Students for Justice in Palestine support anti-racism rally, but SGA decries events.

Organization Stands Against SGA
Students for Justice in Palestine support right for free speech

Catherine Baxter
Editor-in-Chief

When it comes to freedom of speech and governmental policies, there can sometimes be a blurry line between student organizations on campus. Recently, the Students for Justice in Palestine (SJP) were scoured across the walkway and drew many students out to the event hosted by Counseling and Psychological Services (CAPS) and Active Minds.

SJP is a student-run organization dedicated to the de-stigmatization of mental health problems. As advocates for those who struggle with such problems, they consistently direct people toward the help that they need. That help can often be found right here at MSU.

CAPS is an on-campus counseling service located in the Student Union and staffed with licensed psychologists and psychiatrists, along with selected graduate students. They provide free and confidential personal counseling sessions to address problems as simple as stress and time management or as complex as addiction and depression. The SJP has a table in the Student Union as well as the Student Health Center where they hand out pamphlets that had information about Active Minds, a comical, machinima-style web series that is exceptional and about a plot focusing on two opposing teams fighting in a civil war. The web series has not only won the 2012 and 2013 award for the Best Animated Series by the International Academy of Web Television, but it is also the second longest running web series and is now in its 12th season.

Recently, Rooster Teeth has ventured outside of just gaming humor. They have recently announced that they will be making a movie titled Lazar Team and have even been named the Best Animated Series for 2014 with their newest web series, RWBY.

Struggling with Wireless Connections
Networks on campus come with minor difficulties

From attending Montclair State University, students have come to recognize the two massive issues both on- and off-campus: poor parking and the Internet. Though there have been several strides to perfect the parking situation campus, the amount of students visibly grows larger while the deck and lots remain the same.

In a similar fashion, the number of devices currently attached to the Montclair State network has grown drastically in recent times – a number of the servers are simply not able to process as quickly as before.

At the beginning of the semester, complaints from students faced issues with the wireless connectivity across campus. Residents and commuters alike felt the hardship of the problem. “For those of you who are still experiencing wireless connectivity issues, especially in the residence halls, please know that we understand the inconvenience this situation has caused,” said Jeff Giacobbe, Associate Vice President of Enterprise Technology Services. “We are making every effort to provide a definitive resolution as soon as possible.”

In accordance with his promise to the campus community, Giacobbe and his team have been progressing towards a better balance within the system itself.

During the first days of September, a vendor patch was put in place that images the number of servers. According to a report from the FRD, the wireless connectivity has been drastically improved in recent times. Funding Inspiration in Business

Montclair State celebrates Women Entrepreneurship Week with events full of encouragement

Makodule Green Contributing Writer

With the stigma of being a male-dominated field, women often hold themselves back when it comes to deciding to enter the workforce as business owners. For this reason, Women Entrepreneurship Week aims to provide inspiration and practical tips for entrepreneurial women, said the Feliciano Center for Entrepreneurship.

For the second week, the three events were set to take place featuring 30 speakers including Gloria Feldt, former Catalyst CEO Jane Long as well as NAMDIA 2013-based member Eilín McGolgin.

In addition, many high-level New Jersey Women business owners were set to speak. Overall, the event was set to attract 300 attendees.

Feldt asked the audience, “What was your power to moment?”

One audience member explained, “The day I was born until the age of 29 and only after having access to the ability of literacy and reading information through reading did she feel empowered.”

Feldt broke the audience away with her “three keys to success” when it comes to obtaining your goal: “clarity of communication, courage to act and will to connect.”

Feldt went on to explain how to exude the crowd with moral-boosting words of inspiration; there was a powerful panel present that coming from four Montclair State University alumni.

The first panelist was Tracy Doyle, who founded Phos-X Marketing Solutions, a full service healthcare communications company founded in 2012 with her two female business partners.

When asked what words of advice she would deliver to young women in busi- ness or in corporate America in terms of following their dreams, Doyle stated, “You must have active listening skills, have the ability to know your limitations and write down the things you wish to accomplish.”

The second panelist was Kathy Duva, a veteran of over 30 years in the business of professional boxing. She introduced to the “sweet science” by her late husband Dan Duva, a legendary boxer.

Duva was asked, “What words of advice would you give to a young woman feeling discouraged in entrepreneurship?”

Duva expressed, “You must have a strong support system to depend on and be willing to sacrifice a lot to accomplish your goals.”

The last panelist, Dr. Wanwari Waichugo, is the vice president responsible for the Feliciano Center for Entrepreneurship.

For this reason, the Montclair State alumni efforts to develop and encourage an entrepreneur mindset and grow as an entrepreneur or aspiring entrepreneur as a whole: “Developing excellent net- working opportunities, the event was a major success; however, the rest of the week’s events have yet to be seen.”

was applied to the universi- ty’s Network Access Control system with the intention of improving uninterrupted wire- less access issues. While the added feature addresses some aspects of the system’s performance, the overall problem was not completely resolved.

Instead, users continued to face sporadic difficulties across the board—all related to the wireless service. However, Giacobbe and his technologically-savvy team did not stop there.

