Residents Life plans to triple rooms in Bohn, Blanton, Freeman and Russ Halls. Dr. A. Gregory Cant has been announced as its first dean. Bringing an impressive resume to his position, Cant currently holds the title of the Offutt School of Business at Concordia College's founding dean and is certainly looking forward to taking on his new position at Montclair State.

According to the Montclair State website, Cant stated, “I am profoundly honored to be offered the opportunity to lead the School of Business. With its excellent faculty and staff, innovative programs and exceptional new facility, the School of Business at Montclair State University is one of the most outstanding new facilities in the world, and I am profoundly honored to be able to lead that effort.”
Six Reports of Harassment on Campus Since January

Peter Shaver
Staff Writer

As the semester reaches its first full month of classes, several harassment complaints have been reported. There have been seven accounts of harassment and/or discrimination by the semester’s beginning.

One case occurred in January during the first full week of classes occurred within the month of February thusfar.

However, though these incidents have been happening recently, the campus community has not yet to be notified from administration concerning their occurrence. Upon learning this information, students were rather shocked, not only due to the events themselves, but also to the fact that the Montclair State community has been left in the dark.

I feel like that’s completely disrespectful to the campus community,” said Ricci Capuano, a junior Communication Studies major. “We should be informed of these incidents and the school shouldn’t be hiding this from us. Especially if it’s [because] they’re worried about spreading panic, but you read like some other schools around us have treated this information.

Students feel as though they should still be aware of the fact that these instances can happen at the university level, however. Six in two weeks is too many, said Melissa Ruiz, a junior majoring in Psychology and Molecular Biology.

“We should be notified for our safety no matter how small the incident ‘seems’ to be.”

If I’m feeling unsafe knowing that these incidents are occurring around us, we have not even been notified, said Francesca Vazzana, an unaffiliated sophomore.

In general, students have agreed that the campus community should be notified of these events no matter how small.

However, according to Dr. Pennington, “We are required to notify the community if they might be in danger, or if the perpetrator of an act is unknown and the action might be random. If the parties are known to each other and the action has been notified, then it is clear the issue is with those individuals and there is no reason to believe that the rest of the campus is in danger.

Though this has not been reported, the incidents occurring recently, in many cases where harassment does take place, violence usually follows. For this reason, Detective Sherryn Worrack from UPD still warns of its occurrence and encourages students to be aware if they find themselves in these situations.

“Don’t engage in derogatory comments when encountering these situations because most of the time it will elevate the situation to physical violence,” said Worrack. “Every time people make rude comments, it’s what triggers the suspect to physical violence and know that we’re here 24/7 to assist you in any incident of harassment.”

In recent weeks, there has been an increase in awareness across the country and thus harassment continues to impact colleges and universities on a large scale. Still, some students have asserted that though the campus community has not been notified of such events, it has already taken steps to inform the students and faculty members.

“As a student, this number honestly doesn’t surprise me. With over 20,000 students at this university, there is going to be conflict,” said Melissa Ruiz. “As a student who understands Justice Studies major. “I think the university does everything it can to educate students about students to be aware if they find themselves in these situations.”

“We should definitely be aware of what’s around us. I do think Montclair is a safe campus, but I would like to know what kind of incidents are taking place.”

is well positioned to deepen its mission and fulfill its mission to develop talent for a changing world.

Cant received his undergraduate and Ph.D. degrees from the University of Western Australia and then returned to complete his doctorate at Queens University in Kingston, Ontario, Canada. In a similar fashion, Cant has held various positions of importance at the academic level around the world in several different areas of study. Among these roles, he has fulfilled those of a faculty member, administrator, faculty senate leader, department chair and academic dean at a number of universities; in regards to location, he has worked in the United States, China, the United Kingdom and Australia.

Most notably, Cant worked exhaustively to transform Concordia’s business program into a comprehensive business school, and then bring to life a comprehensive new curriculum, with the inclusion of both its incoming and returning students. Along the way, Cant’s work also helped to expand the number of faculty and staff in the school itself and creates an initiative set of fundraisers at the university level.

In his initial days at Montclair State, Cant will work with Dr. Kimberly Hollister, the previous dean, to help him in his new position and create a vision for the new school. Hollister will become vice dean of the School of Business on the same date. At the same time, Dr. Robert Friedman has been named dean of the College of Humanities and Social Sciences. Friedman currently serves as director of the Institute of Technology at the University of Washington’s Tacoma campus and eagerly awaits his first day in his new position.

According to the Montclair State website, Friedman stated, “I am thrilled to be able to join Montclair State as its next dean of the College of Humanities and Social Sciences,” said Friedman. “The personal significance of this appointment is rooted in my professional and scholarly film major, made his own customized license plate on Monday and Build-A-Buddy on Tuesday.

“I think this was the first year they did the license plates and I thought it was really fun. It was a good idea and everyone had a great time making them,” said Rodriguez.

