Bookstore stalls

By Linda Weichenrieder and Rob Thibault

There were more students standing in line than books on the shelves this week as multiple problems plagued the campus bookstore and delayed the delivery of textbooks.

Doug Miller, director of the Faculty Student Co-op, which operates the bookstore, and Paul McCormick, manager of the bookstore, could not pinpoint any one specific problem that caused the delayed deliveries, but said that it was a combination of problems.

According to Miller, a series of unusual circumstances combined to create delays in the ordering and delivering of books. Miller said that the construction on campus, installation of a new phone system, and the poor weather of recent weeks have all combined to create the unusually high number of late books, but could not say which was the major factor in the delays.

"We're still digging out the causes and won't really know what went wrong until Friday when our report is completed," Miller said.

He added, "The blame cannot be placed on anyone person," and that the remaining books should be in by the end of the week. However, Elliott Munsberg, vice-president for administration and finance, explained that many of the orders for the bookstore weren't in on time. "The bookstore is 90 percent to blame for not having these books on time," he said. "They are, however, now using rental trucks and their own cars to get the books delivered. I can see that this entire situation is a disaster. The bookstore really has to correct its methods of operations."

While McCormick is submitting his report concerning the delay to MSC President David W.D. Dickson, the Faculty Senate is considering its own investigation. Kay Wilkins, Faculty Senate chairperson, said they are protesting a resolution to the Board of Trustees asking the board to institute an

New fee hikes may be approved

Tonight at 7:30 p.m. in Kops Lounge, Russ Hall, the Board of Trustees will hold its first meeting of the semester. Topics to be discussed include a resolution to increase dormitory fees, a proposal to remove the limit on Student Center fees, and the proposed amending of the campus police.

The board, according to Susan L. Student Government Association president, is considering a proposal to raise dormitory fees by 50 percent. This would raise the cost of on-campus housing to $2,250 per year, not including the S704 for a required minimum meal plan.

Lai said that the board will also consider removing the limit on Student Center fees. Each semester students are currently charged $6.25 per credit up to a maximum of 12 credits. If the proposal is accepted, students would be charged an additional $6.25 per each credit over 12.

The board will also address a proposal to arm the campus police. In a memo to the college community, Dr. David W.D. Dickson, president of the college, recommended that lieutenants and sergeants be armed in the following situations: when large sums of money are being transported within the campus or to outside banks; when campus events drawing large crowds of people require the presence of armed police; and when the president deems the use of arms necessary in exceptional circumstances.

Helen Ochs, secretary to the Board of Trustees, said that Dr. Ernest Max, chairman of the board, has indicated that because there are differences among board members concerning the issue, there must be at least eight board members present at the meeting. If fewer than eight members attend tonight's meeting, the vote will be postponed until the required number is in attendance.
Music scene update

As the semester begins, so does the preparation of the many events that will take place on campus this year. This column will keep students up to date on the activities of organizations that involve themselves with music and musical events.

Class One Concerts will hold a general membership meeting today at 4 p.m., 4th floor of the Student Center in the meeting rooms. Keeping their budget in mind, Class One is hoping to put on three concerts this semester. They arc looking for help from the student body to preach their viewpoint but they don’t feel that they should impose it on others.

Candidate addresses students

Frank Askin, congressional candidate in the 11th district of N.J., says he’s appealing to students to register to vote for the draft, as his opponent is doing. Frank Askin, a Rutgers law professor, is challenging Rep. Joseph Minish for the Democratic Congressional nomination in the 11th District of N.J. On February 1, 1982, Askin spoke to MSC students in the Student Center meeting rooms. He also plans to speak on March 1, March 29, and May 3.

Askin obtained his law degree at Rutgers Law School in 1966 and joined the faculty upon graduation. He enjoys teaching in his non-traditional atmosphere of a clinical law office.

The candidate feels that students have a lot at stake in the 1982, elections and feels that he has a program to meet their needs. Frank Askin explained that he is an “advocate for the environment.” If elected, he will voice the need for world peace and pressure for a halt to the arms race. “I’m an advocate for privacy and a free society,” he said.

As for the draft issue, Askin explained that he is an “advocate for the environment.” If elected, he will voice the need for world peace and pressure for a halt to the arms race. “I’m an advocate for privacy and a free society,” he said. Askin states that the latter is the least effective and most dangerous source of power. The candidate wants the USA to find energy independence so that we would no longer be “hostage to Arab countries.” When asked for his platform on abortion, Askin stated, “It should be a woman’s choice. I don’t consider the fetus a life. A woman should be the one to decide whether or not she wants to give birth,” he said. He respects the rights of others to preach their viewpoint but he doesn’t feel that they should impose it on others.

I don’t consider the fetus a life. A woman should be the one to decide whether or not she wants to give birth,” he said. He respects the rights of others to preach their viewpoint but he doesn’t feel that they should impose it on others.
Setbacks still haunt Blanton

By John Papastrat

After approximately two years of delays and complications, the much-anticipated opening of Blanton Hall has arrived. The building is impressive and often awe-inspiring. However, as with any new structure there were some problems.

According to Steven Fleischer, Blanton resident and student maintenance worker, residents in Blanton Hall had experienced some problems. According to Fleischer, the most common inconvenience was lack of hot water and/or heat.