Toward the end of Sep- tember, Information Tech- nology’s Networking unit seconded a Network Access Control (NAC) server to distribute the workload of responding to thousands of requests for thou- sands of RADIUS authentic- ity requests per day from all of the wireless devices on our campus,” said Giacobbe.

Regarding the second, the NAC server has been proving a very helpful component in the “authorization timeout excesses” by segmenting the authenti- cation requests.

It is possible that there are no “longer a factor in preventing user devices from exceeding the authorization timeout excess.”

Still, the investigation con- tinues as wireless bandwidth connectivity and throughput problems in student halls unite the wireless-trend- related NAC issues are con- tinuing to surface.

“Within residence halls, we are seeing a large num- ber of rogue across points (APs) that are broadcasting alongside the University SSID and are potentially available for connec-

As “connection drop-outs and slow network speeds can be a result of having too many wireless signals in the air competing with one another,” these rogue APs across points are most likely “crowding the airspace and impeding the usable throughput and avail-

tility of the Meru APs.”

According to Giacobbe, “While eliminating these rogue points is not a magic bullet to resolve all wire- less problems, reducing the amount of noise signals in the air will have a significant benefit to the availability, stability, capacity and performance of the MSU-WiFi and MSU- WPA2 networks.”

For now, students should continue to be patient as well notify the Information Technology department con- cerning any issues they may be facing.

A memorial was held to acknowledge the loss of a girl and her work. “I found it very important to acknowledge the loss of a young life in our film community,” said Roberta Friedman, head of the Film program. “It really came across many students in so many ways. It really came across in the clips we showed.”

With that being said, those that spoke on Friday night highlighted the program’s appreciation of the young filmmaker and her contributions. In addition, the memorial presented how she had been touched by the young girl and her work.

Wil Exavier, a fellow Film major who attended the service, said, “She is an icon to the kind of attitude the Communication and Media major who attended the service, had wonderful things to say in memory of Schwab. "She was downright the most beautiful, creative and effortlessly happy person I have met in this program," Exavier said. "She is an icon to the kind of attitude the Film program should have." The memorial itself and the pieces of work embodied the pieces of work Schwab crafted during her time at Montclair State. It highlighted the program’s appreciation of the young filmmaker and her contributions, including Anthony Echo who was one of Schwab’s close friends.

As the campus community gives its sincerest condolences to the loss of a young life in our film community, said Roberta Friedman, head of the Film program, “She touched us so many students in so many ways. It really came across in the clips we showed.”

Schwab grew up in Rockaway, N.J. and lived briefly in Lake Hiawatha, N.J. while attending Montclair State University. When she passed in mid-August, Schwab had been a junior in the Film program, she was well-liked, known prominently for her imagination. All of those in attendance had been touched by the young girl and her work.

Echo who was one of Schwab’s close friends, said, “She was the most beautiful, creative and effortlessly happy person I have met in this program.” Exavier said, “She is an icon to the kind of attitude the Film program should have.” The memorial itself and the pieces of work embodied the pieces of work Schwab crafted during her time at Montclair State. As of Oct. 9, the University Police Department stated that “several of Yogi Berra’s World Series rings, along with two MVP plaques, were stolen during the burglary on Oct. 8. No other items appear to be stolen at this time.” This information is according to Chief Paul Cell of University Police.

In a statement from Board of Trustees chairman Mark Markowitz and Vice-Chair Julie Jackson, the Board thanked the public for their “support of our campus, our community and our commitment to the students’ success.”

“We have worked hard to make our beloved Museum and Learning Center a cherished community asset promoting Yogi’s legacy of fairness, respect and sportsmanship,” said the statement from the Board. They also urge anyone with any knowledge about the break-in to come forward to University police.

In a press release by the Essex County Sheriff’s Office, who are also working on the investigation, the department’s Crimestoppers program has “increased its reward offer in the break-in and robbery at the Yogi Berra Museum and Learning Center,” bringing the reward up to $15,000. The Crimestoppers program is designed to encourage cooperation between citizens and the law enforcement community to help solve crimes.

Those with information are urged to contact University police at 973-655-5222 or msupolice@gmail.com. Yogi Berra fans across the country are hoping that these relics will return to their home at the Yogi Berra Museum.
Find Your Makeup Inspiration

Jessica Mahmoud
Staff Writer

Do you ever have trouble picking out an outfit? Are you looking for inspiration but don’t know where to go? Sure, the Internet is great, but which websites? As someone who gets a lot of outfit ideas online and from other sources, I’ve got a couple ideas. I hope this helps you out.

Thousands of girls and guys make videos specific to fashion and beauty. Whether you like styling or look books, they’re free. I suggest checking out usernames Bethany Mota, StilaBabe09 and MayBaby. They can help you with rainy day outfits, going out and everything in-between.

Another popular place to find outfit inspiration on the Web is Tumblr. Once you get past inspirational and animal pictures, Tumblr is a pretty cool collection of blogs. Simply search anything from fall fashion to street-style and you’ll find thousands of relevant blogs. Tumblr is great because once you reblog pictures, you can easily find them on your page at anytime.

