What's in a Name? Heights Buildings Officially Titled

Names for all eight buildings were chosen by the MSU community.

Nicole Simonetti News Editor

The first building within one of the complexes is named after John Basilone, a WWII hero. The other three buildings were named after Albert Einstein, Sarah Vaughn and Walt Disney. The Food and Drug Administration (FDA) has finally put an end to the craze for Four Lokos after sending alcoholic energy drink manufacturers with an ultimatum.

Supplement to FAFSA Prevents Students from Receiving Aid

Nicole Simonetti News Editor

This year, the federal government simplified the FAFSA form. However, in New Jersey’s case, HESAA realized that there were necessary questions being left unanswered on the form, such as the optional input of the individual’s driver’s license number, social security number and earned income tax credits from the student’s family.

Body Scans, Pat Downs Concern Travellers

Rajnish Neha Assistant News Editor

With Winter Break right around the corner, students are concerned over the latest airport security measures being enforced on all those flying in or out of American airports. The new body scans began Tuesday.

Passengers are required to get a full-body scan upon boarding their flight.

Flight-passengers who activate metal detectors and refuse body-imaging scanning will be subject to extensive frisking.

HESAA needed a supplemental form. “To their credit, they couldn’t do a thorough job without the form,” said Jim Anderson, director of Financial Aid at Montclair State.

The Financial Aid office at MSU learned about this change around November of last year, according to Anderson.

Vaughn was both a jazz singer and a pianist. After a few years of singing with bands, she decided to start a solo career and was signed by Columbia Records. She was a Grammy award for her album, Germinat Live! In 1950, Vaughn became a part of the Jazz Hall of Fame. As many students may know, Walt Whitman was an accomplished poet. He was born in West Hills, Town of Huntington, Long Island on May 31, 1819 and died March 26, 1892.

Whitman was known for controversial themes in his work, especially in Leaves of Grass. He wrote about sexuality and that often made people uncomfortable. Before his death, Whitman moved to Camden, N.J.

“Most people drinking [Four Lokos] had four students go to the hospital. That’s supposed to land you a spot in jail. There are no warnings on the can,” said senior Danielle Mahoney. "It was a very dangerous drink that served no purpose. It promoted poor choices in students and as a result it led to people being hospitalized.”

The four buildings in the second complex are named after Clara Barton, Dorothea Dix, Thomas Edison and Nellie Parker. Of all the people selected, Parker is the only New Jersey Native. Clara Barton was born on Dec. 25, 1821 in Oxford, Massachusetts, and died in April 12, 1912. Barton was both the founder and the first president of the American Red Cross. She was also teacher as well. Dorothea Dix was born on April 4, 1802 in Hampden, Maine. Dix had a passion for teaching. She taught in elementary schools, and later in prisons. Dix died on July 17, 1887. The last building is named after Nellie Parker who was born in Hancock, N.J. on Aug. 27, 1922. As an African-American, her education was hindered because of segregation and racism. Her father fought for her and her brother to attend Hackensack’s schools and won. Parker was determined to teach in the Hackensack school district and she succeeded. This isn’t the first building to be named after her; Maple Hill School was renamed the Nellie K. Parker Elementary School in 1991.

There are two commons that were named in honor of people as well. In complex one, the common area is called Gibson Commons after Althea Gibson. Gibson was born on Aug. 25, 1927 and died on Sept. 28, 2003 in West Orange, N.J. She was an African-American athlete. Gibson was the first black woman to be in a world tennis tour and win a Grand Slam award. In complex two, the common area was named after William Centerton. The residence halls are being constructed quickly and are expected to be finished by fall 2011.
Before the latest security protocol, airports have relied on metal detectors. Currently, airports use Advanced Imaging Technology (AIT) machines, security that senses for metals and non-metals, such as liquids and gels that are potential explosive-making mechanisms. AIT machines produce full-body detailed x-ray images of passengers. The machines use millimeter and backscatter technology and bounce low-level x-ray beams which essentially create an image of the passenger underneath his or her clothing.

According to the Transportation Security Administration's website (tsa.gov), "Millimeter wave technology produces an image that resembles a fuzzy photo negative. Backscatter technology produces an image that resembles a chalk etching."

Concerns arise over the radiation exposure and the privacy of an individual's body.

Passengers are asked to stand under the machine with their feet shoulder-width apart and arms raised. This is done to be sure that passengers are not hiding anything.

The image is then viewed by a TSA agent that is approximately 50 feet away in a private room. The officer conducting the scan does not gain access to this image, nor does anyone else, unless a passenger's investigation is necessary.

Many passengers believe such technology is invasive. Brett Byron, a senior, traveled through AIT machines last weekend and said, "The thought that a random security agent is checking this image makes me uneasy and predisposes to this interview. I didn't know [all the facts]. I just hope the security guard is taking his job seriously and handles it professionally."

Officers are concerned with the ability to view and transfer those x-ray images.

According to tsa.gov, "Advanced imaging technology cannot store, print, transmit or save the image, and the image is automatically deleted from the system after it is cleared by the remotely located security officer. Officers evaluating images are not permitted to take cameras, cell phones or photo-enabled devices into the resolution room."

I didn't know that and they don't even tell you about the new machines at the airport, they just make you walk through it with the directions of how to stand," said Darlene Arias, senior.

