Reunited and It Feels So Good

The legal case between Oracle and Montclair State University, which began in 2011 over a failed Enterprise Resource Planning system deployment, has recently been resolved amicably between the two parties outside of court.

The joint press release stated, “Montclair State University and Oracle were pleased to announce that they have mutually resolved their dispute.” The terms of the resolution were not revealed.

The dispute began in April of 2011 when MSU filed a suit in the U.S. District Court of New Jersey. MSU accused Oracle of a breach in contract, gross negligence, willful misconduct and fraud. A countersuit was filed by Oracle in May 2011, in which they claimed that MSU accused Oracle of a breach of contract and fraud.

To Charter or Not To Charter What’s in Your Food?

Padraigh Gonzalez Contributing Writer

Creating a chartered organization is no simple task at Montclair State University. However, various organizations have recently complained that some processes they go through in order to become chartered, or even to host an event after becoming chartered, is too long of a task. Even so, both the Student Government Association and students on campus have a specific routine that they must go through in order to create a chartered SGA organization.

In regards to the process the SGA requires for organizations to become charted and a full member of the MSU community, SGA President Pro-Tempore, was able to explain the process.

“The chartering process requires that you fill out two forms which you need for your organization to charter itself at MSU,” said Bunk. “The charter packet is one of the forms which you need for your organization to charter itself at MSU,” said Bunk. “The charter packet is one half of the forms which you need for your organization to charter itself at MSU.”

SGA meetings are where prospective organizations vie for membership.

The Future of Media For Viewers Like You

Ethan T. Fria News Editor

Paula Kerger, president and Chief Executive Officer of PBS, discussed the future of journalism, documentaries and the method of storytelling on multiple platforms on Tuesday in University Hall.

Kerger said that PBS attempts to integrate social media into their programming, stating that one of their biggest commercial successes, Downton Abbey, was due to the exposure it had on social media sites. “[Social media] created a whole conversation around a show,” Kerger said.

Because of a lack of funding for exposure and the rise of popularity in reality television shows, Kerger emphasized the importance of releasing PBS content on multiple platforms.

What’s in Your Food?

Erin Padrezi Staff Writer

A petition has been started to get food venues on campus and around campus, to include nutrition facts that are important for students with diabetes and other health restrictions.

The petition was started by student Nicole Wheeler, a diabetic who has a difficult time finding places where she can safely eat.

“Things to go out to eat and guess what the carbohydrate count is in each item you have to eat,” said Wheeler.

The nutritional information is not displayed more detailed information of their food.

The Constitution Review Board along with Bunk is that there is no organization that the president of the campus would need to talk in front of the legislators. Bunk, standing on two important aspects: “Persuasion and preparedness. Those giving the presenta- tion need to think and should be able to answer any of the legislators’ questions.”

Any organization that could have caused this recent dispute could continue to exist if there is a difference of com- munication. According to Bunk, there is more communica- tion between the or- ganizations and the President Pro-Tempores, along with the Constitution Review Board and the legislatures.

“The process is not the real issue,” said Bunk. “The real issue is who you are dealing with. Who are you talking to? What are they looking for? Is the Constitution Re- view Board looking for the organization or is it just flipping through the pages and sending them off? Are you communicating to the organization’s pre- sentation? All of those factors can change how much the system works.”

To boil it down into a short statement, it all depends on people starting the organization’s hearts and souls. People starting the organization have the force and drive to make it work. Organizations are reminded to stay in con- tact with the SGA with any questions they may have.

Spring Fashion Savings

You’ve seen the trends. You know what you like, what you don’t like and what you just have to have. Now that spring is right around the corner, all that’s left to do is shop.

While this is usually your mecca, cardio and therapy all wrapped into one, a fashionista must remember the considerable hardship that builds every spring: high prices for top style. It’s easy to get overwhelmed when staring at the brilliant new looks fresh off the runway. However, as easy as it is to get lost in the fabric frenzy, you have to use your mind and top-notch bargaining skills. Otherwise, you’ll end up in diabolical debt.

