participants.

SURVEY SHOWS PRIORITIES—Recently, a town survey done by Rutgers Citizen Group dealing with residential concerns shows that; local schools, availability of parking and the cost of housing are high on the list of priority for many citizens. The next step with this survey, which was completed by 25 percent of the population is to create a 15 citizen committee whose purpose will be working on ameliorating these problems.

DEAD BIRDS DISCOVERED—Dead birds were found on North East International Magnet School last Wednesday according to Principal Terry Scales. Although these birds weren't diagnosed with West Nile like Virus, precautions have been taken to stay on the safe side.

Investigation for Sex Offender Continues

By Rodney Point Du Jour

MSU police continue to investigate a sexual assault that occurred on Sept. 27 involving a Bohn Hall resident at a Clove Road Apartment, despite two false reports of sexual crimes at the same location.

The Bohn Hall resident said she arrived at her friend's Clove Road Apartment, but was not informed that there was a party. When she arrived, she decided to stay in the laundry room until the party was over.

Before she left, a male approached her and offered her to stay in what she believed to be his apartment. Once inside and on the couch, he began to admire her jewelry, as she became uncomfortable. The male began to touch the female student, who escaped without harm or injury.

This incident is still under investigation.

The student gave a description of the criminal and the University Police made a composite sketch of him.

The investigating officer, Sgt. Israel Rosado declined comment.

"We are investigating this like any other incident," Lt. Michael Postaski said. "We have no reason to believe this crime is untrue at this point."

Two false reports that were filed by students concerning campus safety evoked a campus-wide crime alert that left students stunned and outraged.

The first report was on Sept. 13 involving a false kidnapping. The second report of a false rape involved a female in Bohn Hall resident in her room.

If anyone has information regarding the identity of the criminal, please notify campus police at (973)655-5222.

Rally Against Pipe Line Scheduled

By Joy Thompson
Staff Writer

Student leaders will rally against the proposed MarketLink Pipeline Expansion Project on Oct. 25, SGA Vice-President Michael Kazimir said. The rally will include tying red ribbons along the proposed natural gas pipeline route.

The Red Ribbon Campaign, organized by the SGA and Conservation Club in conjunction with STOP, a coalition of municipalities, organizations and individuals, will begin at 8 a.m. and run until 10 a.m.

An open forum with speakers from the campus community and surrounding towns for questions and answers will be in front of the Student Center at 10 a.m. The speakers will include Patricia Hewitt, Vice-President of Business and Finance, and the Mayors of Little Falls, Clifton, and Montclair.

Bill Pascrell (D-NJ), Montclair's congressman in the U.S. House of Representatives will try to attend, Kazimir said.

Kazimir did not want to have the rally on Saturday with the rest of the coalition because more people would be on campus on Monday. Student participation and attendance from SGA President John Griffin, MSU President Susan Cole, faculty and administrators would be the logical reason to schedule it for Monday, Kazimir said.

The STOP coalition is organizing a rally for Saturday, and the Red Ribbon Campaign See RALLY on P. 6

University Police Raised the Speed Limit to 25 m.p.h. due to Complaints about the Previous Slow Speed

By Dan Lombardi
Staff Writer

The speed limit of the three main streets going through campus have been increased from 15 m.p.h. to 25 m.p.h., while the speed limit in all parking lots remains the same.

There was a survey where we monitored traffic and we felt the speed of 15 m.p.h. could be raised without a threat to anyone's life or property," said Sgt. Israel Rosado of the University Police.

The speed limit increase is the end result of a two-year process initiated by the campus police in which they had to go through the department of transportation, the board of trustees, and the board of trustees.

During the time, University police have been monitoring traffic speeds all over campus, pulling over motorists, and even employing the aid of portable radar monitoring units which are placed on strategic points of the campus. These units have large digital read out screens which show the driver what speed he is going.

After compiling all the data the police felt the average speed could be safely increased on campus, and had to submit a proposal to the BOT, which was accepted.

"I think it's good if it helps congestion," Sabrina Seger, a sophomore Biochemistry major, said.

So far according to police there have been no accidents due to speeding on campus this semester.

"We have run into no opposition at all in raising the speed," Rosado said.

The new speed limit will be strictly enforced according to police officials. The police will begin issuing municipal summons to anyone caught speeding and found in violation. Violators will then have to go to municipal court and will be subject to fines, points on their license or loss of driving privileges.

Only an hour before the administration announced where the university's biggest concert ever, the administration struck a deal with the tour's agent late yesterday to seal next week's $180,000 engagement featuring the Grammy award-nominated rock group, the Goo Goo Dolls.

In the new agreement between the university and the MP3.com Music and Technology tour agent William Morris, the administration will contribute $90,000, about 1/3 less than offered in last week's agreement.

Meanwhile, the SGA and Class One Concerts will contribute the same amount as set forth in the earlier agreement, $5,000 each.

"We have run into no opposition at all in raising the speed."

William Morris agreed to pick up the remaining $86,000, plus any unforeseen costs.

The concert will feature all of the concert's costs which includes paying artist like the Goo Goo Dolls and special guest Tonic, who will also play the stadium's first concert on Oct. 27.

But this event could have been axed if the agent did not except Van Baraan's offer. She said that any greater contribution would have been too risky.

"If it's that important to them, they should assume the risk," Van Baraan said.

Class One Concert President Julie Fleming said that agents agreed to the university's terms since they did not want to lose their tour's main media stop, which will include attention from Rollingstone magazine.

William Morris attorney, Matthew Burros, who negotiated with the university refused to comment.

As of yesterday, 400 tickets were bought from the Memorial Auditorium Box Office, while another 200 were bought via Telecharge, which started selling tickets to the general public on Tuesday. Meanwhile, 5,100 tickets are still available.

