The Show Will Not Go On: SGA Votes Against Supporting Fan Fan

By Elizabeth A. Hutchinson

Assistant News Editor

At last night’s meeting, the SGA denied Fan Fan’s proposed $30,127 budget for the music and arts festival scheduled for May. After over five hours of deliberation and questions the vote came back 10/6/1. According to the SGA constitution, there has to be a two-thirds majority vote by the legislature in order to pass the bill. “Fuck the SGA,” said Sven Peltonen creator/head coordinator of Fan Fan, after the vote was announced. “Fan Fan will protest. We will disregard security and do it anyway,” Peltonen said.

There were over 50 Fan Fan supporters at the meeting. Among the speakers in support of Fan Fan was Chris Fitzpatrick, SGA Legislator. Carolyn Maurer, is the President of College Life Union Board (CLUB), a Class I organization. CLUB’s budget is approximately $39,000. Maurer spoke against Fan Fan in front of the SGA. She compared Fan Fan’s budget to one of a Class I organization. “You are using one Class I budget [such as CLUB] for an entire year in one weekend,” Maurer said.

A march against arming MSU police with guns took place yesterday at 3 p.m. The march began at Dickson Hall and wound around campus, by the Student Center ending in MSU resident Susan Cole’s office in College Hall.

Over 50 professors and students carried signs, and chanted things like “Don’t arm the police, keep the peace,” and “Keep it real, guns kill.”

“I appreciate you taking the time to express your view... but you [protesters] need to understand that there aren’t many words around it,” Cole said.

Cole said that the drafting of the proposal was prompted by discussion with the SGA and campus police. She said that police feel that they have been in situations where they felt endangered, but no decisions would be made without debate from the campus community.

“I want this debate to occur,” said Cole. Professor Sally McWilliams, of the English department, led the grassroots effort, and started a petition against arming the police. The march was aimed at discussing people’s feelings about the possibility of the police carrying guns, and was for individuals who strongly believe that guns should not be a part of this campus, McWilliams said.

Karen Pennington, the Vice President for Student Development and Campus Life, said that the university police and the student government sent a request to Cole to view the proposal about arming the police.

The proposal is to help the community understand all the facts and to allow the community to discuss whether or not arming the police is appropriate.

Cole stressed that no decision has been made yet about this issue and that she wants to encourage people to take a look at what was prepared and ask questions, either to her or the university police. Some principle concerns were that there is not enough time to make a decision as big as this and that Cole should move the date, which is now May 1, to the fall semester.

“We shouldn’t delay decision for two reasons... the university police deserve for us not to wait another year... the SGA is anxious to move forward,” Cole responded.

“We need to know how to function in the real world.”

Many protesters voiced strong feelings about the time she picked to decide because of all of the police brutality incidents that have been going on recently.

“Racial profiling is strong in New Jersey,” one protester noted.

She said her belief is that this community is capable of modeling for the world how people can take a serious issue and try to figure out what is best for the university.

“This is just a proposal, not a recommendation or a decision,” Cole said.

Protesters were also concerned about if arming campus police and training them would cost the students any money.

Pennington said that there would not be an economic impact that would be considerable because the officers would come to the campus already trained. She also said that the officers go to state and county police academies and take regular up-dates and quizzes.

NEWARK: Thirteen-year-old prodigy Maimon Hubbi has recently enrolled as the youngest sophomore student in the history of Rutgers University-Newark Campus’ history. When Hubbi was just 11, he completed his first year of college credits as a nonmatriculated student at the New Jersey Institute of Technology. He took evening courses where his father is currently an engineering professor.

Newark- A Prudential service technician and a substitute teacher are among five of possibly many recruits to serve as Newark female firefighters. E. Pam Bennett and Portia Lowery have decided to add on to the mostly male, except for one female, 647-member fire department.

Edison- Vivian Garsh, and her husband Seymour, waited for years to move into their newly constructed Edison Tyler Estates Senior Citizen apartments, but by the time a lease became available to them, Seymour Garsh had already passed away. The couple had anticipated moving out of Vivian’s son-in-law’s house, and spending the rest of their time in a lower-income Senior Citizen’s community. Vivian Garsh now pays $615 a month for a one-bedroom flat, one of the 105 units at Village Court Seniors.

Washington- Vice President Al Gore planned to unveil Monday a plan to eliminate less significant campaign donations and finance U.S. elections with a new public-private endowment fund. Los Angeles- A television helicopter covering the Oscars ceremony Sunday night crashed into a ball of fire and injured a pilot and cameraman in the process. Just after 10 p.m., the crash occurred in a helicopter landing area at Van Nuys airport approximately 15 miles northwest of the Shrine Auditorium, where the Academy Award had finished about 30 minutes before.

Seattle- The over-the-top planned implosion on Seattle’s Kingdome turned futile when interested viewers left in disappointment from the Sunday morning flop. The hype that Seattle community members had built up for what was supposed to be a memorable event, became a reported less compelling moment than another hour or two of sleep. In the end, two tons of explosives turned the 130,000 tons of Kingdome concrete into a huge pile of useless rubble.

Fort Worth- Emergency crews cleaned up after a trail of tornadoes killed three people and left debris across Fort Worth, Texas early this past Wednesday morning. Another person was declared missing, and more than 100 people were injured from the tornado rampages that hit Tuesday evening.

$28 Million Given to MSU

By Elizabeth A. Hutchinson
Assistant News Editor

The New Jersey State Senate approved a bill giving $550 million in state aid to NJ colleges and universities. Out of the $90 million allotted, $28 million will go toward improvements at MSU.

"We are currently allotted $12 million of the $28 million for now, since we have already determined what it will be used for," MSU President Susan Cole said. "The money is going to be used to repair, renovate and fix many of the MSU academic buildings.

"We are going to be renovating some of the classrooms in Richardson, Finley and Mallory halls, since many of the science classrooms have already been re-located to Science Hall," Cole said. "The new classrooms will be used for the Information Studies Department and the Master of Fine Arts studio."

In addition to the repair, renovation and construction projects, $28 million will be set aside for the Higher Education Capital Improvement Fund, which is separate from these funds.

According to Saturday's Star Ledger Report, the improvement fund was created by state Legislatures last year in order to improve NJ's 56 colleges and universities. The remainder of the $28 million allotted to MSU will be given to the school as more improvements are needed.

Other NJ schools that received the funds are: Farleigh Dickinson University, $6.7 million, Rutgers University, $169 million, University of Medicine and Dentistry, $95 million and Caldwell College, $2.3 million.

Julie Fleming. "[The proposal] will grant $30,000 to an un-chartered group with no hope of monetary compensation."

SGA President John Griffin addressed the SGA against Fan Fan. "I have never seen any event, with the exception of graduation, where 5,000 or more people have participated.

Griffin later explained that in the next few weeks he will be bringing up several bills that will consist of a large amount of money going toward computers and other office equipment for SGA chartered organizations. "Computers will last 10 years whereas Fan Fan will only be a memory," Griffin said.

Griffin also mentioned the only other Class I event that had an expected attendance of over 5,000 people was the Goo Goo Dolls concert that was to be held last fall. The concert was cancelled due to low ticket sales.

