Railing safety questioned

By Sandy Dadino

The Student Government Association (SGA) legislature instituted an investigation last week on the height of the safety walls built on the Blanton Hall walkways. Several legislators were concerned that the 42-inch high concrete walls were not high enough to prevent possible accidents.

Plexiglas shields were in the original blueprints of the dorm, but they were cut out of the plan by the N.J. Board of Higher Education, Raymond Stover, director of housing, said. "The danger of the glass being broken and falling to the lounge below was more of a danger than an occasional book or water balloon which may be dropped over the ledge."

Legislator Steve Napoles, one of the authors of the investigation bill, expressed his concerns in the October 21 SGA meeting that students could possibly fall over the safety walls for a variety of reasons. He cited history, roughhousing, and even intoxication.

Richards also said that federal cuts in financial aid have been eased somewhat by an increase in the state-funded Tuition Aid Grant (TAG) last summer.

Interest on government-backed loans has increased this year. Richards said a new GSL borrower will pay nine percent interest, an increase from seven percent last January. Recipients of the Parent Loan for Undergraduate Students (PLUS) will pay 14 instead of nine percent interest.

The National Direct Student Loan (NDSL) has lost its federal support. However, Richards said the loss is due to the poor repayment record of former MSC students. The government, he said, has refused new federal capital in order to encourage students to repay their loans. So now the only money in this program comes from students' repayments. Richards added that the college is now pursuing those who have been neglecting their repayment obligations.

The Basic Equal Opportunity Grant (BEOG) awards have been reduced. But Richards said it is too early to figure out the net effects of its reduction.

There is one bright spot among the federally funded financial aid programs. Richards said that college work study funds have not been reduced and are "sufficient for our needs."

Richards warned students to be cautious. He said, "Given the outlook for next year, we encourage students who have part time jobs to keep them, and those who have the opportunity to work during the winter and summer breaks to do so in anticipation of student cuts."

The future could be just as grim for the administration.

Although the college has not yet decided what programs can and would be cut, Mininberg said he has helped President Dickson write a newsletter which pinpoints the main areas of campus expenses. Those areas are personnel, computer systems, fuel and utilities, duplication, telephone, and

Federal aid cutbacks ahead

By Donna Cullen

Federal aid to the state of NJ will be cut by about $1 billion. Dr. Elliot Mininberg, vice-president of administration and finance, estimated. No one knows how much of that reduction will be borne by state colleges, he said, but enrollment in colleges could finance, estimated. No one believes cutbacks ahead.

Noting the greater number of students are receiving aid this year, which is about the same number of students as last year. However, he said there is a shift within the program. Dr. Randall Richards, director of Financial Aid, agreed. "This year is not as bad as might have been expected, but 1982-83 could be a different story." He said about 5300 students are receiving aid this year, which is about the same number of students as last year. However, he said there is a shift within the program. Noting the greater number of Guaranteed Student Loan (GSL) applicants this year, Richards said students seem to be substituting loans for grants.

Kean holds slim lead

TRENTON, N.J. (UP)--Republican Thomas Kean widened his margin of victory over Democrat James Florio, Wednesday night, in the New Jersey governor's race. Finals showed him ahead by 1,138 votes as the state prepared for a probable recount.

What the private News Election Service called its "final for all races" results based on unofficial returns showed Kean with 1,142,174 votes and Florio with 1,141,016 -- a difference of 1,158 votes for Kean from Tuesday's balloting.

Earlier, recounts by Camden and Middlesex counties, showed him ahead by 1,158 votes. However, Mininberg said that the major impact to state schools is not expected to be felt until next September.

Dr. Randall Richards, director of Financial Aid, agreed. "This year is not as bad as might have been expected, but 1982-83 could be a different story." Free fall concert upcoming Four centuries of wind-band music, including a guest appearance by clarinetist Jonathan Lautman, compose the program for the free fall concert of the MSC Concert Band, Monday, November 16, at 8 p.m. in Memorial Auditorium.

The program selections encompass 16th century popular dances, Bach pipe-organ music, Kirnberger's classic Military Symphony, and an English folk suite. The 40-minute performance, to be exhibited in the Russ Hall lounge, will feature Lautman as soloist. The 20th century will be represented by Robert Washburn's Symphony, and works by Alan Hovanes and Thomas Wilt. Wilt is the director of the 70-piece Concert Band and in addition to being a member of the faculty for 15 years, he is well-known as a flutist and composer.

Lautman, the guest clarinet soloist, is one of the MSC Music Department's new visiting specialists. A graduate of Northwestern University, Lautman has served on the faculties of the Universities of Delaware and West Virginia, and as an Artist-in-Residence at Harvard University.