"It won't look good if Rollingstone comes and there is 1,000 people in the audience," Fleming said.

New lower ticket prices for non-MSU students also kept the university from not giving more, Van Baraan said.

Now the general public will pay $20 per ticket, the same price as a MSU student would, which slashed potential gross revenue by $47,000, Van Baraan said.

Admission to a "village" which will feature bands, interactive activities and a rave at sunset is also included in the ticket price. These activities will start at 1 p.m. in a parking lot adjacent to the stadium.

"Could you please do something about the fruit flies at the fruit salad bar? It's really disgusting. I would really like to eat pineapple again with out a swarm of flies floating over the food," Justin N. Bourgeois, continue to eat there.

"It happens every year," he said. Although food workers do their best to keep foods covered, in the process of serving and rewrapping, flies get trapped.

Rakowsky admits that there is a problem but that "there is little we [dining services] can do about the flies." According to Kevin Rakowsky, this problem has been around for some time and it does not only affect Freeman Dining Hall. In fact, "fruit flies can be found in all the dining halls," Rakowsky said.

"I don't know how to deal with this," Rakowsky said. On the other hand, while dining services welcomes the food keep wrapping, flies get trapped. Part of the problem lies in the fact that gates to the dining halls are constantly open. Students open windows and screens allowing flies to get inside. Once the flies get in, they are immediately attracted to the food.

"We do not like our customers to deal with this," Rakowsky said. On the other hand, while dining services welcomes students' suggestions, sprying food with chemicals is out of the question and using lids would be the same as using the plastic wrap, he said.

"It is convenient and in general the food looks good," he said. Andy Bort, also a Freeman resident, continues to eat there. "It is convenient and in general the food looks good," he said.

"The primary policy change took place because of the federal legislation amendment of 1998, making it mandatory for police to be notified of an underage person in violation of alcohol laws," Kane said.

"This summons can result in the student being forced to appear in court. Since school began, about a dozen students have been summoned campus-wide," Kane said.

Protest Planned Against Installation of Transco Pipe Line

By Elizabeth A. Hutchinson

Members of the Conservation Club are working with the SGA and Sierra Club to help raise environmental awareness surrounding the proposed Transco gas pipeline that is to run through parts of campus and the surrounding communities, Chris Massotto, President of the Conservation Club said.

The club plans to express their concerns at a protest scheduled for this Saturday. They hope to get a large portion of the taxpayers to oppose the proposed line, according to Mary Pavlatyan, Vice President of the Conservation Club.

“We are going to petition this in surrounding towns, to try to get the voters to sign,” Pavlatyan said.

The club members are hoping to make this an interest to the community and students, said Massotto.

“We are going to have to learn more about the environmental issues surrounding the gas line so we [the club] will be able to answer all student questions,” Pavlatyan said.

Jeff Tittel, from the New Jersey chapter of the Sierra Club, is working with several community organizations to inform the public about possible environmental risks.

“The environmental impact of the pipeline includes hundreds of acres of wetlands,” Tittel said.

Tittel also said that the Sierra Club has concerns about the pipeline interfering with endangered species.

“Many areas in the route include endangered species. Some of the affected species include the Swamp Pink [plant], the Red-Shouldered Hawk and the Bog Turtle,” Tittel said.

The pipeline is scheduled to run through the Great Swamp in Morris County and many other "pocket" wetlands.

The Sierra Club is working in a combined effort with the STOP (Coalition of Municipalities Organizations and Individuals) to protest the proposed line.

The line will also affect a large portion of the New Jersey State Green Acres property, said Jeanne Donlon for the Department of Environmental Protection (DEP).

According to the Transco pipeline proposal assessment the line will disrupt 29 parks. The study found that Morris County has two parks and one crossing and Union Township has one park affected by the proposed Transco line.

The Green Acres program was developed in 1961 to help meet the conservation needs of New Jersey, Donlon said.

According to Tittel, "over 390,000 acres of conservation and recreation have been preserved, and hundreds of the public parks have been developed with Green Acres funds."

The Williams Companies, the owner of Transco, has made a promise to buy two-fold any Green Acres land that will be disrupted by the proposed construction.

“Transco agreed to donate [in sensitive areas] two acres of land for every one acre of Green Acres property disrupted by construction,” Dan Captiotti a representative from Transco said.

Oct. 20-22 Beijing:

Night had fallen in Beijing and the buildings in Tian’annmen square were illuminated, an obelisk bathed in white light at the center of the largest square in the world standing across the road from an immense portrait of Mao Zedong.

The square itself, surrounded by government buildings, reminds those passing through it that they are in the capital of one of the largest and most powerful nation in the world. We walk through the forbidden city, the shadows of buildings brought to life as they fall on small cement bridges, statues of lions, and military officers standing guard near the square.

Men with bicycle carts offer rides around the square for 50 Yuan (roughly 6 dollars) and cameras are regularly clicking and flashing everyone walking through the city wanting to record the moment that they set foot in the square.

The city is large in a way that Shanghai is not. While development and the world towards modernization are still clear in freshly constructed skyscrapers and hotels, the street merchants and local flare is replaced here with the financial district rivaling Wall Street, streets that appear to be miles wider, highways, traffic lights, congestion.

The bicycles of Nan Jing are replaced with legions of Volkswagen taxis, buses, and Mercedes Benzes. When a light turns red, everything stops, the organized chaos of Shanghai corners a far cry as pedestrians wait with traffic lights to step off curbs.

Upon arriving, we hike up huge stone slabs of earth at alarmingly steep angles, making our way to a cable car that will aid us in our ascent to this man-made wonder. Upon reaching the precipice of the wall, I turn around to open my eyes to a world that takes my breath away.

The experience of visiting the Great Wall of China is an experience beyond words. Nothing can accurately or fully describe it.

