STALINGRAD REVISTED: MSC students were faced with this scene from an old war movie when they returned. Although WMSC-fm was supposed to be on the air by August 29, academic problems prevented them from making that deadline. Charlie Hecht, temporary general manager stated, "I HAVE fought the battles for the past four years, now it is time for someone else to take over," Hecht declared. He asserted that "I would not be here if we have mass resignations."

Hecht was appointed by the six-member task force which was established by both station members and disidents with the approval of the fact finding committee. That fact finding committee was appointed by the SGA legislature to run the station until a board of governors could be elected. The problems arose when Hecht and Lavian Blanton, dean of students, asked MSC president David W.D. Dickson for permission to begin broadcasting in August. Dickson raised some questions concerning station programming. The president, Hecht stated, wanted more academic input into the station in the form of educational programming.

However, after Hecht left the meeting, Dickson informed Blanton that all station programming was to be cleared through the speech and theater chairman Karl Mull.

Blanton relayed this information to Hecht. "We felt that the president should have spoken to the station directly rather than through the dean," Hecht emphasized.

When the station brought their complaints to the SGA, SGA President Michael Measina met with the president. Measina stated that the president accepted the position that students must remain in control of all student organizations.

However, Measina agreed to allow college input into the board of governors through a college representative. The original proposal called for the professional advisor as college representative. Measina mentioned. He continued that he will propose to the SGA legislature, that the agreement be amended, to make the advisor an ex officio (non-voting) member of the board.

A SEARCH is in progress for that advisor. Hecht related. He pointed out that "work is going slowly and we do not expect to be finished for about one month."

Hecht, who according to Measina, will remain in charge until elections can be held, concluded that no major decisions, including going on the air, will be made until the advisor is hired.

SMS Drive to Take the Air Stymied

Although WMSC-fm was supposed to be on the air by August 29, academic problems prevented them from making that deadline. Charlie Hecht, temporary general manager stated. He continued that although the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) granted an extension until Nov. 29, he and many members of the station were "disinterested in the situation."

The Clifton City Council has decided to repeal the imprisonment provisions of the parking ordinances which formed the basis of the lawsuit filed by the SGA.

"At their meeting last night, the council instructed the legal department to amend the two ordinances in question," explained city attorney Arthur J. Sullivan. Those laws required either a $50 fine or 10 days imprisonment or both for illegal parking on McCosh Road and Hilburn Place.

SGA President Michael Measina stated that "since the SGA has received official word that the imprisonment provisions of the laws will be repealed, then the SGA will drop their suit."

When the commissioner's motion to be eliminated from the suit was granted by the court, the city assumed that they could drop the imprisonment clause. The legal department will present an amendment to the council at their next meeting which, Sullivan commented, will probably be passed.

The suit was filed because it was believed that the imprisonment provision violated the cruel and unusual punishment clause in the state constitution.

Students Find Fewer Registration Hassles

MSC students who attended last week’s change of program saw a system more streamlined and less complicated than last semester’s registration period.

ACCORDING TO Butler, the quick payment of school bills resulted in the distribution of schedules well in advance of the change of program.

The registrar noted that the cooperation of students in reporting to registration according to their priorities added to the efficiency of the program.

This sentiment of satisfaction expressed by the majority of students is shared by Marshall Butler, registrar. The registrar attributes this year’s successful registration period to the practice of early billing of students and prompt payment of those bills.

The ONLY major problem in this semester’s registration program was the availability of too few courses for the total fall enrollment figure. This problem, however, has plagued students in past semesters.

The entrance number this fall reached 7500 undergraduate students. This figure is 200 more than anticipated by the Registrar’s Office.

The SIZE of the fall enrollment added to the problem of classroom space, which affects the number of courses that can conceivably be offered at any one time.

The part-time and graduate student enrollment figure reached $500, thus compounding the problem.

Butler intends to raise the issue of more seats at the next college council meeting. However he predicted that his influence alone can do much to alleviate a problem that actually lies within the various schools of the college itself.

The registrar noted that more than 1500 of the 2700 new students at MSC did not pre-register. This caused “somewhat of a delay in the scheduling,” said Butler.