In addition, on Wednesday morning from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m., students enjoyed freshly baked quinoa salad in the Student Center’s Rathsakeller. At the same time, Thursday’s evening event featured “Slim-Online Build-A-Buddy” as well as Valentine’s Day Cards and Doughnuts.

As its final act of the week, the Black HerStory Ball will be held in the Student Center Ballrooms from 8 p.m. to 12 a.m.

Overall, Winter Week served as a definite energy boost in the cold winter months of the spring semester. In the future, SLAM hopes to grow Winter Week next year with more activities for students to unwind and have fun over the next few years.

“Ultimately, we want as many students as possible to have the great experience that living on campus can provide,” said Friedman.

Executive Director, Residence Life

- John Delate

“Working to accommodate every student who wishes to live on campus. Residence Life began the 2014-2015 academic year with over 100 people on the waiting list for housing. Since September, that list has dwindled down to only a few students due to the hard work of the Office of Residence Life staff.”

According to Delate, “It is exciting to see at Open House days and other events where so many prospective and current students want to reside in campus housing. Residence Life is thrilled with this interest and in order to accommodate the growing demand, we need to plan for some time in the upcoming academic year.”

The daunting task of providing a comfortable and living space for each resident remains one of the biggest concerns regarding the tripled rooms. The new triple rooms, which are specifically designed for tripled rooms, are currently being purchased to solve the potential issues characteristic of a limited space. The rooms will each contain a lofted bed on one side of the room and bunked beds on the other side. Such space utilization methods will ensure that each resident in a triple has a personal desk, dresser and closet.

Under the leadership of John Delate, the Office of Residence Life is always working to serve the consistently growing resident community at Montclair State and its assistance will be available throughout this upcoming transition. According to Delate, “Ultimately, we want as many students as possible to have the great experience that living on campus can provide.”

get to the activity so they had more supplies and could do this activity twice this week. The students who did not get to build their own bear on Tuesday can go back and do it on Thursday, so hopefully everyone who wants to make one can do so.

When SLAM first started Winter Week, they hired a company to staff the bears for students. However, they let the students staff the animals themselves last year and that led to a larger turn out. According to Ashley Favato, a Family and Child Studies major, “Students like doing it themselves; it’s more hands on and they can decide how big or small they want their buddy to be. It’s a way to make it a more personalized activity and I think that’s why it’s been so successful. Last year, we had this event during Spring Week and since it was so popular, we thought it would be perfect for Winter Week.”

Along with Build-A-Buddy, students have the opportunity to make a customized license plate, Valentine’s Day cards, and more. Armando Rodrigues, a film major, made his own customized license plate on Monday and Build-A-Buddy on Tuesday.

“I think this was the first year they did the license plates and I thought it was really fun. It was a good idea and everyone had a great time making them,” said Rodrigues.

Valentine’s Day Outfits

Jessica Mahmoud
Staff Writer

Valentine’s Day is a holiday that is special for some; but for others, it is not celebrated and just taken as another day. Whether you’re planning a big date or just relaxing at home, here are some outfit ideas for this Saturday, Feb. 14. Take some inspiration from students on campus because any outfit can be made V-day appropriate. I hope this helps you out.

Valentine’s Day can be celebrated with a fancy dinner or just a typical night of Netflix and way too much popcorn. However you choose to spend it, remember it’s a holiday. Try and do something fun and spend a little more time on picking out your outfit. I hope this gave you some inspiration and ideas for your look this weekend. For more pictures like these, check out my blog on Instagram and Facebook @montclair_state_style!

Top, hat and necklace: Forever 21
Coat: thrifted
Boots: Steve Madden.

This weather is horrible, but we didn’t have off [Monday]. Did you have classes? “Oh no, thank goodness. I was like, ‘I can’t believe we have school.’”

This outfit is great if you’re going out for a more casual dinner or have opted for a more casual date like going to a movie or even a night in. The brim hat gives the casual jeans look a unique touch as does the long jacket. If a short-sleeve top isn’t enough, add a long-sleeve cardigan over it or go for a sweater instead.

Top and shoes: New Look
Jeans: ASOS
Jacket: Forever 21

Classes Monday? “Yes, an evening class; 8-10, Intro to Research. It was icy.”

Here’s another more casual look with a statement piece. A fur coat is a great piece to add to your wardrobe to keep you warm this winter. They look great over long-sleeve sweaters, like this turtleneck. Pairing it with jeans is fine because it keeps the focus on the coat without overpowering the look. However, if you’re going a fancy date or something, a simple black skirt would look great too.

White shirt: The Limited
Denim zip-up: Forever 21
Jacket and boots: Nordstrom
Pants: American Eagle

Are you an introvert or extrovert and why do you say that? “I’m in between. I have to warm up and get comfortable to be more excited around a person.”

This casual outfit can be altered slightly for a Valentine’s Day look. Simply swap the black pants for a skirt and tuck in the white top keep the outfit simple; then, layer over the jackets to keep warm. Add tights and then finish the look with knee-high boots like these. If you think denim is not appropriate for your plans, opt for another jacket such as a blazer. However, the olive jacket goes great with white and a thick one is perfect for this weather.