Program set for Friday

On Friday, Nov. 6, the 300th anniversary of Pedro Caldenor De La Barca, Spain's most notable dramatist of the Golden Age, will be commemorated in the Russ Hall lounge. The program, which will begin at 7 p.m., will include a lecture by Dr. Antonio Regaldo of N.Y.U., selected scenes from Calderon masterpieces presented by the Royal Theater of Spain, and music of the period performed by classical guitarist Jose Luis Franco and soprano Myra Fernandez.

The program was organized by Dr. Clara Barbeito.

Loan money available

During the month of September, the Office of Higher Education processed 3,283 applications for 9 per cent Parent Loans for Undergraduate Students (PLUS), totaling $8,736,146 and far exceeding the number processed by any other state during this period.

Applications for PLUS Loans will continue to be processed by the Office of Student Assistance (at the new 14 per cent interest rate) for both independent and dependent undergraduate and graduate students. Eligible parents can get loans of up to $3,000 a year, or $15,000 in cumulative loans, for each student in their family. More than 120 New Jersey lenders have agreed to participate in the program.

Parents and students can obtain further information about the PLUS Program by contacting a participating lending institution, the New Jersey Higher Education Assistance Authority at 609292-3906, or the toll-free Financial Aid Hotline at 800792-8670, 9 a.m.-5 p.m., Monday through Friday.

Bell Labs offering exposure

Representatives of Bell Labs will be coming to MSC on Thursday, November 12, to recruit talented seniors for summer research positions. This is an opportunity for minority and female applicants to gain exposure to the scientific world in a most stimulating environment. There will be a group meeting in the Co-op Ed office in Life Hall, room 126, from 10-11 a.m. Individual interviews will be scheduled during the remainder of the day. Bell is interested in the following majors: computer science, economics, industrial studies and technology, math, physical sciences, and psychology. Come to the Co-op Ed office for further details, or call 893-4407.

Organizations wishing to have events covered by The Montclarion should send all pertinent information to Rob Thibault, news editor.
Escort service is only a call away

By Lorraine Leslie

A rescheduling of the escort service is now being considered so it may provide better service to the MSC student body. This service, sponsored by the Student Government Association (SGA), is currently available Monday through Friday from 10:30 p.m. to 1:30 a.m., and on Thursday the hours are extended to 2:30 a.m.

"Dial 5222. Burn that number into your memory," said Jayne Rich, chief of campus police. "I don't think that any woman should ever walk any place alone at night."

Dorm council students have suggested that weekend hours be added, and that the service could possibly be curtailed after midnight on every night except Thursday. Sergeant Michael Portaski, co-ordinator of the escort service, will be conducting an hourly survey for two weeks to determine the most frequently used time periods before any changes are instituted. Student input is invited. Comments may be left at the campus police office or in the SGA suggestion box located at the Student Center information desk.

Some form of change is needed because at present the service is still underutilized, although it has been growing since its inception in 1979. There are between 1400 and 1500 students who live on campus, yet there were only 12 calls made during bad weather, although the primary function of the service is to provide personal safety rather than transportation.

Male or female students desiring an escort can dial extension 5222, or use the campus emergency phones. These bright orange phones are located on sides of buildings, on poles, and in the new quarry bus shelter. They are a direct line to the police, and can be used without the necessity of remembering a phone number. Simply lift the receiver off of the hook and wait until the call is answered. Calling for an escort is a valid use of these phones. Chief Rich suggests making a point of looking for them, and noting the locations for future reference.

The escorts are students who are recruited by the SGA. Applicants come before an interview panel consisting of an SGA member and several police officers. A check is also made through campus police files.

Escort students respond only to direct calls to the police office and can be identified by their navy blue arm bands. They are also equipped with flashlights and whistles. Lieutenant Charles Paige of the campus police force stated, "These students are not police officers, and are not expected to behave as officers. They are directed to contact the police if a problem arises. The expectancy is that a male presence will be a deterrent to any possible problems." As a further protection to the student requesting an escort, a log is kept of the time of all calls, of the locations involved, and of the time the escort returned.

Night students, faculty and campus employees should be aware that the shuttle bus runs until the escort service takes over at 10:30. Earlier calls after dark will be answered by an officer if emergency service is not required elsewhere. Because of these priorities, a call before 10:30 may mean more of a wait.

Professors teaching night courses should see that people leave in groups to walk to the various parking lots or to wait for the shuttle and public buses. At least three women should walk together if there are not enough men in the class. Chief Rich is planning an information campaign to reach adjunct faculty and part-time night students to make them aware of the problems and services on campus.

If a female guest is leaving for another dorm or the parking lot, dorm students should insist on calling the escort service for her. A safer campus is everyone's responsibility.