Freshmen and transfer students carry a heavy burden of registration complications, as in the past. The lack of experience in the workings of the registrar’s office makes it difficult for any college.

Butler said that there were a smaller number of disgruntled students during registration than there were in past registration periods.

Construction continues: In a seemingly never ending fight, students must still struggle through mud and bricks to reach their classes because completion of the mall has been postponed.

The pedestrian mall, currently under construction between the Math-Science building and College Hall, should be completed by October, said Jerome Quinlin, director of institutional planning.

The $675,000 project was originally scheduled to be completed for the opening day of the fall semester.

Quinn added that while the majority of the construction will be completed by the beginning of the month, landscaping could continue throughout the month. At press time, only about 40% of the mall walkway has been completed and work is continuing on the electrical installations.

Quinn pointed out that the strength of the blocks is important because of the need for large disposal and maintenance vehicles to travel on them. Without the proper strength, they might crack under the vehicles’ weight, Quinn said.

“The general contractor also had trouble with his concrete curb sub-contractor. This problem caused us some time in August,” Quinn explained.

When it was realized that the work would not be completed before the start of the fall semester the contractor put down a stone base over the walkways.

“The original base was to have some dirt in it but in the hope of avoiding a problem with mud we had the contractor put down a base with Peitz,” Quinn said.

Stressing that students should not be inconvenienced by the continuing construction, Quinn said, “We endeavored to complete all work requiring heavy equipment during the summer. The only inconvenience students might have are the blocked entrances.”

Nixon Resignation: A Cleansing Begins

The resignation of Richard M. Nixon as President of the United States on Aug. 8, 1974, was certainly not a surprise to most people. Media speculation for two straight days before, pressure by congressmen, coupled with the president’s own admission earlier in the week of withholding evidence made the resignation seem almost inevitable.

There were those who gloated at the news—now Nixon really had been kicked around for the last time. Nixon’s political and personal enemies had won the last battle. But if the struggle and trial of Watergate was merely a personal vendetta against the man who won in ’72 by a record landslide, was it necessary to put the entire country through the shame of such a scandal?

There were those who rejoiced in Nixon’s resignation, claiming that at last we had proof that the democratic system which makes America, well, America, really does work. But Nixon’s resignation was not an impeachment of a president through a Senate trial—the full workings of the constitution were not put into operation. Nixon’s resignation, then, was the pressuring of a man to such an unbearable degree that he was forced to give up the highest office in the land.

There were those who sorrowed at the occurrence, terming it a tragedy for the nation. The actual resignation could not have been a tragedy; but was rather a cleansing of the system, ridding it of a dark spot and allowing the shine of openness and honesty return to the presidency. It would have been more tragic for Nixon to remain in office and pull the nation, through the agony and expense of an impeachment and Senate trial.

There were those who claimed they felt sorry for Nixon, as a person, and sorry for his family. True, his family were the innocents, but then so were we who innocently paid taxes which in part went to remodeling the house of a man with a $200,000 per year salary who was illegally withholding his own tax revenues.

There are those who feel sorry for Nixon, who feel that he has suffered enough. Which brings us to the question. It is curious that, along with the issue of pardoning the former president, the issue of amnesty for draft evaders has also surfaced strongly. The “Equality under the law” that is supposed to be the backbone of American justice will be tested quite publicly.

If Nixon should be tried and sentenced, then so should those who fled to foreign countries as deserters or draft dodgers. By the same token, if Nixon should be left alone to rebuild his life in his own way, then so should the draft evaders. However, such a lenient attitude, if there is “equality under the law,” would become widespread with “pardons” being doled out left and right instead of fines or sentences.

Presidency for Gerald Ford’s plan of conditional amnesty—pardon with peacetime service—is an excellent middle-of-the-road compromise. But what compromise is there for Nixon within the system? The carrying through of a trial only to have Nixon pardon himself? No. Ford would be a waste of time and could create a conflict between the executive branch and the judicial and legislative branches. Taking over a nation under the circumstances that Ford did is not easy. Add to this the problems of inflation and the amnesty question, and it’s evident that Ford’s position is definitely not enviable.

