In a recent press release, President Cole announced Montclair State's decision to remain open until weather warms up.

Through the clock’s hands have jumped ahead, the calendars have been marked, the question still is as to whether or not there will truly be a spring this year. The following is an April Fool’s Day edition of The Montclarion.

The Montclair State University community is facing some uncertain weather patterns. Montclair State has shown a lot of school spirit in the past year—maybe too much. This item has been extremely essential for students but not in its student body; it is in the wildlife, and it remains to be seen if the ‘Spring’ semester will ever come to an end.

In recent press releases, President Cole announced Montclair State’s plan to remain open until warm sunlight can finally brighten the campus.

The last remaining stapler on campus has mysteriously gone missing. Campus-wide stapler shortage has been solved.

The Amazing Inch Worm Is Catching On

You could spend all of your Red Hawk Dollars. The university community certainly has a mystery on its hands.

The information desk in the student center used to be the prime location on campus for stapling freshly printed essays, notes and homework of every kind, until disaster struck yet again. In a tragic turn of events, a sign in the Student Center basement printing lab has been put in place to inform students that the university will no longer be providing a stapler at the information desk; instead, paper clips will be provided upon request.

"I never knew that such a thing could cause me such emotional distress. I need this stapler now more than ever to rejoin the torn fragments of my heart back together," student Taylor Stanfill, a junior Musical Theater major said. "It’s the last staple of my heart back together."

Apples and Oranges

People use the term “like comparing apples to oranges” to refer to the comparison of two objects that seemingly have nothing in common. Are apples and oranges really so different, then? Let’s take a closer look at these familiar fruits to decide if this old cliche has any merit.

Size: Apples and oranges tend not to have a huge difference in size between them. Oranges do tend to be a little larger, but the difference is only relevant if you are carrying a large quantity of them.

Smell: Oranges tend to be fairly fragrant, even more so when peeled. Apples don’t particularly have much of a smell, though.

Taste: Apples come in the red, green and what is known as the “Golden Delicious” variety (a sort of yellowish-green.) Oranges are only orange, although blood oranges have an orange exterior while having blood-red flesh.

Nutritional content: Oranges are generally higher in essential vitamins while being lower in calories than apples. A single orange contains 85 percent of your daily vitamin C, while an apple only has 15 percent of your DV of said vitamin. Oranges also edge out apples in vitamin A and calcium, while apples have the advantage when it comes to potassium.

Cooking: Apples can be made into pies while “orange pie” is relatively unheard of and honestly sounds a little frightening. Sauce made from apples is quite good, whether it is eaten over oatmeal or on pork chops, while oranges can be a key ingredient in sauce made for glazing onto fish. Both apples and oranges can be made into juices and smoothies, but oranges can’t be made into cider. Both honestly aren’t that great of choices for a fruit salad.

Application outside of cooking: Oranges, as a result of being highly acidic, can be made into an effective chemical-free cleaner. Apple seeds contain cyanide, which can come in handy if you are taken hostage by terrorists and they are trying to torture the fabled recipe of eleven herbs and spices out of you. Apples are also more appropriate in the heirlooms of teachers than oranges.

Ease of consumption: Oranges need to be peeled and have seeds throughout them; the peeling of them isn’t particularly easy either, especially when compared to the ambrosia that is the clementine. Apples have their seeds in one spot, so you easily know which part of the apple is safe for consumption.

Ease of crushing in the palm of your hand: Roughly about the same; apples have a smaller mass, but oranges are much squishier.

Ridiculous relevance: Apples are considered often to be the fruit of the Tree of Knowledge that led to Eve performing the original sin in her consumption of them. However, the actual identity of said fruit is never given, as the fruit is simply referred to as the “fruit of the tree” in most versions of the Old Testament. It’s highly unlikely the fruit was either an apple or an orange; if anything, the fruit was most likely a pomegranate due to Eden being placed by scholars in the Middle East.

Shininess: Apples win, hands down.