Magazines

Magazines are also a great place to find fashion inspiration. There’s no need to order a subscription since they can easily be found online or at libraries for free. I recently learned that Topshop has a free magazine available at their store. Any small book of models is a great place to get ideas to recreate outfits with what you already own. To take it a step further, go through old magazines and make a collage of ideas for reference anytime.

Another lesser-known yet wonderful feature on Forever 21’s website is Shop By Outfit. Not only does it advertise things they sell at their store, but it also gives awesome outfit ideas. If you’re a fan of the styles they sell at their store and/or own a lot of their pieces, be sure to check it out. It can be found under “Women” on the home page.

Weather

Is the weather what’s causing your outfit dilemmas? For many people, cold weather means sweatpants and the effort of looking fashionable is put to the back of their mind. If this sounds like you, check out dressme-daily.com. This genius website was created by Beverly Hills High School student Nina Vir. Simply search any locations and it’ll show you outfit ideas for the weather. For more ideas, refresh the page. It’s available for men, too!

If you’re looking to upgrade your style or just new ideas, it’s a good idea to look to a variety of sources. From online to print and street-style, inspiration is right in front of you. I hope you got some ideas and inspired you to expand your horizons on where to get different ideas for tomorrow’s outfit.

When you are grocery shopping and pass through the Halloween aisle, a few tips on what to avoid and options that have some kind of redeeming value could still be a way to enjoy Halloween without also going up a pant size. When it comes to candy, you should know that it is okay to have some, but it should always be eaten in moderation. With that in mind, here are a few tips on what to avoid and options that have some kind of redeeming nutritional quality, making them your go-to if you want your candy fix when you are grocery shopping and pass through the Halloween aisle.

Avoid white chocolate.
When it comes to chocolate, white chocolate is the sneakiest and least healthy option. It actually does not contain any cocoa at all, but instead is packed with fat from cocoa butter and sugar. One serving of Hershey’s Bliss White Meltaways has nine grams of saturated fat and 24 grams of sugar. This may seem like a good thing, as some nutrition is through nuts added to plain dark chocolate. Nuts are a great option for an added boost. Another way to add antioxidants, which is more beneficial than the marshmallows or pretzels. They have a small amount of fiber and some protein, but not much else.

White chocolate bars.
White chocolate bars are the most obvious to avoid. They are often made from white chocolate all together. If you really need a bite of something, have just that; one or two bites and then put it away in exchange for a healthier snack such as fresh fruit or nuts.

Come to the dark side.
Of chocolate, that is. Chocolate is naturally one of the most popular candies passed around during October. Before you indulge, try to find a dark chocolate version of whatever treat you are craving. Dark chocolate has some helpful antioxidants and tends to be lower in sugar. Beware, though; the lower sugar generally comes with chocolate that is especially “dark,” such as Trader Joe’s The Dark Chocolate Bar. An ounce of this is 68 percent cocoa and has only six grams of sugar per serving; the higher the percentage of cocoa, the better. Other options include the Hershey’s Miniatures Special Dark. Just remember that chocolate almost always tends to be high in fat as well, so watch your serving size. For the dark chocolate bars from Trader Joe’s, stick to two-thirds of a bar. For the miniatures, try to only have one or two at a time.

Look for healthy ingredients.
Although they might not be the star of the package, some candies may actually include a not-so-bad ingredient, such as the raisins in Raisinets. For chocolate-covered candies, raisins beat out marshmallows every time. They have a small amount of fiber and some antioxidants, which is more beneficial than the marshmallows or pretzels. As always, stick to a small serving of them and try to find the dark chocolate option for an added boost. Another way to add some nutrition is through nuts added to plain dark chocolate. Nuts add some heart-healthy unsaturated fats, but they tend to still be in sugary candies, so they are only a slightly better option than traditional candy bars.

Make your own.
If you find yourself reading nutrition labels for hours and still cannot come up with a decent option for candy, try making your own dark chocolate bar. This consists of melted dark chocolate with anything you crave added in, which is later frozen and broken into pieces. Try adding the dried fruits or nuts that were said earlier to give candy a nutritional boost.

Act like a kid.
As previously, serving size is one of the most important things to look at when treating yourself. It is not a crime to enjoy the holiday and eat a tasty snack. Just try to do so in a smarter way. Look for “kid size” or “fun size” options away from full or king-sized candy bars; they usually have a few servings per bar.

Her rising publicity and outspokenness didn’t go as well in presence of the Taliban.