A chic girl’s rule of thumb: Just because it looks to die for in the dressing room, does not mean your bank account should die for it later. If you find a bold-printed pencil skirt that’s just your size but way over your budget, put it on hold. Yes, this one is for you impulse-buyers: you can actually put garments on hold, shop around the rest of the mall to find a better deal and come back to buy or deny it later. It’s the shopping equivalent of “sleeping on it,” and it’s just as healthy for the mind, body, soul and wallet.

You never know what you’ll find at the other side of the mall, either. You may be surprised with how bargain-savvy you really are while styling an Aztec print cotton miniskirt from Charlotte Russe for just $12.99. If the recent runway looks have you seeing stripes, head on down to Forever 21. For a whopping $15, you can give yourself a coral striped maxi dress that’s perfect for the warm weather. These are a few prices that won’t break your bank or your spirits.

Who said leather has to be expensive? Don’t be an April fool by dropping three figures on outrageous outerwear when you can look just as irreplaceable in a spring steal. Forever 21’s pointed hem motorcycle jacket is just $15.99, leaving you tons of extra cash left over for bags, shoes and accessories. Go on, indulge without the splurge.

With spring officially started, it’s best to pace yourself in the fashion glory and keep your eyes focused on the deals. Remember: The only thing that’s going to be a knockout this season is your outfit of the day, not your spending habits. Take a deep breath and dive in. The best spring deals are waiting for you, just as long as you aren’t afraid to search beneath the surface.
Meditation on Campus Creates Mindfulness at MSU
Chelsea Durocher CONTRIBUTING WRITER

Meditation is a mind-body practice that leaves one clear, rejuvenated, empowered and inspired. The Center for Faith and Spirituality at Montclair State University offers about 155 meditation services per year.

Students can take advantage of these services to spark their intrinsic curiosities while opening their minds and their hearts. Meditation can be done through breathing, chanting, praying, focusing, contemplating arts and dancing.

Dr. Ramilla Acheva, chair of the Council for Faith and Spirituality and Director of Equity and Diversity, says meditation is especially beneficial for college students. “The benefits of understanding your conscious and subconscious mind are endless,” said Acheva.

Some of these benefits include stress relief, gratitude, memory improvement, sleep enhancement, skin health, repair benefits in the body, stress management, anxiety diminishment and stopping smoking. The benefits of meditation can aid students in and out of the classroom and in their co-curricular activities.

Dr. Michael Lees, a professor of religion at MSU, begins his classes with a ten-minute meditation session. Lees has been doing this for as long as he can remember teaching. He claims the practice is beneficial for both students and teachers because it allows everyone to enter the classroom with a clear and open mind.

This ten-minute meditation practice is taught in a quiet, dimly lit room. Students come out each week to practice in a quiet, dim-lit space on the first floor from 4 p.m. to 5 p.m. A weekly meditation practice is hosted every Thursday in Sprague Library on the lower floor. Almost everyone practices the meditation at least once a day in Sprague Library on the first floor.

Lees has received positive feedback from students and some even continue the meditation practices after class ends. “The awareness for space, place and breath that a meditation practice cultivates enables the mind and allows for attentive and reflective thought,” said Lees.

This kind of space and place in the mind is a great way to work with lowering the stress of school take over your life.

He recommends this exercise to other professors as a great classroom dynamic to get all the students on the same page before diving into lectures.

“Meditation on campus is becoming popular on MSU’s campus. Mindfulness and mind training are the key components in this meditation practice. ‘It’s like going to the gym to your open heart,’” said Petrozzello.

Don’t let the stress of school take over your life.

On a Budget:

- Salad bar and then decide on a meal. It will save you a lot of money. For healthy snacking, snack on a handful of whole grain cereal, pop corn, fresh cut veggies, nuts or a snack bag of your favorite mix.

- When you are on sale. You can always go back for seconds or thirds. White space on your plate. You can always go back for seconds or thirds.