If a passenger refuses to walking through the AIT machines or if an alarm is triggered, a thorough frisk is given.

Pat downs are conducted in separate rooms by officers of the same gender. One person can be present with the passenger as a witness.

TSA released a statement: "Pat-downs are one important tool to help TSA detect hidden and dangerous items such as explosives. Passengers should continue to expect an unpredictable mix of security layers that include explosives trace detection, advanced imaging technology, canine teams, among others."

I feel that it is invasive; however, I agree with anything that they have to do to keep airlines safe," said Byron.

The amount of radiation being emitted by AIT machines was evaluated by the Food and Drug Administration's (FDA) Center for Devices and Radiological Health (CDRH), the National Institute for Standards and Technology (NIST), and the Johns Hopkins University Applied Physics Laboratory (JHU/APL). And found that the amount was not in excess.

TSA said, "Radiation doses for the individuals being screened, operators, and bystanders were well below the dose limits specified by the American National Standards Institute (ANSI)." According to TSA, there are 400 AIT machines installed in 68 airports nationwide.

The rest of the country's roughly 450 commercial airports still only use metal detectors.

Some passengers have not noted the difference between technology updates. On flying out of Newark Liberty Airport, Arias said, "My mom asked me if I had noticed anything, but I didn't because to me, they look exactly like the old ones."

Boston's Logan International airport has 17 of these new scanners. This past Monday, two Harvard Law students, Jeffrey Redfern and Anant Pradhan, filed a lawsuit against the TSA after opting for the enhanced pat-down.

According to The Harvard Law Record, "Pradhan said a TSA agent put his fingers inside the waistband of Pradhan's pants, felt his groin, and lifted his buttocks. 'They ran their hand all the way up [to a person's groin], and they don't necessarily stop,' he said. 'They'll go all the way up until – well, they go all the way up.'"

More lawsuits have been filed; however, TSA is settled in their stand.

HESAA has repeatedly sent out emails to students informing them of the additional form, said Anderson. They’ve mainly notified students electronically throughout the year.

Financial Aid has sent out mass emails to students, mock bills during the summer and the information pops-up on WESS at the log-in screen. Anderson said they’ve also reached out to departments that could inform students more directly such as housing and athletics.

HESAA sent a list to the University of approximately 1,000 students potentially eligible for aid about a week before the deadline of Nov. 15.

Not all students were actually applying Montclair, so Financial Aid narrowed it down to around 500 students.

Two weeks before the deadline, Financial Aid sent an email to students informing them of their last chance to fill out the form.

“Information is needed in order to be equitable,” said Anderson.

Despite protest from state schools, including Rutgers, the deadline remained at Nov. 15 for the fall semester.

Students will be eligible to apply for grants in the spring semester and the deadline is March 15, according to Lucy Fernandez, assistant director of Financial Aid.

During the 2009-10 year, over $16 million in Tuition Aid Grants went to 3,490 students to assist in the cost of a full year’s tuition at MSU.

So far during the fall semester, Financial Aid has calculated $7.5 million in aid to 3,227 students. The numbers for spring are not yet available, but Anderson believes they will reflect the state’s general budget cuts to higher education.

According to Anderson, the state government took the NJEI table and cut it across the board. As a result, Financial Aid has anticipated a cut of $1.25 million to state grants and scholarships. This will undoubtedly affect some students, especially in an economy where more people are seeking assistance according to Anderson.

“Getting that many students to do something on an ad hoc basis is extremely difficult,” said Anderson. “I question whether HESAA really needed that information […] I’m not really qualified to judge that.”

Some states base financial aid on information provided solely in the FAFSA. Private colleges usually require additional information and follow different guidelines.

“By having these additional questions, [HESAA] can better judge who needs money,” said Anderson.

HESAA plans to work with state universities to avoid similar problems next year. One proposed solution involves a direct link to the HESAA website.

After a student clicks “submit” on the 2011-12 FAFSA, they would be directed to HESAA’s website. This would potentially eliminate the steps involved in applying for state grants and scholarships.

Beat Stress at the Drop-In Center

More than half of the semester is completed which means that many MSU students have developed with the stress of midterms. As we anxiously count down the days until winter break, we experience the lingering feeling of stress over the dreaded final exams that are just a few weeks away.

If any of you are as stressed out as I am (and I'm sure some of you are), you may want to take a second to scream from the stress. I have some solutions for you, none of which involve screaming at the top of your lungs.

Montclair State's Drop-In Center can definitely be of assistance for anyone feeling stressed. The Drop-In Center is located next to the Student Center. The building looks like a cottage from a child's storybook because of the white paint, red trim, shutters, stone column, and shingled-covered roof.

The center offers a variety of week-by-week sessions designed specifically for healthy stress relief. Anyone who feels the effects of stress on both their mind and body will benefit from these sessions that target various areas of stress.

Monday's session is "Mindful Meditation" which focuses on clearing the mind and developing positive thoughts. On Tuesdays, yoga is the technique to target stress in a class called "Yoga Basics." For anyone who takes pleasure in writing, "Write Your Stress Away" gathering on Wednesdays is worthwhile. The session on Thursday is perfect for those who enjoy arts and crafts because "Art Therapy" provides relaxing activities such as coloring and bracelet-making.

Within the past month and a half, I have participated in a couple of activities held by the Drop-In Center and I would definitely recommend them for anyone who is feeling overwhelmed.