Yousafzai began to receive public death threats, yet that still did not scare her. She made international headlines sometimes over two years ago when a gunman boarded on a bus that she took home from school and demanded to know which one was Youzafzai or he’ll kill all the riders. After identifying her, he shot her three times in the head, neck and shoulders. Youzafzai was airlifted to a military hospital in Pakistan where they removed the bullets and treated her wounds. With a 70 percent chance of survival, she was sent to the United Kingdom for further treatment and protection. Her assassination attempt resonated with the world. Major leaders and public figures praised this young girl for her bravery and admiration. President Obama and Michelle Obama met with Yousafzai after her recovery in the Oval Office. Singer Madonna dedicated the song “Human Nature” to Yousafzai during one of her concerts and actresses Angelina Jolie wrote an article about her and donated $200,000 to The Malala Fund. She has even met with Queen Elizabeth in Buckingham Palace. Even after being the victim of a brutal attack, Youzafzai hasn’t stopped her activism. She spoke before the United Nations in July 2013 as part of her campaign for free education for every child. As a result, she received a standing ovation. The UN called the event “Malala Day.” In addition to making speeches on different outposts, Youzafzai also co-wrote a memoir of her life thus far entitled I Am Malala: The Girl Who Stood Up For Education and Was Shot by the Taliban. The memoir received rave reviews and even appeared on The Daily Show with John Stewart to promote it. Stewart was so impressed by Yousafzai that he at one point asked if he could adopt her. Although the memoir has been very well received and was even on the New York Times Best Seller list, it is banned in her native Pakistan in 2012.

Yousafzai was awarded the co-reipient of the coveted Nobel Peace Prize on October 10, 2014 alongside Indian children’s rights activist Kailash Satyarthi. Yousafzai is the youngest and second Pakistani ever to receive the award.

Have a Healthier Halloween
Kimberly Asman
Staff Writer

One of the first things that come to mind when people think of Halloween is, of course, candy. Candy is obviously not a very healthy food option. One of the first things that come to mind when people think of Halloween is, of course, candy. Chocolate Meltaways has nine grams of saturated fat and 24 grams of sugar. This may seem like a good thing, as some nutrition is through nuts added to plain dark chocolate. Nuts are a great option for an added boost. Another way to add antioxidants, which is more beneficial than the marshmallows or pretzels. They have a small amount of fiber and some protein, but not much else.

Come to the dark side.
Of chocolate, that is. Chocolate is naturally one of the most popular candies passed around during October. Before you indulge, try to find a dark chocolate version of whatever treat you are craving. Dark chocolate has some helpful antioxidants and tends to be lower in sugar. Beware, though; the lower sugar generally comes with chocolate that is especially “dark,” such as Trader Joe’s The Dark Chocolate Bar. An ounce of this is 68 percent cocoa and has only six grams of sugar per serving; the higher the percentage of cocoa, the better. Other options include the Hershey’s Miniatures Special Dark. Just remember that chocolate almost always tends to be high in fat as well, so watch your serving size. For the dark chocolate bars from Trader Joe’s, stick to two-thirds of a bar. For the miniatures, try to only have one or two at a time.

Look for healthy ingredients.
Although they might not be the star of the package, some candies may actually include a not-so-bad ingredient, such as the raisins in Raisinets. For chocolate-covered candies, raisins beat out marshmallows every time. They have a small amount of fiber and some antioxidants, which is more beneficial than the marshmallows or pretzels. As always, stick to a small serving of them and try to find the dark chocolate option for an added boost. Another way to add some nutrition is through nuts added to plain dark chocolate. Nuts add some heart-healthy unsaturated fats, but they tend to still be in sugary candies, so they are only a slightly better option than traditional candy bars.

Make your own.
If you find yourself reading nutrition labels for hours and still cannot come up with a decent option for candy, try making your own dark chocolate bar. This consists of melted dark chocolate with anything you crave added in, which is later frozen and broken into pieces. Try adding the dried fruits or nuts that were said earlier to give candy a nutritional boost.

Act like a kid.
As previously, serving size is one of the most important things to look at when treating yourself. It is not a crime to enjoy the holiday and eat a tasty snack. Just try to do so in a smarter way. Look for “kid size” or “fun size” options away from full or king-sized candy bars; they usually have a few servings per bar.
If you’re a student at Montclair State University, then you’ve seen him around. His height makes him hard to miss. Even more so, his bright red-feathered body topped by a large yellow beak and intimidating yellow eyes.

He doesn’t speak but still has a school-wide effect on the campus population. Still, the question remains, who is he really? The Montclarion can now reveal: The man behind the beak is a senior chemistry student named Josh who is so determined to keep his anonymity that he would like his last name to remain unknown. He has been Rocky for three and a half years, but his feathery reign is coming to an end as graduation approaches – opening the gig up for some new talent.

The red-tailed hawk has been MSU’s mascot since 1989, when the conversion was made from the Indians because the Intercollegiate Athletics Committee cited the name as “offensive.” In the 25 years since then, countless people have worn the Rocky suit, but none of them have had a passion for it like Josh does.

Josh describes himself in person as “shy, quiet, not very outgoing,” but he completely changes once he puts on the Rocky suit.

In the suit, Josh is confident and energetic. He riles up audiences and puts smiles on people’s faces, constantly getting handshakes and high fives by passersby. But once the suit comes off, Josh can’t help but feel a little disappointed.

“Afterwards, it’s especially because I’m walking down a hallway, giving people high fives. When I take the suit off, I still want to give people high fives, but that would probably be weird,” laughs Josh, who does not get paid to be Rocky.