Fleischer said that a number of residents had door locks that were not working properly. He said key makers and maintenance people on campus were constantly available and that he was satisfied with their performance.

On the weekend of its opening, Blanton Hall was struck by a complete power failure that lasted about two hours. The blackout occurred on Saturday night, Jan. 23, at about 11 p.m., forcing students who had moved in to be evacuated from the building.

After the opening of Blanton Hall, maintenance people were working to correct a fault in the structural design of the building on the northern side. Pipes in this part of the building were dangerously overexposed to cold and the high winds often felt on campus.

Before residents moved into Blanton one major break did occur but was quickly repaired.

To ensure against further breaks in these pipes caused by the severe cold, insulation and sealing is being added around the pipes.

Fleischer said that a number of residents had door locks that were not working properly. He said key makers and maintenance people on campus were constantly available and that he was satisfied with their performance.

Fleischer stated that state and local fire marshals have approved the Blanton Hall fire prevention systems. Each dormitory room has two sprinklers with a smoke and heat detector. In addition, compartmentalized smoke detectors trigger hallway doors to close and prevent smoke in one part of the building from spreading into other areas. These doors close automatically, but still can be opened manually for the safe passage of residents.

According to Fleischer, the most common inconvenience was lack of hot water and/or heat.

Fleischer said each dormitory room is heated individually. To correct the problems of no hot water or heat, proper valves had to be turned to activate the heating process. He added that maintenance authorities for Blanton Hall did not activate the heating and water systems for absolutely all the rooms prior to when residents began moving in.

According to Fleischer, Saturday’s power failure was initially caused by a short in an elevator motor engine. This malfunction caused the main circuit breaker in the building to fail, leading to the blackout. At this point the emergency generator activated itself, turning on lights in hallways and exits. After several minutes these lights failed because the internal generator was connected to the same circuit breaker that failed when the malfunction in the elevator engine occurred.

One-hundred and twenty students from eight of the 10 state colleges and universities gathered last weekend at the Holiday Inn in Wayne to discuss the reconceptualization of the New Jersey Student Association (NJS), and to reorganize a statewide student body in N.J.

The conference began Friday night with two keynote speakers. Assemblyman Byron Bar and Department of Higher Education representatives Brant Leaf both addressed a general assembly session Saturday was highlighted by a heated constitutional debate. The representatives debated the new bylaws for nearly three hours.

There was also a variety of workshops on Saturday, ranging from subjects like better programming to public relations for student organizations.

MSC’s SGA had three representatives at the conference. Legislators, Class One officers, and executive board members comprised the MSC delegation. Sonja Lal, executive vice-chair of the NJSA, said she felt that “the delegation accomplished all that they had set to do at the conference.” She added, “We wanted to inform and educate our SGAs, as well as create momentum for a state student association, and I think we were very successful.”

The delegates convened again on Sunday to ratify the constitution, agree on a fee structure, and elect new executive officers.

After two hours of debate, the NJSA representatives from various SGAs agreed to allocate $10 per full-time equivalent student from their individual SGA budgets to the NJSA. “The debate divided us for a while, but it was a healthy argument, and we all united once the vote was taken,” Colalucci said.

Elections of new executive officers were also held. Peter Sklank, of the New Jersey Institute of Technology, was elected chief. Bill Solomon of MSC was appointed vecchio, and Raul Mirea of Jersey City State College was elected treasurer, and Gretchen Feldman from Glassboro State College was chosen recorder.

The officers will serve until June, 1982.

Career Corner

By Eileen Bruck

Beginning on Feb. 1, and almost every day thereafter throughout the spring, employers will send representatives to the MSC campus to interview graduating students. This process is called recruitment. Some employers, such as Prudential, Xerox, MidAtlantic Bank, Habbs, Bell Labs, and American Cyanamid return year after year. Others, such as Saks Fifth Avenue, Continental Plastics, and General Public Utilities are coming for the first time. A sample of job titles which will be recruited are area management trainee, programmer analyst, actuary, chemist, customer service representative, staff auditor, sales representative, and assistant buyer. The dates of February on-campus interviews and information about the requirements of the visiting employer are posted in the Career Services office and are available in a handbook.

Recruitment activities are a direct reflection of current job trends. Hence, the high demand for business and technical graduates. Nevertheless, in February several companies including Seeco, First Jersey National Bank, Mutual Benefit, and Xerox will be looking for capable students with a keen interest in their business rather than those with a specific major.

You are eligible for recruitment if you are currently enrolled MSC student completing your degree in May and available for employment after graduation. Those interested must be registered with the Career Services office and should follow the procedures for on-campus interviews. Because these interviews start in February, seniors should complete the required forms and provide the office with copies of their resume as soon as possible.

As is the case in all interview situations, preparation is important. To help seniors prepare for these interviews, Career Services offers a series of interviewing and resume writing seminars. It is strongly urged that students attend these seminars prior to signing up for interviews. Students should also study all information that is available about the employer, and should know why they are being interviewed, by whom, and for what purpose.

The on-campus recruitment program is one way available for seniors to conduct an effective job search. Information on other job search resources and strategies will be featured in future columns and is currently available in Career Services, Life Hall.