Many Fan Fan supporters, expressed their disappointment after the vote was announced. "It is a shame the SGA is against an event that promotes multi-cultural unity through the arts," said Bred Morgan, an assistant coordinator of Fan Fan. "Do you think the students who were pro-Fan Fan are going to be side with the SGA now?" Jared Shaw, assistant coordinator of Fan Fan said.

will be trained on how to handle campus life. "Officers are already trained and receive regular training," Pennington said.

Cole also said that she is not thrilled with the idea of having guns on campus, but other police outside of the campus do not know the campus as well as "our police." There is no guarantee that the police outside of campus can respond quick enough or if they will even be available when needed.

Cole wants people to ask questions and give their opinions in writing. An e-mail account will be set up for this purpose. James Buzzzone, a senior political science major, said, "I don't think I can stand firm on yes or no on this issue. It could be beneficial if the police run into a situation like last year with the shootings at the Clue Rock apartments or any situation where there is a potential threat to a student or a group of students. It could be detrimental in a case of mistaken identity and the university has to be prepared to take responsibility if that happened."

"I don't think that it will solve any problems. I think that the motivation for campus police is that they want to assert more power to them. There are more successful means that they can protect themselves with," Len Bunting, a senior, general humanities major said.

"I don't think it's a good idea to arm campus police," protestor senior history major Dave Southard said. "I'm not confident in their abilities or their judgement."

The Star Ledger and The Herald and News were in attendance.

Students May Save Over 250 Lives After Giving Blood

By Florence Roggemann
Staff Writer

This semester’s blood drive, which took place Monday, March 20, drew 92 potential donors and yielded 71 usable units. This is the highest number of donors the Jewish Student Union and the Pre-Med Club, this marks the second semester in which these two organizations combined forces in bringing a blood drive to campus.

As with their previous effort, the coordinators of this event attempted to lure other organizations into actively recruiting donors by means of a contest. The contest did not draw as much of a crowd as the sponsoring organizations had hoped.

“Only about half of the potential donors cited an organizational affiliation, and of those who did, many had no prior knowledge of the contest,” commented Florence Roggemann, lead organizer of the drive and president of the Jewish Student Union.

The coed national honor fraternity, Phi Sigma Pi, came in first place, with 11 donors. Placing second was the staff of The Montclarion, with seven donors. Other key competitors included the Drop-In-Center, Phi Sigma Sigma, and the Korean Student Association.

On the effectiveness of the contest, Jeff Su stated, “If more people knew about it, I think it would be effective.” Su is a member of the Korean Student Association, last semester’s second place winner and this semester’s first place hopeful.

The organization, which recruited the most donors (regardless of the donor’s relation to the organization), would receive 30 free movie tickets.

A second place prize of ten free movie tickets was also offered in an attempt to ensure the participation of the smaller campus organizations which would be intimidated by the membership of larger organizations.

Ronnie Broking, a first-time donor, who did not know of the contest, remarked about why he chose to donate: I’ve always wanted to do it, but I’ve always had a sport. Between sports and class, I just never had the time.”

Jason Gowers, a veteran donor said, “I know there’s a shortage of blood. Every drop helps, and there are so many people who could really use it.”

According to information supplied by the New York Blood Center, the company brought in for the drive, a single donation, typically one pint of blood, can be used to save the lives of three to five individuals.

With the quantity of blood collected at the MSU blood drive, 213 to 355 lives may be saved.

While some organizers were pleased with the strong turnout, others were less satisfied. Roggemann had hoped for greater numbers.

“For the amount of work we put into [promoting the drive], we really should have had more donors. To be honest, I’m a little disappointed.”

I imagine going to a restaurant and having a waiter ignore you and ask your friend what you’re having for dinner. Imagine not being able to drive a car, read a newspaper or walk to class. Imagine living in a world where your intelligence, self-esteem and independence are tested every day by ordinary events like opening a door or taking an exam. For most of us situations like this are just imaginary, but for the millions of people living with disabilities these are the realities of daily life.

On March 21, the Office of Students with Disabilities organized a student panel where MSU students shared personal stories about growing up with a disability. The event was created to provide a forum for students with disabilities to educate the campus community about disability awareness.

“Education is the best way to help people change their attitudes,” said Dr. Elaine Fine, one of the coordinators of the event. Sponsored by the Jewish Student Committee on Services for Persons with Disabilities. Dr. Fine hopes that hearing these first hand accounts will counteract the negative assumptions that are so easy to make about people with disabilities.

No panel member spoke about an incident here at MSU where a professor refused to return a graded exam to her while the class was going over the test because he/she did not think the student could hold the paper.

Another student with cerebral palsy, who lives on campus, talked about her fight to make Russ Hall more wheelchair accessible. Although the residence hall is now more accommodating to people in wheelchairs, when the student first moved into Russ Hall she had trouble even entering the buildings by herself because the doors did not open automatically.

“Just because something says wheelchair accessible doesn’t mean it is,” said Alisha Byrd, a junior psychology major hoping to earn a masters degree in social welfare after graduating from MSU. She would like to encourage administrators to have people in wheelchairs take test runs to make sure buildings truly are wheelchair accessible.

The student panel also commented about having classmates who felt that giving extra time to complete an exam or an enlarged copy of a test to students with disabilities was unfair. To these experiences, one member of the student panel warmly invited other students who do not know what it is like to live with a disability to trade places for a day.

The members of the panel are in the midst of earning a bachelor’s degree and have a wide array of goals, such as becoming a published author or a musician. Other students expressed simpler goals. Bill Negahleian, who earned an associates degree from Bergen County College, aspires to meet more people at MSU before graduating.

The forum concluded with a special recognition of Dr. Mark Allyn of the Business Department. Dr. Allyn was awarded the first annual Outstanding Faculty Award for going above and beyond the call of duty to assist students with disabilities in the classroom.

“We wanted to recognize someone on the faculty who went out of his way,” said Dr. Fine.

The Office of Students with Disabilities would like to present this award every year recognizing student’s contributions to their own educational environment for students with disabilities.
Finding the Balance Between Work and Family

By Michele Phipany
Assistant Feature Editor

The NJ Center for Regional Business held a seminar in the Student Center Ballrooms on March 23 addressing the issues between work and family and what some companies are doing to balance these issues. This program explained the aging demographic profile of the population, the increased number of women in the workforce, and the considerable increase in the number of divorced and never married single parents.

Susan Copeland, a vice president and corporate benefits consultant at The Segal Company in NYC, began by creating the case for work/life-related programs and benefits. She made the audience aware of the Sandwich Generation, in which people are not only caring for their children, but also their parents. This has become a huge ordeal to major companies, who lose big bucks trying to make an effort to balance work and home, some companies are beginning to install beneficial programs for employees who may run into difficulties, particularly with child and elder care.

There are issues concerning people without dependents working more hours than those who do and are not able to benefit from the arrangements of the companies they work for. Major companies are able to benefit these people by allowing them extra vacation or sick days, as well as introducing pet care into the company.