Sweater: Love and Liberty
Skirt: Zara
Shoes: don’t know

Do you use Yik Yak? “I’ve heard about it, but I’m not involved. I hear it’s disgusting.”

This is the perfect outfit for Valentine’s Day! The pink sweater goes with the theme of red and pink hearts and the skirt and heels are appropriate for a fancy dinner. Rather than going for an olive jacket, go for a warm wool coat or peacoat. Adding a large purse is perfect for a night out, especially for carrying chocolates and teddy bears.

Shirt: online
Cardigan: H&M
Jeans: Levi’s
Hat: S4 Army Navy
Shoes: Vans
Book: Politics and Science by Louis Althusser.

Although girls are probably a little more image-conscious on a date night, it’s still nice for guys to look together as well. This casual outfit best compares to the first outfit idea for girls. It’s great for a movie date or one to a more casual restaurant. A cardigan is better than a jean or leather jacket but not as formal as a blazer. A beanie and Vans are casual, but still suitable for a more low-key date.

Skirt, hat and scarf: Forever 21
Jeans: American Eagle
Coat: Old Navy
Boots: L.L. Bean
Bag: Urban Outfitters

We have over 100 organizations here at MSU. What’s your favorite and why? “I don’t have one; I’m not involved besides music. I’m forever stuck in the music building.”

This look is another casual one but can easily be made more formal. Swapping the black pants for a skirt and tuck in the white top keep the outfit simple; then, layer over the jackets to keep warm. Add tights and then finish the look with knee-high boots like these. If you think denim is not appropriate for your plans, opt for another jacket such as a blazer. We have been experiencing a ton of dreary winter weather lately, and it seems like all they are going to do is predict more. On snow days, when you are stuck inside all day with nothing to do, there is a lot of time to cook or bake. Because it is cold outside, we often enjoy our favorite, warm comfort foods. Things like macaroni and cheese, hot chocolate, or anything warm probably sound great on a day where you stay on the couch wrapped in blankets. However, these are usually not the healthiest options and what makes these days even worse (in terms of your health) is the gym is probably closed or at least really hard to get to. But there are ways to enjoy your snow day, make your favorite comfort foods and keep a strong, healthy heart. Here are some ways to lighten up on your favorite comfort foods while still enjoying the snowy weather.

A warm, steaming bowl of soup is a great dish to have on a cold day; however, most of the premade ones are full of sodium and preservatives and may not taste good. It is not hard to make your own soup, and even better for heart health is a base-topped soup. Make sure to find a low-sodium broth with only a few ingredients. It is a vegetable broth, try to find one where almost all of the ingredients come from actual vegetables, not added flavors to imitate the taste. If you want a cream soup, try using low-fat milk or almond milk instead of cream and only on your added vegetables and seasonings to give it flavor.

Macaroni and Cheese

For macaroni and cheese, Here is a winter staple and is one of our favorite childhood memories when we were in school. There are tons of varieties of the pre-made, powdered hot chocolate. If you are going to use one of these, try to watch the ingredients list. Although something may be low-sugar varieties, they may have added artificial sweeteners, which is up to you whether or not you are okay with consuming these. To stop worrying about long ingre- dients lists altogether, try making your own. Start with a low-fat or fat-free milk. Try subbing in almond milk if you want less calories or stick to skim milk if you ya want a more creamy taste. Use around tablespoon of unsweetened cocoa powder, depending on how sweet you want the taste and add cinnamon and a splash of vanilla extract for a yummy taste. To make it sweet, add a bit of honey or a small amount of sugar.

A Plan of Action to Take When Your Workout Plans Don’t Work Out

James Carpenter
Staff Writer

Did the groundhog predict six more weeks of winter? Whether or not he did, MSU athletes and non-athletes need not let wintry-related issues freeze their workout plans if the Recreation Center or Panzer Center weight room is closed. Here’s your “Plan B” strategy when getting to the gym is not an option:

Bring the gym workout to your dorm room, home or the outdoors. Keep moving throughout the day and minimize sitting – take an outdoor walk, or jog if the streets/sidewalks are cleared of snow and ice or do a convenient workout indoors.

Focus on upper and lower body weight-bearing movements with strengthening exercises you can do almost anywhere with minimal equipment. Stand-up squats and wall squats (back flat against a wall while in a Squat position for 30-60 seconds) ideally target leg and hip muscles. How about improving balance for sports or daily activities?

Do as many single-leg squats in 30 seconds with your target leg and hip muscles. Don’t forget to add a book or medicine ball exercise more challenging by doing the pull-up and targets core muscles.