The suit gives Josh confidence to do things he otherwise wouldn’t do. At Winterfest last year, he said, “I wasn’t really sure what to do because it was a dance party so I just decided, why not dance. I’m not a great dancer, but I did have a blast.”

People around campus feel his enthusiasm while he is in the suit, too. “He definitely does a good job at putting a smile on people’s faces,” says Kendal Bernardini, a junior Nutrition major.

However, Rocky does even more than make people smile. Catherine Zisk, a senior Family and Child Studies major, says Rocky “makes people proud to be students at MSU. Compared to other school mascots, Rocky is pretty awesome.”

In reality, being Rocky isn’t just walking around and giving high-fives to people. Being in the suit was something Josh had to master. “You really have no vision wearing the suit,” he explained. “There’s a slit on either side of your head for Rocky’s eyes, which makes it very difficult to see people. There was a lot of getting used to what I could and couldn’t do in the beginning.”

In fact, if someone saw Josh as Rocky the first time he wore the suit, he described it as a day of him “tripping over his big bird feet.”

Over the years, Josh has become a pro at maneuvering the suit and riling up school spirit, but he now must pass the beak to another worthy man or woman on campus.

If you think you have what it takes, make sure to keep an eye out for a Student Organization notification in early November announcing Rocky the Red Hawk auditions.

Josh says that the main qualifications are that you have high energy and great Red Hawk Pride!

“Personally, I don’t really participate in things like that on campus. I’m a commuter, so I’m either here or I’m not. I don’t participate in any on-site stuff like that.”

We understand that human error occurs every day, even in the SGA and we believe that the SGA’s reversal of its previous decision demonstrates its fairness. Taking the time to reconsider a decision and admit a mistake shows both a respect for justice and humanity; for that, we think that the SGA’s ultimate reaction is laudable. With that being said, we do think that precautions should be taken to make sure that an issue of this kind does not occur again. In Bunk’s response, she claims, “The SJP was a brand new organization and we have newly appointed leaders in the SGA, so there is a need to be understanding and give the SJP the benefit of private information because it would be acting for the ‘benefit of private interests,’ although individual organizations do not represent the student body and are not subject to such regulations.” After reassessing the situation, the SGA has rescinded this sanction, an action that we applaud. The SGA Attorney General expressed that organizations cannot participate in lobbying or advocate political actions because this political involvement jeopardizes the SGA’s status as a non-profit organization, according to the IRS’ requirements for tax exempt status. These requirements, however, only state that the SGA cannot participate in lobbying because it would be acting for the “benefit of private interests,” although individual organizations do not represent the student body and are not subject to such regulations. After the SJP and an outside student rights foundation, FIRE, informed the SGA of this stipulation, they revoked the sanctions and life at the SGA returned to relative tranquility. As a media outlet that reports the happenings of the SGA, we believe that the SJA should hear both perspectives when faced with an organization which is sanctioned. We believe that the SGA should reconsider its constitution and amend its policies regarding sanctions in order to introduce a more open communication path between organizations and SGA officials. Finally, we believe that the SGA should hear both sides of the story and develop a more open discussion with an organization before applying sanctions. The SJP was not part of the discussion before they were sanctioned. We believe that with more careful consideration of all sides of the issue, the conflict could be resolved more quickly and with better communication.

Choosing a College: Is Non-Transferable

Institutions should lighten the burden of the transfer admissions process

Which is the reality for one third of students, according to the National Association of Colleges Admission Counselors. Many students fear making a decision after realizing they do not have any agency or feel overwhelmed. Feeling this way is completely normal, students must remember that feeling this way is completely normal. Students must remember that feeling this way is completely normal.

The first step is to consider the reasons for transferring, as good reason would be the need to change for personal or financial reasons.

Other than academic reasons, a student may want to transfer because of family or social reasons. If a student feels that changing his or her major feels like falling into this category, then their reasons should be valid.

The reasons for transfer, on the other hand, are students who want to transfer for the wrong reason. Some of these reasons may include: dissatisfaction with a professor or not meeting their expectations. If a student finds the academia too hard or of no interest to them, this reason should be valid.

However, if a student transfers for the wrong reason, they may be placed in a position that they are not prepared for and feel the need to make another transfer. However, if a student transfers for the wrong reason, they may be placed in a position that they are not prepared for and feel the need to make another transfer.

When a student has applied as a transfer, they have crossed the line from being a prospective student to being a transfer applicant.

Once the scary choice to become a transfer student is made, understanding the difficulties a transfer faces does not go away as easily as many students may think.

Although she only has two singles out, Kelsey Byrne, known by her stage name VERITE, is slowly getting noticed. “Weekend” is her second single, and her first being “Strange Enough.” Hailing from Brooklyn, Kelsey got noticed just past July. This song is a fun, kind of a mature version of a typical pop song. Her EP is expected to come out next month, so keep your eyes out!