I speak with He Wag­ ling, one of the students from UIBE who has taken the English name of Joyce, about the magnitudes of the wall, the thousands that died in its construction, and what it has come to represent for China over the centuries. We walk across stones and pathways that are well traveled and aged by weather and time, overlooking the mountains, the sun almost within reach, so close that we could almost cut it with a fast hand strokes.

Today, after a meeting to discuss business education and distance learning at the University of International Business and Economics (UIBE), two students escort the delegation to the Great Wall of China. Cut Power Leaves Bohn and Student Center in the Dark

The Student Center and Bohn Hall residents were in the dark for 17 hours on Oct. 15 because a plumbing contracting company had cut a power line with a jack hammer while working on Bohn Hall’s sewer system. The Marasco Plumbing Co. was connecting Bohn Hall’s sewer plumbing to the main sewage system when one of the workers accidentally severed the power line. The worker hacked the power line with a jack-hammer, which he was using to make a hole in the concrete that covered the sewer system. The worker would not reveal his identity. Another outside contractor was called in to fix the electrical problem as MSU maintenance workers hurried to set up a back-up generator.

“ar were forced to close down and send workers home. “It’s all a part of the experience,” Richard Ammerman, manager of the bookstore said. “We’re just waiting for an update, we’ve been without power for a couple of hours now.”

There were some students going about their business and adapting to the darkness. Three students of the C.L.U.B. organization were painting signs in the hallway, where there was light.

“We have fun anywhere we go,” Paul Bonica, sophomore said. Some students were not as eager to adapt. WMSC 90.3 FM was on the air when the power went down and left them in the dark.

“We needed to make sure we had power going to the bathrooms in Bohn Hall,” Oberhofer said. “Otherwise, we would’ve flooded the bathroom through the toilets. The toilets would have backed up.”

MSU officials are not sure who will have to pick up the tab for the power outage.

“It still needs to be worked out,” Oberhofer said.

Steam Valve Malfunctions, Chilling Stone Residents

By Alexandra Vallejo
Staff Writer

Stone Hall’s fire alarm left residents outside in the rain on Wednesday morning at 12:45 a.m. A steam valve malfunctioned, Brian Clyburn, Stone Hall Director, said. This caused an excessive amount of steam to filter through the hallways where it set off the fire alarms.

Three fire trucks were on the scene within minutes, and they used fans to clear out the steam. Stone Hall’s 109 residents were told that they could wait either in the Webster Hall main lounge or in the Rathskellar.

All residents were allowed back into the building approximately one hour later. The water was shut down from 12:2 a.m.

“This gets you so mad. They said that the problem was fixed and it wasn’t. What in world am I paying for,” Stone Hall resident Joy Olsen said.

Residents said that throughout Wednesday there was no hot water, and the cold water would come on in spurts.

“It has been taken care of, but the leak was not fixed,” maintenance personnel said. The valve malfunction is expected to be fixed by today.

Another fire alarm went off this past Saturday at 2:10 p.m., also due to maintenance problems.

Maintenance personnel were adjusting water temperature when the steam set off the alarms. 10 residents were evacuated, but were allowed back into the building within 15 minutes.

Halloween Is More Than Trick-Or-Treating and Candy

By Leah Soltis
Staff Writer

Can you remember back when you were little, and the minute the calendar flipped from September to October, you started bugging your mom about what you could be for Halloween. It was one of the best parts about that dreaded month when school finally got back into full swing...it was officially time to go pumpkin picking!

Halloween, the time to dress up in silly costumes and go out with friends and see how much candy you could gather together in one night, carrying your old pillowcase in one hand as you rooted through your free trash with the other. And when else could you experiment with make-up and crazy clothes without getting yelled at by your mother?

Things have changed over the years, to say the least. Back in the day, Halloween meant making yourself look as different as possible, going out and begging for candy, no matter what other people think—did you worry when you wore some insane costume when you were seven? Be creative. Be original. Have fun with it!

1. Going to a party? Make sure you dress to impress and it's effects on their families. At that moment everyone was sure of our purpose in being there that day. They were ready for the journey.

2. Before you even go to any party, try trick-or-treating again. If you feel silly going by yourself, offer to take a little brother or sister, cousin, or even a neighbor whose parents would probably love a night off. Besides, going trick-or-treating with a little kid is a great way to let their excitement rub off on you and guarantee some laughs. But if you want the candy for yourself, just put on a mask so no one knows you are a scamming college kid trying to get some free candy.

3. Plan a road trip. Everyone has heard rumors about the scary haunted houses all over New Jersey, including all of the Pine Barrens. Go searching for the New Jersey Devil, or go anywhere where the long, dark roads will most likely freak you and your friends out. You could drive to Salem, Mass. to check out where the Salem Witch Hunt actually took place, or check out the town in Maryland where The Blair Witch Project was filmed. Don't be afraid to be afraid!

4. Finally, if all else fails, get some friends together and rent some scary movies. Check out the original Halloween, or Friday the 13th, or try The Shining. Invest in some popcorn and candy, and turn out all the lights, and even the most normal house will suddenly get spooky!

But whatever you do, try something to reclaim that part of you that used to plan your costume months in advance and used to run from house to house, competing with your friends to see who could get the most candy. It's a guarantee that you'll enjoy yourself!

OO! That probably didn’t scare you, but if you are the type of person who looks for frights, there is a haunted house you should definitely see. Located off of Route 23 North in Wayne, the Hallow Graves haunted house will coax a scream from more than just the easily alarmed.

"I was definitely frightened," Kate Mickelson, a student at MSU, said. This haunted experience begins by purchasing an admission ticket. ($8.50 for adults, $6.50 for children) The customer is then directed to a line of people awaiting entrance into the haunted house. The wait is 20-30 minutes, but line-goers are not left to their own devices while waiting. A series of lighting and sound effects, as well as the more-than-occasional scream from those touring the house, assault your senses as you await to experience the house for yourself.