The first event I attended was the "Stress-Free Extravaganza" held in the Student Center ballrooms. Staff members from the Drop-In Center talked about ways to reduce stress and they handed out pamphlets with information. In addition, the activities offered that day included yoga, arts and crafts, and massages.

Melina Dressing

Both cat-eyed and winged eyeliner have been popular trends since last year. Celebrities like Katy Perry, Angelina Jolie and Nicole Richie sported these styles recently. It’s easy to see why these trends are so beloved: they can be worn as regular day-to-day style or for Drop-In Center," Rosen touch to your party dress for a special occasion.

Mastering those eyeliner looks does take a little patience and practice, but once you have them down pat, you’ll feel like a celebrity yourself.

The perfect way to close your eyes as it opens them up and makes your lashes look a lot longer than they really are. One of the easiest ways to achieve these looks is with an angled brush and liquid or cream eyeliner.

For a winged eyeliner look, start within the bend of the base of your eyelashes at the outer corner of your eye and draw an angled line up towards the end of your eyeshadow. You can also start at the middle of your eye and draw downwards.

Keep in mind, the longer the line, the more dramatic the look. Then, draw a line that connects back to the base of your eyelashes, so as to form a triangle type of shape.

Fill in the triangle, then line your eyelid complete to the look. Bringing the line to the corner of your eye will close it, so skip the line just shy of the inner corner.

I have found that applying an eye shadow primer and a light eye shadow color prior to the eyeliner will help keep it on for the duration of the day. Also, be wary of wearing too much eyeliner. A small amount or eye shadow on your lower lash line after applying it to the top because this will actually close your eyes and may give you the opposite of your desired effect.

Depending on my own mood of the day, I draw a more subtle cut line for a mellowed-out look, and go for a thicker and more dramatic winged liner when I’m feeling bold and mischievous.

Some brands to try are MAC Paint Pot ($16.50), or for a thrifty eye, try Maybelline EyeStudio Lasting Drama Gel Eyeliner ($9.99).

Good nutrition is not always promoted on college campuses. Students are often not aware of what's available and how nutritious foods can be purchased. As a result, students sometimes don’t eat as healthfully as they should.

There are alternatives to the pizza, chicken fingers and french fries. Healthier choices are available on campus and there are also quick, healthy ways to eat out if you have a car.

Students can create their own salad at the salad bar in Blanton and R.H. Diner Dining Halls. These dining services have healthy, vegetarian cuisine and fresh fruit.

For a holier, but healthy meal you can make your way over to the Red Hake Diner and get a baked potato, a grilled chicken breast sandwich or a veggie burger for a reasonable price.

The Center also offers bagged salad, tuna salad sandwiches, peanut butter and jelly sandwiches, yogurt, fresh fruit, nuts and more.

Aries — It’s time to take a step back from the limelight. You may be a loud and vocal leader, but this week, it’s best for everyone if you stand back and let someone else take the reigns. It’ll be good for others to learn about being more of a leader and for you to learn about listening to others as well.

Leo — You’ve may have had a huge love interest lately, but it may not be moving anywhere. At this point, it is time to let that person go. It is not worth the time or effort in pursuing any longer. Try to garner your energy to something more productive in your life.

Taurus — You’ve been going nuts lately trying to get all of your end-of-the-semester work done. Being stressed out about everything isn’t going to help get your work done. Take a day out to relax and recharge yourself for the semester’s stretch run. It’ll help you get all of your projects finished in time.

Gemini — Strange dreams may have been floating around in your sleep lately. These dreams may make no sense in your life at all, or they may be pointing you towards a new direction in life. By interpreting your dreams, you may be able to make a wise decision.

Cancer — All of your friends seem to be running off in all different directions lately, and you may have run into some conflict with them. Make sure to be patient with everyone. Your friends may be at a rough point in their lives. Try to help guide them in the right direction.

Leo — You’ve may have had a huge love interest lately, but it may not be moving anywhere. At this point, it is time to let that person go. It is not worth the time or effort in pursuing any longer. Try to garner your energy to something more productive in your life.

Virgo — There’s been simply too many tasks on your plate today and you can’t handle everything. It is time for you to ask for help. You must learn this week that you can’t do everything yourself. Don’t be afraid to ask for help.

Libra — It may feel like everything in your life has been moving in slow motion lately. Well, the bad news is that things will move even slower. Just hold tight, get all of your work done and enjoy the holiday season.

Scorpio — If it has been a while since you’ve been to the gym, this is the week to go. During the winter, it’s easy to eat a lot of food and not get exercise. Get your muscles working and enjoy a workout this week.

Sagittarius — If it has been a while since you’ve been to the gym, this is the week to go. During the winter, it’s easy to eat a lot of food and not get exercise. Get your muscles working and enjoy a workout this week.

Capricorn — There might be a lot of drama and confusion within your group of friends lately. It has gone on for too long, this is the week to do something about it. Have a long, productive discussion with the troublemaker. Remains evil about things, but be firm and make sure to resolve the problem. It’ll be gratifying in the long run.

Aquarius — You have been at a crossroads, spend- ing time with two different groups of friends lately. If you simply don’t have the time for both groups, then this week you have to choose between one group and the other. It may be a rough decision to make, but I’ll make you feel more comfortable with the friends that you do choose to spend time with.