- Whether looking tide-delays practice. So, less likely to eat more when you are hungry. Before you go hungry in between meals. This will prevent you from overeating and weight gain. Eating this as a little snack prevents you from overeating as you will expect this is enough food.

- You will get the same health benefits for a cheaper price.

- Choose fresh produce, the whole product, not pre-cut platters which are much more expensive. When it comes to produce, choose vegetables and fruits over processed foods, especially dairy and grains, larger portions of cooked pasta should fit into the size of a baseball and a serving of ice cream is about the size of a light bulb.

- Don’t keep the stress of school take over your life.

Meditation is what you are given the chance to just sit and be aware of your conscious and subconscious mind. Meditation helps you keep the mind-wielding virtuous and absorb it into the heart so it becomes a part of everyday lives. Some of these virtues include patience, kindness, compassion and openness.

A weekly meditation practice is hosted every Thursday in Sprague Library on the first floor from 4 p.m. to 5 p.m. A weekly meditation practice is hosted every Thursday in Sprague Library on the lower floor. If you have interest in trying it, you have a few options. Apple cider vinegar is actually sold in pill form, but if you want to indulge naturally on a daily basis, I would recommend adding a splash of the vinegar to a glass of water or fruit juice. Do not take apple cider vinegar straight because the acidity can damage the linings of your throat and digestive tract. I wouldn’t recommend mixing more than one tablespoon (three teaspoons) into your drink. If you are applying the product topically to your skin or scalp, mix it with water first to see how your skin reacts. Remember, “everything in moderation.”

These past two weekends, both Sierra Johansen, an MSU student, and I decided to do some impromptu travelling. Two weekends ago, we decided to take a cross-country trip across Scotland.

We started by taking the Megabus from Newcastle to Aberdeen. Even though the trip took almost six hours, it was worth it when you compare the price of train tickets. We then headed west, taking the most scenic route. Our first stop: Loch Ness.

Loch Ness, home of the famous Loch Ness Monster, or Nessie, is definitely a place that should be on everyone’s sightseeing list. At the base of the Loch lies a beautiful town called Fort William.

A bit further up the Loch is Urquhart Castle. Its ruins have been beautifully restored. Even though it does cost about £14 to get in, you get your money’s worth. Another option was to buy an explorer pass for £18, which gave unlimited access to a number of castles, abbeys and cathedrals across Scotland.

The next day, we headed north to the Isle of Skye to Kilt Rock Falls. This is a waterfall off the edge of a massive cliff into the Atlantic Ocean. The view was absolutely breathtaking.

On that night, we managed to find a hotel which we later realized was at the base of Ben Nevis, the highest mountain in the UK. The view from the base was amazing. We’re even considering planning a return trip to hike up Ben Nevis sometime in May.

On our last day, we made our way to Stirling Castle and the William Wallace Monument. We also made a bonus stop at Doune Castle, the castle where Monty Python and The Holy Grail was filmed.

The castle itself was almost a trip back in time. There were actors dressed as the royal family and court members walking around and making history fun. They knew all the facts and stayed completely in character. The castle was also very well preserved and let you in on some amazing things that happened during its peak use.

On the following weekend, all 16 international and exchange students ventured to Dublin, Ireland for St. Patrick’s Day.

True to the tales, Dublin does indeed light itself green for St. Patrick’s Day weekend. The streets were lit in green and all the tourists and locals were dressed in green garb for the festivities.

St. Patrick’s Day in Dublin was a sight to see. A sea of green engrossed the whole street and you could not move anywhere. After the parade was over, everyone took to the streets in a massive party. We had an early flight home the next morning and headed to Dublin Airport and back to Newcastle.

With only three days before our three-week Easter holiday, you can be sure that we have many more adventures to come. Next up: Paris, France and Cologne, Germany.

Food For Thought: Facts For The Body

Do you think it should be mandatory for nutrition facts to be posted in campus dining facilities?