If this isn’t enough to hold your attention, a succession of costumed monsters do all they can to give you a scare. Some of the costumes pertain of cheap masks worn by otherwise normally dressed individuals. Others are fully dressed to frighten, such as a Michael Myers clone (villain of the Halloween series of thriller movies) who, down to the exact mannerisms, is an uncomfortably close double for the real Mike.

"Oh my God, they (the characters) chased us. I feared for my life at times," said Jennifer Curry, also an MSU student.

Then there is the haunted house itself. At first appearance, the haunted house looks to be little more than a small squat structure that happens to be elaborately decorated for Halloween. This misconception is dispelled as soon as you set foot inside.

The end of the tour brings you back outside again to, as one of the characters puts it, "the most frightening attraction of all, reality." At this point, doughnut and apple cider are served as refreshments to perk up the frightened spirit.

When all is said and done, the Hallow Graves haunted house is a memorable experience, and whether the departing guest of the house has laugh or fear to recollect, or both, the one thing he or she won’t feel is cheated.

"It was definitely worth the money, I’d do it again," said Mickelson.

Those who would like to do it for the first time can call (973)423-1957 for details on dates, times, and directions to the site of the haunted house, or visit http://www.hauntedamerica.com/nj/hallowgrave/index.htm. on the Internet.

FIVE MINUTES OF FAME

The Bourgeois Gentlemen, an adaptation of the wonderful Molière farce, is currently running in the Studio Theatre as an interesting modernized adaptation of a period piece. Ron Russell’s terribly witty modifications truly allow the satire to transcend the years.

The plot focuses on the attempts of Mr. Jourdain to transform himself from wealthy suburbanite to cultured urbanite. After being accosted at the ballet, he uses his vast wealth to lure the performers to his home. He forces the dance master and the music master to teach him their respective arts, and the attempt fails miserably. To further advance his progress into society, he takes on a fencing master and a man of philosophy.

The various teachers try to instruct the man, but it becomes apparent that he is a lost cause. Frustration leads the teachers to argue, compare the relative importance of their crafts, and live like a parasite off of Jourdain. Mrs. Jourdain and their maid, Nicole, talk about a character named Dorante. He is a man of society, but of little means, and lives like a parasite off of Jourdain’s living room. This, even more than the ever-present lackeys, portrayed by Michael Finnerty and Robert Bird, entered with bits of slapstick comedy. These two were so in tune with each other, one could think they had been doing this for years.

The performances that really made the show were from the four “masters of art.” Gus Ibranyi, the music master, and Julie Barber, the dancing master, shared an amusing chemistry, as they subtly berated each other in their lessons. Barber’s talent as a dancer also showed through in her role as dancing master. The fencing master, whose brash entrance and stinging comments drove the arguments to near violence, was portrayed by Sam Pizzo who clearly communicated the arrogance of the character. The philosophy master, played by David Meditz (who also played Mufti in Act II), really stole the show. His character does get all the best material, but quite a bit of it had to be delivered with perfect comic timing and subtlety. On both counts, Meditz delivered well. The scene in which he is introduced for the “lesson” was quite possibly the highlight of Act One.

The set, designed by John Figola, was quite well conceived. Presented in the full round, it consisted of merely a few movable furniture pieces, and an ornate, stylized floor on which nearly all of the action would take place. All possible entrances to the theater were utilized, adding to the chaotic feel of the play as a whole. The lighting colors did quite a bit for the set, by keeping the audience well lit, and casting a red-orange glow over the room in general. This, even more than the physical seating set-up, pulled the audience into the show, as if they were seated in the Jourdain’s living room.

Some reluctance to see a modern adaptation of a Molière farce is understandable. Going into the theatre, one does not know what quality to expect from the interpretation. This production of The Bourgeois Gentlemen is pleasantly surprising. The story line modernizes well, and Russell seemed to encapsulate most of the original message. The anarchistic feel of the show, with modern props juxtaposed against period costumes, never fades, and adds to the strange feel of the production. Russell’s adaptations do not overwhelm the story in the least, and do make for a comedic evening.

In short, The Bourgeois Gentleman, or The Suburban Urbanite, is a well-conceived show, carried out with a minimum of flaws. It is definitely worth viewing, as it is quite an enjoyable piece. It has been running in the Studio Theatre for one weekend and will continue its run on Oct. 21, 22 & 23 at 8 p.m., and Oct. 22 at 1 p.m. Come on out and support your fellow students.

Earth to Venus: Tori's New CD

By Kathleen Savino
Staff Writer

S he's done it again. It's been a little over a year since Tori Amos's last release, From The Choirgirl Hotel. It's a surprise to hear that Tori is not only coming out with a whole CD of new songs, but a live compilation as well.

Tori's first release Little Earthquakes, was an introspective "diary" of anger, love, and self-understanding. With this album, she sparked an underground movement of worshipers who found that they shared the same feelings, fears and insecurities as her. Since then Amos seems to be in a state of perpetual metamorphosis. From one album to the next. This is one of her greatest talents. Amos has managed to tap into so many facets of herself through her music and her lyrics. Her words often read like poetry, sometimes they make sense and sometimes they don't.

She is in some ways a surrealist, but no one can really pin a definition on Amos or her music.

Amos keeps us guessing. To Venus and Back is a compilation of songs which fits no particular definition. The opening track, "Bliss," has an intrinsic beauty and meaning to it. It goes back to her past, her father, and a personal need to have happiness that is private because it might not be acceptable.

"Juarez" is a deeply haunting song, it sounds as if something has ever done. Her voice is altered to a sound that one cannot adequately explain on paper. She wrote the song about hundreds of women who were raped in Juarez, Mexico. This song has almost an atmospheric quality to it. It creates it's own landscape. Also, the repetition of the words, "no angel came," is unnerving and echoes back to her own rape experiences.