Pisces — You may not be the bravest person in the world, so this week, work on gaining more courage. If you’re shy around certain people, maybe try to come out of your shell a little bit and talk to those people. Maybe do something that is out of your comfort zone, like going to a party. Don’t be afraid to be yourself around others.
#1: Stop procrastinating.

— Sometimes, doing your homework or studying in your dorm room may be a bad idea. I know for myself, I never do homework in my room because within five minutes, I’m watching TV or playing Madden. Make sure you can find a place where you won’t be distracted. To play even more off of this idea, if you get distracted from your work by going on Facebook, then only use a computer if you’re writing a paper or doing research. Shut off your phone if you’re busy texting friends. Get rid of any and all distractions, you’ll be thankful for it later.

#2: Find the right environment.

— It’s the holiday season, it may not be a good time of year for as many schoolwork done is just about the worst thing you can get. As a senior especially, you’re hitting that point where I just don’t want to do any school work anymore. Sadly, though, not getting your work done is just about the worst decision you can ever make. Here are a few tips that can help get you through the last few weeks of the semester.

1. Make a plan — This sounds so cliché, but by planning out when you are going to study and do projects ahead of time, it makes getting your final work done a whole lot easier. Just get out a calendar, mark down dates for exams and papers, and plan around them. Doing everything at once or procrastinating is the worst thing you can do in this case.

2. Spend time in the library or another place where you can focus.

3. Don’t forget to have some fun

— It’s the holiday season, it may not be a good time of year for as many schoolwork. After all there’s only about a week left before finals so it is about time to step back and take a break from your work. So you made it through midterms and you are absolutely deadlining the thought of having to take finals. Well, I’d love to tell you to just throw in the towel and forget about them, but in some cases they may contribute to twenty percent of your grade or more, so what is the best way to manage those last couple weeks?

Well, I’d love to tell you to just throw in the towel and forget about them, but in some cases they may contribute to twenty percent of your grade or more, so what is the best way to manage those last couple weeks?

#3: Don’t wait until last minute to get help.

— If you’re confused about something, speak up. There’s nothing worse than disappointing something you are genuinely unsure of, only to find that it makes up the majority of your exam. So instead of frustrating yourself with the, “Well I should of, could of,” seek help from your professor or tutor prior to the exam. Why let your grade slip when you’ve gotten this far?

#4: Relax.

— Some could study for hours upon hours for an exam; go in completely stressed and blank once the exam is in front of them. Although exams may contribute to the entirety of your grade, it’s only an exam. Do the best you can do and that’s all you can do. Stressing out never makes anything better, so try your best to keep things in perspective.

Groped or Exposed?
You be the Judge

By definition, security is freedom from care, anxiety, or doubt. It’s purpose is to protect and keep the protected safe. But what if security inspires anxiety? What if the mere word ‘security’ elicits a response akin to fear?

Most of us are familiar with the hassle associated with airport travel. We leave the comfort of our homes hours in advance in anticipation of security checkpoints, only to be met with the familiar image of barefooted citizens surrounding us in line, commonly wondering if they will be the ones to set the metal detector off. What was once considered an obtrusive aspect of security is minute in comparison to the newly implemented security measures at airports across America.

Advanced Imaging Technology, more commonly known as “body scans,” has made its way into routine airport security. These body scanners utilize low-level x-ray beams to create an image of what a passenger potentially has under their clothes.

Yes, this does mean that your naked form will be completely exposed to the examination of the Transportation Security Administration. Alternatively, if a passenger were to refuse the body-scan then they will undergo an open palm pat down.

Do not be mistaken; these are not the routine frisks that were once protocol at the airport. This pat down is much more intimate, and has been phrased as being more of a grope than a simple frisk.

Regardless of the intimacy, will these methods ensure our safety? We can only hope so. Taking a moment to remove ourselves from a modest mentality, logically no one will be able to hide weapons or potentially dangerous materials under their clothes.

Still, the material manifestation of exactly how far people are willing to go to harm innocent people.

Our fear is that a child will be subject to an intimate pat down and not understand exactly what is occurring. This occurrence is nothing short of traumatic in the mind of a child. Security is only found in the arms of a parent, not with a stranger in a foreign environment.

To spare everyone, including children, the experience, our advice is that you just submit to the body scan. After all, if you have nothing to hide besides your own self-conscious awareness of your naked body then cooperate with the airport. If you really think about it, the new technology is on the same spectrum as the cameras found in dressing rooms. People are monitoring you there as well, yet people seem complacent enough to allow this security measure. Monitored dressing rooms are not even for your own security but for the security of merchandise.

We must detach ourselves from the obvious discomfort that is sure to accompany exposure. A pervading fear of ours is exactly how far airports will go to keep their passengers safe.

We sure hope that cavity searches will not be the next method on the Transportation Security Administration’s list of new protocols.

Despite our comprehension concerning the body scans, the literal definition of security fails to match up to our new perception of the situation. Instead of fearing setting off the metal detectors, we have displaced our anxiety to possible exposure.

We are not looking forward to our next flight but will not be the ones resisting these body scans.

Students Speak: Do you have an issue with the airport body scans?

Michael Whitehead, Information Tech Senior

“Yes, it’s a little bit revealing but it’s probably better then being felt up. Although I would be perfectly fine with the body scan.”