“It seems in the end that there is some merit to “like comparing apples to oranges” being used the way it is, but there also seems to be enough similarity between the two fruits to dub them as completely different. While differences are more subtle than they are profound. We must come up with a new phrase to refer to comparing two things that don’t have much in common, such as “like comparing horses to envelopes.”

How to Get Healthy in 10 Steps

Kimberly Asman

You probably think you know something about being healthy, whether you read an article or two online, or maybe you study the subject more thoroughly. No matter your credentials, it’s time to forget everything you know. It may seem daunting and involved, but getting healthy through food and exercise is actually really simple. The following are ten steps to getting in your absolute best shape in as little as a week. Just remember the most important part of this process: If you feel like you are putting in effort, you are trying way too hard.

1. Stop watching portion sizes. Sure, a bag of chips may tell you there are ten servings in a bag, but what do they know? Don’t let food labels tell you how to live your life. If you feel like you deserve that gallon of ice cream every day, you are probably right. Remember, any pizza can be a personal pizza if you just believe in yourself.

2. Lay down as much as you can. Exercise supposedly is a personal process: If you feel like you are보다다음, it’s time to forget everything you know.    3. Binge-watch shows on Netflix. All the time. If you don’t have an account on Netflix, stop reading this article and get one right now. In a best case scenario, just try to get your roommate’s password. This tip goes along with step two of the process. Binge-watching shows (watching entire seasons of shows at a time) is a perfect way to stay as inactive as possible. Plus, you may learn something valuable, like how to cook crystal meth on Breaking Bad or how much breakfast food you should really be eating on Parks and Recreation. Do not take the crystal meth part seriously. We highly recommend that you do not cook crystal meth. Other recommendations include some of the classics: Gilmore Girls, Gossip Girl or Breaking Bad. Just remember to lay in bed while watching, preferably with some snacks.

   4. Eat a lot of candy. You may have heard some bad things about candy: things like how much fat, sugar and processed ingredients they contain. Ignors all of this. These are just accusations from the agricultural industry lobbying to make more money. Go for that king-sized bar next time and make sure to eat it all in one sitting.

   5. Stop worrying about the future. A lot of the advice on healthy eating is to protect you from various diseases such as cardiovascular disease, high blood pressure and diabetes in the future. These just add time-consuming worrying to your already packed schedule and who has time for that? You’re fit, healthy and pretty now; I am sure you will stay that way forever no matter what you do.

   6. Be a follower. Did you hear that your friend is gluten-free because they have the very serious condition of Celiac disease? Are you questioning whether you should now be following a gluten-free diet? The answer is always you. Just ignore the fact that you probably do not have the condition and avoiding gluten will just make things hard for you and lead to you missing out on foods with valuable nutrients. Commit to this new trend. If you have questions about what gluten is, look up Jimmy Kimmel Live on YouTube and search “Yeast Question: What is Gluten?” It will teach you everything you need to know.

   7. Have soda with every meal, snack and activity. Tying back in with step two of the process, drink as much soda as you possibly can. Ignore the serving sizes completely. The articles telling you to limit your consumption of this sugary-processed beverage are again from those jumpy fruit and vegetable people just trying to make more money. Drink soda all the time. Fry everything. Have you heard of fried fraction? Challenge you to be creative! Frying, after all, has tons of oil and fat. If you think these things can be bad for you and should be consumed in moderation, you are wrong. Think outside the box. Has anyone ever tried pizza? That sounds like it has a lot of potential.

If you think these things can be bad for you and should be consumed in moderation, you are wrong. Think outside the box. Has anyone ever tried pizza? That sounds like it has a lot of potential.

   9. Get rid of all of the negativity in your life. Do you have those friends, the ones who are too busy to make plans with you because they have to go to their favorite class at the gym? The ones who will not get fast food with you because they can not stand the thought of what goes into that “food”? Just get rid of them. You really do not need that kind of negativity in your life and it will only bring you down in this brilliant process of getting healthy.