"Concertina" is a song that seems to be telling a story of sorts. It is a little more personal and straightforward. Amos's manipulation of sound is amazing on every single track. There are so many individual sounds in this song, creating a world in and of itself sprung from her past. "Lust" starts off with separate rhythms, and then the piano joins in. "Shade" evoking a feeling of the mystical, has Amos singing "anybody knows you can conjure anything by the dark of the moon."

Honesty, the literal meaning of these songs are strange and seem to create something, rather than stand for it. The trick to appreciating Amos's music is to open yourself to the sounds and the music, not the literal meaning. "Datura" is a list of what Amos grows in her garden. The only narrative words are "is there room in my heart/ for you to follow your heart/and not need more blood/ from the tip of your star."

Some would argue that these are not real lyrics. This song, like much contemporary music, questions what lyrics have to be, what is the meaning to it. It goes back to the next. This is one of her greatest talents. Since then the Pink." "Corny Girl" is a classic, and I'm glad she chose it because she always plays it with a certain tenderness. When live, "Cooling" is a B-side from Choirgirl, with a beautiful melody. Amos also talks a little about herself, and into the ability to change. Tori Amos lets loose in the studio and on stage through her new double CD set "To Venus and Back."

Movies to Put you in the Mood

By Christine Cheplic
Staff Writer

It's that time of year again when knife-wielding psychopaths take center stage. Halloween is just around the corner, and, as usual, the movie studios are sure to attempt to lure us into the theaters to watch this year's display of horror films. But why pay $8.50 to see a recycled story line and a cliché of film scares? Instead, invite a few friends over, shut off all the lights and pop a true horror movie in the VCR.

The horror genre has had its ups and downs in the film industry. It is too often ignored. But when the genre is recognized, Hollywood sees it as just another trend and will mass-produce the same idea, cast the same popular teen actors of the week and teenyboppers will foolishly flock to the theater.

Horror films today are too often made with dollar signs in mind rather than the art of the film. That is why, in order to get the ultimate experience, its best to visit your local video store.

Naturally, Halloween is a perfect film for this time of year. John Carpenter made this film with a low budget and unknown actors, which resulted in creating a masterpiece. Many have tried to imitate it (Jason is merely a knockoff of Michael Myers) but none will ever achieve its brilliance. At the time, the film's plot was a novel idea. It maintained a good balance of suspense and horror without indulging in excessive gore. Oh, and three words: Jamie Lee Curtis.

Though none of its sequels reach its greatness, they are worth watching for fans of Myers. (Except for part III which has nothing to do with him). Each sequel revolves around some plot that advances the story of Myers, although the stories are not always that good. Some do not involve extended chase scenes, and killings get more creative and explicitly violent with each movie.

The original Nightmare on Elm Street is also a well produced horror film. In the film, Freddy is a true villain. In the sequel, he becomes more of a comical character and the fear factor gets slowly erased. Freddy has a unique charisma, which certainly makes these movies enjoyable. You watch these with one eye open and one closed because, while you know he will most brutally slash his next victim to an awful death, you just have to see in what new way he will do it. Plus, Freddy has the best dialogue of any horror icon.

A more recent film which has already made its star off in the first ten minutes like Psycho, Kevin Williamson's script is noth- ing short of genius in its parody of the redundancy horror themes and plots. Plus, the film keeps you guessing. Unlike in previous movies, the mask wearing slasher is unknown to the audience.

The Exorcist has topped many horror films "best of" lists over the years. It is a film that has superior gross moments (vomiting on the priest) and a supreme sense of freakiness. The concept itself is unsettling and the visual imagery will never escape your mind.

Of course, all horror films, slasher films specifically, owe a little to Hitchcock's Psycho (the ORIGINAL film). The "shower scene" is one of the best film sequences ever. The film is suspenseful and scary without being gory. The psychological aspect of Norman Bates' character, combined with Anthony Perkins' fabulous performance create for a multi-dimensional psycho.

As many horror fans know, Stephen King novels are often done injustice when made into film. Usually, the filmmaker butchers the story and the movie cannot even hold a candle to the horror created by King's words. However, both Carrie and The Shining are worth viewing. Kubrick's The Shining strays from King's story and provides a different interpretation of the characters. But, it is a wonderful film in its own right. Its eeriness lies in the character of the Overlook Hotel. The haunted house theme is revamped and done in an original way. Plus, Nicholson plays a great madman.

Carrie is a great film for anyone who ever felt left out in high school. The horror lies in the fact that Carrie has telekinetic powers. The film is more story centered and doesn't get real scary until the end. But, the prom scene is fabulous and the final scene leaves you with a good jump-out-of-your-seat scare.

However, if you are more of a fan of gore, you might want to view the cult classic Texas Chainsaw Massacre. A chainsaw is definitely a pleasant change from the typical knife killings. And the fact that the story is based on a true occurrence is just freaky. If you want something more vivid than B-movie gore than see anything in the series of Death Scenes.

If you are looking for a fun and frightening movie night this Halloween, these are some suggestions. There are plenty of great horror movies out there. Gore, violence, murder, and suspense are what makes Horror-gore. Just stay away from anything scaring anyone from Dawson's Creek.

On Campus Bands Take the Ratt by Storm

As an impromptu warm up, Frusciante ran through a few bars of "Like a Rolling Stone," complete with an unmistakable Bob Dylan accent. Before finishing, he slipped effortlessly into a Jakob Dylan impersonation, ending with a scratchy Tom Waits wail. Karpowich, on his set, picked up the beat right away. The common listener would not be able to tell if this musical interlude was truly improvisational and spur of the moment, or if it was actually planned. Another of the duo's talents was their ability to be comfortable enough with their instruments and each other so that they could easily improvise and work off one another.