SGA Opt for Mobile Role

Last year a member of the former SGA administration expressed the opinion that the time had come for the SGA to get off the hill. I feel we are off the hill and should begin to climb the mountain.

SGA has made several positive and significant accomplishments within the last two years. It has established its credibility and influence at M.C. The time has arrived when the students of the institution can have a more important role and identity than ever before.

There are basically two paths that SGA can pursue. One of those paths is contentment with SGA’s current status and remain stagnant with what power and position it now holds within the college community.

However, I feel that SGA’s responsibility to MSC students demands constant awareness and innovation. We have arrived at a point when we can continue to expand our scope of responsibility, concern and influence on the campus.

Our presence and power can also be further extended to areas outside the campus. Issues that affect students as citizens are of concern to the SGA and denote our involvement in these events. I contend that the SGA pursue and fulfill the second path.

Efforts

To have concentrated our efforts on encompassing and serving as many student problems and issues as may exist. SGA must continue to make itself available and accessible to every channel, avenue and means of opportunity for each student. Of course this direction is neither easy nor uncomplicated. It is probably the most challenging and rewarding decision ever undertaken by the SGA.

When the choice is whether to remain where we are, not grow and adjust, as opposed to attempting to innovate and change, the choice is obviously for us to grow and confront our responsibilities as they arise. Change has never occurred in our system the way we would like it to. It takes time and effort.

One thing you can be sure of is that SGA will not remain immobile—nor immovable in the coming year. The direction we should take should always be of a positive and decisive nature. I am sure that this year’s SGA will be positive and decisive in every action it undertakes.

Soapbox

Not Vengeance - But Mercy

To the Editor:

At this time last year, I wrote an article about how we, the citizens of the United States of America, were slowly but surely losing our freedom. Watergate, the former President and White House staff members were in the public thoughts constantly because of illegal bugging, tantric, break-ins and cover-ups.

At that time I stated that "I just have a hard time believing that the President knew absolutely nothing of these activities." My personal feelings proved to be correct.

This summer, history was made. The most important event in our nation’s history since the signing of the Declaration of Independence was the resignation of a President of the United States, the resignation of Richard Milhous Nixon.

Mr. Nixon was forced out of the Presidency because of popular feeling that he was not to be trusted. In my opinion, the people of this great nation had to use Mr. Nixon as an example for future generations. We had to establish the fact that no one man or group can dictate and carry out unwarranted acts which result in a loss of individual freedom. We had to show that a President who tried to place himself above the people and do as he pleased would be removed.

As our new President said in his Inaugural Address on Aug. 9, "My fellow Americans, our long national nightmare is over. Our Constitution works. Our great republic is a government of laws and not of men. Here the people rule." So Nixon resigned. I am glad for that but I ask people to try to forgive him. If there is any belief in your heart of God, you should know that He would want this. As it says in the Lord’s Prayer, "Forgive those who trespass against us." All of us do not live completely by the laws of this land, so who are we to condemn him?

Let us give your new President, Gerald R. Ford, our support and prayers to help our country to be a proud nation that will strive for peace on earth, both at home and abroad. Let us give him a fair chance to solve the many difficult problems that face our nation.

Mr. Ford cannot solve our decades of problems overnight. Let us hope and pray that God will help us preserve our most precious rights that He has given us—our freedom and privacy.

MSC Reaction Varies to Nixon's Resignation

By Joan Folkerzak

For the first time in the 196-year history of the United States, a president resigned the highest office in the land; but certainly not for the first time in American history did the population express varying viewpoints on an issue.

Reactions to Richard Nixon's resignation and Gerald Ford's assumption of the presidency were likewise mixed at Montclair State College, ranging from "sad" to "very pleased."

Both Ways

MSC's President, Dr. David W.D. Dickson, explained that he felt "both sad and yet satisfied. Sad about the plight of a family and satisfied because I felt a tremendous situation about the health of the government was ended."