Include these push-up variations for strengthening upper body muscles: modified kneeling or standing push-ups against a wall, regular push-ups on a flat surface and/or advanced push-ups with feet elevated atop a bed or chair. Besides pushing movements, don’t forget to add pulling exercises and core-strengthening movements for a full-body workout. Try this all-in-one back/bicep/abdominal-building pull-up exercise: straddle an open door while holding on tightly to the doorknobs. Get close to the door frame with legs on either side of the door frame with an underhand or overhand grip on the doorknobs and your back almost in a horizontal position so you’re looking up at the ceiling.

With heels firmly planted on the floor and legs and back straight, tighten abdominal muscles and slowly pull your upper body upward towards the doorknobs and hold the position for at least 30 seconds or longer. Make the exercise more challenging by keeping one foot off the floor while doing the pull-up and also to work those core stabilizing muscles in your lower and middle back and abdomens.

Do prone and side planks (holding the position for at least 30 seconds) or elevated planks atop a bed or chair for added intensity to continue strengthening core muscles.

Here’s another balance exercise: straddle an open door while holding on tightly to the doorknobs, get close to the door frame with legs on either side of the door frame with an underhand or overhand grip on the doorknobs and your back almost in a horizontal position so you’re looking up at the ceiling.

With heels firmly planted on the floor and legs and back straight, tighten abdominal muscles and slowly pull your upper body upward towards the doorknobs and hold the position for at least 30 seconds or longer. Make the exercise more challenging by keeping one foot off the floor while doing the pull-up and targets core muscles.

Get a complete total body workout by helping a neighbor shovel snow! Shoveling snow uses upper, lower body and core muscles and builds endurance, too! Just be sure to use good technique when shoveling, as shoveling becomes a strengthening core muscles. Perhaps the most advanced plank technique is performing a prone or side plank with feet atop a basketball or soccer ball or medicine ball, for example. Standing or seated twists using a book or medicine ball for resistance also effectively targets core muscles.

Endurance movements:

• Mountain Climbers (as a full-body exercise: straddle an open door while holding on tightly to the doorknobs, get close to the door frame with legs on either side of the door frame with an underhand or overhand grip on the doorknobs and your back almost in a horizontal position so you’re looking up at the ceiling.

With heels firmly planted on the floor and legs and back straight, tighten abdominal muscles and slowly pull your upper body upward towards the doorknobs and hold the position for at least 30 seconds or longer. Make the exercise more challenging by keeping one foot off the floor while doing the pull-up and targets core muscles.

Brian Williams’ Not-So Honest Mistake

reaking news! NBC has suspended its Nightly News anchor, Brian Williams, for six months after the recent scandal concerning the authenticity of some of his past reports. Last week, Stars and Stripes revealed Brian’s claim that he was on a helicopter that was hit by “two rockets and small arms fire” while he was covering the war in Iraq. Now, crew members of the 159th Aviation Regiment are saying that Brian was never on the aircraft and furthermore, his helicopter was not even close to the one which was shot down. Williams’ past stories, including his coverage of Hurricane Katrina, many suspect that Williams’ embellishment of the truth was not an isolated incident, but as a journalist, even one stretch of the truth is a serious violation.

We trust reporters to be honest and unbiased in delivering the news to us. We may enjoy watching stations with a specific political slant, but we want to be able to trust that the people on whom we rely to know the truth.

To many devoted viewers of NBC, Williams’ embellishments are shocking and completely unacceptable. Others think that it is wrong, but there was little harm actually done. Several believe that Williams, an incredibly popular and prominent journalist, should be given a second chance. Though we understand that mistakes do happen, as a news source, we recognize the essentiality of honesty in journalism. It’s decent of Williams to own up to his mistakes, but we wish that he had never made them in the first place.

Clearly, a person doesn’t accidentally mix up being on a helicopter that fell out of the sky with being relatively safe and comfortable on a fully-functional helicopter. Williams was likely trying to make himself look more heroic by saying he had literally put himself in the line of fire in order to report on the war in Iraq. This mix-up was not an honest mistake, but an attempt by Williams to bolster his reputation as a dedicated journalist.

It can be easy to exaggerate an event or circumstance in journalism to create a more exciting headline, especially when sometimes a journalist may be one of the only people in a danger zone, making the American public oblivious to the truth. Yet, when it is a story of a journalistic dishonesty surfaces, it always rattles not just the world of journalism, but the faith of the American public in their news sources, damage that is not often easily regained.

While it may seem that Williams’ suspension is an overreaction on the part of NBC, we think that his hurting from Nightly News and subsequently his salary in a justified measure for such an offense.

Maybe Williams will learn his lesson from this suspension. Maybe he should be reinstated as the head anchor of Nightly News. Those assessments are at the discretion of NBC. But, to punish someone for honesty lying in a report in order to make himself look better, we support NBC and their sanctions against Williams.

Question of the Week:

Is it better to be single or in a relationship on Valentine's Day and why?

“I would say it is better to be in a relationship because you get gifts and especially when you see couples together getting gifts, you feel jealous and depressed. So no, that day is supposed to be for couples and getting gifts.”

- Lesley Collins, International Business, Senior

“I would say it depends on personal preference and what makes you happy.”