Jonathon Faizo, Broadcasting Senior

“I’m kind of surprised that they are enforcing this now due to the fact that in 2001 we were attacked. This should have been up and back when the danger first occurred. We are all human, we all have the same body parts. It’s no big deal.”

Stephanie Herman, Speaking Senior

“I do have a problem with it. I don’t want someone to see through my clothes. I treat little kids as potential criminals, I treat it as a violation of privacy, and personal space. I don’t think that it is a violation of privacy or personal space. I don’t think that I am making up an issue just because you try to fly that you need to have your body physically exposed to travel.”

Don’t accept any requests from people you don’t know. Another valuable piece of information is there is a way to take picture skills or video of the person your Skype with, so watch out for that.

Please make no mistake, I swear I do have a sense of humor. I have sent text messages during class, and been yelled at for conversing with my peers, but when called out on it I am repent. I was wrong, I got caught and I would apologize for that, but is that my fault?

It is surprising how many students are so quick to blame these who do the catching, and not themselves.

The pattern, I fear, may lead to an increase in these kinds of incidents, resulting in a decrease of passionate professors. In this case, faculty and students alike will suffer.

We would learn nothing and miss out on everything that it isn’t contraindicated or unethical.

It would be the beginning of the end. Say goodbye to the foundations of knowledge.

The next time you sneer at your professor while their back is turned, think twice about what you’re doing.

They are the experts in their field and they are an untapped wealth of knowledge if you take the time to push your immature notions aside and have an actual conversation with them.

The Demon Barber of Fleet Street Comes to MSU

Stefanie Sears
Staff Writer

Much to my surprise, the performance of Sweeney Todd at Montclair State University captured my attention and exceeded my expectations. The entire cast and crew offered a captivating version of Stephen Sondheim’s haunting musical.

After a revival on Broadway and more recently, Tim Burton’s popular pseudo-gothic film version, the demon barber of Fleet Street has gained notoriety in pop culture. The musical tells the story of Sweeney Todd, a London barber who kills his victims in the process of giving them a shave and then drops their bodies through a trap door in his shop. His wife, Mrs. Lovett, assists in these murders and decides to bake the victims into pies. The act vividly portrayed the dark alleys of 19th century London. A dead body wrapped in a cloth dangled from a rope over the stage. One by one, the somber cast walked into the stage accompanied by a mannequin pipe organ. Each person inspected the body hole. In song, they invited the audience to “Attend the tale of Sweeney Todd.”

Sweeney Todd, played by senior Adam Bashian, entered to help complete the scene. Bashian appeared in last year’s production of A Raisin in the Sun as Bernard Nightingale, so I was excited to see him in his element once again and immediately deemed him perfect for the role of Sweeney Todd. Throughout the show, he maintained a strong and compelling stage presence with his remarkable vocal and acting talents. The subtle actions in his demeanor was all it took to complete a scene. Bashian is not the only performer who deserves praise.

Junior Jesus Elynn Zeldman used her talents of wit and London accent to silence a few haters. For instance, both Jay Z and Nicki Minaj rap on the song “Monster,” which is like parking an Aston Martin and a Honda in the same garage. Kid Cudi provides the chorus to “Gorgeous,” but the lyric quality is too trite for the album. Most of the tracks on My Beautiful Dark Twisted Fantasy contain samples from other songs, which is unfortunately becoming a standard in modern rap.

West has released an album that isn’t quite as smooth or quirky as his earlier works, but with reason. His image has gotten progressively worse through the years, and My Beautiful Dark Twisted Fantasy is West’s best effort to silence a few haters. Sometimes, even the monsters can be heros.

The Demon Barber of Fleet Street Comes to MSU

Even though Sweeney Todd is considered a musical thriller, there are moments of dark humor throughout. During “A Little Prayer,” for example, Todd and Mrs. Lovett delight in plotting the demise of their victims and baking them into pies. In song, they invited the audience to “Attend the tale of Sweeney Todd.”

My Beautiful Dark Twisted Fantasy Looks To Silence Doubters

The College Dropout did back on his first albums, Fantasy,” which, for the most part, was a surprise for many fans back in 2004. The album essentially was a collection of auto-tuned, drum-synth beats that was essentially a collection of West’s best tracks all seem to be more personal than before. Laufman added, “West’s entire sound has gotten progressively worse through the years, and My Beautiful Dark Twisted Fantasy is West’s best effort to silence a few haters. Sometimes, even the monsters can be heros.”

Mark’s New Music Roundup

The National’s High Violet is easily one of my favorite albums of the year, and this extended edition features an alternative version of the brilliant “Terrible Love,” live recordings of several tracks, and a few new songs. The new tracks are worth listening to, although they do not possess the same raw force as the original High Violet songs. The extended edition is an excellent find for fans of the band, but if you’re still unfamiliar with The National, this is not the place to begin your journey.

After releasing several successful albums and building a fanbase as one of the indie genre’s most quirky and charming female singer-songwriters, Regina Spektor rewards her fans with Live In London, a collection of tracks recorded at near-studio level overseas. The album contains 23 of her most well known songs, including “Us,” “Shason,” and “On The Radio.” Although nothing new, Live In London is a welcome addition to her already impressive catalogue.