Dickson remarked that the "government was immobilized" and that the decisions regarding the economy, transportation and ecological concerns went by the wayside as Nixon "was getting increasingly defensive."

Even Computers Need a Vacation Sometimes

By Michael Hatem

I had been looking forward to my senior year at MSC with the usual blend of anxiety and anticipation. I had told myself that the worst was behind me; now things were going to go my way.

But as soon as my schedule arrived in the mail, complete with eight credits, I realized that I had been suffering from delusions of grandeur. The registrar's office, or someone or thing directly related, had once again thrown the wrench into my plans.

Reason

Certainly there is a reason for the yearly confusion concerning fall registration. After all, everyone takes at least a few days off to head for the beach and lakes, especially the computer programmers. Perhaps even the computer goes along.

And inevitably, the air conditioning breaks down at least once, resulting in sweat damage to many of the already misguided keyboards cards. Certainly the registrar's office is off the hook, since the computer operations are farmed out. And how can they keep up with all the new, fiddle fresheners?

But whatever the ultimate reason, someone (or thing) did it again. Judging by the lines on both days that I was at the annual picnic called "change of program,", plenty of other delirious were in the same boat.

Cutting Corners

How in hell does the Alumni Association get the money for all that orange drink? Maybe the money that the registrar's office saves by letting high school computer operator summer school students do the registrations goes to the orange drink. It's as good an explanation as I've heard for both phenomena.

Well, some things always seem to change: prices, textbooks for the same course when you're trying to sell books and the length of the rip in your pants. Other things, such as registration headaches, hangovers and the locations of the rest rooms, all remain the same.

Mike Messina, SGA president, reflected a stronger viewpoint. "It (resignation) was the best thing Nixon (Nixon) could have done."

A bit less

Elam voiced a contrary opinion when he called the speech "less than candid and less than complete. But, the backdated administrative addition, "the fact that he made the speech itself" was met with a light of attention.

Elam did state that he "was more impressed than I expected to be with the judiciary committee hearings." Dickson expressed a similar reaction, emphasizing that he felt a new sense of respect for the intelligence and integrity of the members of the committee.

Dickson commented that he felt a feeling of buoyancy in the knowledge that "the (democratic) system did work remarkably well."

However, the MSC president stressed that "We're not going to solve the problems of crime in the streets by making any scapegoats while white collar crimes are being committed."

Prosecute

"No one's above the law," Messina remarked concerning the issue of prosecuting the former president. "He should get whatever's coming to him. He could run again and I really don't feel sorry for him."

To varying degrees, reactions to Ford's first few weeks in the White House were favorable, "I was impressed with his initial gestures to touch every base," Ham, commented. The Dean also praised Ford for "vagueness to the (unity) issue before a hostile audience," citing the president's recent speech to a group of veterans.

"Ford is honest and comes on strong," Menendez remarked. However, he feels that there are still some kinks to be oiled out of the machinery. "When you spend 15 times more for defense than education, you've got to reorder the priorities," he stressed.

Problems

Dickson acknowledged that "President Ford has enormous problems both at home and abroad. Concerning Ford's assault on inflation, Dickson commented, "I think he's doing right, but I'm not sure he's doing enough."

Having molded in Michigan for more than 20 years, Dickson spoke of Ford's image in his home state. He's a traditional, unimaginative, party worker; not a philosophical intellectual. The MSC president described Ford as "a likable guy" and "a stable man," as opposed to the showmanship of his predecessor.

Menendez remarked, "So far Ford seems to be very open. He's a humanistic president; he talks to the people, he's able to kid with the people."

Concerning the nomination of former New York governor Nelson A. Rockefeller to the vice-presidency, Menendez noted that "both of these men know exactly what they're doing in politics."

He also felt that the Ford-Rockefeller combination portrayed two large representative sections of the American people.

Surprised

Messina said that the choice of Rockefeller surprised him. "Rocky had been involved in too many things in New York. I think the movement now is towards honesty and integrity and Rocky just doesn't fit the bill," Messina said with a shake of his head.

Houston G. Elam, dean of the School of Professional Arts and Sciences, echoed Messina's sentiments. In an interview last week, Elam stated that he was "very pleased" and that the former president's actions "showed good sense on his part."