Flint on holistic health

By Harold Fine

Marcha Flint, Associate Professor of Anthropology at Montclair State College, will be speaking on the topic of “Holistic Health-A Mid-life Perspective.” The program, to be hosted by the Holistic Foundation of Northern Jersey, will be held Monday, February 8, at 8 p.m. in St. Peter’s Church in Mountain Lakes.

Calling herself a human biologist as well as a physical anthropologist, Flint has conducted ten years of research in the area of reproductive biology and the middle-age period of life.

Flint urges middle-aged people to do exercises especially brisk walking to increase their metabolic rate. She emphasizes that your nutrition and diet must be closely observed. She also suggests no sugar and low red meat intake. Flint also considers caffeine, fat, and oils to be deleterious.

Flint says, “I get tremendous joy from teaching middle-aged students who return to school who contribute greatly to the classroom.” She’s firm about wishing to see people of all ages continuing to educate themselves. She likes to strongly encourage all people to be fully aware of their whole selves, and to be conscious of maintaining a feeling of wellness and health. The ways in which to achieve this, she contends, are by keeping linked with people and groups, and developing and maintaining those ties while being open to meeting new people.

Rat renovations and video vitality

By Robert M. Pignataro

During the winter break the gameroom and the Rat went through a few changes that have made them both better places to meet people, test your skills, grab a bite to eat or drink, or just hang around between classes!

In the gameroom the operational control desk was redesigned. According to Harold Ostrom, Student Center business service director, the previous setup took up too much space, and the new one gives the attendant a better view. Thus, he/she can better assist with any problems.

Over in the Rathskeller the most obvious change was the addition of all new tables and chairs. Ostrom said, "The chairs are comfortable and the tables have graffiti-proof tops." In the south corner a TV area was set up so the students can enjoy their favorite soaps.

Pingpong addicts will be delighted to know that new tables have been added in the gameroom, and a partition has been put up behind the tables to rid the players of the fear of running into someone.

According to Ostrom, Rathskeller patrons can expect a DJ two or three nights a week, and more entertainment on Thursday nights and on weekends. In addition, movies, such as Our Gang and The Three Stooges, will be shown throughout the semester.

Behind the partition in the gameroom, a lane of video games has been added. Some games are new and some were relocated for easier access and less congestion. Ostrom said, "We like to keep up with the latest games." When asked what the most popular games were, he listed Pac-Man, Qix, and Donkey Kong.

Cappa took over managerial control of the Rat last semester and maintains an open-door policy for students suggestions. Cappa said, "The room belongs to the students." He expects the addition of a new jukebox soon and will introduce a nonalcoholic wine this semester.

Ostrom hopes the changes in the gameroom will increase revenues by at least 10 percent.

The MSG campus police made nine arrests for various offenses over the last two months. Seven of these were in December.

On Tuesday, Dec. 1, a male was arrested for criminal sexual contact based on an incident with a female on Monday, Nov. 23, on Webster Road.

On Thursday, Dec. 10, two males were arrested in the Student Center for use and possession of cocaine.

On Saturday, Dec. 12, a male was arrested while tampering with the ignition wires of a 1964 Chev. Although he assaulted a police officer and escaped campus police headquarters the day he was arrested, he was picked up again on Thursday, Jan. 28, by Essex County police while he was in court for another matter.

On Monday, Dec. 14, a male was arrested at his home and charged with theft for stealing batteries from three cars on MSC lots. Two batteries were taken from cars in Lot 22 on Dec. 9, and one battery was taken from a car in Lot 21 on Friday, Dec. 11.

On Tuesday, Dec. 15, an employee in the Freeman Hall cafeteria was arrested for the theft of silverware from the cafeteria. Finally, on Monday, Dec. 21, a male was arrested in the Student Center for selling stolen books. Another male, who was also involved in the selling of the stolen books and who originally avoided arrest, was arrested on Friday, Jan. 22.

Campus police also reported that within the last month, five thefts and one attempted theft have occurred.

On Friday, Jan. 8, around 4 p.m., two 8"x10" paintings were reported missing from an exhibition in a lounge in the library. One painting was valued at about $200, and the other was valued at about $300.

Also on Friday, Jan. 8, eight pieces of carpet to be used for the new Student Center Annex were reported to have been stolen between 5 p.m. the night before and 8 a.m., that morning. The carpet was stolen from a locked area, and door chains were found cut off.

On Thursday, Jan. 21, at about 7:40 p.m., a female who was giving piano lessons in a room in the Music Building had her purse stolen. Police officers were in pursuit of the suspect, but only managed to recover the purse with the money missing.

On Tuesday, Jan. 26, about 4 p.m., a male had his wallet with about $500 in cash stolen from her while she was in line for people in Finley Hall.

Finally, on Thursday, Jan. 21, at about 12:20 p.m., it was noticed that someone had attempted to remove a coin box from an ice machine on the third floor of Bohn Hall.

Sun provides a bright future

By Dianne Hähner

Solar is cooking at MSC! A two-year research project is presently underway in MSC's industrial arts department. The project is the result of a private government grant awarded through the Department of Energy (D.O.E.) in order to further the study of solar collectors.

John Henry and Noel Gamble, co-authors of the grant, are working with Scott Cassidy in the research and development of a specific type of solar collector. They type the three are working on, according to Henry is well suited for residential use.