Jayne Rich believes that "women should have the freedom to go out whenever they want. But they must be prepared, either through self defense training to deal with a confrontation, or by avoiding potential problems and walking with an escort. Across the country, the possibility of being victimized on a campus has increased. The escort service was put in motion to meet that threat. We'd rather have busy escorting people all night than need to assist one assault victim."

Ghouls and goblins abounded last week as students donned outlandish costumes to celebrate Halloween. This trio of trick or treaters did their celebrating at a party in the Clove Rd. apartments.

Health Fair? This student is anything but the picture of health after participating in the alcohol awareness seminar. The seminar, one of many during the day, demonstrated the effects of alcohol on the body. Volunteers, like the one pictured above, were asked to drink wine and have the alcohol level in their blood tested at various intervals to show how alcohol impairs body functions. The Health Fair also offered free eye testing, EKG's, Tay-Sacs disease tests, birth control information, and a host of other health related events.

am Friday, Oct 23, $60 was stolen from from locked office in Library. Among the items she had in her pocketbook were car keys, a wallet, a driver’s license, and an automobile registration.

Also on Wednesday, Oct 28, a typewriter and a table it was bolted to were reportedly stolen from a locked room in Russ Hall between 8:15 pm Tuesday, Oct. 27, and 8 am Wednesday, Oct. 28. On Thursday, Oct. 29, between 8:30 and 9:00 pm, a student had his unlocked 10-speed bicycle, worth about $100, stolen from a bike rack in front of Panter Gym.

Finally, on Friday, Oct 30, between 8:00 and 8:15 am, a student had her purse stolen in the front lobby of Richardson Hall. Among items she lost were a $30 calculator and a $10 make-up kit. The girl managed to recover her purse later in the day.

Two acts of criminal mischief were reported during the last week. On Saturday, Oct. 31, a male reported that a rock had been thrown through the windshield of his 1966 Chrysler in Lot 17 between 4 am the night before and 12 pm that day. Also on Saturday, Oct. 31, at about 11:32 pm, a car in Lot 20 had the driver’s side window smashed. It was undetermined if anything was stolen from the vehicle. The owner could not be located.

During last week's meeting, the Jewish Student Union was granted a Class III charter. Two MTA bills were brought up for immediate consideration. The first bill considered was an MTA appropriation to Tau Kappa Beta for a bus trip to the Montclair vs Glassboro football game on Nov. 13. The second bill considered was the appropriation of MTA funds to the Freeman Hall Dorm Council to sponsor a bus trip to see A Chorus Line on Nov. 11. Both bills passed.

Two new legislators were appointed. They were Mary Azeman and Lisa DelBiscaglia.

Among the topics discussed at last night's SGA meeting were the present status of not having an add session in registration, the Blanton Hall safety issue, and the lighting situation in the Clove Road parking lot. Also, Mr. McCagney, Asst. to Vice President of Administration and Finance, spoke to the legislators about the shuttle bus service. Another topic brought up at the meeting, included various aspects concerning the Winter Ball, sponsored by the College Life Union Board (CLUB).

In the President's Report, Sonj stated the result of the Ad Hoc committee formed to discuss the add/drop policy. Sonj reported an unofficial recommendation, stating that the implementation of a no add option of classes will probably stand. However, the committee intends to expand upon the definition of what constitutes a "valid reason" for adding classes. All recommendations of the Ad Hoc committee will be forwarded to the President's cabinet for final consideration.

The next item discussed concerned the safety of the railings in Blanton Hall. Sonj met with the architect who will look into rectifying the problem. He will then submit a proposal as to how this will be corrected, and will outline the cost of such a project.

The administration has agreed with the proposal to keep the lights on in the entire Clove Road parking lot until 1 a.m.

Concerning the shuttle bus issue, Mr. McCagney informed the legislators that three new buses will be purchased for the campus. He also stated that the three existing buses will not be disposed of, but rather used as back-ups, when need be. The buses will be conventional school buses, which will seat 32 people. There is still room for discussion concerning the provision for handicapped students. The estimated time of operation for the new shuttle buses is fall 1982.

An important issue brought to the legislators' attention was a bill which suggested an investigation of CLUB's Winter Ball sign-ups. David Breislaw answered questions concerning CLUB's actions. During the heated discussion which followed, CLUB's ethics concerning this matter were questioned. The issue was resolved by the submission of a bill which will look into the matter for future reference. Other matters taken care of were the appointments of three new legislators, Patty Rosas, Carol Ott, and Alvaro Tarrago. Also an MTA appropriation was given to the French Club for a trip to the Frick Collection. The meeting was adjourned at 7:20 p.m.

By Peter Prichard/Elinor Peters

The Career Services office in Life Hall receives requests from local employers for part-time help of all kinds. Filling unusual part-time and summer job openings with qualified students has become a challenge for the staff as well as an opportunity for students to uncover hidden talents. For an English major, there was a job writing romance novels, and a marketing major tested consumer reactions to a new soft drink in supermarkets.