"I knew with all that was going on that either he would have been forced to fall or resigned," claimed SGA vice-president Manny Menendez. "I think the thing to do would be to resign."

Menendez had praise for the nationally televised resignation speech. "I felt it was one of the most sincere and one of the best speeches he ever made," the vice-president explained. "It was the first time we saw President Nixon as a regular person."

Marigolds' Lacks Balance

By Mike Finnegan

Paul Zindel's "The Effect of Gamma Rays on Man-in-the-Moon Marigolds" is a precariously balanced rip of a play. In its current production, Players makes of it a teetering balancing act.

The Pulitzer Prize-winning comedy-drama is a precariously wobbly piece because its characters and their emotions can become easily pet and stereotyped without the extra nuance of a carefully explored performance. The variety and quality of the Players performers fluctuate throughout their portraits.

ROOM FOR stereotyping exists in the play's framework: Beatrice Hunsdorfer, slovenly, self-pitying, soured on the world, lords over her two daughters Ruth, an epileptic who is succumbing to her mother's bitterness and Matilda, wistful, inquisitive, who scampers herself in the wondrous of science as an outlet for her basic optimism.

However, the performance of Mary Ann Monteverde as Beatrice, while workmanlike, does not grasp any measure of distinction. Her voice doesn't carry loudly, and she strains to create the portrait of a domineering mother. To her credit she looks the part and captures Beatrice's bitterness becomes all-consuming, prior to that she is too often a monotonous drudge.

Yvonne Rosetti does better as Ruth, more appealing as a vulnerable daughter in search of maternal attention than as a brassy, cigarette-smoking Teenybopper. Her scene listening to her mother recall her father's fruit wagon is very touching.

AS MATILDA, Esther Blackford comes off best because of her sincere interpretation of a sensitive child. Her inherent love for her mother is always obvious, although her supposed exhilaration at the marvelous line "Atom...atom...what a beautiful word!" seems curiously hollow.

Alan Colderidge's direction seems more concerned with flat out presentation rather than stopping to concentrate on the performers' individual nuances. Michael Votier's set aptly embraces the dankness of the Hunsdorfer state of mind but Ray Dooley's lighting effects do not always accentuate the characters and their emotions.

"The Effect of Gamma Rays on Man-in-the-Moon Marigolds" will be performed tonight through Saturday at 8 pm in Memorial Auditorium and often, as perhaps in this case, balancing acts derive more suspense from twirling near-misses than from smooth-going.

Beware 'Terminal Man'

Beware film, especially science-fiction epics, that get caught up in their own self-importance. They end up as dull and disappointing as Mike Hodges' film version of Michael Crichton's novel "The Terminal Man."

The book, merely a suspense thriller with a touch of Crichton's medical expertise, contained none of the self-indulgent touches that writer-producer-director Hodges employs to make the movie adaptation a pretentious warning against encroaching mind control.

SCIENTIST HARRY Benson (George Segal) suffers from mental blackouts during which he becomes violent and homicidal. However, the computer electrodes implanted in his brain to curb those tendencies unexpectedly amplify them to the point that he becomes a murderous automaton.

Simplest, Saturday night chiller stuff, right? Not as Hodges sees it in his cold, artless vision of emotions, wirewrecking surgeons and overwhelming technical precision. The operation to implant the electrodes takes up more than half the film with the result that the audience gets bored with an onrush of minute details, and remains tranquilized with the subsequent surts of action and obvious suspense.

After the operation, Benson's descent into violent and homicidal tendencies unexpectedly amplify them to the point that Hodges employs to make the movie adaptation a pretentious warning against encroaching mind control.

FOLLOWING HIS escape from the hospital, Benson conveniently murders his fiancé, giving Hodges the excuse to film a gory, slow-motion stabbing on a rumbling waterbed. Benson also bumps off a priest, allowing Hodges to show a scene of the fugitive flipping off the altar lines while staggering out of the church vestry. The film's most trite touch finds Benson being cornered and killed in an open grave into which he has stumbled. (Dust to dust, right? The metaphors simply slay you.)