Henry, awarded a B.S. in industrial studies in '81, is presently teaching energy-related courses as a graduate assistant in the industrial studies department. According to Henry there are three types of collectors. The first is a flat plate collector which simplifies flat collecting or absorbing heat. The second is a concentrating collector which is curved to reflect and concentrate solar rays on to an absorbing tube. This type of collector requires a tracking device allowing it to follow the sun on a daily basis. The third is a concentrating collector which is bent in the shape of a 'w' and does not require the tracking device.

It is through research based on this 'w' shaped collector that Henry, Gamble and Cassidy hope to develop a low cost, efficient solar collector that could be available for the average layman to purchase," said Henry. He added, "Our goal is to provide domestic hot water and space heating at a relatively inexpensive cost. Cassidy, a graduate assistant in the chemistry department presently working in toxicology, explained that "the operating costs of our model would be minimal." He noted that "homeowners using such a model could expect about an 80 percent decrease in hot water and space heating bills, as compared to conventional gas and oil methods."

Gamble, a senior industrial studies student with a math minor, explained that the "w" shaped model is able to absorb more heat at higher temperatures, than flat plate collectors. He added that because the model the three are working with does not require a tracking device, it is much less expensive than models based on the tracker. Gamble estimates that the tracker alone costs approximately $800.

Cassidy added, "While our model does not track the sun on a daily basis, with a simple screwdriver adjustment every couple of months, the collector can be tilted to follow the sun over the course of the year." Cassidy stated that because of the nature of the collector and the required tilt adjustment, some research as to the orientation of the house would be necessary prior to installation. This research would reveal what location would allow for maximum efficiency.

Gamble said, "According to the terms of the grant, we are entitled to approximately two years and $10,000 worth which to complete our research." Cassidy and Henry concur that the three will complete their research well before the designated deadline.

Throughout their research Gamble, Cassidy and Henry have been receiving technical advice from several MSC faculty members acting as consultants. These consultants are Dr. George Olsen, chairman of the industrial arts department, Dr. Kasner, associate professor in the chemistry department, Dr. Walencik, a professor in industrial education, Dr. Baum, of the math department, and Dr. Earl of industrial studies.

In addition to the assistance offered by these consultants, MSC's Alumni Association is presently considering assisting the three young researchers with additional funds. These funds would allow for an important trip to the National Technical Information Service (N.T.I.S.), a solar energy research center containing information not available from other sources.

Cassidy, Gamble and Henry, obvious proponents of solar energy, are affirming that belief through their research efforts. The researchers would like to see a greater awareness among consumers concerning solar energy, but they admit it is difficult to differentiate between those seeking their own financial betterment, and those seeking to advance solar energy.

In an era of decreasing energy resources, increasing energy costs, and increasing interdependence of nations due to the ever-pressing energy crunch, solar energy offers some degree of independence to the energy consumer. Through their research efforts Cassidy, Gamble and Henry are doing their part to move toward the day when the American dream changes from "a chicken in every pot" to "a solar collector on every roof."

The Student Government Association (SGA) meeting began last night as Phill Karali, vice president, presented the financial status of the Montclair Transportation Authority (MTA) fund. There is at present $1,847 in the account. This money is available to any students who wish to charter a bus for a group activity.

Sonjui Lai, SGA President, followed the statement by giving her president's report. Nine items of “importance” were brought to the attention of the legislature. These items included the New Jersey Student Association (NJSA) leadership conference, the safety of the railings in Blantont Hall, the bookstore problem, the eventual rise in Student Development rates, the upcoming Alcohol Awareness Day, the presence of a legislator on the college's Campus Development Committee, the progress of the Senior Overall Committee, and a report from Craig Stugart, Board of Trustees representative.

Of these, there were five issues that Lai stressed. The NJSA leadership conference was held this past weekend.

He further stated that along with the lease the telecommunications companies would offer educational opportunities for students. "Channel 41, which operates the disc on Clove Road, provides the college with two student internships as well as 65 free spots on the air each year," Quinn said.

"The lease for the land used by Channel 41," Quinn stated, "is $100,000 a year." He added that the cost of the leases now being considered would be adjusted upward in view of inflation.

Dr. Elliot Minnberg, vice president for administration and finance, said that "cash income raised through the lease would be applied to student fee production help to keep down fees."

During which the NJSA executive board was elected, the construction passed, and a lee structure was established. Both Lai and Stugart announced a meeting of the board. This meeting will discuss the new fundraiser proposal. This proposal would only allow lieutenants, sergeants, and the chief to be armed. Also to be discussed at this meeting will be the college's mission statement. This proposal will limit the number of students enrolled in business/professional studies and liberal arts. The meeting will be tonight at 7:30 p.m. in Rush Hall Kops Lounge.

Another issue discussed concerned the railings in Blanton Hall. Angel Ramos and John LoBasso, SGA freshmen legislators, brought up the attention of the legislature the fearfulness of the residents concerning the safety of the railings. The residents have sought support from the SGA so that action may be taken on this situation. Their plea was to “please act on the railings.”

Lai also acknowledged the absence of course texts from the bookstore shelves this past week. Paul McCormick, manager of the bookstore, has taken full responsibility for this problem. He has sent emergency trucks to pick up shipments from the individual publishers. McCormick said that the cost will be absorbed by the bookstore and not passed on to the students.