Emma Bastida

Sophomore

Biology

“I think that it’s important that nutrition facts in campus dining facilities be visible to the students, especially on the weekends when there are no mandatory classes. If we want to promote a healthy lifestyle on campus, it’s important to know what you’re eating before you eat it.”

Stephanie Kandel

Sophomore

Biology

Personally, I don’t think that there should be nutrition facts in eateries on campus. However, I do think that people should know what’s going into their bodies. It would be helpful to know and also just to know if there are people on diets or keeping track of their calorie count? If there are, then what’s the point?”

Nick Versace

Nutrition

“I think it would be a good idea to have nutrition facts in campus dining facilities. This way, people know what they are eating and if it’s good for them. As a student, I use the Nutrition facts to help me make healthier choices.”

Morgan Rees

Computer Science

“I don’t think that nutrition facts should be mandatory in campus dining facilities. I think that people should just know what they are eating and how much they are eating, like calorie intake, and if there are people on diets or keeping track of their calorie counting habits. Most of the time, that’s the only knowledge we have about what goes into our food. It’s great that you can look it up, but that’s all.”

Katie Frazer

“I think that nutrition facts should be mandatory in campus dining facilities. This way, people can make informed choices about what they are eating. It’s important to know what you’re eating before you eat it.”

Jeannette Martinez

“I believe that the school should post nutritional information about the food they’re serving. If there are people on diets or keeping track of how much they are eating, like calorie count, it would be helpful to know and also just to know what these students endure because of poor nutrition balance.”

“They should definitely post nutritional facts in foods just for the sake of being informed about what’s going into your body. We all have a right to know what we are eating.”
Venezuela Says Adiós To Hugo Chávez
Chávez’s complex policies leave behind a questionable legacy

S oda

Sodas are an unhealthy evil of society. To be more specific, sodas are the second child of poor school-teachers. The Chávezes family lived in the town of Rovira, located in the state of Barinas in the plains of central Venezuela.

At the age of seventeen, Chávez enrolled in the Venezuelan Academy of Military Sciences and served in the Venezuelan Army where he ultimately reached the rank of Lieutenant Colonel.

In 1954, as a military service, Chávez hunted down leftists in Venezuela, beginning a long history of violence against the Venezuelan government.

His military career came to an end in 1959 when he was captured by Bolivian revolutionaries. Chavez was imprisoned, but after being released in 1961, he returned to the United States and announced his support for the Venezuelan government.

Chavez’s actions were met with the same treatment as those who had opposed him. He was arrested again in 1962 and this time, he was exiled.

After serving two years in prison, Chavez and became more politically active in the United States. He continued his work in the United States and eventually became involved in politics in his home country.

In 1967, Chavez left the United States and returned to Venezuela. He began to organize peasant movements and worked to improve conditions for the poor of the country.

The soda wars are the result of the battle for control of the soft drink market, which has been dominated by the major cola brands, such as Coca-Cola and Pepsi.

When you are talking about soda, it is the only option available in most restaurants. If I could go to any restaurant and drink anything I wanted, I would choose a cream soda.

A cream soda is a sweet, vanilla-flavored soft drink that has been artificially sweetened with fructose corn syrup instead of naturally sweetened sodas that are even worse for your health.

Naturally, a play about a teenage boy religiously and sexually mystified by horses, and thereafter blinding six of them, might be considered odd and maybe even creepy to some people. However, Montclair State University’s brilliantly presented version of Peter Shaffer classic Equus proves that there is some beauty to a young man’s fascination with horses.

It was shown at Alexander Kasser Theater from March 6 through March 9 and thereafter blinding six of them, especially note the set design. The set is a boxing ring with audience members seated around it on stone steps. It is a huge test of integrity and will. Dear is excited about the role as a BFA acting major. He does this by using different psychiatric techniques, such as tape recording and hypnosis.

The Fri, March 8 performance was the most evident. It was a role that I really enjoyed. I was given the lead role as a BFA acting major at Montclair. I’m grateful to have it,” said Yarish. “I’m trying to enjoy every second of it. It is amazing.”