“The Best About You”

THE PERISHERS FEAT. SARAH McCLARREN

The best part about this song is the mix between a woman and a man’s voice. The Perishers is a Swedish band formed all the way back in 1997 and is made up of three men. They toured with Sarah MacLachlan, who is probably my most known nowadays for her appearance on ASPCA commercials than her singing career. Although this song may come off as a little dark (“we need pills to sleep at night, we need lies to survive”), it’s also very calming. It takes a very special voice to be able to cover a popular song successfully. Canadian artist Daniela Andrade has mastered it and her talent is known. She’s has a YouTube channel, five short albums as well as a total of 324 songs available for purchase. If you’re looking for a new cover artist, make sure you check her out.

Montclair Improv League and Friends is a group within Players, Montclair State University’s theater organization. Each semester, they occasionally perform improvisational shows, comprised of a series of games with different scenarios, with the pressure to act right on the spot.

The cast of performers has greatly benefited from being part of the shows, from personality to college experience. Kelly McGeary, a former senior English Education major and Rachel Taylor, a senior Music Therapy major, are the directors of this semester’s show.

McGeary explained, “It has made me a lot more comfortable with myself as a person. MILF has made me a stronger performer because it taught me to trust my own judgment.”

Rachel Taylor said, “I think that improving and being a part of MILF has had a large effect on my personality. I feel that I am much more outgoing, confident, and willing to take initiative in all aspects of my life.”

For many performers, MILF was a way to make new friends, especially since the cast builds a strong bond with one another. Rebecca DeMarco, a sophomore BFIA acting major, came to MSU from out of state. MILF was her way of making friends.

“Everyone is from New Jersey here,” said DeMarco. “People had friends and I didn’t know anyone coming in and I auditioned and they were my first friends on campus.”

MILF was also a great inspiration for those undecided about majors to declare acting. Both DeMarco and Ivana Greene, a senior BA theatre studies major, agreed that MILF is what inspired them to declare acting as their major.

As a transfer student, Greene explained, “Being in MILF really brought me back to performing. Coming here and performing with new people and seeing how they took to me made me realize that I need to follow my dreams.”

MILF is a show where the cast is coming up with their lines on the spot with no script. It was no thus surprise that many members agreed that it has made them less guarded.

Mia Henderson, a freshman psychology major, said, “When you graduate high school, you lose a little confidence. I guess MILF was a way to sort of get that confidence back. It was like these people are who theater was to me in high school.”

Additionally, Steve Silvestri, a freshman BA theatre studies major, explained, “It taught me to trust myself a little more than I did before. I threw self doubt and all that useless nonsense that just crawls up the brain.”

The dynamics and style of MILF has greatly helped the participants improve their lives and personalities. As Greene said, “It’s just really great to let your hair down and be silly and be crazy. Get it all out.”
"Sons of Anarchy": Episode 6

Joe Lees
Staff Writer

The seventh season of Sons of Anarchy has practicially hit its midway point. It’s only fitting that an event such as the title and sets the remainder of the season on a fast track to its ending. The Sons now have June. Gemma is as terrified as she ever was show and so was the narration of the truth moving closer to public sight. Now we have episode six (titled "Smoke 'em If You Got 'em"). I’m look-forwarding to next week.

The last few episodes have been slow with very amounts of development so I’m very impressed with this episode.

The tension that this episodes held throughout its extended running time was executed very well. The things that Sons of Anarchy has been patiently waiting for behave in a way that feels right. For the first time all sense, I feel as if the show has really hit a good pace. Nothing seemed like too much filler and there was no confusion in the delivery of the episode.

A lot of this is thanks to the writing staff, still benefiting from the experienced nowment of showrunner Kurt Sutter.

As I bring up every week,
the cast brought their game. One of the most able moments of this episode was the guest appearance of Glue’s Lea Michele. This is cerfully a step away from the her comedy background each ting to show his talent.

In the first two episodes, the performing a stand-up routine.

Akin to the elation that Woodstock, Burning Man and Mardi Gras give one, Comic Con is just another one of those festivals that one will remember for the remainder of their life. After all, it is the only time of the year other than Halloween when fanboys and fangirls alike can rejoice in their love for their favorite comic book, television and video game series, all while cosplaying in such outlandish yet wondrous costumes. Held at the usual Jacob K. Javits Convention Center, the number of attendees at New York Comic Con 2014 had trumped those of its San Diego counterpart with an approximate 151,000 present at the four-day event that is organized annually by ReedPOP. Owing to the renowned guests and their ardent fans in attendance, New York Comic Con 2014 has become the largest pop culture event of the year. From Courage the Cowardly Dog to Mario, this year’s convention saw the likes of numerous characters prodding around the Javits Center.

Besides the number of attendees this year, what made NYCC 2014 stand out from its predecessors was their promotion of “Cosplay is Not Consent,” a strict effort to eliminate sexual harassment among cosplayers. Signs blazing the slogan urged guests to due their part and report any nonconsensual behavior pertaining to stalking, touching and other unwanted physical attention. The policy is part of a larger effort to combat sexism and sexual harassment that is not only persistent at Comic Con but other expos related to gaming, comic books and anime as well.