For those students who prefer a minimum of social interaction, a local undertaker is always looking for someone to transport cadavers.

Admittedly, the majority of job openings listed with the Career Services office are the more conventional variety but often several interests can be combined into one job. A football fan who likes meeting new people might become an usher at Giant Stadium; a student who follows fashion trends as well as financial statements could keep the accounts for a Montclair dress shop; a flair for graphics and a love of the theater could mean a job designing flyers for the Whole Theater Company.

Throughout the year, most career fields are listed, and 5 to 10 new part-time listings are received each day. Most jobs have flexible hours and can be worked around a student's schedule during the week or done evenings or weekends depending on an employer's needs. Students are encouraged to register with the office and talk with Elinor Peters who coordinates the part-time job placement service.

Cutbacks

By Cheryl Otto

Students here are complaining about the lack of variety of courses being offered for the spring semester. Although the spring semester has traditionally had less offerings than in the fall, many students believe there is less course variety during the entire year.

Christy Santinovani, a sophomore, stated, "I'm very interested in psychology, and the county college I used to attend offers more in that department. There's not as much to choose from here at Montclair; that's why I'm transferring back to my old school." Complaints about the course listings are not unfounded, according to Lucinda Long, a political science professor. "They (the administration) don't want to pay for more teachers if professors retire or leave for other jobs, they very often don't replace them," she said.

Spaces left in the teaching staff mean that certain classes will not be taught. Because of the lack of money, though, new professors cannot be hired. A question often raised by students is since they are paying more each year to attend MSC, why can't they get the courses they want?

According to Dr. Minniberg, vice president of administration and finance, "They (the administration) don't want to pay for more teachers if professors retire or leave for other jobs, they very often don't replace them," she said.

The additional money the students pay is used just to keep the same level of educational quality. With the cutbacks put into effect by President Reagan, state schools are finding it extremely difficult to keep up their reputations as quality institutions.

Talking to the walls

Blanton Hall is a troublemaker. It has been delayed about 300 times by various construction workers' strikes, the men who work on the dorm have been accused of harassing anything that looks vaguely female, it has annoyed commuters ever since they blocked off what used to be the best parking lot on campus, and now it has a new problem. The SGA is concerned that the walls surrounding the walkways on the inside of the dorm are not high enough, and that students may fall over them. After observing the students on this campus at numerous parties, events, during classes, and just walking around campus, I tend to agree. This is definitely a clumsy campus.

You don't think so? Have you ever seen the accident reports? Neither have I. I have, however, a source who, even after four pitchers of beer in the Rat, insists that the accident total in the Quarry alone is 437 per week. And those are the ones not involving cars.

Actually, I have no sympathy for Blanton Hall residents at all. They never should have stolen our parking lot to build a dorm in the first place. It's the curse of the commuter striking once more, and believe me, the commuters cursed a hell of a lot when they found out a dorm was being built on prime parking spaces.

What all this is leading up to is merely this: I have, after a considerable amount of negotiation and a great deal of disbelief, managed, to obtain an interview with Blanton Hall.

"Is it true that your walls are unsafe?" I asked.

"Not a bit. They're made with the best plaster of paris and aluminum foil that money can buy. Reynolds Wrap, you know."

"Do you mean to say that the danger isn't just falling over the wall? The wall is so cheaply built that you can knock it down?"

"I didn't say that! Goddam journalists! They never quote you correctly. They won't collapse unless you get pushed into them with at least five pounds of force."

"I'm terribly sorry. So students can stop worrying about falling over the side?"

"I didn't say that either!"

"Then there is a danger, isn't there?"

"Are you kidding? Haven't you ever been to a Clove Rd. party or a beer blast? Webster hall was telling me that some of her residents were trying to do The Nutcracker Suite on the third floor ledges. They don't have any retaining walls there."

"Do you mean to say..."

"Certainly. And that's not counting the time those kids tried to see if all of the bed sheets from the 14th floor of Bohn Hall tied together would reach the ground."

"Did they?"

"No, but Bohn told me that the RA's caught the kids before they could climb down and find out. They were too drunk to see that far."

"Say, you mean you dorms talk to each other?"

"Of course we do. What else have we got to do? You don't really think we pay attention to what our residents do, do you?"

"Well, I thought you might be interested in some of the...er..."

"You have a foul mind. Listen, kid, we have an image to keep up. We're all named after somebody big. How would you like it if they named a dorm after you and it turned out to have the biggest mouth outside of the Mississippi River?"

"I hardly think they'd name a dorm after me, but I see your point."

"Don't be bashful. We've been hearing a lot about you, too. I know what your secret ambition is. Meryl State University, right?"