- Anthony, Marketing, Junior

“People tend to want to be in a relationship around the time of Valentine’s Day for the goodies, but I don’t care for the goodies.”

- Marlene Czagustas, Psychology, Freshman

“For me, personally, right now, I am happy that I have someone for Valentine’s Day.”

The Impact of African American Self-perception a result of slavery and post-slavery culture

I recently started reading a book called Traumatic Stress: Servitude and Slavery, the Legacy of History by M. Strothers. The book begins with the journey that this book is going to take me on.

The book begins with the description of internalized racism and its influence on the African American psyche. Racism is a filter that determines how people see their own identity and how they are perceived by others. The book focuses on chattel slavery, which is the idea that you and your possessions are just like your property.

The book is sequel to the previous book, “The Transformation of African Americans: The Legacy of History,” by M. Strothers. The book examines how the history of slavery has shaped the African American psyche and how it continues to influence the way people think about themselves and others.

The book is divided into three parts: Part I discusses the history of slavery and its impact on African Americans, Part II explores the psychological effects of slavery, and Part III examines the contemporary effects of slavery on African Americans.

The book is written in a clear and concise manner, making it accessible to a wide audience. It is an excellent resource for anyone interested in understanding the impact of slavery on African Americans.

The book is available in both print and digital formats. It is recommended for anyone interested in American history, psychology, or African American studies.
Oh Snow They Didn’t!

Campus does not consider commuter students during inclement weather

In the middle of snow storms, many students suffer as the administration considers only those who live on campus.

> MONIKA BUJAS
> MANAGING EDITOR

Why should we have to suffer through winter storms like these, while the administration only considers those who live on campus?

Meadows, mumps and rubella are known as some of the most deadly and dangerous contagious diseases. Typically, parents are urged to get their children vaccinated to prevent the spread of these illnesses. However, is the university really doing its part for the health of its students?

Several students on campus are affected by the severe weather conditions. Many commuters reside in towns that are over an hour away from Montclair State. With attendance down, some professors require attendance or two absences, students need to take a closer look at their decision to close the campus.

Irresponsible parents place their children in danger by exposing them to viruses

> EMILY ROUEN
> ASST. OPINION EDITOR

What most people don’t know is that the measles is actually a respiratory disease which will infect the lungs and cause issues such as pneumonia, brain damage and possible death.

Recently, the state of California has been suffering from an outbreak of measles. The outbreak is believed to stem from a person who traveled from an infected country or received a vaccination from an infected person.

The Los Angeles Times stated, "California’s Public Health reported Monday that there are now 176 confirmed cases of the state, with one case now confirmed in Solano County."

The measles has spread to other countries and a few cases have been confirmed in the United States. Now knowing that the virus is in many places and highly contagious, what are parents thinking by having measles parties? It has become a popular trend for parents to host parties with their children on campus, basically hoping it would work in the same way a chickenpox party would work.

Parents willingly put their non-infected children in a room full of children who are infected and hope that their child gains immunity to the virus and will eventually build an immunity to it. Even my father and his old school mentality and strong belief in innate immunity, believes he was born with natural resistance to infection and "what doesn’t kill you makes you stronger."

Suggesting that your child go to or host a measles party is the ultimate form of provable parental neglect.

Let’s distinguish the difference between the two. Chickenpox isn’t nearly as lethal as the measles and exposing your children has the potential to help them build an immunity against it. Measles, however, is much more deadly with the leading cause of death among young children being lack of immunization. It is therefore wise to avoid any party involving the measles.

According to the World Health Organization, "The disease results from one of the leading causes of death among young children globally, despite the availability of a safe and effective vaccine. Approximately 145,700 people died from measles in 2013—mostly children under the age of five.

It is proven that the vaccine is effective, safe and has reduced the death count due to measles for over the decades.

What parents are doing is risking harm to their children. This method of immunization should be considered negligent.

I am no medical expert, but my advice would be to stay far away from the infected, not invite them over for pizza and a round of Mario Kart on your N64. My Nintendo reference is a bit archaic, but I thought it was suitable for these parents’ ways of thinking.