In this age of too many gloom-and-doom, flicks, Hodges should have listened. The performances of Segal and Joan Hackett as the token girl-Friday scientist opposed to the operation are as antiseptic and listless as the script. (If anything, the book possessed a tight, breakneck pace.) Segal must have been fighting off hysterics when Hodges told him to smash up a machine in a robot-like fashion while shouting in an automatic whine "Let it stop! Let it stop!"

In this age of too many gloom-and-doom, flicks, Hodges should have listened.

FRESH FLAVOR
Ya Wanna See 'Em Play? Ya Gotta Pay

Remember the good old days? You could walk up to one of the gates at Sprague Field, show your student ID, proceed to your seat and watch the Bobcats tear into the football foes.

Well, you can still walk to the gate and show your ID, but you can't proceed to your seat without paying $1 for the privilege of taking in the game.

THE PANZER brass has instituted the student fee this year to help cut costs and make for a more efficient athletic program. The fee has been a subject of mild controversy in recent years, and Dioguardi estimated last year that it was short by about $25,000.

PRESENTLY $1 of each student's $60 activity fee goes to the athletic programs (both men and women). The amount had been $18.50 in 1970-71, but it was lowered with the athletic department's enthusiastic consent two years ago. Montclair State has never offered students for football, but the matter had been suggested during discussions on the budget.

"I was never in favor of charging and we were trying to hold off on this thing," revealed Dioguardi. "It's always been tradition here and we didn't want to go against it, but the SGA and Montclair Athletic Commission (MAC) kept pressing for the fee."

DIOGUARDI pointed to the student groups on campus that charge admission.

"There is usually a nominal fee charged for movies and concerts on campus, and we felt that there was some precedent for the ticket prices," he explained.

Dioguardi reported that sales have gone into effect at the first game against Kutztown State on Sept. 14.

The $1 admission places you in the normal general admission section, while a five-game season ticket that sells for $3 entitles the holder to a seat in the student booster section that will be opened on Sept. 14.

The third annual tennis tournament will be held off on fee and can be purchased at the athletic office in the basement of the Center. So as soon as the staff is ready for two basketball leagues (three men and five women), a badminton tournament, a pinochle league and a Roller Skating Night, all tickets will be on sale in the Student Center lobby since Tuesday and Thursday until the end of the season. The $1 admission covers the entire show and can be purchased at the athletic department office or at any cheerleader.

SILC Worms Into Season

By John Delery

People (freshmen or otherwise) who spend their spare time just searching anywhere for a party, may be interested in what the Student Intramural and Leisure Council (SILC) has to offer. With a wide variety of activities ranging from football to pinochle they have just about everything to suit anyone's taste.

SILC is one of the country's few student run and student controlled intramural programs. The ruling body, the SILC Council, decides and plans the entire range of activities. SILC offers job opportunities as either an official, passing a short rules quiz and a valid MSC ID card.

APPLICATIONS ARE on hand right now for a tennis tournament, a touch football league and men's and women's bowling league.

The third annual tennis tournament will be played on Sept. 14 and 15 at the MSC court, with the rain date set for one week later. Categories include men's and women's singles, men's and women's doubles, men's and women's mixed doubles, and men's and women's high game. The leading team in each division and to the men's and women's high game, average and series. The leading team in each division will be decided by a random draw from the pool of entries.

ALL TEAMS will be put under a handicap system to level off the competition. Trophies will be awarded to the first and second place teams in each division and to the men's and women's high game, average and series. The leading team in each division will have their name engraved on SILC's All Campus Trophy.

Beginning on Sept. 23 for every Saturday and Thursday until the end of the season, the Bobcats and the Panthers will play each other. A minimum of 12 and max of 15 players will constitute a team with six members playing at a time. No rule differences occur in the coed league, and all teams will play both men's and women's rules.

The first meeting of SILC will be held on Sept. 5 at 3:30 pm, in the Purple Conference room on the fourth floor of the Center. So as Richter says, "Come in and see what Intramurals are all about."