"That is quite enough! Thank you very much for the interview, and goodbye!"

Listen to your body talk

By Susan August

With the health fair being held this week here on campus, I thought it would be an appropriate time to say a few words about women's health care (though most of them can also apply to men).

Maintaining good health depends upon a number of things, including the belief that you have the right to question your physician(s) about your own body. If he/she says something you do not understand or prescribes treatment that you are uncertain about, you should not hesitate to ask him/her to clarify the situation for you or to seek a second opinion.

You also have the right to ask for, and receive, any information and/or records pertaining to your health. Obtaining your pediatric records is a good idea. Knowing which diseases you have had and not had can be important, as well as showing that you have contact with small children. Some diseases, such as chicken pox and measles, can cause more harm to adults than to children.

Good health also depends upon your own self-awareness. Being in touch, so to speak, with the difference between preventing an illness and suffering through one. Some simple routine examinations which can be done by yourself or by your doctor, are important in maintaining your health:

- Blood pressure should be taken yearly, and age 40 and twice yearly after that. Hypertension (high blood pressure) is a common disease and can only be detected by blood pressure testing.
- Urine should be tested for protein and sugar at least once a year. This test detects diabetes, kidney diseases, and other conditions, and can be done with your gynecological exam.
- A gynecological examination should be taken at least once a year. This includes a pelvic exam, rectal exam, breast exam, Pap smear (which will detect cervical cancer at its earliest stages), and a test for venereal diseases.

Women should examine their breasts at least once a month during the last week of your menstrual cycle. If you do not know how, you can ask your doctor to show you, or ask for a pamphlet explaining it. (planned Parenthood would have this type of information available.) A yearly breast exam by your physician should be included in your gynecological examination.

A blood test for anemia should be performed once a year from childhood. Anemia can cause weakness, headaches, and drowsiness. In mild cases, it can be remedied by maintaining a proper diet. Eye exams should be obtained every two of three years, before the age of 40 and every year thereafter.

Dental exams should be taken every six months until age 30; after that yearly checks are adequate.

An important thing to remember here is to take responsibility for your own health. Never passively accept a physician’s opinion if you are not clear about it, or try to be aware of what is normal for your body; it will make it easier to detect problems in early stages.

Good health is not an isolated situation. You should keep yourself informed on major issues that affect it; don’t think, for example, that industrial poisons from local factories only affect those who work in the industry.

Practicing preventive medicine is the best way to protect your body from diseases and other ailments. What it really entails is simply being fair to your body: eating properly, exercising regularly, getting enough sleep, not smoking, not drinking excessively and taking drugs only when they are absolutely necessary for treatment.

You are probably thinking, “Sure, that’s all easy to say, but this is a college.” And it is a point well taken, especially after eating in the cafeteria. But improvement will not start on its own. One of my fantasies (which really is not that improbable) is to see a few nutrition majors and a few business or management majors collaborate on a new program for the cafeteria, and then present it to the manager.

If you listen to your body when it warns you, and let it perform its functions normally without artificial assistance, it will provide many more healthy years of living. Remember the old adage: “You can’t take it ($) with you.” If you are not in good health, all else is of little importance.

Harrassment article praised...

To the editor,

The editorial concerning the harassment of female students by Blanton Hall construction workers in the Oct. 22 issue of The Montclarion is without a doubt the best article I have ever seen in The Montclarion. I am absolutely outraged that female students have to tolerate the sexual comments and harassment of construction workers who pose as members of a civilized society.

I strongly urge Jerome Quinn, Director of Institutional Planning and Raymond Stover, Dean of Housing, to do their utmost to stop this harassment. This problem is not a small, insignificant one but is serious and must only deserve, but requires, immediate and forceful attention. It can’t be excused with some sexist phrase like “men will be men.” Any type of sexual harassment, whether in the classroom or in the parking lot is deplorable and exactly comparable to physical abuse because of the potential psychological damage that can occur.

The implied attitudes of both Jerome Quinn and Dean Stover seem to be that nothing can be done to stop this problem short of the person being harassed pressing charges. I wonder if this problem would continue if it was placed in such an unfavorable light as your article portrayed.

A rousing tribute to the U.S.O.

By Stephen Kantrowitz

"Praise the Lord, we're on a mighty mission! All aboard! We ain't goin' fishin'! Praise the Lord and pass the ammunition and we'll all stay free." Although they couldn't carry guns, they fought as hard as a war as our soldiers. The U.S.O. Show pays a rousing tribute to the men and women who worked so hard to keep our soldiers happy.

Although the music and performers were wonderfully spirited, the show itself could not have totally saved the war effort. Conceived and directed by Philip Polito, The U.S.O. Show takes us on a musical journey through the World War II years. The production is dedicated to the Spirit of the U.S.O.—the soldiers in greasepaint—so we must assume they are presenting the show as the soldiers themselves would have seen it.