For smaller companies, it becomes more difficult to attend to everyone’s wants and needs because of their decreased budgets. Copeland suggests that all companies become more community involved, rather than nationally enticed. Greater awareness of the cooperation in close communities allows the people of those communities to see the efforts and increased capability of the companies themselves.

Dr. Trudy Millner focused more on the Sandwich Generation is becoming one of the most common correlates of women in society among other contemporary issues. The Family and Medical Leave Act of 1993 was enforced to balance the demands of the workplace with the needs of families, to promote the stability and economic security of families, and to promote national interests in preserving family integrity. Companies of today are focusing more on the needs of their employees in compliance with the desired productivity at work. They have started offering outside resources, individual counseling, caregiver training, educational programs, employee assistance holis­tems, even Time Out days when the burdens become too heavy to handle.

Dr. Mark Allyn of the MSU School of Business addressed the concern of women handing off their financial wealth for children. Women are the workforce of the family, women, their role in the workforce has increased greatly.

Women are the workforce of the family, no doubt about it,” said Dr. Allyn.

Uninterrupted employment is a critical factor that affects wages, especially when children come into the big picture. Here there is a division between work and home, where workers evaluate investments in themselves, just as firms do. Their wages determine the size of the family and balance with the skills they want to acquire. In other words, as their skills increase with job complexity, the size of the family plummets.

Work and family can co-exist peacefully if the balance is handled in the right manner. Employers need to communicate directly with their communities to ensure that all people know what they are being provided with locally, not just nationally. Children and elderly parents play a significant role in the cooperation in close communities, the people of those communities to see the efforts and increased capability of the companies themselves.

Major companies are able to benefit these people by allowing them extra vacation or sick days, as well as introducing pet care into the company.

Procrastination: The Most Valuable Tool For College Students

By Jaen Kaplan
Special to the Montclarion

I t’s 9 p.m., Sunday, and I’ve just finished watching Fox’s two-hour block of comedies, including “Futurama,” “King of the Hill,” “The Simpsons,” and “Malcolm in the Middle.”
Then, if there’s a Devils game on, it’s off to FSNY to watch the last half of the game while I surf the Internet.

I check my email, my auctions on eBay,
and finally set my rosters for the next day’s fantasy baseball, and hockey games. I then open up Napster and prepare to download songs to burn onto a CD.

In the meantime, while the songs are downloading, I open up Microsoft to finally start working on a paper I’ve put off all weekend for a class that’s due the next day.
I select “New Document,” change my document to the proper settings including font size and double spacing, and finally type in my name.

The TV distracts my attention to the game, so it isn’t until around 10 p.m. when the game is over and I’m prepared to direct my attention to the assignment.

I open up my paper with the traditional introduction paragraph before I get the urge to see if any of my friends are available to chat on AOL’s Instant Messenger.

In between my conversations and downloads, I set my mind to my paper.
Once my ideas are collected, writing the paper is relatively easy.

I get about halfway through my paper before I find it necessary to check my email for the second time that night (like anyone else would have sent me any messages within the last hour).

Once my curiosity is filled, it’s back to the grind to finally finish the paper. By the time I finish, it’s midnight and I’m already dreading getting up five-and-a-half hours later to get ready for work. The funny thing is, this is a customary practice for me.

Indeed, given my situation, it would have made more sense to write my paper earlier in the day, but as most college students, I suffer from a non-medical disease called procrastination.

Procrastination isn’t something new.
You’ve been around for ages. There’s no way to avoid its curse because the pressures of school just won’t allow for it. The assignments will get done and the time to waste will always be there. There’s no way to get ahead, but there are a few things that deter students from their work.

Sure, there are those who get things done on time and try to get ahead, but for the most part, the general population of college students is afflicted with this untrollable disease that is hard to overcome.

There are times when I’ve found myself caught with all my classes and want to play. This is the right thing to do because, later on, I will have so many assignments due at once I’ll have to get back to work. The pressures of work out of the way so they have more free time, but there are no distractions that deter students from working on assignments. This is why procrastination is so important in students’ lives.

“Who wants to spend all day working on assignments for school, especially on the weekend? This is why procrastination is so important in students’ lives.

We’re young and want to be able to use all our free time to do what we want before we head off into the adult world where free dom won’t be so readily available.

Who wants to spend all day working on assignments for school, especially on the weekend? This is why procrastination is so important in students’ lives.

Procrastination gives me the opportunity to practice working on a deadline, by applying harsh deadlines on myself.

Working under pressure, in my opinion, will help me in dealing with the daily pressures of meeting the strict deadlines that journalists must abide by. Of course, this is the e

xuse I like to tell myself.

It’s not like professors don’t give their students ever any deadlines to do assignments. Even though students want to sit them down and get the work done as quickly as possible, the pressures of school just work out of the way so they have more free time, but there are no distractions that deter students from doing the work. There is no way to avoid procrastination because the pressures of school just won’t allow for it. The assignments will get done and the time to waste will always be there. There’s no way to do anything but to work on something for school.

On-Campus Wellness Service Provides Student Comfort

By Maureen Creagh, M.A.

The walk down the hall to my first counseling session—it felt like the longest walk I have ever taken. What was I going to say? Could I really be myself and tell someone everything that I am feeling? What if the counselor finds out something that I have never told anyone before?

What will people think when they see me walking into the counseling center building? Will they still want to be my friends knowing that I go to counseling? I’ve always solved problems on my own, why should I be asking for help now? I am afraid...am I supposed to feel this way?

When it comes to dealing with mental health issues, society sends mixed messages. Unfortunately, there are still some members of society who view an individual seeking counseling as weak and incompetent in handling life’s demands.

However, many others, including the staff at Counseling and Psychological Services (CAPS), see individuals who seek counseling as strong and courageous because of their willingness to look at their current ways of handling stressful issues in their life and to try to improve them.

Often, individuals coming to counseling feel “stuck” and are using life-coping strategies that may have been useful in the past, but have now become unproductive and possibly even damaging in the present. The client and the counselor then work together towards developing more effective ways of addressing the client’s problems for the future. Young adults who are mature, competent, and successful get help from the appropriate resources when needed. Nobody gets through life alone.

In reflecting on my personal counseling experience, I can say that I did not become dependent on another person, nor did the counselor solve my problems for me. Rather, counseling motivated me to help myself.

Through counseling, I found out that I know myself better than I thought I had. Counseling enabled me to feel more confident about who I am, as well as make better decisions about what’s important in my life. I learned that counseling services provides a safe place where I wasn’t going to be judged or criticized for the decisions I’ve made, good or bad. Today, I am thankful that I was strong enough to walk through that door and take advantage of counseling services.

Somewhat to my surprise, my family and friends were more supportive than I could have ever dreamed. Counseling really fostered significant growth and development for me. It played a large role in the personal and professional success I currently enjoy.

I ask each reader: do you at times feel afraid of what others might think? Do you feel that you too have to conquer the world on your own? Are you nervous about revealing your true self to someone? Do you feel that you too have to conquer the world on your own? Are you nervous about revealing your true self to someone?