   10. Cut back on the fruits and vegetables. Remember that saying you heard as a child, if you swallowed a watermelon seed, a watermelon would grow in your stomach? This is 100 percent true. Fruits and vegetables just plant themselves in your stomach and grow, causing you to physically enlarge as they do. We want to be fit here, not huge, so just avoid all fruits and vegetables to be safe. But what if something doesn’t grow seeds?

   Just avoid it anyway. Sometimes pesticides are used on the outside of fruits, which are much worse than processed ingredients in junk food. You might want to eat junk food and should be kept completely out of your life.

   Follow these steps and you are guaranteed a healthier, happier life. Good luck on your journey!

Montclair State University has shown a lot of school spirit in the past year—maybe too much. Taking the time to support your school and its sports teams is a great way to bolster the camaraderie in the campus community and make connections that can last a lifetime, but students have recently been taking their Red Hawk pride too far.

Take, for example, the overwhelming support for the women’s basketball team during their journey to the NCAA Division III Final Four. We understand that this was a record-breaking accomplishment for the team, which has just been breaking a window in the building, leaving glass all over the floor. Students have not stopped with these rallies, either. Tager for a space big enough to accommodate the big love that students have for their student athletes, some have taken to changing org, petitioning the administration to construct a new stadium that can fit all students, staff and individuals outside of the university who want to see sports games.

Ideally, this facility would have a turf field that is able to be played in and to feel comfortable sports teams to have a place to play in and to feel comfortable. Therefore, it’s better for us to tone down the enthusiasm just a smidge in order to make it clear that we are concerned for the personal safety of spectators and fans.

We all know that our school spirit can barely be contained and that sports games are by far the most well-attended and attended events on campus. But we want to make Montclair State safe for everyone and not literally rock the house with our pride.

We know that our level of spirit will never change, but we want people to exhibit a little self-control and consideration about our pride priorities before our enthusiasm puts our fellow Red Hawks at risk.

Montclair State University

Students have become belligerent when turned away. With only a limited amount of money to spend on creating outward displays of school spirit, it is important to remember that Montclair State must choose its battles when it comes to showing off its red and white.

Right now, university officials are busy working on the highly anticipated Red Hawk statue, which we all cannot wait to see completed. At this point in time, we should focus our attention and positive energy on making sure this statue is the symbol of Red Hawk pride that we all have dreamed about since our first day at the university.

After this project is completed (less than 200 days away, if all goes according to plan), then we will have time to bring these plans to the Board of Trustees and administration and make it clear that we need a facility at our school to accommodate our outbursts of pride.

Another way to keep our pride more appropriate is to correct our etiquette at sports events. Rather than storming the field or court after a game and overwhelming the coaches and players, who have complained of minor injuries and lost articles of clothing from being bombarded after games, we should respect our players more and give them the personal space they need.

Additionally, cheering so loudly that we are affecting the architecture of the building by shattering windows and shaking the foundation by jumping up and down puts our current venue for sporting events, however incompetent they are, in jeopardy. We all want our sports teams to have a place to play in and to feel comfortable while they are playing so that they can succeed in their games and excel as players. Therefore, it’s better for us to tone down the enthusiasm just a smidge in order to make it clear that we are concerned for the personal safety of spectators and fans.

We all know that our school spirit can barely be contained and that sports games are by far the most well-attended and attended events on campus. But we want to make Montclair State safe for everyone and not literally rock the house with our pride.

Will Ted Cruz Make Presidential News?