In the play, psychiatrist Martin Dysart (Sean Haberle) investigates his patient, Alan, in Southern England’s Royal Agricultural Psychiatric Hospital in the early 1970's to determine why he committed such a shocking act. He does this by using different psychiatric techniques, such as tape recording and hypnosis.

Alan has issues with his strict parents Frank and Dora Strang (seniors Taylor Dear and Liala Armstrong), whom ultimately are the causes of Alan’s trauma. Dora is a religious fanatic and Frank is an atheist. This contrast between Alan’s divine saviors and spiritual, sexual outlets.

As much as Dysart and the Strang family carry the story along, what stole the show were the horses played by young men, particularly junior Matthew Pecorilli. Pecorilli stomped onstage as lead horse Nugget in place of an injured horseman Tony Antoniou, Nugget’s original partner. With this in mind, those actors performed the actions smoothly while wearing sea-through metal wire horse heads and stilts-strapped hooves. Every time the horses entered a scene, especially note the set design. The set is a boxing ring with audience members seated around it on stone steps, which is a truly magnificent and overwhelming experience. It was a role that I really enjoyed. It was a role that I really enjoyed. It was a role that I really enjoyed. It was a role that I really enjoyed. It was a role that I really enjoyed.

After a failed night of passion with low interest, Jill Mason (senior Angelika Shreck), Alan’s world finally comes to a crashing halt. Jill is a boxer’s wife, and it is her being a part of something that moves the plot forward. She is a boxer’s wife, and it is her being a part of something that moves the plot forward. It’s been eight days since David Bowie released his 30th studio recording, The Next Day, and I’ve listened to it from beginning to end at least once a day. If you were anywhere near me during this time period, you could see the smile on my face as my headphones played track after track. For an artist who, throughout his career, made his money and accolades through the creation of characters such as The Thin White Duke, Major Tom, Aladdin Sane and Ziggy Stardust, The Next Day strikes me as an attempt to create David Bowie himself.

However, unlike Ziggy Stardust and the others, David Bowie is not apologetic and it shows in each and every track.

The album cover is originally the cover to David Bowie’s 1972 album, Heroes. As a reminder that David Bowie’s mortal image of late seventies was not to continue the image and direction of the album, these two jumped at me in a way where I could see that this is his last release since The Thin White Duke. (Photo courtesy of davidbowie.com)

I’ll admit that most of my exposure stems from the Ziggy Stardust and Aladdin Sane eras of David Bowie, so some bias is in place, but even more recent releases (although that’s a relative term because this is his last release since 2003) by Bowie still gave that aura that is uniquely his. His track ‘I’m Afraid of Americans’ from his 1997 album Earthling, gave listeners the feeling that even if they didn’t know who David Bowie was, they could at least synthesize an image of him through the song.

As I continued to listen to The Next Day over and over again, I slowly came to the realization that the purpose and direction of the album was not to continue the immortal image of late seventies to early eighties Bowie, but as a reminder that David Bowie is getting older and that he is no longer “David Bowie” but David Bowie. The Next Day’s cover is originally the cover to his album Heroes with a white box obscuring his face with the title placed in a seem endless foot. If you look at each cover for every successive album, you can tell that The Next Day is a complete departure from who and what David Bowie really was.

With the perspective that a baby boomer wrote this album, as not an androgynous alien from Mars, my opinion changed from “I can’t believe that Bowie wrote something like this” to “Bowie, Bowie’s getting old.” I think that’s the fatal flaw with an artist like David Bowie, that his name and music is synonymous with youth and vigor.

The Next Day has its bite taken out of it, although the majority of the tracks just feel as if they’re missing essential Bowie beats that most of the songs contained.

Although “Valentine’s Day” did fail into that rhythm, the lead guitar lines and lyrics kept me fully immersed in the duration of the song. The lyrics to “Valentine’s Day” allude to the quick change of a young person in a dark heart with the intention to commit violence in his school.