Before launching into their full set, Frusciante explained the origin of their band's name. "Remember Emmitt Oake's Jug Band Christmas? Remember how Emmitt entered his band into a battle of the bands? Remember who they competed against?" A few members of the crowd, after having their memories jogged, were able to respond, "Riverbottom Nightmare Band." For those of you who may not remember, the Riverbottom Nightmare Band was a sort of back woods muddet, folk punk band, and apparently, Frusciante and Karpowich found a correlation between the Muppets' music and their own, at least enough to change their name from Liquid to their current moniker.

Riverbottom Nightmare Revival is truly a punk/fool rock band, with influences ranging from "Dave Matthews Band" and "Hum" to "Juliana Hatfield." Their set was a mix of original music and covers of "Man on the Moon" by R.E.M., "My Own Worst Enemy" by Lit and "Have You Ever Seen the Rain?" by Creedence Clearwater Revival. Original songs included the loud and fast "Second Chance," a goofy "Glen's Song," and the pretty "Find Piece," dedicated to the band's good friend Shannon, of John Oakes Band.

Riverbottom Nightmare Revival's selection of songs displayed their talent and versatility, something few bands truly possess. Most rock bands today consist of power chords and 4/4 rhythms. (4/4 rhythm is the standard 1-2-3-4-1-2-3-4 beat most rock fans recognize). The John Oakes Band, on the other hand, has a mix of original music and covers of "Man on the Moon," "Have You Ever Seen the Rain?" and "Macarena." "The Oak Man" is the next big dance craze. Quite basically, "The Oak Man" traces, through dance, the life of an oak tree, from acorn to full grown-tree, and once again, words can not simply describe the experience. The crowning audience participation song was, however, a completely John Oakes Band creation. Look out "Hand Jive," "Hustle," "Electric Slide" and "Macarena." "The Oak Man" is the next big dance craze. Quite basically, "The Oak Man" traces, through dance, the life of an oak tree, from acorn to full grown-tree, and once again, words can not simply describe the experience. The very end of the John Oakes set was marked by the trivia give away. Correct answers won a free John Oakes CD. Questions ranged from "Where is básstefan from?" (Answer: Austria) to "What is the air speed velocity of an unladen swallow?" (Answer: African or European?). A fun end to a fun night.

For those of you who were unfortunate enough to have missed the performance, you should definitely check them out and get in on the fun.

What do you think of the proposed pipeline and its construction on campus?

"The effects of the pipeline will be nothing short of disastrous. The disruption of the natural wildlife and the disruption of the current way of life for the students and the surrounding communities is absurd. I think that it is extremely foolish to even consider such an untenable measure."

William N. Lanahan, Freshman, Undeclared

Colleen Halpin, Freshman, Sociology

"The placement of a gas line is a potential disaster. An explosion would destroy the two most densely populated dorms. There is nothing good about this for the money and does not care about the safety of our residents."

Matthew Arraiz, Soph., Computer Science

I think it is going to effect our campus in a negative way. It will be an interruption to campus life, and more importantly it will put the residents at risk.

Do you think that 21-year-old students should be allowed to drink in the residence halls?

Let your voice be heard!

This year in MSU's residence halls there is a larger price to pay for being caught drinking underage. In the past, if an underage resident was caught consuming alcohol they could face a possible fine and be put on probation by Residence Life. Now, because of a new federal legislation amendment, it is mandatory for police to be notified when an underage person is in violation of alcohol laws. What effect will this have on the MSU resident? Well, now instead of a Residence Life slap on the hand, you will be issued a summons by the MSU Department of Safety and Security, giving you a possible date to appear in court, and a blemish on your permanent record. Some students are already experiencing the effects of the new policy. According to Residence Life officials, about 12 students have been issued summonses in the first month and a half of the semester so far.

Some students have expressed their dissatisfaction with the new policy. One Blanton Hall resident was quoted as saying, "I've been to other schools where the R.A.'s would be drinking with the students...not here. Once you drink here it becomes a matter of fines, meetings, probation and now summonses. It's all too much."

Hopefully this ignorant attitude doesn't speak for all of MSU's residents. On-campus students should be pleased with the new tougher alcohol policy, as it is there to protect them. While those who may want to drink and party in the dorms may be inconvenienced by the new rule, it is the law abiding citizens who will hopefully be protected from the problems that come along with alcohol abuse, especially in the environment of a dormitory.

Most of us are already aware of the effects that alcohol can have on us personally. Health problems and poor scholastic performance can result from alcohol abuse. However, that is beside the point. It is the effect that one's use of alcohol can have on the rights of those around them that justifies tough penalties for underage alcohol use in the residence halls.

Studies have shown that those under the influence of alcohol are more likely to commit crimes, such as theft or sexual assaults - definitely problems at this and any other university. We are willing to believe that if this is true, then it is more likely that someone under the influence of alcohol could pull a false fire alarm, one of residents' top concerns about living in the dorms. Also, most campus residents have experienced living next door to the "party" room, where the residents are always loud, drinking, and having people over at all hours of the night. Are these the kind of conditions that you would want to live under? As Residence Life Director Melinda O'Brien said, the new policy is in the best interest of the residents of the dorms. It is about time that more is being done to curb the amount of drinking that goes on in the residence halls. Hopefully the amount of problems that go along with it will lessen as well.

With any luck, this policy will continue to benefit the on-campus students who are truly interested in living here so they can receive an education, and would like to do so in a civil environment. If not being able to drink underage without facing penalties under the law is too much of a problem for certain residents, then maybe they should reconsider their decision to become a college student in the first place.