Hoping to recreate the success of this year, ReedPOP has already announced the dates for next year’s New York Comic Con to be held on Oct. 8-11, 2015.
The dolls are handmade, fully articulated and come with various forms of the characters' weapons and additional accessories. The asking price for the dolls is set to be at $150 for each doll, with the exception of Ruby, who will be priced at $168 due to the possibility of a half-human, half-grimm (monsters in the RWBY universe) character being introduced to other characters we've seen designs for or mentions of in chapter eight while Ozpin is speaking; but we wanted to focus a lot on characters we want to introduce and focus on.

Q: How do you guys go about conceptualizing characters? Do you try to be a bit more like the Grimm or...what will the characters will be on the season before this, the Grimm's getting exchanged?
Shawcross: I got in and basically stuck around. Burnie would tell me “This Ken rad kid coming in” and I’m just like, “whatever.” But no one wanted to do sound for Season Eight of Red vs. Blue and Kerry would always offer to do it.
Shawcross: I put in and basically wherever we could so everyone would start liking me. I would basically never say no to anything and basically stick around.

Q. How did the idea of dust and semblances come to you?
Oum: Dust was basically centralized as some sort of base for the world magic.
Shawcross: It’s our own version of magic and we can play around with it as much as possible.
Oum: With semblances, it’s like I wanted characters to have something that other characters are inspired by people. Garrett, who voices Adam, does this thing where he rewrites negative things people say about him. It makes him a very effective person, so Adam did this thing where he defecates energy. Barbara as Community Manager has to deal with a lot, but because of that, she’s stronger.

Q. Favorite charaters?
Dunkelman: Besides my own, I would have to say either Sun or Penny. They’re just so much fun.
Shawcross: I would go either Sun or Nora. Oum: I’m working on a lot of stuff right now. It’s all mostly secret, so she’s currently my favorite.

Q. What are your plans for the future?
Shawcross: I’m still big on Crescent Rose and semblances would be this one that I have an idea for, but we don’t know about yet. Shawcross: I would probably go with Neptune’s weapon just because I think it’s really cool and my semblance would be to be able to sleep with my eyes open, (so the enemy could never sneak up on him).
Dunkelman: I would probably pick Weas’s sword because I think it’s really cool. As for semblances, I would probably pick Yang’s because if I got to be strong, I would become super strong.

Montclair State concluded their road trip as they traveled to Buena Vista, Va. to take on Southern Virginia. The NJAC newcomers had little chances to get into the game, as Montclair pounced on them for a 35-18 win.

The scoring began with running back Daniel Nieves finding the end zone yet again early on in the first quarter. His score put Montclair State up 7-0 with 12:36 left in the first quarter. Nieves followed that with another touchdown; this time from 13 yards out to increase the lead to 14-0.

The second quarter would remain at that score for most of the time until Southern Virginia put one in the end zone with 22 seconds left in the half. The Red Hawks would answer right back with a touchdown in the fourth, Montclair State improved to 4-1 with the win and 2-0 in the conference to put themselves atop the leaders in the NJAC this season. They are currently a half-game out of first due to Morrisville State, the preseason “dark horse” to win the title, putting together a 5-1 overall record and 3-0 in the conference. Morrisville State does not have their bye this time from the last week of the season and will face Rowan University (5-2, 2-0) in Glassboro.

The Red Hawks were propelled yet again by Nieves. The sophomore standout scored his ninth and 10th touchdowns of the season and has now scored two touchdowns or more in four of the team’s five games this season. The only time he did not reach two touchdowns in a game was in Week Two against Salisbury Regional. In this game, he rushed for 117 yards and averaged 6.9 yards per carry.

The Red Hawks won their fourth straight game. They have won the NJAC conference title back-to-back in the last two years and advanced to the NCAA Tournament last season. This year, the team is 10-3 overall, losing to Muhlenberg, Middlebury, and Middlebury to get into the game, as Montclair pounced on them for a 35-18 win.

Red Hawk Round Up

Volleyball

Mens Soccer

The Red Hawks continued to roll with two more wins this week. They started off the week with a win over Manhattanville College on Oct. 8. They then returned to NJAC action and defeated Rowan University at MSU Soccer Park.

Montclair State is currently tied for first with conference points and have a perfect 5-0 record in NJAC matchups. The thing that separates them from Rutgers-Newark is their overall record.

Volleyball

Montclair State is currently in fourth with their 3-2 NJAC record.

Swimming and Diving

The mens and womens team had a tough match-up against Division I Seton Hall and both came up short in their losses. They will be back in action for the Homecoming meet on Oct. 18.

Womens Soccer

The Lady Red Hawks defeated Vassar College and drew against Rowan University in Glassboro. Montclair State is tied for first with the aforementioned Rowan with the same amount of conference points. TCNJ and Stockton are right behind them with only one point less than the two atop in the standings.

Team drops tough matchup to (4) TCNJ, drop to 12th in NCAA

Although the Red Hawks have seen three losses on their record so far for this season, including one in the NJAC, Got-tung still has strong belief her team’s talen.

“Our team absolutely can still win the NJAC,” she day. “It’s our goal to continue grow as a team and win the tournament.”