Although that might be a bit inappropriate considering the relatively recent events in the Northeast, within the confines of the song, the subject matter really lends perfectly to the singing guitar and voice.

With “You Will Set the World on Fire,” the track begins with a loud guitar riff that immediately reminds me of Jack White and his myriad of projects which开车 the door to Bowie’s lyrics. Within this song, Bowie sings about the folk scene within New York City with name drops of Janis Siegel, Bob Dylan and others within the scene. The first couple of lines to this track doesn’t indicate this because most of reference require a little research to understand, but the hook of “setting the world on fire” is plenty enough to captivate the listener through the song in a brief flash of energy that is classic Bowie.

While these two tracks are definite favorites of mine, some tracks just stick out for different reasons. “If You Can See Me” contains lyrics song in an atonal manner with confessional topics that parallel Kevin Barnes from the band of Parryle/Shake. While this style fits Kevin Barnes perfectly in his avant-garde outfit, it just seems odd and forced within David Bowie’s music

One of the biggest criteria for albums that I listen to is that I want such song to have its own separate identity. With The Next Day, aside from the first two songs, the whole album flows together in a way where it feels like an opus with different movements.

While that is signature Bowie, I feel that it detracts from the experience that each song individually gives the listener. The first two songs really jump out at me in a way where I could see that as an anchor for the album. It took me six listens to actually list a couple songs that don’t feel like well-written stuff.

A few songs that I can actually recommend to anybody from this album would be “Valentine’s Day” and “(You Will) Set the World on Fire.” Out of the seventeen songs in the album, those two jumped out at me because if the album tracks and how they didn’t start out with the generic

In its entirety, The Next Day is unmistakably a David Bowie album, but it’s not a David Bowie album at the same time. The person is the same, but the soul is different, a soul that has been active within the music industry for more than forty years now. To casual listeners, I would recommend this album if this is going to be their first David Bowie album. Then after The Next Day, they could listen to his other albums in a reverse chronological order in a “Born inButtonModule” fashion to end at the glory days of David Bowie.

To fans of Bowie, though, I feel like you should look at it as a new era of music, a new era where the character isn’t an alien from mars or a duke, but David Bowie himself.

Nicki Minaj has become a musical icon in the rap/hip-hop genre since making her debut in 2010. The 30-year-old is known for her craziness, multiple personalities and downright bizarre mannerisms. However, American Idol fans, judges and contestants will remember her for a slightly different reason.

Well, March 13 marked American Idol’s first live show of the 2013 season. Everything seemed to be in order. Contests waited anxiously backstage, host Ryan Seacrest took to the stage in a perfectly tailored suit, and judges Mariah Carey, Randy Jackson and Keith Urban sat poised and ready-to-go. But, wait—where was Nicki? Upon opening the show, Seacrest was forced to address the situation of the missing judge, informing the audience that there was some confusion on Interstate 405 and that the star would arrive momentarily. Minaj confirmed this via Twitter, saying she was “stuck in traffic.”

Seacrest tried to joke about the situation with the judge by asking questions like: “Which one of you drained the fuel from her car?” or “Which one of you drained the water, and was re-issued as a Tester, or ‘Frag’, ‘Mylol’ and ‘Funky Jax’?”. The boys were quickly noticed and the word about them spread like wildfire. Only a few hours after the release, the album had already sold 1,000 copies, exceeding expectations.

The album, was distributed through Targa, an independent label. In early 1999, the quartet signed with Warner Music Finland, where the EP was re-released. That same year, the band composed the song, “Don’t Shut the Door,” which was not used until their compilation album Best of 2001-2008 was released. For this album, the song was re-written and tweaked, better known as the song, “October and April.”

In 1999, through Warner Music Finland, The Rasmus released their debut album, Pop. It made its way into Finland’s music market on Sept. 25 of that same year, and it went gold. The same thing happened later in Europe, Sweden and subsequently worldwide.

In 2000, they released two more EP’s 2nd and 3rd, the latter of which made it to the No. 8 spot on the Finnish Singles Chart later that year.