Through counseling, I found out that I know myself better than I thought I had. I learned that counseling services provides a safe place where I wasn’t going to be judged or criticized for the decisions I’ve made, good or bad. Today, I am thankful that I was strong enough to walk through that door and take advantage of counseling services.

Yo La Tengo Mixes Sweet Melodies with Modern Rock

By Jeff Hill
Staff Writer

The year 2000 has witnessed the release of Yo La Tengo's quietest and most melodic record to date. The veteran rock trio from Hoboken, NJ has always utilized the beauty of simplicity, and has never disappointed music fans in search of a new sound. That is why the band has been around for 15 years. And Nothing Turned itself Inside Out is Yo La Tengo's new construction, 13 mellow compositions that encompass the environment of the city evening. Ira Kaplan, the group's guitarist and main songwriter, may not have the most powerful voice in the rock genre, but his words and whispers complete the picture, as well as the echoes of his guitar. Bassist James Mcnew, and drummer Georgia Hubley are excellent accompanists, even on the songs where Hubley takes the role of lead vocalist. That is what makes Yo La Tengo sound so addictive. It seems as if none of the members want to overplay each other, yet, they peacefully co-exist.

On this new album, Yo La Tengo flows every beat and chord naturally into each other, creating a balance for the listener. The new approach for this new record, is that Yo La Tengo, a band known for its noise rock tendencies and distorted jazz organ improvisations, have reduced the volume and instead have put more effort into the sculpting of tone. While And Nothing Turned itself...may not be as diverse as its predecessor, 1997's "I Can Hear the Heart Beating as One" it is just as emotional.

The songs on the new album are longer than usual. The shortest song is just under four minutes long, while the last song is an extensive 15-minute piece. You have to truly enjoy this sound in order to listen to its entirety. The album begins with some of Yo La Tengo's best work. "Our way to Fall," the second track, is a ballad of nostalgic love between two sweethearts. Kaplan's voice is reminiscent of the Velvet Underground's Lou Reed on the band's self-titled third album. The guitar seems to be playing only one chord, but serving over 20 flavors, as each strum seems to come from a different angle. It's the comfort of the two words "I love you".

A surprising element on the album is the use of drum machines. Even for listeners

Ira Kaplan, guitarist, singer and main songwriter; James Mcnew, bassist and Georgia Hubley, drummer and singer, all hail from Hoboken, NJ. They have been making sweet music for 15 years and have just put out their strongest album yet.
Yo La Tengo

Thirteen is the lucky number of songs on Yo La Tengo's latest who dislike this electronic element, the drum machine rhythms on "Saturday," "Let's Save Tony Orlando's House" and "You Can Have It All" are ideal. This may start a new angle for the instrument. The keyboard sound, which Yo La Tengo is known for, makes its appearance on the album as well. "Let's Save Tony Orlando's House" seems to be an answer to the Yo La Tengo hit "Autumn Sweater." It is complete with the drone of a theatre organ and the wobble of James McNew's bass. Georgia's voice on this track is straightforward and comforting.

"The Last Days of Disco," "The Crying Lot Of G," and "Black to Blue" are three of the most beautiful Yo La Tengo songs ever written. Slide guitar glissens over the hush tone of low-end percussion and low-volume bass on "The Last Days of Disco." Kaplan is right there to back it all up with his prose-lyrics. "The Crying Lot Of G" places a viophone in the group's vocabulary, and takes harmonic layering to a new level. You won't even realize the smooth jazz chords of the guitar in the background. The tone that runs it all together and is most reflective of the group's past work is "Black to Blue." There is descriptive instrumentation all throughout this track. There are violins, xylophones, guitars, bass, percussion and a constant organ rhythm that holds it all together. The counter vocalization at the end between McNew and Hubley will give you goosebumps. It is both haunting and mesmerizing.

"Cherry Chapstick," the album's lone rocker, pays homage to the sounds of Sonic Youth and REM of the '80s. It is this example of rock power, which splits this album straight down the middle. The tracks that follow (with the exception of "Black to Blue") have a different feel to them. "Tired Hippo" sounds like an intermission for the song "Black to Blue." The song "Madaline" contains the same melody as "Cherry Chapstick," which makes it sound more like a reprise than a song. Finally, you get to "Night Falls on Hoboken." The song "Madaline" contains the same melody as "Cherry Chapstick," which makes it seem more like a reprise than a song. Finally, you get to "Night Falls on Hoboken" and by then you already feel as if the album is over, but you have another 15 minutes of listening time. This shouldn't bother the listener. "Night Falls on Hoboken" is a lovely piece. Vocals flare into the harmonies that The Byrds were famous for, and the bass's single riff is enough to pull you into a peaceful sleep, but the song is just too long. The final seven minutes should have been faded out, and left to perform live as a special treat for the audience. This is the only problem that can be seen with And Nothing Turned itself...

Overall, it is an album well worth the money you will spend on it.

Yo La Tengo's touring to support this album with a series of sit-down shows in small theatres and clubs. This seems to be effective for the band to accurately achieve the mood and environment for this new music. It is perfect for a date, especially if your date is sick of all that loud music. Yo La Tengo cleanse you of stress with their new creation.
A secret society so powerful, it can give you everything you desire...

Marching Again: Protestors Voice Concerns

As the weeks run by, we continue to hear more and more on the issue of arming MSU police. Finally, people have decided to take a stand against something that poses a tremendous impact on their everyday lives.

Over 50 faculty and staff members, as well as students, weaved their way through campus from Dickson Hall to the Student Center, then back through campus, ending on the doorstep of Susan Cole’s office. The group chanted things such as “keep it real, guns kill” and “no guns at MSU!” as they took a stand against what they felt could be a potentially dangerous situation. It’s good to see the MSU community hasn’t lost the guts to fight for something they believe in.

One of the many concerns expressed by the protestors was the question of validity. What has happened in the last five years that would warrant granting MSU police the right to carry guns? There have been no violent gang shootings, violent inter-fraternity wars, nor have there been any terrorist threats on the campus. Yes, there was an armed robbery at Clove Road on April 21, 1999, where residents were locked in a closet as their apartment was robbed. A shot was fired, but it was determined later that the shot was only meant as a warning shot. Other than that, can anyone remember the last instance a gun, or anything else warranting armed resis­tance, was involved in a crime?

In Cole’s proposal, she states two of the ideas behind MSU’s current policing program: to eliminate the “we vs. they” mentality, and to reduce tension with police. How can we believe that the arming of officers would help eliminate that mentality? What better tools could we give police to further separate themselves from the campus population than firearms and live ammo. Many residents already have enough problems getting along with security; throw guns into the mix and you are thrusting their problems onto a whole new level. Is there a better catalyst to fuel the explosive chemical reactions currently being experienced?

It’s a comforting sight to see faculty, staff, and students doing something about their fears and woes, but we can’t let it stop with those few who protested. E-mails, written letters, and more protests could help sway the opinions and ideals held by those people who have the power to decide on this. Stand up. Speak out. Don’t allow yourselves to fall into the large, voiceless population who sit back and let everyone else do the work for them. This is our home. Speak out to protect not only your interests, but those of your friends and people you care about.