Cruz's reveals love for Dr. Suess and ambition for presidential power

Cruz's obsession with Green Eggs and Ham is quite ironic. Cruz's presidential stance is a lesson that one might actually learn from a Dr. Suess book. We can imagine if Ted Cruz genuinely tried the Affordable Care Act, perhaps education would have been free. Reports have suggested that he is working on a health care plan, he'll probably use it as an opportunity to criticize it even more. Cruz will not get the Republican nomination for presi- dent. However, he'll be a candidate that at the end and take a couple of other candidates with him. He defi- nitely has the charisma needed for a president. He's a New Yorker, his family lack polish and are unapologetic outside of his base supporters. Will Republicans really be confident in a candidate that so adamantly adores Dr. Seu- us? After all, Dr. Seuss was a liberal that supported Franklin D. Roosevelt and even thought Americans' fear of communism was overblown. In addition, of some of his stories strongly subliminally showed a deep sense of racial inequality. How could a Republi- can candidate be confident in someone like this?

With all the unusual charac- teristics featured in Dr. Seuss's works, one can only imagine if Ted Cruz genuinely tried the Affordable Care Act, perhaps education would have been free. Reports have suggested that he is working on a health care plan, he'll probably use it as an opportunity to criticize it even more. Cruz will not get the Republican nomination for president. However, he'll be a candidate that, at the end and take a couple of other candidates with him. He definitely has the charisma needed for a president. He's a New Yorker, his family lack polish and are unapologetic outside of his base supporters. Will Republicans really be confident in a candidate that so adamantly adores Dr. Seu- us? After all, Dr. Seuss was a liberal that supported Franklin D. Roosevelt and even thought Americans' fear of communism was overblown. In addition, of some of his stories strongly subliminally showed a deep sense of racial inequality. How could a Republi- can candidate be confident in someone like this?

ly met with a nationwide trend of public discussion, with many people taking to social media to express their views and to urge others to respond. This bill will have a significant effect on the future of Indiana and on the state to turn away LGBT people, an unpleasant act that has more idiots than insurgents. Some are upset and have taken to Instagram to state their delight with this wonderful new law. But beyond people’s reactions to the passing of the Religious Freedom Act, there are many businesses in Indiana that are upset by the law “You’re an ae over the law,” said one person.

Babies Blue Ivy and North West have officially announced the release date of their first collaborative mixtape, Deities in Diapers Vol.1. On July 4, no one will remember when Kim Kardashian broke the internet. The project is especially impressive considering the mixtape is due to be released only months after the artists’ actual birth dates. According to producer Timbaland, three-year-old Blue Ivy could be considered the commander of the project while twenty-one-month-old North West could be considered the “creative visionary.” Babies at home are sure to be listening because this is exactly what the future sounds like.

The mixtape features several hot dates. North slipped to her LA Jam Teething is a B*. Babies Blue Ivy and North West, responding to press.

According to the pre-released track-list, Carter’s Underwood’s son Isaiah Michael Fisher is also featured on the country single, Country Babes. If there is one thing we know about this collaboration, it’s that it is going to be hard. Beyoncé, Jay-Z, Kanye West and Kim Kardashian have stated that they are not helping the babies with their project in any way shape or form.

The press release further stated that there was a problem with the Academy’s computer system and that it miscalculated the votes. As a result the wrong name was printed on the envelopes. It has been confirmed that the vast majority of the jury has voted for Boyhood for Best Picture.

A spokesperson for the Academy said that this has never happened in the history of the award show. The producers of Boyhood have declined to comment. A producer of Boyhood told The Montclarion that he had a queasy feeling when Boyhood was announced for Best Picture. “I knew something was wrong,” said Frances Kafka. “We worked on this movie for 13 years. I fully expected us to get recognition for bringing something as new, innovative and fresh as Boyhood.”

Johannes Gothe, a board member of the Academy, said that the Academy didn’t realize that something was wrong when Boyhood was announced on the night of Feb. 22. “As juries started talking to each other in the following weeks and months, they realized that the majority of them voted for Boyhood,” said Gothe. He expressed his sincerest apologies to everyone who was involved in the production of Boyhood. “We will make sure that such unlucky events will not happen again.”
In 2010, Miley Cyrus released her third album Can’t Be Tamed. Since then, she has confirmed that statement to be very true. Miley’s bad-girl hippie persona started with her pixie cut and has been sustained with her public sexual behavior and consumption in marijuana culture. Miley officially took off her blonde wig in 2011 and waved goodbye to the other side of her, Hannah Montana — until now.