With much music produced in a your zone, the band was an EMMAs (equivalent to a Grammy) for the Best Newcomer of 1996. Seeing that the band was becoming quite successful, Lauri and Pauli abandoned their studies and dedicated their efforts and energy on Rasmus. This led to the release of their second album, Playboys, on Aug. 28, 1999. Their single, “Blue,” went gold in Finland and was released in several European countries such as Spain and France for the first time.

Throughout the years, the band released more singles and albums that kept them on top. Their style, depending on the album, would range from heavy rock to softer melodies, telling stories of forbidden love and misery.

In 2011, with a contract from Universal Music Finland, The Rasmus is producing their eighth studio album. In several European countries, the self-titled album was released on April 18, 2012, and it was re-issued as The Rasmus later that year. The band continues to tour and is waiting for their 20th anniversary to celebrate their success at its finest. They do not plan to disembark anytime soon, leaving fans with more to look forward to.

Judging Punctuality: Nicki Minaj

Victoria Conn
Staff Writer

Apparently, a starship isn’t fast enough.

Due to her late arrival, Curtis Finch Jr., a contestant who highly respects Minaj’s input, was forced to perform without the star and her critiques. Finch expressed his disappointment, claiming that it felt like a piece of the puzzle was missing.

To his surprise, however, he passed Minaj as he was walking off stage, learning that she had watched his performance from off-stage. Although he didn’t get to hear all of the feisty judge’s remarks, he did manage to receive a “good job.”

It seems that Nicki Minaj has some work to do with her punctuality problems. Maybe she should consider taking a starship to the next show, just in case.

Bitches Get stuff done.” the phrases Tina Fey and Amy Poehler routinely use during the latter’s run on Saturday Night Live. During the years since their departure from the sketch comedy show, they have gotten a lot done. From Emmy nominations to hosting glory, every two to three years, they have been all anyone talks about those days.

Since her departure, Tina Fey has made a name for herself. She successfully created, wrote and starred in the comedy series 30 Rock and starred in movies opposite Steve Carell and Paul Rudd. Fey had a non-stop congratulatory tour since her departure from SNL, but what about Poehler? Poehler’s path is more unique. She is the only female service America’s hearts during her run on the Lens Michael produced show. When she left SNL in 2009, she was cast in Far by and Recreation, which started slow and didn’t really gain momentum or a following until its third season. Nowadays, Far by and Recreation is one of NBC’s top shows and Amy is yet again nominated left and right. Poehler has become a household name. People love seeing her on TV and on social media. People can’t get enough of her, but even though people love her, why aren’t the critics showing her love? Sure, she received fantastic reviews on her hosting skills when she co-hosted the Golden Globes back in January. She has received exceptional reviews for Far by and Recreation as well as her acting on the show. She has even been considered for the Oscar’s hosting position, but yet with all that praise, Poehler still has yet to win an award. Even celebrities took to Twitter to share their love for her.

Comedian and producer Michael Shur said, “It’s ironic that every year Amy Poehler is the funniest part of every awards show she attends, and every year the awards go to other people.”

Before SNL, Poehler had a few guest appearances here and there as well as her role on Arrested. She then was cast in the cult classic, Wet Hot American Summer as well as Dessie Rigolos, Male Gigolo. She also had a recurring role on Late Night with Conan O’Brien, playing Staxy, Andy Richter’s fictional younger sister. During her run on SNL, she starred in a few movies including Mean Girls, Baby Mama and Blinded of Glory, which were all big hits.

Poehler is one of the most talented comedians out there. She performs in various comedy styles and she knows how to do it well. She’s done sketch, political, scripted and improv comedy and has nailed every single one. She received her start as one of the original founders of the Upright Citizens Brigade, a comedy troupe made up of Poehler, Ian Roberts, Matt Besser and Matt Walsh. UCB even got their own show, Ana, which was short-lived, but is now a cult favorite.