This is where difficulties arise. Polito's conception of a 1940's theatrical troupe isn't fully visualized. Film clips of soldiers marching and other war memorabilia were an interesting touch, yet it's hard to believe our troopers would have sat placidly by the watched movies of themselves when what they really craved was a little "hubba-hubba—hubba." From the female members of the troupe.

It's also very difficult to believe that the performers in the troupe interacted so sparsely. These people were bonded and joined by a strong unifying desire; to please and bring happiness to our lonely soldiers. Isn't it just natural that they would talk among themselves, laugh among themselves, cry among themselves, and express other human emotions? With one exception (the ending, where they learn the war has ended) this never occurred. We couldn't accept them as characters because they simply weren't. They were just instruments used to perform the dynamic and inspiring songs.

Among the character "types" were Constance Marsh (Shelia Smith), a lavish, legendary figure described by one critic as "able to move the audience to tears by her recitation of the names in the telephone book." Howie Golden (Gordon Connell), a pudgy, cutesy, old-timer who tended to doze between his songs; and John Terry (John Sloman), a handsome young crooner.

The performers belted out number after number in a dazzling fashion. Songs like "Swinging on a Star," "When Johnny Comes Marching Home," "Don't Sit Under the Apple Tree," and the "Boogie Woogie Bugle Boy" provided the audience with many fond memories and lots of hand clappin', lyric shoutin', enthusiasm. Many of these songs were important to most people and, for that reason, particularly enjoyable. Each member of the cast was blessed with a strong, lively voice most appropriate to the content and style of the music. They expertly expressed the tone of each number whether it was comical, lyrical, or simple uplifting. The singers were quite capable of doing this with style and finesse.

Susan Rush was fabulous as the slightly wacky Thelma Murphy. She was a gal who delighted in teasing the boys in the infantry. In "I Wanna Get Married," Thelma made known her frustration in landing a hubby, "I wanna start doing whatever Pop used to spell!" Also delightful was the glamorous and sexy Carole Todd, played by Susan Edwards. She had a voice that could belt out any note, and an enthusiasm not matched by anyone. Although the songs provided an incredible amount of satisfaction, their order appeared to be haphazard.

The cast of The USO Show salutes the 40th anniversary of the American U.S.O.

By Geoffrey L. Gould

Rarely does a sequel surpass its predecessor as much as Halloween II has. With about a two-minute overlap where Halloween left off, the murderous night Michael Myers came home after 15 years in an institution for the insane continues.

Jamie Lee Curtis and British actor Donald Pleasence resume their roles of Laurie Strode and Dr. Loomis. At the end of Halloween, the silent masked figure insisted on not staying dead, albeit stabbed, poked in the eye, and shot six times at point blank range, thus falling from a second story balcony. Picking up from that moment, John Carpenter and Debra Hill's script leads Myers to the clinic where Laurie is taken in shock to finish off what he'd missed in the first film.

Rick Rosenthal takes over the director's seat for Halloween II, and his style of cinematic suspense is a roaring. The super-strong indestructible killer barely strides as he approaches a victim, and is frequently seen walking through the clinic via the security close circuit TVS, while no one in the film does.

The Haddonfield Clinic is totally ominous. Its lights, down to half or less power, give a more claustrophobic air to the late-night surroundings. Corridors appear to elongate as they stalks his next victim. John Carpenter's music (with Alan Howarth) clamors metal against metal in a teeth-chattering manner as Laurie realizes that her pursuer is a lot closer than is healthy for her.

Pleasence's character of Dr. Loomis, who is pursuing his escaped patient, believe himself to be the epitome of evil incarnate and tends to overact (getting close to hysteria at times). But it works. Loomis' obsession even leads to the accidental death of an innocent teenager in the same costume as Myers.

An odd and barely noticeable flaw arises, actually in both films. At the beginning of Halloween, Myers killed his sister when he was eight years old, and he was put away for fifteen years. However, in that film, when he awakes from his decade-und-a-half coma, he is able to drive a car, and he now knows about an ancient Druid god whose name he writes on a blackboard with his own blood.

How does he acquire this knowledge? It has been in catatonia for fifteen years? The question does no damage to the film as it mounts from one scare to another. The suspense almost goes beyond human endurance in some spots. Anyone who might remotely help Laurie to survive is eliminated (in some truly original ways).

In some spots 'actual' gore (the type we are prone to actually see), is more unnerving than the stabbings or stranglings. A horrifying reminder of actual Halloween danger is presented as a mother brings her child to the clinic, his mouth filling lustily from a razor that is embedded in his mouth. (This is relieved by the director, cunningly asking them to "take a seat" as the boy proceeds to bleed on the floor).