On April 1, a statement was released by Miley’s publicist officially announcing a Hannah Montana reunion tour. Miley had originally stated that if she ever did a Hannah Montana reunion tour, she would do so in her current edgy persona; however, after signing the tour, she would go on tour unannounced that “Buddy” from a puppy mill built on an Indian burial ground. The odd human-like glowing sounds the dog makes alarms the family, but they are still charmed by his silky-smooth coat and his winning personality. The next day, Buddy demonstrates a mutation predictability toward the sport of basketball, so the family decides to exploit his skills for the sake of earning Nike endorsement money.

The special effects in this movie were inconsistent. The scenes of Buddy playing basketball did not effectively produce the illusion of a dog performing slam dunks, as it was quite clear he was levitated into the air via strings. The blood, on the other hand, was so eerily convincing that I can only describe it as “hyper-realistic.”

Speaking of blood, I was utterly flabbergasted by the dark turn this family movie took. After being forced to practice for six hours straight by the cruel and avaricious father, Buddy whispers, “That’s the last straw” toward the screen. When his family is asleep, the dog runs up the stairs with a knife in his mouth, and starts butchering the family members one by one - the teen-age son, the mother, even the poor daughter. The father wakes up in the middle of his wife’s disembowelment in utter shock and alarm, spurring Buddy to say, “I’m saving the best for last” and then breath fire onto the patriarch. The final shot of the film is of Buddy facing the camera with blood streaming from his eyes as the father’s agonizing screams continue into the fadeout.

I’m conflicted about Air Bud. On one hand, it is completely unsuitable to be watched by the whole family despite its relatively charming and clean first half; on the other hand, it is one of the most compelling and realistic horror films in recent memory. I get the feeling that I may have not even seen Air Bud, as I peeled the last bit of the tape and discovered “Air Blood” written underneath it. Overall, I give this film one thumb-up and one thumb to the side.

In addition to the official statement, Miley posted a picture of the legendary long-lost blonde wig to her Twitter account with the caption, “I GOT’ER!”

The tour is currently set for the fall, with ticket sales beginning on April 15.

Opening the tour will be Disney artists Dayana, BS and Zayn Malik. This will be Zayn’s first tour since his departure from One Direction in March 2015. Miley looks forward to working with past colleagues under the Disney name.

Accompanying Miley on the entire tour will be her mother Tish, younger sister Noah and older brother Trace. Miley’s close relationship with her family will serve as her support on tour as she leaves her past behind a lifestyle of sex, drugs and racy Instagram photos.

Air Bud (release date unknown, assumed to be 2015) is one of the most baffling movies of the 21st century. I found a VHS tape of it at a yard sale hosted by a mysterious hooded man. The title of the movie was written in red sharpie on the tape, although the lettering had an old copper-like smell to it, almost like...the smell of blood.

In the opening of the film, a family purchases a golden retriever christened “Buddy” from a puppy mill built on an Indian burial ground. The odd human-like glowing sounds the dog makes alarms the family, but they are still charmed by his silky-smooth coat and his winning personality.

The next day, Buddy demonstrates a mutation predictability toward the sport of basketball, so the family decides to exploit his skills for the sake of earning Nike endorsement money.

Despite their 2-1 loss to D.C. United on Nov. 8, the New York Red Bulls have advanced to the Eastern Conference Finals. Midfielder Péguy Luyindula netted the only Red Bulls’ goal. Luyindula, who scored once in the Red Bulls’ 2-0 win against D.C. United in the first leg of the conference semifinals, sent his side to the conference finals on a 3-2 goal aggregate.