Charles Bannon, director of public relations, announced the upcoming Alcohol Awareness Week. The bulk of activities will take place on Monday, Feb. 17, however, there will be other activities scheduled during the week. Bannon reported that Dr. David W.D. Dickson, president of MSC, and Lai will declare Wednesday as Alcohol Awareness Day.

Investigation of the bookstore. Faculty members were more interested in results than explanations as the delays forced professors to begin teaching without the required textbooks.

Dr. Thomas Benediktsson, professor of English, said he took a survey of his classes which showed “approximately 90 percent” of the students could not get books for at least one of their classes. Benediktsson also said none of the books he ordered for his classes were delivered on time and he was forced to reorder them in person.

STUDENTS HELPING STUDENTS

STUDENTS OF ALL MAJORS WELCOME
Board decision

Tonight, Thurs., Feb. 3, the Board of Trustees will hold its monthly meeting at 7:30 p.m. in Russ Hall. On its agenda are a number of proposals that are of the utmost importance to all members of the college community: arming the campus police, the raising of dormitory fees and the lifting of the cap on Student Center fees.

The board’s decision on whether or not to arm the campus police has been delayed time and time again but it looks as though this time a proposal will be voted on and announced. While it may be too late for the voice of the students to do any good, a strong showing by students against the arming may force the board to reconsider any decision.

Also before the board is a proposal to increase room fees 30 percent to $2,250 per year. The increase is necessary, according to Elliot Mininberg, vice president of administration and finance, because of the high interest rates on bonds issued by the college to pay for the construction of Blanton Hall.

Construction costs are also the reason behind the proposal to lift the cap from Student Center fees, according to Mininberg. The new Student Center Annex must be paid for and the students will be forced to bear what will amount to a 30 percent increase in Student Center fees if the proposal is passed.

The current fee of $6.25 per credit hour will remain the same. However, the 12 credit limit will be lifted and result in an average increase of $25 per semester.

Non-book store

Students did not fare too well at the beginning of this spring semester. First they were confronted with an impossible parking situation, and then a campus bookstore with few, if any, books.

Both Doug Miller, head of the Faculty Student Co-op, which oversees the operation of the bookstore, and the administration are well aware of the problem and have undertaken an investigation to find its causes.

It is our sincere hope that this investigation will lead to effective reforms which will eliminate the possibility of future shortages and delays. We also hope that the Co-op and college administration will be willing to initiate any changes, even if that means the dismissal of anyone found to be responsible for delays in book orders.

On Second Thought/Meryl Yourish

The following is a transcript of secret conversations between Elliot Mininberg, vice president for administration and finance, and David W.D. Dickson, president of MSC. For obvious reasons, the conversations must remain anonymous.

Fri., Jan. 22, 4 p.m.

"Elliot, have you heard the weather report for tomorrow? It’s supposed to snow, possibly changing to rain. Should we get the maintenance crews ready?"

"What for? There’s no snow out there now, is there? The lots are clean."

"But Elliot, classes start Monday. You know how disastrous parking is when the lots are clean. Can you imagine what it would be like if we had to-"

"I shudder to think of it—" some of the parking lots?"

"Don’t worry about it, Dave. Even if it does snow, it’ll probably melt by Monday."

"You’re asking me to count on a thaw during the coldest winter of the century?"

"Sure, Dave. Don’t worry about it. In fact, it won’t. Forget about it. It’s supposed to snow for hours."

"What do you suggest?"

"Elliot, the rain turned to ice. Now what do we do?"

"Don’t worry about it, Dave. You can’t plow ice."

"Well, we’ll save a bag or two for that."

"Are you sure rock salt is fit for human consumption? I’m a bit uncertain about these laboratory statistics you showed me."

"No problem, Elliot. Those kids will never know the difference."

"I hope you’re right."

Sat., Jan. 23, 7 a.m.

"Elliot, it’s snowing. It’s been snowing for hours."

"Do you know what time it is?"

"What do you mean?"

"What do you mean? I mean it’s morning. It’s morning."

"But Elliot, what shall we do if it freezes?"

"Forget about it. Go back to sleep."

4 p.m.

"Elliot, the rain turned to ice. Now what do we do?"

"Darned if I know, Dave. You can’t plow ice."

"Well, why don’t you send out the salt trucks?"

"I did. Half of them skidded over the edge of the Quarry, and the rest wound up playing demolition derby. Only one was salvageable."

"What do you suggest?"

"Pray for warm weather. If it’s nice tomorrow, we’re all clear."

"And if it isn’t?"

"We’re still all right. I’ll feed the kids the same bull I give them at the beginning of every semester."

Mon., Jan. 25, 7 a.m.

"Elliot, this place is a wreck! We can’t possibly open these lots up in time for classes. Can you imagine what will happen?"

"Don’t worry about it, Dave. I see a clear spot over there."

"That’s your parking spot, Elliot."

"Oh. Well, anyway, it’s too late to do anything now. We may as well stay open."

"You do that, Elliot. I’m going to be in my office. I am not coming out at all today, nor will I answer any calls. The responsibility for this debacle is yours."

"Well, Dave, I can only say that the college belongs to me, all of us, and suffering belongs to all of us. Hey! That’s not bad! I think I’ll memorize that and tell it to The Montclarion reporter they send me."

"CENSORED!"