Question of the Week:

What further efforts are necessary in order to effectively voice the campus opinion on arming MSU police?

Next week's opinions belong to:

Free Speech and Student Fees: Supreme Court Rules on University of Wisconsin vs. Southworth

March 22, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled unanimously that pub-colic colleges and universities can use mandatory student fees to fund groups engaging in political activities that some students may find objectionable, ending an-ally debated issue between a group of conservative Christian students and the University of Wisconsin at Madison.

Students at the University of Wisconsin, led by Scott Southworth, filed a lawsuit in April 1996 against the school, claiming that the use of their mandatory student fees (coming to $166.75 a semester) for organisations that they found objectionable was a vioation of their right to free speech and astilation.

Among the list of 18 organizations that the students found objectionable were the Campus Women's Center, the Lesbian/Gay/Bisexual Campus Center, the Internationalist Socialist Organization, and a chapter of the National Organization for Women.

While the issue started on the local level, with students in Wisconsin debating the moral and legal implications in funding a wide range of student organizations, it quickly spread like wildfire, hitting the pages of The Star Ledger and The Mont-clairion shortly before the case was heard by the Supreme Court in November.

If the Supreme Court made a ruling in support of the students, it could have turned the funding of student organizations across the country upside-down, forcing public universities to call into question which student groups were safe for students to pay for and which were just simply radical to support.

Had the Supreme Court ruled that the system of funding was a violation of first amendment rights, it would have been a big step in white-washing our public institution of their need to investigate, and, to some extent, stripning them of their right to fund organizations about the world in which we live.

It's one thing to sit in a classroom and preach diversity, hammering into students' impressionable minds that it's a good idea to go through life with open ears and an open mind. It's another thing entirely to practice what you preach and fight for the existence of student organizations that will put divers-ty to practice, even if it means that one organization is completely at odds with another.

It is the ultimate indicator of a society that truly is built upon supporting the freedom of speech and expression: In order for one group to speak their mind without very vehemently disagree with their opinion have just as much of a right and freedom to express their beliefs.

Rutgers tries to circumvent a system where administrators pass judgement on which organizations should and shouldn't be funded by passing some of the decision-on to the students. Though they collect near $35 million a year in student fees, a mandatory $100.50 coming in yearly from each student at Rutgers College alone, it is the students, and not an advisory board, who decide how much of their tuition check will be kicked over to The Daily Targum, Rutgers' student newspaper. Students also have the say as to how much money will be allotted to the local chapter of the New Jer-sen Public Interest Research Group, an organization sending lobbyists to Trenton on consumer issues.

Could the same type of funding checklist work if instituted across the board at MSU?
You can almost see John Q. Public complaining about a recent tuition hike, looking at a rundown of expenses on a bill complete with the iconic bell tower and a watermark reading
"Carpe Diem," asking himself whether he wants to give a few cents of his student activities fee to The Montclarion, WMSC, or La Campana.

Kindra Gateswood, a student at the University of Oregon, where a similar debate on student fee distribution was being waged, standardly replied: "If everyone had to agree upon how the money had to be spent, the money would never be spent because it would be hard to come to a consensus on how the money should be spent."

The question remaining, then, is: Why stop there? I'm sure if the average student saw how much of his or her tuition money went to paying a teacher that they'd never have or maintaining a building that they'd never use, they'd be begging for a little checklist on what they wanted their money money.

In the name of maintaining some sense of unity among different groups, and not making any moral or fiscal value judgements, though, this type of thing is avoided.

And this was precisely the case with the University of Wisconsin vs. Southworth.

In the ruling, Justice Anthony M. Kennedy wrote that "recognition must be given to the important and substantial purposes of the university, which seeks to facilitate a wide range of speech.

This concept of backing concept with practice, and fighting for the support of a wide spectrum of organizations, should be at the forefront of higher education, a world where students should be able to learn about the all of the subtleties and margins of the world around them without worrying about their fellow students deciding who should have the power to speak their mind.

No Neidermayer For Playoffs: Recent On-Ice Misconduct Prompts NHL Reprimand

Nearly a month after Boston’s Marty McSorley was suspended for the remainder of the season for swinging his stick in a base-ball-like manner and hitting Vancouver’s Donald Brashear in the head, Scott Neidermayer of the New Jersey Devils did almost the exact same thing. He swung his stick in a base-ball manner and hitting Vancouver’s Peter Worell on the top of a helmet-cov ered head. The two had been going at it for some time with 1:45 remaining in the game that would end with the Devils winning 5-2. Apparently, nothing was learned from McSorley’s heinous act.

The NHL is already on trial, along with McSorley, who was charged with assault with a weapon for not being able to control himself on the ice. The question has been raised as to whether or not the league can police itself. Well, McSorley and now Neidermayer have disgraced the game, but at what cost? The league attempted to take a stand by, handing out the longest sus pen-sion in its history by ending McSorley’s sea-son and forcing him to meet with Com missioner Gary Bettman at the beginning of next year if he decides to play again. So what about Neidermayer? He only got a 10-game suspension which will keep him out for the rest of the regular season and the first game of the playoffs, losing $152,343.74 in sal ary over that time.

The league based this suspension on the fact that Neidermayer is a first-time offender and has not gone over the line before, only amassing 150 career-penalty minutes. Why does he get special treat-ment? Sure there was no injury as there was to Brashear, but he deserves the same, if not a more se vere punishment. For Neidermayer to swing his stick in malice and at tempt to crack the helmet, if not the head of Worell, in spite of all the bad pub licity the league has un-dergone from the previ ous stick-swinging inci dent last month, is worse than what McSorley did. Both players lost it in the midst of battle, but only Neidermayer had no remorse after the game and felt that after being elbowed along with his teammates by Worell, swing ing his stick was the right thing to do. He felt he had to take matters into his own hands. If this is the case, then giving Neidermayer the same punishment as McSorley was the only way to go, but maybe the referees deserve blame too. If the players are responsible for their actions, then so are the refs. They are to be watch ing the game with the help of the linesmen and to keep the game clean, or at least as clean as hockey can get. After the way the referees Maroscelli and Zeilkin handled the game on Sun day, the league must take action. Where were they when Colin White boarded Mark Parrish and was sub sequently jumped by Worell? Oh yeah, they handed out a five-minute major to White and a mi nor penalty to Worell. Some people don’t it? The two players should have been out of the game a long time before Neidermayer was able to put his team’s chances of a championship in jeopardy with one swing of his stick. Neidermayer was given a match penalty, but what about the elbows thrown by Worell all game long?

Stick swinging is part of hockey. Billy Smith, the old Islander’s goalie, broke many an ankle in his day by slashing the ankles of on-coming forwards, when they came near his net. Hockey players are slashed plenty of times every game, but the type of stick work done by McSorley and Neidermayer is not acceptable and is not needed in the game. The truth is Neidermayer intended to injure Worell and that is all that was needed to sit him down for the rest of the season and playoffs. Just because he’s a first-time offender doesn’t mean he should get off with a slap on the wrist by means of a 10-game suspension. It can’t be treated as an isolated incident as Devil’s GM, Lou Lamoriello, was hoping for. If someone drives drunk one time in their life and kills a family of five, it doesn’t really matter that it was the first offense now does it. The NHL must throw out the first-offender treat ment and restore some credibility to its name.