Slavery Alive and Well With Sudan’s Persecution of Christians

As a graduate student and Alumni of MSU who has been familiar with the emergency medical services for several years, I am deeply concerned in regards to EMS on campus.

It was implied that the services provided by the EMS organization are makeshift and inadequate, but with the sole effort of the Campus Police the patient would have been in a dire situation. It seems apparent to me that the members of MSU EMS are doing the best they can under adverse conditions, only to meet very little support and understanding from the campus.

This is a situation I understand all too well. It is a shame that there are so few dedicated individuals who will selflessly devote their time and effort to those in need only to be thwarted by negative feedback.

I commend Lt. Barbosa and all the members who are willing to place themselves in a difficult situation by responding to emergencies alone.

...the members of MSU EMS are doing the best they can under adverse conditions, only to meet very little support, purelty out of concern for the well-being of the patient. It seems obvious that utilizing the campus police in such situations would be beneficial for all involved.

Holiday Bias One of MSU’s ‘Serious Problems’

I am not a very political individual, but the situation in Sudan, or to sponsor the Sudan cause such as this.

It seems, and I am not the only one who would agree, that this school has some serious problems and its about time that this school prefers to treat with respect.

This school caters more to some ethnic groups more than others. We have Martin Luther King Jr. day, a holiday at this school, when most places continue on with everyday life. I am forced by the school to “observe” a holiday that has no importance to me. We do not have a holiday for St. Patrick’s Day or recently, we did not have a holiday for Columbus Day. No Jewish holidays either. Now the Martin Luther King Jr. holiday is something special and important for blacks, and so is St. Patrick’s Day for the Irish, and Columbus Day for the Italians. Why do the blacks get a holiday and no other ethnic group? It was the Italians and Irish that founded this country, yet they still get no respect. It seems to me that this school prefers to support certain ethnic groups more than others.

Something that stunned me was that Oct. 11, 1999 was designated “Coming Out Day” for the gay-lesbian community. This was at the Columbus Day, yet somehow it was pushed to the side and not given any respect. Would do the same on a Black or Spanish holiday? I think not. With respect to the Gay/Lesbian community, I think its more important for blacks, and so is St. Patrick’s Day for the Irish, and Columbus Day for the Italians. Why do the blacks get a holiday and no other ethnic group? It was the Italians and Irish that founded this country, yet they still get no respect. It seems to me that this school prefers to support certain ethnic groups more than others.

Students Should be Aware of the Crimes Against Women in Afghanistan

This past weekend I was watching an episode of 7th Heaven and it was talking about the treatment of women in Afghanistan by the Taliban. I was absolutely appalled because I had no idea that this was going on and I am a Muslim girl who is not from Afghanistan but from Bangladesh. The episode made me cry because of some of the rules that the Taliban have. Further research, I found out that 7th Heaven only touched upon the issue.

I looked up the issue on the internet and found a lot of information about the things that are going on in Afghanistan.

I had originally thought that if a woman did not cover her head she could get arrested. I had no clue that they could get stoned or even killed. Some other rules that have been placed on the women there are:

A woman could get beaten if her shoes make noise. It is a sin for a woman to be heard in any way.

Women can’t wear makeup or any kind of accessories. There have been cases where women’s fingers have been cut off for wearing nail polish.

Women are not allowed to leave their homes without a male escort.

But, these aren’t the only regulations. There are many more horrible things that I could tell you about, but you would get much more information if you go to www.rawa.org.

I was hoping that if The Montclarion could write an article about this, everyone on campus would be made aware of the nightmare that is happening in Afghanistan.

When you are laying down and drifting into that short slumber at 4 a.m., as you desperately try to catch a few hours of rest before your mind decides, "Hey, his guard is down!" and they should be yours, too. When else? When else but after you wake up, as you desire to find dreams are my greatest fear, of us have a hidden brain down there that does a majority of the thinking. I know several women that will vouch for this — when it comes to me, I think with my crotch and not my head. There is a common misconception about dreams, though. People think that dreams can be rationalized. I doubt this, because I have a hard enough time understanding people when they are wide awake, much less when they are sleeping and their crotch takes their imagination on a joy ride. For example, can anyone find the deep hidden meaning of this dream that I had just last week?

I was walking on my way to class when it occurred to me that it was a bit cold out. I thought to myself, "Damn, maybe I should get a jacket." I dismissed this and figured why bother. I would only take it off in five minutes and complain that it was too warm. When I was about to walk into Dickinson Hall, I came to the cruel realization that I was naked. Now if this was real life, I would have gone back to my room, put some clothes on, and returned to the class without Little Jimmy pok ing out. Yet my mind was not itself and I proceeded into class saying to myself, "Damn, I can’t believe that I forgot to get dressed. Oh, well, hope no one notices.

Well, everyone in my dream class did notice. Lucky for me that my subconscious was very generous. In the dream world, I have an excellent body and I’m hung like a horse. Class went on as normal, with the exception of people letting me know that I was naked. As if didn’t know! I hate it when people tell you obvious things. Or once they do and someone says, “Thank you, Captain Obvious." Why? I don’t know, it just bothers me. I heard somewhere that this is a common dream among teens. Please, I hope that someone else is having this dream and will go to school naked, because I hate being the only nude one in class. I asked my father to analyze it for me. He said, “Son, it’s your inner soul crying out. You want to be naked, you want to be free, and you want to go to the nude beach.”

For those of you who have missed out on meeting him, he is a big red man who looks like Santa Claus. On the weekends, he goes to the nude beach. Some fathers play football, my dad gets naked and goes to the beach. So — go figure — I would want to be naked like him. Like father, like son.

Now I doubt that everyone knows the true hidden secrets of the nude beach. We have all heard stories, but I don’t think that any of you have truly experienced the monstrousity of it all. In Europe, no one is ugly. These beautiful people strip down to nothing, head to the beach with bathing suits in one hand and expensive champagne in the other, and bathe naked.