Poehler is currently one of the biggest names in Hollywood. She just signed a book deal, she is Best Boy’s new spokesperson and is currently hosting the Oscars. It is currently in the process of shooting three upcoming films, A.C.O.D., You Are Here and They Come Together. She is taking the world by storm.

Hopefully, next award season, she finally gets awarded for all of her hard work. She deserves to be congratulated with people like Julia Louis-Dreyfus, Tina Fey and Eddie Felos. She deserves to be a part of the Emmy winners and Golden Globe winners club. I think that next award season, Poehler will become a member of that club.

You can tell a movie is a Walt Disney Production when the graphics are stunning and have the message that every one is inherently good and anything is possible. Oz: The Great and Powerful is no different.

James Franco, Michelle Williams and Mila Kunis are the headliners in this blockbuster, the prequel to The Wizard of Oz. It tells the story pre-Dorothy, explaining how the wise ruler of the land (also named Oz) came to be. I have no clue how Franco scored this role.

Franco plays Oz, a manipulative womanizer with a heart of gold. This is Disney, after all. He makes his pay by scaring people into believing he is a powerful magician with one of illusions. He leads in Oz after recovering from a failed scheme. Upon arriving in Oz, Theodore, played by Mila Kunis, mistakes him for a handsome meant to come full fit a prophecy and save their world.

The graphics are absolutely stunning. The hyperrealism is astounding, making the entire land of Oz appear highly reali- zated. I couldn’t look away. It was due to believable acting, emotional ties to the charac- ter or a remarkable plot. The surreal land of Oz was painted beautifully and graph- ics, such as rolling smoke and a small girl made of porcelain, were captivating. The rest of the movie, not so much.

Although I’m factoring in the animation but Oz itself is a phony because Oz himself is a phony which are without their respect. The emotions come into play is familiar. Watching the traditional elements come into play is familiar and is a nice way to invoke the emotions of the audience.

Teams Preparing March for NCAA Title

The opening round of March Madness kicks off on March 21 when Michigan State takes on Valparaiso.

Larkin has truly inherited the nature of the business and we can usually name the Big Ten Player of the Year. Shane averaged 23.7 points per game during the season for his junior year. Larkin. Shane has some fine genes from his MLB father Barry Larkin. Shane added 23.7 points per game during the ACC tournament.

Despite North Carolina’s head coach Roy Williams’ praise for the young guard saying, “Shane plays like a pro, he will end up returning next season for his junior” another dark horse team that could very well make a deep run is fourth-seeded Michigan. They also consist of a player that has inherited some fine genes in Tim Hardaway Jr. Their head player, Trey Burke, was actually named the Big Ten Player of the Year.

No offense to last year’s runner-up in the championship game, but Michigan can absolutely beat the number one-seeded Kansas Jayhawks if the two teams meet up in the Sweet 16.

Although this has nothing to do with the tournament, it’s end to know that the Big East Conference will become extinct after this season. Maybe it’s not so much of a big deal on a football perspective, but basketball-wise, their will never be another classic Big East matchup that takes place in Madison Square Garden.

This has always been a great conference considering they usually have about 8 or 9 teams that represent the Big East in its NCAA tournaments.

However, that’s the nature of the business and we can’t control the players that place in these kinds of circumstances.

As soon as the papers come out on Thursday, that’s when the first round begins. After this Sunday, we should have a better idea on some of the Cinderella teams that many have already written off.

My personal favorite throughout the recent years has to be Shazz Stamma’s Virginia Commonwealth Rams. When you’ve got Spike Lee repping your school’s jersey at a game, then you know that your team is on the map.

The question remains: Who will you have as your Cinderella teams? Most importantly, who will you have winning this year’s March Madness?

The opening round of March Madness kicks off on March 21 when Michigan State takes on Valparaiso.

The game was tied 1-1 until the bottom of the ninth when Wheaton catcher Dan Caporale doubled and Apollinar De In Cruz scored from second base for the win in the game 2-1. Dylan Papa pitched another great game, giving up 3 1/3 innings and striking out five batters. His record is now 2-1 on the season. The loss.