Do you have any ideas for the Round Up? If so, then contact Mark at msuarts@gmail.com and start writing for The Montclarion today!
The Next Days is a perfect example of a typical film that suffers for lack of believability. Its components, while mostly adequate, never quite make the film a good film rather than a great film.

Russell Crowe plays John, a man whose life goes sideways after his wife Lara (Elizabeth Banks) is falsely convicted of murder and is sent to prison for life. The film is slow, due to all its components, yet manages to keep its audience interested. The plot is the prison break itself, as the movie hits its stride, as Crowe is in Gladiators form and is seemingly the most nimble persona alive, as he outwits every cop in his path. The major problem with this film lies not only within the prison break, but the entire storyline. The character development of John is too rapid, and I would rather he'd stay in his English teacher persona to contain the film's believability. Overall, The Next Days is an effort worthy with some impressive performances, but it isn't director Paul Haggis best work.

Let Us Entertain You: The MSU Players Club

Ken Macri

The Players Club on campus is a great way for students to get involved in theatre arts without being a theatre major. It offers a lot of opportunities, acting, directing, set building, or writing. It's a place where you can go to get involved in theatre without being in the major. It's part of the reason I came to school.

However, the 2010-2011 Players Club has an impressed extremely passionate E-Board who have one simple goal: turn the club around and bring it back to what it was in the past.

With that in mind, the club's officer's have been making some improvements, including a meeting the first week of school in October, so that we wanted to run things more efficiently, from the very beginning. We sent out to the weekly emails that were sent out to keep the entire club up to date on the club's happenings. In just a few short months, the club has more than doubled its membership. Still, we are a 21 year old senior and the clubs president. I have been involved in the club for two years and offered a few statistics.

"I wanted to be president of the club because I remembered how much fun this club used to be," Rice said after she drove the weekly meeting Monday One. Rice has been involved in the club since its beginning. Last year, we rarely had more than ten students at a meeting, half of which was the E-Board, and I wanted to change that.

When asked how she and the rest of the officers went about doing that, Rice first explained that they reached out to a lot of freshmen. "A lot of freshmen were interested in coming to the club, but they never knew we even existed. So with the help of the existing members of the club, we spent the first few weeks of the semester making sure people knew we were still around." It must have worked because now, on Monday nights at 5:30, the meetings have at least 15 to 20 students. We also have the number of students who attend the performances have grown exponentially. "We have about 30 new members in the club this year, and that number is growing every week," Rice said with pride.

A few other officers on the E-Board, the publicity officer on the E-Board, talked about their first year. "We've recently put out a Rocky Horror Picture Show, a show we do annually around Halloween, and we had a record audience for all four runs of the show. It was a perfect source of revenue, "Rosen to Be Pretty", a show directed by E-Board member, Kate Portera, a senior education major. "It was a huge success. Our theatre studies major opened for us. We had an audience with over 50 people every night. Last year, those numbers were unheard of. It was common to see audiences of maybe 20 to 25 on a good night."

With the club membership on the rise, several freshmen offered their thoughts on the club they have been a part of for only the past few months. "This is so much better than my high school drama program," Newcomer Nick Weber said. "I feel like I have so much room to grow here," Weber has already been involved with "Reasons To Be Pretty", the Club's most recent play, as he appeared as an extra.

Lindsay Wagner, a freshman who worked the sound for the same show, expressed her happiness with the club as well. In two words, Wagner claimed, "It's awesome." She went on to talk about how it's nice to have a place where you can go to get involved in theatre without being in the major. In fact, The Players Club may have helped make MBU's new freshman for college, "I had a friend who was involved last year and one I heard about the club, it's part of the reason I came to school here," Wagner said. "It's such a good outlet and gives everybody a chance to exercise their creative side."

A few other officers on the E-Board offered their opinions as to why the club has been so successful this year. Mary Kate Portera, a senior education major and the Production Manager on E-Board, explained, "We are really trying to be as organized as possible this year while still keeping all members up to date." Gina NNMM Cheek, the secretary of the club, explained that the club is now more about its members. "We are focusing on what our members want to do. After all, they are who make up this club."

Daria Feneis, the historian for the club who just came off of her directo- rial debut in "Reasons to Be Pretty", ex- plained, "I thought this is a seven E-Board members who are graduating this year and we want to make it as organized as possible for when we leave. That way, the club will stay big."

When asked how meetings have changed from previous years, both Chad and Feinseth explained, "Everything something as simple as setting a meeting time at the end of every meeting makes all the members feel like they are a part of something and brings them back each week."

There have been several factors that have led to the growth of Montclair State's Players Club, but they can all be attributed to the club's ambitious E-Board.

They started with one goal this year, and we have done this. A few upcoming events that the club will be putting on are "In The Wings", a modernized version of Shakespeare's "Love's Labours Lost" in December, A One Act Play Festival in February, where students who can submit original plays and have them performed, and "The Wedding Singer", the musical version of the widely popular Adam Shankman movie to be per- formed in the early spring.

There will be an improvement- al comedy show performed at the close of the semester. These are only a few of the things coming up through the Play- ers's club, but students can get all the information they need, including audition times and how to get involved in productions, just by going to a meeting every Monday night at 5:30 p.m. They can also be found on Facebook under "Players Club". All things considered, The Players Club is definitely worth checking out.