The Glory of Selfishness

By Jerome D’Angelo
Assistant Opinion Page Editor

I consider myself a philosopher of sorts. Not sound arrogant, but since I’m one of the few that my generation really has, let me express a matter of concern. What’s the deal with religion? Do we really need to believe in some great all-knowing entity to live more productive lives? Have we been so socialized by faith we can’t think of life without meaning outside theology and prayer? What’s so bad about atheism?

Somewhere, a Catho lic is plotting my exor cism. I admit that religion has a functional role in modern society. Keeping the lesser of mind in line so they don’t all kill each other. Don’t misunder stand me, there’s nothing wrong with being actively involved in religion, but some people allow themselves to be so taken in by this concept of conformity they disregard their own beliefs. I believe that religion looks upon so skeptically? Are we all that blind? What good does it do to help other people who can’t get a damn about you otherwise? For the sake of doing good?

Sure, I believe that religion is still favored by people as a means of coping with the ulti mate inevitability: death. I think people are too scared of the concept of not existing. Is there a sort of “alternative,” like they can avoid it somehow. To me, the sheer fact that life is so short and fragile is the very reason it is so precious. Life still has meaning, the meaning you make for it. Disre gard the cloths that would hold to a prede termined set of values that put limits on who you can be. Take your own choices. Don’t fol low something just be cause a lot of people say it is correct. Religion makes us think of our selves as inferior; this is no way to go about your life. Make your own ex istence and happiness the ultimate end.

When people tell me I’m selfish, I say thank you. It’s better than being a sheep, mindlessly clinging to the flock for fear of isolation. People have told me I’m going to hell, but I tell them, as Ayn Rand once wrote, “This much is true: the most selfish thing is the independent mind that recog nizes no authority higher than its own and no value higher than its judgment of truth.”

This much is true: the most selfish of all things is the independent mind that recognizes no authority higher than its own and no value higher than its judgment of truth.

Tuesday night, I was talking to my best friend in her room. We talked about all kinds of stuff ranging from classes to life at home. There is one theme that kept running through our conversations: don’t give up.

I’m sure many of us have thought about quitting at some point in our lives, whether it’s reconciling with a friend, giving up on a crush, on a homework assignment, or on a dream. I’ll admit, I almost gave up on school at the end of my sophomore year. But I knew that I’d never be able to shake the “what if” question: what if I hadn’t quit?

If I had to pick one thing many college students seem to give up on the easiest, it’s their dreams, that one thing that they want more than anything. It always seems like too much work. Most importantly, we think that if we don’t achieve the dream, our lives...

Women's History Month. We have listened at this lovely anorexic gymnast has won the twentieth century and have had a positive effect on our society. From all these envious women of the century! (Cue trumpets) We had the youngest Pet, Lamb Chop, her high pitch screams were like a farting horse. We all know subtly by marching in front of her home, but, quite frankly, the ugliest damn thing you ever saw. His poor pathetic little face stretched smile anyway, and we are pissed off that she can’t even that good of a ventriloquist. We all know that her obsession with Tom Cruise leaves many men to be disheartened, but we still love her. Each of us pours our heart out to her each night we put our head to bed.

Woman of the Century-- Lorrenna Bobbi. This woman's name echoes in the name of every man, woman, and child alive. How can she be remembered? Scream her name public. Watch the look of man tighten as a shiver runs down their spine. And the smile of each woman broadens as they remember the one woman that did the unthinkable. People of all kinds have heard her story from either the TV or from an African medicine doctor telling his tale of terror to children surrounding a fire. Never has anyone's name brought fear and happiness to so many people at one time. The heroine of many women, and yet the greatest fear of all mankind. Although she may be incarcerated, and her husband now makes B-movies, her legend will live on.

Editor's Note: Since the staff here at Humour™ consists of just men, we have concluded that May will be "Man Month" in which we will promote the general welfare of the man and his influence over the past five million years. In other words, we've done all the work!

Humour™ Presents

"Influential Women of the Century"

By Brian Cross

Humour™ Editor and one cool guy

As March comes to a winding halt, we at Humour™ have decided to celebrate Women's History Month. We have listened to many different lectures, attended several man-hating seminars, and participated in a hundred and fifty burnings. From all these enlightening activities, we have chosen a selection of women who really represent the twentieth century and have had a positive effect on society.

So here they are, Humour™'s lovely women of the century! (Cue trumpets) Here is the Humanitarian of the Century-- Kerri Sing!

Kerri Strug: When the residents of Blanton Hall were desperately seeking a place to live, she was happy to have Residence Life throw us a few bucks to stay happy. Also, our building was put back together and in total working condition with the exception of all trashed phone lines and missing valuables.

Yet, let us not forget about what a great person she is and how she can be a student body. She has offered to let students use her personal computer because the handful of computers on campus are always occupied.

Let's give her a round of applause next time we see her walking around campus interacting with the student body...if we see her.

Bravest Woman of the Century-- Hillary Clinton: She's got to be brave if she's running for senate in a state where she doesn't belong. None of the Yankees of New York want this redneck princess running for anything other than for cover when she is being shot at. She says that she has always felt New York was her home away from home, but, quite frankly, if Bill was anyone's husband, they would spend a lot of time away from home too. Sure, everyone feels bad that her husband cheats more than a sweaty guinea in a jump suit at a poker match. But what does she say about society's problems besides we need to change some stuff. If her husband had done her job, there wouldn't be anything that needed to be changed? Let's just hope that the people of New York think before they cast the ballot, well, at least the 12 people voting. Of course, we have to figure in her companion, Emperor Giuliani of New York. His army of overweight police officers shall defeat her, despite the experience she has had as President of the United States.

The Why Didn't She Win Her Award-- Kathy Lee Gifford: This lovely lady of morning talk TV has been her shiny overcoat a decade too long. For years our mothers watched her and that wrinkly old man while we were in school. This just a-bit-too-happy, wanna-be cheerleader poked one many jokes at her King and boasted a little too often about that little brat Cody, who grew up to become a wonderful brand of bright and cheery clothing was made by a Mexican mill. His army of overbearing police officers...if we see her.

Susan Sarandon: Everyone loves me! I am the greatest in all the world. I am a heroine because I screwed up and had to suffer for it. Gee, everyone should love me and remember: When you screw up, good things happen!

Everything I needed to know, I learned from Tron

By Jeff Hill

My cricket is... like, cold man!

It will cost you only $3 to watch the movie Tron. That's if you can find it at Blockbuster. This is valuable education, and is well worth the $3 you will spend. You get Jeff Bridges, Computer Animation Grids, Clu, Sark and Dumont, all in this one hot package. It was a 1982 milestone that rocked the generation globe and gave science-fiction new meaning. To some, it is more than a movie - it's the Bible on VHS.