It is no secret that Broadway is a tough business. Millions of dollars are put into different productions every season with an uncertain lion’s share one way or the other. It’s often said that the show will run. On many occasions, producers consider whether big-name celebrities to attract theatergoers or to even save a show that has already failed to sell seats. The question that arises is whether these celebrities have the qualifications and talent to go through the rigorous training that accommodates performing eight shows a week. The majority of the time, these stars can never compare to the Broadway veterans. Every show comes to the point when an actor’s contract is about to expire and they decide to leave the show to pursue other opportunities. So who will the show’s director find to take their place? In the case of Rodgers and Hammerstein’s Cinderella, which closed recently on Jan. 3, they went to Carly Rae Jepsen first before moving on to several other celebrities to end its near two-year run. The show’s original Broadway cast included Broadway sweetheart Laura Osnes, who garnered a Tony nomination for her work in the show. Osnes can only be described as perfect when playing this role and her kind, charismatic demeanor likens her to a real-life Disney princess. With this being said, anyone coming into the role after Osnes should have expected that they would have some huge glass slippers to fill. Even though Jepsen had musical theatre experience, the demands of a Broadway musical are something that no one can anticipate. One glaring negative to having this Canadian pop star appear in this show, aside from being compared to Osnes, was the fact that each song’s key was lowered to suit her voice better, as she doesn’t have the soprano voice that the role requires. Because of this, many of the songs seemed to be missing a strong soprano part, which would give them a more whimsical, magical feeling. Not only that, but having actors sing different voice parts adds layers to a song that would otherwise be one-dimensional and unflattering. Her vocal range just didn’t fit the role of this show. The same thing goes for Keke Palmer, who succeeded Jepsen. Palmer too has an alto voice that doesn’t suit the role of Cinderella. The show knew it would inevitably close, so they jam-packed known celebrities into the show for its final time to sell more tickets. It just wasn’t these two; they also invited Sherri Shepherd and Nene Leakes to join the cast as the Evil Step-sister. Their voices were just not suitable for the parts, so although their star power might have brought in more people, these audience members are more likely to leave disappointment-ed without purchasing the album or other merchandise. An overlooked aspect of having celebrities star on Broadway is the fact that the show is an entirely new domain. Until now, a celebrity has been part of other projects, but Broadway is an entirely new domain. Unfortunately, this is the reason that is standing up to the challenge. Tony Danza, known for his work in television, theater throughout their careers, has already heightened before the show, but after their performance, they are also distracting to the other audience members who know what they mean to exhibit proper theatre etiquette. Instances like these have affected other celebrities, to name a few: Rupert Grint, who starred in It’s Only a Play, Of Mice and Men’s James Franco and many others. When celebrities do more harm than good, they are just bringing down the reputation of the show. Without the talent to compete against Broadway veterans, people could have laughed at the theater underestimated by a celebrity’s performance but instead, they have already heightened before they arrived. There is, however, one celebrity on Broadway that is standing up to the challenge. Tony Danza, known for his work in television, the writers of the show aren’t comfortable talking about being in the same room with a celebrity’s performance that theatergoers or to even save a show. The impact of the situation hit viewers when Bay went to her mother, Regina, for advice, explaining her situation but claiming that it happened to a friend. Regina brought up something that Bay hadn’t even considered, stating that: “If she said yes, but she said it when she was that was right, the guy shouldn’t have had sex with her.” Bay soon realized that she might have, in fact, been raped. This episode sparked extreme debate, with viewers split right down the middle: some feel that Bay inverted the rape scenario because she wouldn’t feel guilty about cheating on her boyfriend; others are extremely angry at Tank, stating that a woman who is too drunk to remember having sex could never have consented. The writer of the show isn’t going to come right out and say “Yes, this is what happened and this is what the consequence should be.” This episode opened eyes to an extremely important issue: to my opinion, this is a project he was very passionate about and he has been behind it for years. This is different from celebrities who just jump into an existing production. Furthermore, Danza has experience in Broadway productions which include the play The Iceman Cometh as well as the musical The Producers. Celebrities, in my opinion, cause more problems than it solves from the perspective of an avid theatre-goer. Stars may create high expectations because of their fame and talent in other projects, but Broadway is an entirely new domain. Unfortunately, a celebrity has been part of a show for an extended period of time, he or she will be unable to compete with those who have been working in musical theater throughout their careers. Being a celebrity does not mean that you have talent in any medium that requires acting; it only means that people will be looking to you to be everything that they expect and more, and for those that jump into these shows blind with no experience, they will be unable to make the cut.
The Imitation Game

An ordinary film about an extraordinary man

Nicholas Da Silva
Staff Writer

Every year around Oscar season, it feels like there are one or two big award contenders that seem as if they were groomed specifically as award bait. Now, this isn’t always a bad thing: in fact, it could be very good because it means movie studies are trying to make a good movie instead of a cynical cash grab. Many of these “award bait” movies usually follow a checklist that is designated to appeal to what Oscar voters like: Feel good story; check; large ensemble cast; check; period piece; check; contains socially relevant themes; check.

Not all “award bait” movies have all four of these things in them, but you get the idea. Some “award bait” movies over the last few years have been great (The Artist, Silver Linings Playbook, Dallas Buyers Club), some not so great (The Help, The Blind Side) and some that are merely good and nothing more (War Horse, The Fighter). In terms of the “award bait” spectrum, The Imitation Game lands right in the middle as a well-made, well-acted but unspectacular look into the life of Alan Turing.

The movie takes place during those different periods of Turing’s life: the first period being his childhood as a schoolboy in a prep school, the second period being his time working with a cryptography team in the 1940s trying to crack the INFRADESCRIPTurally imitating a great one.

The real Alan Turing. Benedict Cumberbatch as cryptanalyst, Alan Turing.