Fantasy Football Start ‘Em
Sit ‘Em: Week 13

Start ‘Em
QB — Mark Sanchez (NYJ) — New York’s latest hype is going up against a rival Patriots team, which gives up more than 228 passing yards per game, the worst in the NFL. Plus, Sanchez has obviously shown progress as a quarterback this season with Holmes, Edwards and Keller to throw to.

RB — Michael Tolbert (SD) — Tolbert rushed for 100 yards twice in as many weeks and scored nine times so far this season. This week, the Chargers take on the Raiders, who give up an average of 133 rushing yards per game. Go with the hot hand on this one.

WR — Mario Manningham (NYG) — Last week, Manningham caught only three balls for 61 yards, but did score a touchdown. He would have had two if not for a holding call in the first quarter. In his second week as the Giants number one wide receiver, he will face a lesser secondary in the Redskins. He will put up start-worthy fantasy points.

Sit ‘Em
QB — Ben Roethlisberger (PIT) — Coming off of an injury, he will not put up good numbers against the tough Ravens defense. The Ravens are seventh in the NFL in pass defense, giving up just a little over 200 yards a game.

RB — Ahmad Bradshaw/Brandon Jacobs (NYG) — Combined, they will have put up great numbers, but the Giants used both of them about the same amount now. Especially with Jacobs named as the starting running back, it is hard to determine which back will score more. Bradshaw gets more yards, but Jacobs is more likely to get the ball on the goal line. If you have both of them, consider starting both (the Giants should run all over the Redskins) but if you only have one, it is very possible that the other will be a point hog. If you have other options, consider going with them.

WR — Anquan Boldin (BAL) — The Ravens take on the stingy Steelers defense in what probably will be a defensive game. Expect him to either get a touchdown with little yards, or 60-80 yards with no touchdowns. No doubt he will be targeted, but Polamalu and company will get the job done.
The Montclair State University has announced the 38th class of the Montclair State Athletics Hall of Fame. The 2010 Inductees announced include Former Montclair defensive lineman Paul Cioffi, who is second in total tackles with 419, and Former Montclair offensive lineman Bill Blomn, who is second in yards from tackles for loss with 74.0 and sacks while earning All-America honors.

For 37 years, the Montclair State Athletics Hall of Fame has brought to light some of the finest collegiate athletes to ever grace this university. The 38th class of inductees is no different. Paul Cioffi, William Blomn, Megan Ulciny and Stephanie Sabaliauskas have been selected as the 38th class of inductees for the Montclair State Athletics Hall of Fame.

Former Montclair football team captain Erin Ulicny's inclusion in the hall of fame takes on added significance because she is the first individual from the field hockey team to be included in the group. From 2001-2003, Ulicny was the driving force behind the rise of MSU's field hockey team to be included in the group. Albeit, she posted two fairly dominant seasons in 2001 and 2002, but it was in 2003 when it all came together in brilliant form. Ulicny led the team and the NJAC in total points (55), assists (19) and points per game (6.9). Her points total is made all the more remarkable considering that she beat the previous record by a whopping 14 points. As far as awards and other honors went, she had a standout showing on them at year’s end, winning NJAC midfielders of the year and going First-team All-America. It was her contributions that pointed the way for the team to experience a mutiny if things don’t improve. On any other team that would be the case, but James, Dwayne Wade and Chris Bosh don’t need a lesson in execution, they’re beyond being coached. So how could this be the coaches fault?

Readers seeking to surprise you Spoelstra out as the head coach by the time we are writing this. LeBron James can get roasted off the team, but he can’t win championships, something he gets paid to do. Spoelstra has undoubtedly become the acolyptist in this situation. Because his players don’t know how to execute, he has to face the penalty. On any other team that would be the case, but James, Dwayne Wade and Chris Bosh don’t need a lesson in execution, they’re beyond being coached. So how could this be the coaches fault?

Removing the head coach will only turn the attention away for a short amount of time. If their record doesn’t improve fans are going to start blaming the real culprits. Everyone expected greatness, even perfection. The Heat were supposed to win a game at the most win in the regular season, now they’re just trying to maintain a decent playoff spot. It’s still early in the season, and letting the catch go could ignite the Heat and their stars to play better, but that shouldn’t be the case. After Spoelstra and James’ stout defense against the Miami Heat, and Chris Bosh doesn’t need a lesson in execution, they’re beyond being coached. So how could this be the coaches fault?

The Red Hawks are starting the 2010-11 season red hot. Men’s Basketball’s high powered offense is riding a season-long winning streak following their most recent victory over Centenary last Saturday. The men (3-3) seem to have found the ability to score points this year, a consistent issue present in last year’s disappointing season when they only won four games total. With the solid play of this year’s player to watch, Rodney Freeney, as well as the impressive emergence of junior forward and first year starter Andrew August, MSU may have what it takes to return back to its dominant 2008-2009 form.

The Red Hawks struggled slightly against the Cyclones in the first half, as they trailed by one at halftime. This was largely due to the unflappable turnover margin for Men’s College Basketball compared to Centenary’s four. Of MSU’s eight turnovers in the first half was a result of sloppy ball handling which led to steals by the Cyclones. Forward Jacob Halicki led the way with two steals by the Cyclones. Centenary for- the- first time leading MSU to the charity stripe for 34 shot attempts. Their free throw shooting woes from last season became of thing of the past on Saturday, making 21 of these attempts.