March's R's are changing

Womenspeak

The three R’s of learning have always been reading, writing, and arithmetic. Today they may have a new slant. With more and more adult women going back to school, the three R’s could be referred to as re-educating, re-assessing, and rewarding.

When asked why they decided to continue their education, most women interviewed said the overriding reason was self-esteem. Iris Kersten of Desnve, N.J., stated, “My friend is making an excellent salary and has achieved many of her goals in life due to her educational background. Openly discussing this with her made me introspective and helped me realize that I have not lived up to my potential.”

Iris was 16 when she graduated from high school. She went to City College in New York for two years then decided to work and “see the world.” She now has plenty of experience in the business world, but wants to increase her chances of success. She feels finding the right school is the way to accomplish this end.

Iris plans to attend MSC this semester; it is an exciting, and at the same time, frightening experience for her. It has been almost 25 years since she has been in a classroom and there are all kinds of feelings churning inside her, the strongest of which seems to be determination.

“I’m going to get my degree,” she says. “I don’t care if it takes me ten this time. Even if I just hang it on the wall. I’d like to get it. I feel like I cheated myself the first time around.”

Making a decision is one thing, implementing it is another. Mary, of Parsippany, N.J. (who wishes to remain anonymous), made a decision that changed her lifestyle completely. She had worked as an executive secretary for 18 years. When her company went bankrupt, she found herself jobless and without a job and reluctant to look for another one in the business world. Her private ambition had always been to teach, but it was financially impossible for her to attend college after her high school education.

Today, Mary is working as a live-in domestic for a N.J. family and attending school during the day at a nearby college. She has never been married so the transition in her life has been relatively easy, although she did lose the lack of family obligations.

When asked why she chose this particular lifestyle, she replied, “I started going to school nights while working days, but I stopped. It would have taken too long. I decided to attend school full-time or not at all. I thought of wasting nights and maintaining my own home, but the income would have been too risky. Now I have a roof over my head, food in my stomach, and more time for me.”

Mary is comfortable in her new role, although she is having a little trouble adjusting to the more restrictive atmosphere of living in someone else’s house. She does not view herself as extraordinary. She is simply doing what must be done to accomplish her goals in life. She hopes to complete school in three years and start teaching at the high school level.

Although self-esteem is a strong motivator, self-preservation is stronger. For many women, going back to school is a matter of survival. “I found that the majority of women whom I met at school were either contemplating divorce, or already divorced,” states Bev Wiley, a resident of Flanders, N.J. She hastens to add that this is not true in all cases, but does seem to be more prevalent among the adult women returning to school for a nursing degree.

“It is a two-year program, a woman can be earning a salary in a short period of time,” says Ms. Wiley. Bev studied nursing 18 years ago, but she dropped out of school to get married. When she decided to continue her education, nursing was a natural selection. Like most mothers attending school either full or part time, Bev finds the costs hard to justify, but rewarding. “Once you start stimulating your mind, it’s hard to stop,” she says. “I became addicted to the acquisition of knowledge, I thrived on it. School taught me to put my energies to constructive use and to focus away from the destructive forces of self-pity that divorce can bring about.”

Whether married, single, or divorced, returning to school is no easy task. It takes organization, determination, and cooperation.

Iris will attend her first class this month. Mary has already begun her quest, and Bev received her degree two years ago. All three women feel a renewed sense of self-esteem and pride. For them the three R’s are re-assessing, re-educating, and rewarding.

Gary Tamirian remembered

To the editor: “Thanks,” it is a word many of us use frequently, but do we know the true meaning of it? Do we use it correctly, or do we use it sincerely? To some, a friend is someone you share good times with; to others a friend is someone you know in your class from a previous semester.

I have learned that a friend is someone to share good times with, someone for whom you have a deep feeling of someone you admire and are proud of, and most of all, a friend is someone you love. Without love, that person is an acquaintance. It is love which draws you together and makes parting that much more painful.

Someone who has been my friend for the last twenty years was a recent addition to my life. Some of you knew him while at MSC and still others knew him from the library. He never knew your name, but I have know Gary Tamirian since shortly after my birth. He was a close friend, the boy who lived across the street. Many of us forget our first friends and make new ones as we mature.

Our friendship has lasted through many years and many friends. I have only fine and upstanding person, someone who was concerned with others before himself. This was evident to anyone who knew Gary. When I did not have a date for my senior prom, Gary was the first one to go along, and asked one of his friends to go with me.

Gary was a sincere and genuine person, of whom one does not find very many. I never heard him once say an unkind word of anyone, and he was always there when you needed a helping hand or a friend to talk to. He was admired by his peers, friends, colleagues and family. His professors had taught but praise and admiration for him.

Those of you who knew Gary I am sure will never forget him—he left a lasting impression on everyone. You just did not meet Gary, you became his friend because he was a real person. I have never seen someone touch the lives of so many as Gary did. He was a bright, concerned, warm person, and all of us who knew him loved him for the person he was.

We called each other “cousin,” since there was no blood between us. It has taken me some time to realize that I must not feel that Gary is gone but that he is forever here, now more than ever. Those who knew him are that much more a person and can appreciate all that he stood for.

To my Aunt Betty, Uncle Richie, Gail, Greg, and all of Gary’s friends from recent years, to all of those who knew Gary. When I did not have a date for my senior prom, Gary was the first one to go along, and asked one of his friends to go with me.