Since the film is trying so hard to be an award darling, it goes out of its way to gloss over some of the darker aspects of Alan Turing’s story. This, in turn, leads to some of the more emotional beats the movie tries to hit at the end not having any real weight or impact. I can’t believe this got a Best Adapted Screenplay nomination over Gone Girl!

I still enjoyed this movie and do have plenty of good things to say about it. The movie is elevated significantly, in my mind, because of the completely fantastic work from Benedict Cumberbatch. He’s up for anything the movie requires him to do and Cumberbatch finds the humanity in Turing and brings it to the screen. I honestly don’t know if the movie would work without his performance.

The rest of the cast is good, with Knightley being the standout amongst the ensemble that doesn’t include Cumberbatch. Morten Tyldum does some efficient and capable direction, keeping things moving at a nice pace. Alexandre Desplat capped off his red hot last year of 2014 film score compositions, first with his great work on Godzilla and then his brilliant work on The Grand Budapest Hotel, with another fantastic score here. Finally, the production value is pretty good, albeit some really cheesy computer generated sequences of navy and aerial combat. This is a well-made movie, that’s for sure.

However, I can’t help but feel like there’s a lost opportunity with this film here. Alan Turing was the man whose work led to the creation of the modern computer. He helped break the code that allowed the Allies to win the war. He’s simply an extraordinary man and the script constantly tries to teach the audience about how it’s those who stand out from all the rest that make the real changes in this world. But why did the movie not practice what it preaches to the audience about how it’s those who stand out from all the rest that make the real changes in this world? Why? Because it’s all about having a lead actor who can pull off the role of a lifetime and Benedict Cumberbatch is just the man for the job.

The only moments in this segment of the movie where the script attempts to give some characterization come from the dynamic between Turing and Joan Clarke (Keira Knightley), a Cambridge student who joined Turing’s team after passing her “impossible to pass” test. The dialogue between these two does have a nice balance of witty moments and genuine moments, but Joan herself has little to no purpose in the film other than to be Turing’s “Jimmy Cricket,” the character that always guides our protagonist in the right direction even when things are at their darkest. Every other character in this movie gets one specific character trait and that’s about it. I’d be shocked if you could tell me more than one character trait about anyone in this film other than Turing. This all would be fine if the movie was primarily a “spy thriller” that was solely focused on the mission of cracking the Enigma, but it’s not and that’s where the big problem lies.

The movie focuses on three parts of Turing’s life, but it does so in a manner that feels very disjointed rather than organic or clever. A massive portion of the 1950s section of the movie focuses on a detective trying to figure out Turing’s mysterious past, yet, what he’s doing at the moment doesn’t really connect to the main storyline going on in the 1940s section of the film.

Non-linear narratives are fine and can be very refreshing when handled with adroitness, but all the narrative chunks must directly connect to each other immediately otherwise it ends up feeling like we’re just watching several different movies instead of one cohesive story. The story lines do eventually connect, but it takes the script a very long time to connect them when some rewrites could’ve solved this problem right from the start. The section of the film that focuses on his time in school and his relationship with Christopher feels shockingly glossed over, with maybe five minutes of screen time devoted to the barely developed relationship between these two characters.

Since the film is trying so hard to be an award darling, it goes out of its way to gloss over some of the darker aspects of Alan Turing’s story. This, in turn, leads to some of the more emotional beats the movie tries to hit at the end not having any real weight or impact. I can’t believe this got a Best Adapted Screenplay nomination over Gone Girl!

Red Hawk Round Up

Indoor Track and Field
The men and women came away with solid performances at the CTC Indoor Championships at Wesleyan University. The women finished in third while the men finished in first.
The men dominated during the competition with four first place finishes. The four wins came in the 4x400 and 4x800 relays, the shot put and the triple jump.
Morgan Byrne came away with a victory in the 410-meter hurdles. The women’s team also placed second in the 500-meter race as well as placing fourth in the 800-meter race.

Softball
The Montclair State softball team landed in the 11th spot of the National Fastpitch Coaches Association preseason poll. The Red Hawks will start their season on March 7 with a doubleheader.

Men’s Lacrosse
The Red Hawks landed 16th in the United States Intercollegiate Lacrosse Association and also 18th by Lacrosse Magazine in their first polls of the season. Montclair State will open the 2015 season in Pennsylvania on Feb. 18 at Muhlenberg College.

Redskins: To change or not to change?

name. He pointed out that other teams also represent groups of people such as the New York Yankees and the Notre Dame Fighting Irish.

“Team names such as the Pirates in Pittsburgh and the Vikings in Minnesota are way more offensive. These teams are named after groups of people that were robbers, rapists and murderers. Until this issue is resolved, there should be no problem with the name of the Washington Redskins,” Wallace said.

Some, including a former NFL player, said he isn’t bothered by nicknames that may be offensive to some. Robert Sroka, a former college and NFL player, whose cousin currently attends Montclair State, said, “The Redskins are being recognized as a respectful and powerful tribe. What, are Giant people going to be offended know that the New York Giants use that name? Will animal activist complain that there are teams named after Falcons, Seahawks, Lions or Bengals?”