In America, it is a bit different. America — a country of ugly people who do ugly things — has nude beaches covered in ugly people who are even uglier when they are naked. No offense to anyone that goes to the nude beach that may be reading this. If you do in fact go to the nude beach, I didn’t see your naked ass there. When I do see your bare butt and conclude that it is nice, I will retract my statement and apologize to you. But, until I see you there naked, the people at the beach are still ugly. When I noticed that the only people there are enormous, not too attractive, and certainly not sexy, it came to my attention that being naked was not for me.

Anyway, I decided that my dad was an idiot and his analysis of my dream was totally wrong. Our dreams are the most bizarre things. Here is another recent dream I had. Last night, I dreamed I was eating marshmallows, and when I woke up, my pilllow was gone. Now I am supposed to understand my mind when it produces such garbage? Freud was a big believer that dreams reflect very much upon one’s personality. Yes, how is it the case that you are a six-year-old boy and you wake up in a cold sweat and soggy He-Man pajamas.
because you had a dream of a clown chasing you?
The worst part about dreams is that they never work your way. No matter how many times you dream, you never end the way you want them to. Mine always end with me waking up all alone in my bed. Where is the fun in that? The worst dreams are when you are lying in bed and you are supposed to get up, and you start to dream that you are getting up. And yet, you're still naked in bed, wishing that you hadn't slept with that sheep last night.

What types of dreams are there? Well, here is a stereotypical nightmare. It consists of you being in the worst possible scenario with no way out. You keep waking up your roommate time and again when you scream, "No, I didn't mean to sleep with your daughter!" They usually end pretty bad and never have good effects unless you like having the wits scared out of you before you even put some pants on. Another is the sex dream. We can all admit that we have sexual thoughts about each other. We all know that we find other people to be sexy. Sometimes we wish we could take them to a deserted island, dress them up like Little Bo Peep, and live out our merry little lives. For many nude beach...

Rob Chesney led the MSU soccer team to the NCAA quarter finals and to a Conference Championship in 1989. He was also named "College Player of the Year" that same year. He says that the friendships he made were the most memorable moments in soccer for him.

The year is now 1999. Coach Chesney is in his ninth year as head coach of a soccer program that has ranked in the top 20 in the last 10 years, including as high as sixth, and an East Coast Athletic Conference Championship. But it was at the age of five that Chesney began playing soccer in the town of Kearny, which he termed as, "a soccer rich town." He came to MSU and got his Masters in Sports Administration after playing several years for the men's soccer team.

After he graduated, he became an assistant coach with Masur, who Chesny credits years for the men's soccer team. But, this year has been a little different.

Unlike last year's team, which included an All-American, All-Defense, and an international player from Bolivia, three key players that were experienced with age and knowledge of the game, this year's team has a freshman and two sophomores starting at those positions.

Rob Chesney feels that in soccer, every position is key, not like other sports where having one good player means all the difference. He feels all the positions are important, therefore, he needs everyone on the same page to be better. Yet, he points out that if he was building a team he would scout out the opposing teams, make game plans, and prepare the team for the game.

He added that he was thankful for being given the opportunity to be part of the MSU program. His goal is to win the National Championship with this team. But, this year he expects the sophomores and juniors to compete at top level.

During the off-season Chesney hopes recruitment goes as well as last year, and next year he expects the sophomores and juniors to compete at top level. The playoff chances are still alive even though they lose on Saturday. This Saturday's game against New Jersey City College is a needed win. Even though they may lose, chances of making the playoffs are very slim. But, if they beat Jersey City the coach said they control their own destiny going into the final week. He loves coaching and feels that he is involved in a great program. He is happy with the players and hopes to keep the program successful. "Its great to see players come back and be proud that they play soccer at MSU."

The team struggles at times while at other times it puts up season highs in goals. Inexperience at the beginning of the season, said Coach Chesney, was what hurt the team this year. He said his players did not understand how important conference games were and how hard it was to win those games on the road. Unlike high school soccer where "...pure talent wins..." in college every one is needed to win games.

He feels that the one thing his young team has learned since the season started is that they know they need to be prepared for every game. Every game was a learning process and allowed the team to get to know each other. Although the earlier part of the schedule was easier than the latter part, the fact that the team was young made it impartial.

He also feels the one way to earn respect from his players is by being honest with them and show them that there is no hidden agenda and that the coaching staff puts out the best possible team to win on the field every time they play. They should know that the coaching staff wants to win as much as them.

Coach Chesney gives a lot of credit to the way the program has gone to his assistant coaches, Gus Morrmarco, Gerry McKeown, and Mark Williams, who help him scout out the opposing teams, make game plans, and prepare the team for the game.

"They do a great job...can't do much without them," Chesney said.

He loves coaching and feels that he is involved in a great program. He is happy with the players and hopes to keep the program successful. "Its great to see players come back and be proud that they play soccer at MSU."

"Come on out. Watch the games," he said. His goal is to win the National Championship. With this, he would be ecstatic.

MSU's Susie Ciprano (#28 - Jersey City) rejecting her opponent's volley in Tuesday's game against Rutgers-Newark. Rutgers defeated the Red Hawks in four games, 16-14, 8-15, 15-9, and 15-4.

Michelle DeFreese laps her way to winning the 100 Butterfly in 1:05.81 last Saturday afternoon at MSU's Panzer Pool. Senior Stacey Goldstein also won the 200 yard Breaststroke in 2:50.01, and junior Elisa Kaplan won the 200 Individual Medley in 2:28.53.

The playoff chances are still alive even though they lose Saturday. This Saturday's game against New Jersey City College is a needed win. Even though they may lose, chances of making the playoffs are very slim. But, if they beat Jersey City College play yesterday.