Judy, I remember when Gary taught me to ride my first bicycle, I will remember him and his kindness always. With love,

Sonjui Lai

To the editor: This past weekend the New Jersey Student Association (NJSA) held its first leadership conference in two years.

Much of the success of the conference was attributed to the efforts of Sonjui Lai, our SGA president, who relinquished her position as chair of the NJSA this past weekend.

Sonjui had everything covered from attending a national convention in Nebraska, traveling to Pennsylvania for input from other states, and chairing the conference. Choosing a site, compiling an agenda, obtaining speakers, chairing the conference, choosing a site, making reservations, and even arranging wake-up calls for the delegates to assure their promptness.

Hundreds of hours of dedication and hard work by Lai made a difference for the start in changing the quality of life for every student in this state.

Lai’s presence at the conference made it an even greater privilege for me to be a part of MSC’s student government.

Everyone’s accomplishments at this conference have created the largest student rights movement in this state since the early seventies.

If a ‘student of the week’ award exists, my vote is for Lai.

Diet vitamin tips

To the editor:* Being a nutrition major, I have a few tips which I would like to share with your readers which might help them to maintain their health.

For example, did you know that air destroys vitamin C? Putting it in a blender will reduce its properties. By using iron pots when cooking, vitamin C is lost if sliced or chopped fruits and vegetables are not eaten soon after preparation.

Large amounts of vitamin C over a long period of time can be harmful, causing kidney stones.

Sunlight is the best and cheapest source of vitamin D.

Taking high doses of vitamins during pregnancy can cause dependency in the newborn, according to recent studies.

Although these tips only skim the surface of nutritional knowledge, I hope they can be of some use to your readers.

Devo’s New Tradition

Devo’s New Tradition—lists

NEW TRADITIONISTS
WARREN BROTHERS

They’ve answered the cry “Is It Worth It?”
They’ve gotten their freedom of choice. Now Devo is searching for new traditions because they feel the world is so screwed up today.

So they’ve aptly titled their newest album New Traditionists. They’ve shed the flower pot-looking hats that they wore upside down on their heads on Freedom of Choice for “Devo-doo” plastic, Ken doll-type hairpieces that supplement their “action vests” (which, incidentally, you too can order through the Devo catalog that acts as the album sleeve). What will these spuds think of next?

Yes, Devo has come a long way since they came upon the music scene with their yellow jumpsuits, mechanized music, and an interesting rendition of the Stones’ “Satisfaction.” As a result, they were largely ignored by the critics, who cams? The melodics arc superior With hooks and beats to spare. They can’t. It is. But they can’t. It is. But they can’t. It is.

In “Jerking Back n Forth,” you can’t have a true relationship unless there are a few disagreements (there’s a hysterical video on cable’s Music Television. (MTV) where Barb and Ken dolls rip each others’ limbs off). Sounds normal until Mothersbaugh sings, “...why scream and cry when you know it’s true? why fall in love when there’s better things to do...” It’s enough to make you wonder if these guys have girlfriends or get intimate with a potato.

In “Love Without Anger,” you can’t have a true relationship unless there are a few disagreements (there’s a hysterical video on cable’s Music Television. (MTV) where Barb and Ken dolls rip each others’ limbs off). Sounds normal until Mothersbaugh sings, “...why scream and cry when you know it’s true? why fall in love when there’s better things to do...” It’s enough to make you wonder if these guys have girlfriends or get intimate with a potato.

“Pity You” and “Race of Dooms” aren’t exactly joyful songs, but...eliminate the ninnies and the tourists, including a New Traditionist poster and a 45 of Devo’s version of Allen Toussaint’s “Working In the Coal Mine,” complete with marimbas. It’s reproduced as a four-page insert in this package, compliments of Officer elections and upcoming issues will be discussed.

New Members Welcome!

Visit the office anytime.

Hope you enjoyed our Fall issue.

Thanks for all the great work submitted; keep it up!

They’ve shed the flower pot look for the “Devo-doo.”

Devo saw “Whip It” as people getting together and whapping the problem. The outlook isn’t nearly as optimistic on New Traditionists, although the melodies are at their best. Group leaders Jerry Casale and Mark Mothersbaugh want to say it’s a beautiful world we live in; “...a sweet, romantic place beautiful people everywhere the way they show they care; makes me want to say it’s a beautiful world...” But they can’t. It is for us, but not for them. They see nobody doing anything about world hunger. Devo is clearly bothered by the condition of the world and convey these feelings in their lyrics.

In “Jerking Back n Forth,” possibly the album’s best and most powerful cut, we find Devo delivering more negativism. “You told me people like to suffer; you told me that’s the way it is; you said that things were getting better; you said I should accept all this.”

And in the very next line, Devo reveals the toll modern society has taken on them. “You think it’s funny but what I say is true; the reason that I live like this is all because of you.”

Through Being Cool, it’s the “Whip It” of this record, only less trite. Devo is at их best when they sing “...eliminate the ninnies and the tourists, including a New Traditionist poster and a 45 of Devo’s version of Allen Toussaint’s “Working In the Coal Mine,” complete with marimbas. It’s reproduced as a four-page insert in this package, compliments of their said on a recent TV talk show, they’ve put together one fun and impressive album. Don’t try to figure out if Devo is serious or not. Just buy the album and play it loud.