David Kaplan, an adjunct professor and director of the Yogi Berra Museum, said, “It’s forced people to re-examine other offensive team nicknames, such as the Cleveland Indians (and their cartoonish logo Chief Wahoo) and realizing they, too, are an affront to an entire race of people. They simply perpetuate unfortunate stereotypes. I would hope that people will also look at the Tomahawk Chop, a tradition at Atlanta Braves and Florida State games and realize those gestures also dishonor Native Americans.”

Professor and sports psychologist Robert Gilbert was teaching here when the nickname was changed. According to Gilbert, the awareness over the issue has greatly increased since then. Why the reluctance to change? “People are entrenched in their way of seeing things and doing things,” Gilbert said. “Just because it’s always been the Redskins doesn’t mean it always has to be the Redskins. When I was in school, I would be punished by being hit with a bamboo rod; nowadays you’d probably be sued if you tried doing that to a kid.”

Some broadcasters and reporters have pledged not to use Washington’s nickname when calling games or when writing stories. Adjunct professor Sitesh Shah, who is the play-by-play announcer for Montclair State football and basketball, said if people are offended by the name, it should be changed. Even so, if he was broadcasting a Washington game, he would use their nickname “unless I was directly told by superiors that it was no longer to be used or the FCC declared it a forbidden word/term.”

Twenty-five years from now, will Washington’s football team be still known as the Redskins? Mark Rosenweig, an associate professor of Television and Digital Media who has worked in sports journalism, said it depends on who’s the owner.

“If there is a new owner in 25 years, there will be a new nickname. The NFL might require it if someone buys the team. But the current owner, Dan Snyder, is unlikely to sell the team in the near future. And he is strongly against changing the nickname,” Rosenweig said.

Silva Busted For Steroids

Thomas Formoso
Sports Editor

On Feb. 3, waves were sent across the mixed martial arts world when it was revealed that future UFC Hall of Famer Middleweight Anderson Silva tested positive for two anabolic steroids following his win over Nick Diaz at UFC 183.

As expected, Silva has denied his use of steroids and a follow-up sample of his urine was taken a couple weeks after the positive test. The follow-up test means little in terms of an overall ruling regarding Silva considering the steroid could have cycled out of his system by the time the second test was taken.

Silva’s win has already turned over to a No Contest after Nick Diaz also tested positive for marijuana in his system. Diaz is an outspoken offender of this drug and it came as no surprise that he was busted as well.

To make matters worse, Welterweight Hector Lombard was also busted for steroids in a test taken around the time of his fight at UFC 182. Lombard was lined up to fight Welterweight contender Rory MacDonald in a fantastic matchup, but that fight has now been replaced with a Lightweight title fight between Demetrious Johnson and Kojiyo Horiguchi in April.

The news of Silva’s test will soon continue to unravel at the Nevada State Athletic Commission’s next meeting where Silva and Diaz will try to make a case for their results. Silva will likely prove that his sample was tampered with. The Montclarion will have more on this story as it continues to develop.

UFC Fight Night 60
Preview

Thomas Formoso
Sports Editor

The UFC will hold their first “Fight Night” event as they visit the Ibirapuera Center for the third time in Broomfield, Colo.

The main event saw plenty of changes, as the original fight to take place was between Tamir Suleimana and Matt Brown in a high-profile fight. On New Year’s Day, Suleimana had to pull out of the fight due to an injury. Less than two weeks later, Brown was pulled from the fight to take on former Welterweight champion Johny Hendricks.

Next, the UFC decided to pit Stephen Thompson and Brandon Thatch in a not-so-enticing fight. On Jan. 30, Thompson suffered a torn retina and the main event was once again put into jeopardy. Luckily, Lightweight Benson Henderson agreed to move up a weight class to keep the fight alive.

Henderson, the fifth-ranked lightweight in the UFC, is currently on a two-fight losing streak and is going to have a hard time climbing back up the stacked Lightweight division.

Thatch, who is currently unranked in the Welterweight division, could come away with a career-changing win if he were to come away victorious over Henderson. Even though Benson has implied that the move to Welterweight would be only temporary, a win for Thatch would be a huge upset and likely propel him into the rankings. Thatch is currently on a 10-fight winning streak and has started his UFC career at 2-0.

Thatch has had a fair amount of submission and knockout victories in his career, with his most recent victory coming from a submission over Paolo Thiago in November of 2013.

The Co-Main Event of the evening will be a featherweight contest between Max Holloway and unranked Cole Miller.

After suffering from seven consecutive losses, the men’s basketball team captured two wins this week against Seton Hall and Iona. Both games ended in close scores, but the Red Hawks bounced back from their recent losses.

On Feb. 7, the Red Hawks went head-to-head with the Seton Hall Pirates. The game ended in a close 71-69 victory for Montclair State. The Pirates were led by提交者的话语。