The climax generates scream after scream as it becomes apparent that this time the seemingly immortal Myers is where he failed at first. Escapes are hairbreadth as Laurie tries to elude him, even though she has a hairline-fractured ankle and she has to fight off the sedation that slows her down.

In all this, Myers, referred to as Myer's men, and the Haddonfield Clinic are finally out of ideas. The question does no damage to the film as it mounts from one scare to another. The suspense goes beyond human endurance in some spots. Anyone who might remotely help Laurie to survive is eliminated (in some truly original ways).

A contrast in beliefs

by Bob Fitzgerald

Grace is a down-to-earth comedy about life, God, and beliefs in general. The characters in this play are both very real and believable.

Grace, portrayed by Scotty Black, works in a laundromat in Oklahoma City, Oklahoma—infact, the entire first act takes place in this setting. Grace, an outspoken realist who believes in nothing, is not afraid to say what is on her mind. In the following description of herself, Grace admits that her mouth is uncontrollable—"You see, there's just no control over it. And then there's my mouth. Anyhow, my mouth is kind of like a pet I can't housebreak." Black is absolutely marvelous in her role. Her western accent, wrinkled clothes, and general sloppiness keeps her character in tune with reality.

Catherine Byers, who plays Mae, a Christian Baptist who tried to put the love of God into the heart of Grace, is a riot. Though her character is genuinely sincere, you can't help laughing at her simple-mindedness and hypocrisies. Mae's beliefs are in direct contrast to Grace's. She believes in God, that He watches over us, and that the world is a beautiful place no matter what. Yet she escapes about little, petty things and her character on a one-woman cabaret. Catherine Byers, along with her musical partner Mary Rose, performs songs for audiences. In the play, Mary Rose fulfills our conception of the typical conservative, God fearing western hick. These three women (Grace, Mae and Rose) perform together splendidly.

Sissy (Jane Fleiss) is unlike any of the other characters. She is a young, attractive wanderer, whose dream is to be Miss Oklahoma. But in reality she is no more than a prostitute. Though Mae and Rose are set on saving Sissy's soul by bringing her into their homes and church, Grace is against this. Grace knows that Sissy is no good for God, and that she can't amount to much no matter what, because she was just the same when she was younger.

The second act ends in a show of strong emotions unlike that of the first. The first act takes place in the golden hour, with Grace on her knees begging for a belief in something, anything. In the opening of the second act we find Grace has finally left Oklahoma City (something that she has always wanted to do) and has moved into a resort in Tucson, Arizona. She was able to do this because she was taking care of a rich woman (Mrs. Meers) who had become a vegetable. The part of Mrs. Meers, played by Hope Cameron, was small, but added great significance to the conclusion of the play.

The part of Mr. Patterson, a rich and slyly British playboy, was played by James Higgins. His interactions with Grace were both funny and serious.

Grace's jokes and sarcasms throughout the play make more of a cry of helplessness and loneliness than anything else. At one point, during which God saves, Grace replies that "if God saves, it must be for a reason." Whether this reasoning is true or not, Grace struggles to find herself and to be someone. And at the end a realization finally comes, shown best in her statement, "We can't help who we are, but we can help what we become."

Grace is now being performed Off-Broadway at the American Palace Theater, on East 44th Street in New York City. Everyone can relate to Director Peter Thompson has done a wonderful job of bringing Jane Stanton Hitchcock's Grace to life. It shouldn't be missed.

Halloween II

in the credits as 'The Shape', never hurrins. This frightening aspect, along with his absolute silence, exaggerates his menace. He knows what he's doing and exactly how to go about it, especially when he plays a part even after six more shots.

This gruesome creation of Carpenter will long be infesting many nightmares to come. If you thought Halloween was frightening at all, think of that film as the introduction. Now the story really begins. Now that we know who he is, we encounter non-stop horror.

Better yet, think of the shape as the finale. Maybe the hazey cover flap... Halloween II doesn't just scare, it absolutely terrifies.

New format for women’s tourney

With the merger of the Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women (AIAW) and the National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) changes have been made in the format to determine the women’s national basketball champion. Old Dominion University has been chosen to host the first NCAA Division I-A Women’s Basketball “Final Four” Championships.

Previous to this year, the AIAW rules divided the country into eight regions with the top eight teams in each region playing a mini-tournament. The winners of each region would advance to play against the other champions in a final tournament.

The new format will be conducted in a similar way the men’s championships are run. It will begin March 12-14 with 32 teams playing first round games at the site of one of the competing institutions.