To others, it is a waste of an hour and-a-half. Don't listen to these people. They are the same people that believed in Coke 2, and betrayed the beverage at the time of its departure. Sometimes I start thinking that I could have passed all my tests in high school, if only I had viewed this movie beforehand. You may find that your whole education is worthless without Tron. You could raise intelligent children by simply placing them in a room where the movie is displayed on a 24-hour basis. It has the appeal of a microwave at full power, and the flash of that red light on your answering machine. Here are some quotes from the movie, which have significance to your four years here at MSU. The research has been done for you, so that you don't waste valuable time trying to analyze my meaning. You have important line dancing to perfect. Run program!!

MCP: (sharply) "I can't afford to have an independent program monitoring me. Do you have any idea how many bugs outside systems I've gone into? How many programs I've appropriated?" It's tough finding the right fraternity/sorority. You have to search for the people you want to be with and eat wonderful sorority chow with. Obviously, the MCP has been dropped by them all, and is seriously thinking of doing it on his own. Yet, his social needs contradict his reasoning.

RAM: "You're a... guest of the Master Control Program. They're going to find new friends? Do you stick with it."

TRON: "The Sea of Simulation is tricky, a lot of illusions...rough navigating. Programs have a way of just...disappearing here."

FLYNN: (shrugs) "You know anybody that's got an army for rent, that's fine...but me, uh, User said to go take that sucker out. An' let's face it, the big ox isn't gonna get any weaker. I feel like hittin' him now, while I'm good an' mad. Some nerve...what do they think you guys get killed, as long as he keeps rakin' 'em in?"

Writing for the paper can be frustrating. Sometimes I run out of quarters and I'm forced to give them five nickels. It seems that they only get stronger with every article I submit. And it's always the Users that tell me to stop writing. I will not go away. I will keep on with my mindless chatter. (I started to gut-laugh for five minutes.)

SARK: "The Master Control Program regrets that it cannot be responsible for identity disks lost or stolen. If you lose your disk, or fail to follow commands, you will be subject to immediate de-resolution. That is all."

If you lose your ID card, it costs you ten dollars to get a new one. You will starve to death and be forced to sign a form in order to get into your room. They are very strict about this at Schalick High School. Make sure you're prepared in between each class. See, you're pretty sure I'm still in debt to half of the kids at Schalick High School. Make sure you're prepared in between each class. Several instruments can be formed into pencils, if you are desperate. You will only be stuffing your disk, or fail to follow commands, you will be automatically de-rez. This ship...and everything that is less than...and everything that is less than will sink this depression. Try not to play lots of video games to numb the feeling of helplessness. You will literally reassurances...many brave plans...many promises...many lies..."

SARK: (sighs) "When you're been in the system as long as I have, you hear many promises...many reassurances...many brave plans..."

I'm starting to hear these promises now, and I'm only a freshman. I have a strange feeling that I am only a number in the system. What happens to these promises? They promised me happiness and a new car. That's why I picked this school. I need a new car!!

DUMONT: "This so-called Master Control Program is going around cutting programs off from their natural creators, grabbing all our believers and making them ride around on little motor scooters and shoot things at each other."

Weiner knows what all... oh, it's enough to give you a crisis of faith..."

If the parking situation remains as is for another year, I think we'll all be riding motor scooters and shooting things at each other. We'll have 20 minutes to finish an English composition."

The Horoscope
Never Lies

PISCES (Feb. 20 to March 20): Benny Franklin said that "Fish and people stink after three days." So your roommate is sick of you, arm yourself they are planning to kill you! ANIES (March 21 to April 19): The rides are changing, an opportunity at work will arise, and sleeping with the boss will definitely score you some brownie points!

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20): So, you found someone you have strong feelings for. Forget about them, Aquarians, preferably the big jolly kind, are much better in bed and they go all night long. Take one for a spin!

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21): So, you're feeling lonely? Well, the voices in your head will keep you quite content.

CANCER (June 22 to July 22): Bite your tongue, a few simple words and you will find yourself spitting out teeth.

LEO (July 23 to Aug. 22): YOU'VE BEEN WARNED, KEEP AWAY FROM OTHER LEOS! Just give that Aquarius all that you have to give. And we recommend that you be on your knees!

VIRGO (Aug. 23 to Sept. 22): Bunnies will hop, birds will chirp with your every step. You bring a smile to the world. Keep it up, everyone likes you. Just don't screw it up.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22): You know that cold you got, well you're gonna die, but in 50 years. Give the girl a break, she can't give you sex 24-seven.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21): Every day life is bogging you down. Give up that normal job, quit school, and do one of two things: play the violin or strip for men and charge them a dollar.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 22): You've got quite a bit of growing up to do! Watching TV every day is getting you no where, take up a hobby like needlepoint!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 23 to Jan. 20): Your grandfather fought at D-Day and the hardest experience you've had was shopping on Christmas at Macy's. It will get better, Clinton will declare war on Canada and you are the first to go!

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19): This is what you have been waiting for. The opposite sex will be throwing themselves at you, just wait 'til they least expect it and pounce on them like a kangaroo!

COMING SOON...2ND ANNUAL BENCH PRESS CONTEST, INDOOR SOCCER, SOFTBALL
Welcome back wrestling fans for the pre-Wrestlemania edition of The First Row. The bell has sounded so let's get into the action. We are now three days away from the mother of all wrestling PPV’s, Wrestlemania. I may be right, I may be wrong, I may be guessing, or I may know something. Whatever the case may be, here are Fred’s WM2000 predictions:

T & A w/Tris & Head Cheese: This will be a good match but the leader of the J.O.B. Squad will do what he does best and lay down for Albert and Test. To be honest, as long as I get to see more of Trish, I don’t care who wins!

Winners: T & A

D’Lo Brown & The Godfather vs. The Big Bossman & Bull Buchanan: Again, another fine match but this is one of those matches that you need two referees for. I see the ref having little or no control at all for this one. If the ref doesn’t stop the match, I see The Bossman and Buchanan taking home the W.

Winners: Bossman and Buchanan

X-Pac w/Tori & The Road Dogg vs. Kane & Rikishi: Photo: No matter what the outcome of this match, I just hope this is the last time I have to see Kane and X-Punk in the same ring. Of course Tori will get involved in this match but regardless, Kane and Rikishi will be splitting the prize money when the smoke clears.

Winners: Kane and Rikishi

Kat Fight: The Kat w/Mae Young vs. Terri w/Moolah: How did Mae and Moolah manage to get involved in this match? Okay, somehow I expect the Radicals to pull off a let me ask it this way... Why are Mae and Moolah involved in this match? Neither woman can fight and that is what will make this one of the highlights of the PPV. I see lots of hair pulling and clothes being ripped off during this match. This might be the match everyone’s talking about on Monday!

Winners: Kane and Rikishi

Winners: Every male in attendance and watching from the comfort of home.

Championship Battle Royal: X-Pac w/Tori & The Road Dogg vs. Kane & Rikishi: Photo: At Wrestlemania 2000, the Dudley Boys along with Eddie Guerrero and the Hardy Boyz were never to make it this far in the tournament and most people felt that they deserve the belts. I am one of those people!