Sophomore Taylor Jeffers, seen here in a game from last season, scored nine points and grabbed six rebounds in Saturday’s win over Centenary.

The number 18 ranked William Paterson Pioneers lit up the scoreboard last night against the MSU women’s bas- ketball team, shooting 52 percent from the floor on route to a 90-76 victory. The Pioneers were able to catch the fire of the game despite committing 18 turnovers in the game. Guard April Smith was impres- sive for William Paterson, scoring 29 points and grabbing 10 rebounds. On the other side of the ball, the Red Hawks finished the game with a 32-point spread, two other Red Hawk starters were able to score more than 12. The Red Hawks also got outrebounded by the Pioneers 40-29, hurting them on a potential second chance opportunities.

The Pioneers were able to take control of the game early with a 7-2 run to start the period. Jamie Ericson made two three-pointers during the run as the Red Hawks climbed to within ten points of the Pioneers. Though MSU showed flight in their comeback attempt early in the sec- ond half, they were simply worn out as the Red Hawks pulled away for good. The loss drops MSU to a record of 2-3 so far in 2010-11. They will look for their first win in the NJAC on Saturday, when they return home to face Rutgers- Camden. The game will be held at Panzer Athletic Center starting at 3 p.m.
Despite all of the Red Hawks’ achievements was too little, too late. 37-7. However, with only four minutes remaining in the game, as he tossed a 25-yard touchdown pass to wide receiver Matt Melody to take control of the offense.

The coach plans to work with the team on better self-rehabilitation and recovery after practices before the start of the season to keep the players injury-free throughout the season. For senior Leah McClish, she feels that encouragement to other teammates will help the team to keep their confidence throughout the season. “Track and Field focuses on different races and events,” said McClish. “I think as long as the team knows through every race or meet, encouraging your team mates will make the difference to them. I think that minor detail is something which can easily be changed within a small period of time.”

Once the women’s team works out these small kinks, their determination and mindset to win will hopefully lead them to a NJAC Championship come February. Both coach Dobson and McClish have confidence in the team to reach that goal. “We will shut down all stops in route to take the title,” said Dobson. “Winning is on our mind.”

“We have determination to keep their love for the sport alive through all these years,” said McClish. “Between the new and old core members, I know Montclair Women’s Track and Field will make this NJAC Indoor Championship one to remember.”

The women’s season opens up at the CTC Relay Carnival at Yale University in New Haven, CT on Saturday, December 4. The men’s season also starts on December 4, where they meet at the Wesleyan Invitational at Wesleyan University in Middletown, CT.

with an injury, leaving backup James Melo to take control of the offense. He would lead Montclair to their only scoring drive of the game, as he tossed a 20-yard touchdown pass to wide receiver Don Keegan to cut the Wesley lead to 7-25.

Despite all of the Red Hawks’ achievements in 2009, 2010 showed that MSU is not quite at the powerhouse level that Wesley has reached this year. However, the Red Hawks appear to be taking bigger steps each season. In 2009, they won the NJAC and a home playoff game, and finished third in the NJAC Championships. In 2010, they won the NJAC and a home playoff game, and finished sixth in the NJAC Championships, which, according to coach Dobson, was a small period of time.”

Football Toppled by Wesley

For Montclair State football, the 2010 season ended just like it did the year before. It may have been against a different team, but it was the same result. The 20th-ranked Red Hawks fell in the second round of the playoffs to number-three ranked Wesley College 44-7 on Saturday.

It was the second consecutive year that the Red Hawks lost in the second round to a top five team. In 2009, Montclair lost to the number one team in the country, Mount Union, 62-14 in the second round.

“We put ourselves in a hole early in the game and we had a hard time getting out of it,” said cornerback Gary Knoeppel.

The Wolverines came in with one of the best rushing offenses in the nation. They certainly proved it on Saturday, rushing for a combined 206 yards as a team. Wesley especially proved to be efficient when running to the outside and ran a number of sweeps and reverses against the Red Hawk defense.

Montclair didn’t help themselves out either, as a number of offensive miscues put them in an early hole. Quarterback Tom Fischer threw an interception on the first drive to Wesley cornerback Marcus Wilson, who took the ball 52 yards for a touchdown and a 7-0 Wolverine lead.

“It was frustrating towards the end because when they ain’t allowing you to do the things that you do all season, like run and throw the ball effectively, it gets frustrating,” said Fischer. “They were good but at the end of the day we didn’t execute.”

On Wesley’s ensuing possession, they would drive 77 yards down the field, getting a touchdown on a quarterback sneak by Chris Cummings to take a 14-0 lead. On the drive, 59 of the 77 yards gained by Wesley came on the ground.

The Red Hawks had an opportunity to get back in the game towards the end of the first half. Down 20-0, MSU was able to drive inside Wesley’s five-yard line. However, Fischer would end up throwing his second interception of the day to safety Sean Stonell.

Wesley took advantage, driving into field goal range and getting a 46-yard field goal from kicker Dan Tryon before halftime to take a commanding 23-0 lead.

The Wolverines continued to pound the ball on the Red Hawk defense in the second half. Quarterback Justin Sottilare threw for two second half touchdowns and running back Brandon Wright anchored the offense with over 160 total yards as the Wesley lead opened up to 37-0.

Meanwhile, the Red Hawk offense continued to struggle to move the ball down the field. Fischer was knocked out of the game after the third quarter.