MSU is playing only one game this week instead of the regularly scheduled two. On Saturday, Oct. 18, the Red
Hawks welcome the Richard
Stockton Ospreys to Sprague
Field at 12 p.m.

Kyle Goodwin: Soccer

It was at the age of three when Montclair State freshman Kyle Goodwin first played soccer. He envisioned it as what he wanted to do for the rest of his life.

“I’m hoping to play pro soccer,” he said. “It’s always been my dream to be able to play at the next level.”

As a teenager, Goodwin played for the New York Red Bulls Academy club team while attending two seasons at South Brunswick High School.

The summer before his high school senior year, he traveled to Portugal to play overseas, with the possibility of staying there to continue his soccer career. Although receiving a callback from a Portuguese team, Goodwin chose to bring his talent back to the United States with his future endeavors in mind.

“I decided to come back to go to college,” said Goodwin. “I was thinking about my future; if I got hurt, then what would I do?”

After making this decision, Goodwin found a home at Montclair State University. He has started every game upon his arrival and has recorded 10 goals in 14 games. He’s only scored one goal in the team’s starting lineup and has two of his assists as for this season.

His hard work and contributions to the team have not gone unnoticed. Goodwin has been honored with two NJAC Rookie of the Week recognitions, including the first award given in Week One.

“Earning these awards and scoring a lot of goals motivates me even more to want to do better,” he said. “It makes me love the game of soccer even more.

Goodwin has played a vital role in some of the season’s most important games. He assisted the only goal scored against national defending champion Messiah College and assisted two goals in a 5-3 loss against fifth-seeded Wheaton College.

Most recently, Goodwin scored the game-winning goal in a huge NJAC match-up against TCNJ. A game that was taken into overtime. It was harry over a minute into the extra time when Goodwin received a feed from teammate Damian Bziukiewicz and nailed the ball into the back of the net.

“When you score a goal like that, it’s better than any other goal to score,” Goodwin said. “I felt amazing; it was a great moment for me and my team. Being able to adjust to the caliber of Division III athletes can be extremely challenging for a college freshman just out of high school. Although Goodwin is in the midst of this change, he is making it work for him.

“It’s very different soccer that I’m not used to, but I adapted to it,” he explains. “I’m having good connection up top with all the players and we are getting the job done by scoring goals.”

Some of Goodwin’s upperclassmen teammates are also noticing his quick adaption including senior defender Jon Krzyzak.

“He’s a talented hardworking player,” Krzyzak said of Goodwin. “He’s a real good asset to the team this year.”

Although Goodwin earned a spot in the team’s starting lineup and has proved to fit right in with the team, he entered his freshman season with anxiety the will to work hard and the hope that success would follow.

“I really didn’t know what to expect,” he said. “All I had in my head was to go out and play the best I could and score as much as I can.”

He also explained that he’s proud of his play this season and feels as if his hard work from childhood is paying off.

Montclair State is currently the second seed in the NJAC conference, just behind Rutgers-Newark. The team recently entered conference play and have crucial games against Kean and Rutgers-Newark approaching.

The team will play this weekend on Homecoming for the University. The Red Hawks will host Rutgers-Camden at Fitzmaurice Field under the lights at 7:30 p.m.

Goodwin still has plenty of the season left to make an imprint on the team and has three long years to enroll as a Red Hawk. He keeps his dream career of playing professional soccer in his aspiration.

“I don’t care where I went pro,” he said. “I just really want to play at the next level.”

Kaitlyn Struss: Field Hockey

Since her first game as a Montclair State Red Hawk, field hockey forward Kaitlyn Struss has been the kind of recognition many athletes can only hope to receive.

The freshman Struss received her fifth NJAC honor of this season this week. The standout has been named Rookie of the Week by the conference five out of seven times beginning with three consecutive titles in the start of the season.

I worked hard all summer and have continued that work ethic and determination in college, so earning such a title is very rewarding,” Struss said. “It’s something that I have never taken for granted.”

Struss fell in love with field hockey at a young age and has continued to play throughout high school and college.

“Earning such a title is very rewarding,” Struss said. “It’s something that pushes me to perform.”

Head coach Beth Gottung also looks for Struss to find the back of the net. Although the Red Hawks have several players that can score, Struss has a knack in putting the ball away.

“She has a lot of speed in front of the goal,” Gottung said. “Kaitlyn has been a consistent goal scorer for us and makes things happen.”

As a forward, scoring goals is a natural position. However, the stats that follow her accomplishments are not the core of Struss focus.

“Success for me away from the game feeling good just because I scored,” she explained. “I need to know that I left everything on the field that game and played my heart out.”

Struss has exploded on the field this season by contributing greatly to the team’s scoring force. She has 14 goals and five assists over 13 games in and currently leads the team in both goals and points. She says that scoring is her favorite part of the game.

While Goodwin logits about his future, Struss has her eyes on the present.

“Score goals,” she said. “It’s all about scoring goals.”

Goodwin and Struss have several games left this season that could prove to fit right in with the team and keep the team’s scoring force.