ABBIESNEWONE

By Michael Doverey
CHANGESTWOBOWIE on RCA Records

For the past decade, David Bowie has continually redefined himself from musician to artist. A veteran of dozens or more albums and two major motion pictures, as well as the Broadway production The Elephant Man, David Bowie's career is measured in terms of his continuous changes.

On his latest collection, entitled CHANGESTWOBOWIE, Bowie has included nine songs representative of a decade's work. It features songs from his first LP, Hunky Dory, to his most recent release, Scary Monsters (And Super Creeps). Although the songs were not included in his first "greatest hits" collection, CHANGESTWOBOWIE, they are in no way second-rate. The first two selections, "Oh, You Pretty Things" and "Aladdin Sane," represented Bowie's status as one of the founders of "glitter rock.
These two songs are followed by another early seventies hit, "Starman," from the L.P., The Rise and Fall Of Ziggy Stardust And The Spiders From Mars, which presented the music world with one of the first rock concept albums featuring vinyl characters.

After reading George Orwell's satiric novel 1984, Bowie journeyed to the Soviet Union where he wrote his own version of 1984. On tour in the United States, David Bowie was impressed with new soul explosion, and in 1975 recorded his popular album Young Americans. This change was in direct contrast to his previous work; however, it was well received, and intrigued a whole new audience.

With the arrival of the eighties, Bowie returned to America to appear in the award-winning, Bernard Pomerance play, The Elephant Man, making his Broadway debut to overwhelming acclaim. In the same year, Bowie released Scary Monsters. The album contained two of his biggest hit singles, "Ashes to Ashes" and "Fashion," both songs are standouts on the new release CHANGESTWOBOWIE. The song "Fashion" is the most danceable track on the new album.

Another interesting selection, "Wild Is the Wind," is the only cut on CHANGESTWOBOWIE which Bowie himself did not write. It was written originally for the 1957 film of the same name which starred Anson Quinn and Anna Magnani. Although slower in tempo than the other songs, "Wild is the Wind" is not out of place on an album which twists and changes with each song.

While some people would criticize it as another meaningless greatest hits album, the LP has real appeal after listening closely. Truthfully, it is not as awe-inspiring as the tremendous CHANGESTWOBOWIE. But the previous album, due to space limitations, could not accurately reflect the multisided complexities of Bowie's artistry. Where some groups greatest hits albums are hollow, songs like "Aladdin Sane," "Fashion," and "Ashes to Ashes" could not come near to representing Bowie's creativity.
More from the Belly of the Beast
hierarchy of the inmates, homosexuality, and the problems of the prisoner-guard relationship. On the “hole” he says, “Solitary confinement in prison can alter the ontological makeup of a stone.” He describes the sexual excitement that follows being beaten by the guards, the only physical contact a prisoner receives. How punks are bought and sold among the prisoners (a punk is a prisoner who takes the passive role in a homosexual encounter). How smashers are dealt with and how a gladiatorial animosity develops between convicts.

All of the evils of prison life are not found in direct violence either. State-raised convicts live out a cruel paradox; as children they had to take responsibility for their actions and face punishment like men. Now, as adults, they live in arrested adolescence, kept emotionally immature because of their lack of decision-making. While in prison, inmates develop a false sense of prestige in their criminal abilities, which leads to a propensity to repeat offences when they return to the streets. Indeterminate sentences wreak havoc on the inmates’ emotional states by dangling the possibility of an early release in return for good behavior. To receive parole, a prisoner must show good adjustment to prison, but the prisoners who adjust are the ones who like prison and do not want parole.

“... How would you like to be forced all the days of your life to sit beside a stinking, stupid wino every morning at breakfast? Or for some loud fool in his infinite ignorance to be at any moment able to say (slur) ‘Gimme a cigarette, man!’ And I just look into his sleazy eyes and want to kill his ass there in front of God and everyone.” Abbott has perhaps gone too far into the prison psyche for his own good. He demonstrates in his book that the long-term convict even if he rebels against adapting to prison life cannot readjust himself to life in the free world. I like hostages or POWs, they have been permanently altered by their sufferings. The long-term prisoner is the most extreme of these disoriented people, because he has been incarcerated for decades. Abbott’s paranoia and anger will probably always turn him in violence, due to his radical ideals. Whether in The Belly of the Beast, this is the idea that we are innocent in the tormenting metaphorism of Abbott’s life in prison, and shows the prisoners to be an abomination. But it also shows that there is no place else for him to be; he has no place at all, and with this the purpose of the book becomes dulled. Abbott wants us to feel responsible, but he wants to consider himself not responsible. He wants recompense for the injustices he suffered in prison, yet he says that social justice overrides individual need. All in all, he builds for us a rhetorical cage which is as unfair a burden on the reader as his punishment has been on him.

And remember; good times stir with Seagram’s 7 Crown.

ATTENTION:

Financial aid applications for 1982-83 are now available in the Financial Aid Office and the Student Center Information Desk. You must pick up the application; complete it, and file it with the College Scholarship Service by March 15, 1982. Applications need to be considered for campus based financial aid, and contribute to the total aid package comprised of federal and state financial aid. Applications processed by the CSS after March 15 will be considered for other federal and state programs except CWS, NDSL, and SEOG.