Regional championships for the east, midwest, midwest and west title to be held at neutral sites across the country will follow on March 18-21. The tournament will then move onto Norfolk, Va., for the coming season. No experience is necessary. If interested, contact head coach Mary Reilly at 228-4383, or stop by the gym for the coming season. No experience is necessary. MSC will be faced with teams like Rutgers and Cheyney State in getting a bid for the tourney. Nor A Lynn Finch, Chairperson for the NCAA Women’s Basketball Committee and Assistant Athletic Director at Old Dominion State College, noted the tournament dates, “will be going head-to-head with the AIAW tournament and possibly even head-to-head on national television coverage. A great many schools will be watching to possibly decide which road to follow in 1982-83.”

Shore Boys and Bohners win titles

The Shore Boys (SB) and the Bohners each captured the respective titles in the finals of the Silc football league held last Thursday. The SB won the men’s league with a 24-18 OT win over Wood A.C. while the Bohners trounced the Ultimate 56-12 in the co-ed game.

Frank Bender hit Herb Himsel with an 18 yard TD strike to put the SB up 18-12 with 23 seconds left in the game. On the last play of the game, Wood A.C. threw a desperation pass that bounced off the defenders chest and was caught by the receiver for a six pointer. The extra point was missed to leave the game tied at 18.

After an exchange of possessions in OT, Bender hit Skip Vaught with a 35 yard TD pass to end the game. In the co-ed game, the Bohners jumped out to an early 17-0 lead and never looked back. On their first possession they drove the length of the field before Kitty White caught the first of her two TD passes. On the Ultimate’s first possession, Bohner defensive back Debbie Alexander picked off a pass and carried it to the four yard line. On the first play, White caught her second TD of the night. The Ultimate made it close with two quick scores before the end of the first half making the score 24-12.

The Bohners held on the first series and drove to the Ultimate four on a 45 yard Chris Enny pass to Lisa DiBiseglie. DiBiseglie would catch the TD pass to up the score to 34-12. Ronnie Gudewicz and Yvonne Wood round out the Bohner scoring to make the final score 56-12. This was the third consecutive championship for the senior- filled Bohners.

MSC quarterback Mark Casale hit receiver Kenny Oliver with a 19-yard touchdown pass with 44 seconds left on the clock to give the Indians a 27-23 come-from-behind win over Trenton State (TSC). The victory kept MSC unbeaten in the New Jersey State College Athletic Conference (NJSCAC), and still in contention for a Division III playoff berth.

The MSC offense was carried by the arm of Casale and the toe of placekicker Dan Deneher. Casale completed 15 of 35 passes for a total of 241 yards. His aerials carried the field before he hit Oliver with the winner. Deneher kicked field goals of 40 yard FG by Scott Shirk. Sellari covering 14 yards, and a 40 yard FG by Scott Shirk.

In the second period, the Indians took the lead on a Kleinkauf pass to Bob Sellari covering 14 yards, and a 40 yard FG via the pass and that came on a wide receiver position. The Indians have an outstanding defense led by Joe Banaciski, a junior from South River High School standout has an excellent shot at both the single season and career interception marks.

Indian Shorts: MSC record now stands at 7-1 while TSC is an even 4-4. TSC was the defending NJSCAC champion...Bob Vannoy gained 35 yards to move to 5 yards away from winning high school record, good for second place in the New Jersey State College Athletic Conference race. MSC, Banaciski was hurt in the third game of the 1979 season and missed the rest of the year. He returned last year, got three interceptions and played a key role in the Indians three conference games.

MSC, Banaciski was hurt in the third game of the 1979 season and missed the rest of the year. He returned last year, got three interceptions and played a key role in the Indians fine 8-2 record, good for second place in the New Jersey State College Athletic Conference race.

Injured in pre-season practice this year, Banaciski broke into the lineup in the big win over East Stroudsburg State and has been picking off passes at a rate of one per game. As the Indians move down the stretch of the 1981 season, the former South River High School standout has an excellent shot at both the single season and career interception marks.

The present record for a single season is nine, set by John Brunelli in 1970, while the career mark is 14, also set by Brunelli.

One of the big reasons for the outstanding defensive record of MSC during the current football season has been the superb secondary led by Joe Banaciski.

Through the first seven games, the Indians have allowed only one touchdown via the pass and that came on a streak catch last Saturday in the Pride Bowl lost to Central Connecticut State, 10-3.

Banaciski, a junior from South River, leads the Indians in interceptions with six this year and has upped his career mark to 10 for his first three years. At 6-0 and 186 pounds, Banaciski has all the tools for an outstanding cornerback. He is quick, runs well, and has a fine pair of hands.

A starter as a freshman at MSC, Banaciski was hurt in the third game of the 1979 season and missed the rest of the year. He returned last year, got three interceptions and played a key role in the Indians fine 8-2 game that week when they travel to Glassboro to take on the 4-4 Profs (3-1 in the conference).