Inside the six-yard box, Luyindula slotted a cross from captain Thierry Henry into the bottom right corner of United’s goal in the 57th minute. D.C. United’s first goal came late in the first half when midfielder Nick DeLeon headed a cross from Taylor WomensLacrosse

Montclair State University has a problem with geese and after many temporary fixes brought by the work of the “Geese Police,” students have joined together to come up with a solution that keeps campus free of the avian pests and promotes health at the same time: croquet.

Everyone has heard of playing croquet with flamingoes after the notion became famous in Alice in Wonderland. Naturally, students brainstormed a similar enterprise as a method to control the geese population across campus.

With a similar body structure to flamingoes, geese make a comparable alternative to flamingoes, which are much too expensive and rare to import to campus. Instead, students are planning to take advantage of their natural bird population on campus. As we speak, the Croquet club sports team is drawing up a proposal that will outline the conditions needed to play croquet with geese and how exactly the team plans to capture and provide for them so that they can make the best mallets possible.

Rumor has it that the red sheds that have risen up around campus are actually goose barns, where geese will be stored and cared for by Student Recreation Center employees. The Croquet team is still trying to plan the most effective way to attract the geese, but using Lombardi Sauce as bait is definitely a forerunner.

Once the geese are caught and contained, students plan to set up a croquet course in the Student Center quad, the current favorite hang-out of geese on campus. Soon, their “presents” will be replaced with merits of a different kind, as the geese will provide students an outlet to get fit and compete in croquet tournaments.

Croquet has been proven as one of the most effective workouts, competing with Zumba, TRX and mini-bands as the newest trends in fitness. Montclair State plans to add goose croquet as a Physical Education requirement, and the Rec Center plans to make the activity its first Group X activity that happens outside of the walls of its facility.

Not much research has been conducted on the effects of goose croquet on the actual geese themselves, but we can only assume that they love being put to good use for once, instead of stalking around campus, hissing at students, honking and leaving their droppings everywhere that meets the eye.

The leader in the initiative to make goose croquet a reality believes that using the geese as a means of physical activity will clearly improve the quality of life for students, but for the geese as well. As the goose croquet team becomes a reality, The Montclarion will begin to cover all related activities extensively, with daily updates on the newspaper’s website and hourly updates on the publication’s Twitter. Representatives from the team assure hesitant students that the change in goose-use on campus will be a honking good time.
The NCAA made an announcement earlier today that their chair committee has been discussing an expansion into a different sort of competitive field. After pulling up YouTube videos of Mew2King, Momochi, SonicFox, Con Le and OpTic BigTymeR, the NCAA board has come to appreciate the skill, strength, practice and stamina that goes into becoming a professional gamer. The NCAA is still debating about how to go about creating a gaming league, exploring their options in dividing up the leagues.

They stated, “That to ‘git gud’ at video games and card games requires a lot of sportsmanship and training. These athletes deserve attention for their devotion to their trade and should be receiving funding from universities and us alike. We just need to build brackets and decide what games we’d like to host in our competition.”

Bite of the Year

The 2014 World Cup saw the return of Luis Suarez, the cannibal. Suarez channelled his inner Jurassic Park against Italy in their group stage contest. Giorgio Chiellini nearly had a chunk of his shoulder removed, as the referee didn’t even see the infraction. A minute later, Uruguay scored and later won the game.

Dive of the Year

When the Netherlands and Mexico met in the knock-out rounds, Arjen Robben did what he does best and blatantly dove to force a penalty kick. The late goal ended Mexico’s World Cup campaign after Robben looked like he got thrown to the ground when his toe was stepped on.

Headbutt of the Year

Germany and Portugal met in the group stage of the 2014 FIFA World Cup. Pepe, a historically dirty player for Portugal, had another mental lapse and decided to touch heads with Germany’s Thomas Mueller and they immediately got into a shouting match. The ref immediately came over and handed Pepe the straight red card.

Flying Knee of the Year

Mario Balotelli, a striker for Italy, had a momentary lapse of reason. Going in for a header to win the ball, Balotelli looked like he got thrown to the ground when his toe was stepped on.