Winners: The Hardy Boyz

Intercontinental & European Championship - Two Falls, Triple Threat Match: Chris Benoit vs. Edge & Christian vs. The Dudley Boys [Champs]: Not much to say about this one except that all three men are championship material. Easy Kurt keeps the European belt and Benoit grabs the IC strap, which leaves Y2J to move on to bigger and better things like a run at the Heavyweight championship.

Winners: Kurt Angle (European title); Chris Benoit (Intercontinental title)

Finally... we have made it to the World

Winners: The Hardy Boyz

Championship Fatal Four way Match: The Rock w/Vince vs. Mick Foley w/Linda vs. The Big Show w/Shane vs. Triple H w/ Stephanie [Champ]: When and how did WWF turn into an episode of Jerry Springer? All eight of the people will be involved in one way or another in this match. The Big Show will be the first eliminated. Next will be the Rock.

OK, now that you just finished calling me every name in the book for just writing off the Rock, let me explain. The Rock will be leaving at the beginning of May until the end of June to start taping The Mummy 2. The Rock will play the role of the "Scorpion King," which will be the main villain in this movie. I think this is where Stone Cold will come in and cause Rocky to lose. If this happens like I say it will, it would be a perfect way for The Rock and Austin to start up their old feud, which was one of the best of the recent past.

Champion: Mick Foley

Editors’ Wrestlemania Picks

In one of the most anticipated matches at Wrestlemania 2000, the Dudley Boys (above), the Hardy Boys (below), and the team of Edge and Christian (at left) will be facing off in a triangle ladder match. The three teams, with a combination of brawling and aerial styles, have been six of the most entertaining wrestlers over the past few months.
Conway Leads MSU to Victory Over Cortland St.

MSU senior third baseman Craig Conway contributes a home run, 4 RBI to extend Red Hawks' win streak to five

By Erik Lopez
Staff Writer

Led by Craig Conway, who went 3 for 5, the Red Hawks defeated the Cortland State Red Dragons at Yogi Berra Stadium Friday afternoon. The senior third baseman singled in the first, homered in the sixth, and doubled in the seventh to post up 4 RBI's and help MSU win its fifth straight game.

In the seventh inning MSU unloaded a barrage of hits as they scored 5 runs to take back the lead, 11-7. Marc Houser and Jeff Schriber singled. Baran followed them, drawing a walk. Houser scored by means of a wild pitch and Conway's double drove in Schriber and Baran. George Gallagher then drove in Conway with a triple to right-center field. The final run of the inning came on Frank Longos' single, which scored Gallagher.

Cortland State made a final comeback attempt in the eighth as they scored 2 more runs, making the score 11-9, but the Red Hawks held on to win the game as Brian Ellerson was credited with his second save of the season.

GAME, SET, MATCH

MSU tennis player Al Piccoli uses his backhand to return a shot in Friday's match against Drew University. The Red Hawks lost the match, 6-1, dropping their season record to 0-3. Yesterday, the team traveled to TCNJ, and their next home match is on Friday at 3 p.m., hosting NJCU.
goals, including two from Rebecca Woodsworth, giving MC a 5-2 lead. By the end of the period, Woodsworth added another six goals, giving themselves a 10-2 lead, before Lycoming could answer back.

The first half ended at 13-4, and MSU would hold off Lycoming to pick up a 21-11 victory.

Fox finished with 15 saves and sophomore midfielder added four goals and two assists.

The women's lacrosse team visited Manhattanville last night, and will be squaring off against Cabrini today before returning to Sprague Field on Saturday to face Rowan at 1 p.m.

LIZBETH VICTOREO/MONTCLARION

MSU junior attack Vicki Gangemi tries to elude the defense during last Thursday's 21-11 victory over Lycoming College. Gangemi finished the game with four goals and her sister, Jodi, finished with six.
The Red Hawk men's and women's track and field teams opened their 2000 outdoor season in the MSU Invitational down at Dioguardi Track. On the men's side, All-American Ed Wheeler broke the school mark by more than a foot. Other winners for MSU were Tom Baldwin in the 800 meters (1:55.30) and Alexandra Yaji in the high jump (5 feet, 4 inches).

Sophomore pitcher Corey Hamman struck out a career-high 12 batters in Saturday's baseball game against Rensselaer. He allowed only two runs over seven innings in the 12-3 win.

During the game, George Gallagher hit his sixth home run and drove in four for seven innings in the 12-3 win.

Rensselaer. He allowed only two runs over seven innings in the 12-3 win.

Richard Stockton College, 15-5.

Last Thursday, the third-seeded Theta Xi Underdawgz faced off against the number one seed Junkyard Dogs in the Intramural Men's B-Division finals.

The Underdawgz, who finished at 5-1 and second in their division to the undefeated Blanton Bears, fell to the Junkyard Dogs by a score of 38-21 in a game that was never close.

The Junkyard Dogs, who finished first in their division and earned the top seed, finished the season at 8-0, including wins over ninth-ranked Kling in the second round of the playoffs and the Underdawgz in the finals.

At left, the Underdawgz' Konrad Sekula attempts a shot over the Dogs' Zoltán Baday.

Also on Thursday night, the almost-sure thing top-seeded Dedicated 2 Da Streetz team took on second-seeded The Fifth in the Men's A-Division finals.

D2DS, who spent their season blowing out anyone and everyone that tried to stand up against them, was looking to extend their streak of huge victories and take home the title. On Feb. 3, D2DS took apart The Fifth, defeating them by 17 points. Their slim, nest margin of victory on the season had been 13.

The Fifth, who finished in second place with just one loss, broke that trend, defeating D2DS 63-60 to take the Men's A Title. D2DS and their successors will surely be looking for revenge next year.

In his last two starts, senior pitcher Greg Belson has pitched a total of 19 innings and given up only two earned runs on nine hits. He picked up wins in both games, improving his record to 3-0 in five starts.

After the two runs given up Tuesday, Belson has now given up only three earned runs in his last 26 2/3 innings pitched.

He has held opponents to a .221 batting average and has struck out 26 batters while giving up 31 hits and walking 12. He holds an ERA of 2.68.
Red Hawks Come Out on Top in MSU/WPU Softball Classic
By Mike Sanchez
Assistant Sports Editor

The MSU softball team won the fifth Annual Montclair State/Willy Paterson Softball Classic this past Saturday by tie-breaker. The softball team went 3-1, along with Cortland State and Salisbury State after the tournament was over, but because of run differential, MSU (11-3) was named champion.

After the Red Hawks won the first two games on Friday afternoon at Quarry Field, they split the following day’s games winning their first game 3-1 against Ithaca College (12-5), but losing their final game against Bridgewater St. (10-4) falling 2-1.

The MSU offense was obviously relying on the trio of Toni Milito, Tara Wiz, and Kim Caruso, who combined for 10 runs, 18 hits, and six RBIs in their 34 at bats. MSU pitcher Evelyn Morozzi ended the tournament 2-0 and 5-1 overall. She pitched 14 innings and allowed only four runs on 10 hits. She struck out seven and walked two. Morozzi also contributed with an additional four RBIs, three of which came in games she pitched. Tara Todaro went 1-1 and now has an overall record of 4-2. In
