Freshmen forced to triple-up in dorm rooms designed for two

By Jim Sexton

A housing shortage affecting incoming freshmen at MSC is forcing triple occupancy in dorm rooms designed for two. According to the housing office, there are 119 dorm rooms which are now accommodating three people, all of whom are freshmen.

Other reports from the housing office show that this is the second consecutive year that triple occupancy has existed at MSC. However, nearly all of last year's 125 triplets were changed to double occupancy by the fourth week of the semester.

According to Dr. Raymond Stover, dean of housing, there are two reasons for the overcrowding. The first reason stems from a two-year-old doctrine which says the college must provide housing for all of its students. In addition, the 20-mile radius rule was lifted, thus allowing for more on campus housing applicants.

"When Blanton Hall was built and room fees went up, we did not think that we would fill all the rooms, so we opened the opportunity of on campus housing to all students," Stover said. Stover also said that due to the lack of state subsidies, the housing office must show that we would fill all the rooms, so we opened the opportunity for triple occupancy.

"Freshmen supposedly get top priority for on campus housing, but then we found out in August that we would begin tripling," he said.

The housing office will distribute "room request" forms on September 12th which will offer residents the option of either being reassigned to a double room or remaining in the triple for the duration of the semester and receiving the $250 rebate.

As of September 7th, the housing office reported 50 no-shows in the dorms, leaving 149 three-occupant rooms. Stover said he is hoping to correct the situation by the end of September.

Leon battles for right to take office as treasurer

By Jim Benson

The SGA began this semester without the acting services of a treasurer. At last night's SGA meeting this was to be resolved; however, an executive session was called to discuss the issue. After which, it was tabled and is pending more information.

This problem orginally came about because during the SGA executive board elections held last May, there were no official candidates on the ballot for this position. This absence led students to write in two absentee candidates, Rose Castro, a junior accounting major, and Howard Leon, a sophomore broadcasting major.

Lifting of state ban allows campus police to use mace for self defense

By Chris Worthington

Two years ago the MSC campus police stopped carrying mace because a N.J. state law barred it. However, earlier this year the law was changed and once again mace is part of the officer’s equipment. At this time, only the police have mace, but soon the security will carry smaller sized cans.

Jayne Rich, Chief of campus police, permits officers to use the mace only in cases when an offender is attempting to injure or kill the officer or another person. None of the police have used the mace yet. In the event that mace is sprayed, however, Rich must be telephoned immediately. Furthermore, a detailed report must be written and put on her desk the next morning.

"How do the students feel about mace on campus? Beth McClure, a freshman biology major, said, "I think it's a better alternative to guns, but I'm not in favor of it because I don't think the violence is that prevalent."

Michelle Morris, a senior computer science major, said "I don't think it's necessary. Bar­bara Nossbaum, a freshman English major, is also opposed to mace. "I think it's a better alternative to guns, but I'm not in favor of it because I don't think the violence is that prevalent."

Campus police faced with manpower shortage due to lack of state funds

By Stephen McLean
The campus police force has lost four more officers, according to Jayne Rich, chief of campus police. In addition, there are still five empty positions on the force that were not filled last semester because of a shortage of state funds.

These positions were originally vacated by officers being promoted to better positions, or going to forces on which they would be allowed to carry guns.

Rich said that are also 14 other positions on the force that are being manned by officers hired on a temporary basis. These officers will either be accepted after they receive certification or will be replaced by certified officers. No one will be hired to fill the frozen positions until state funds are restored.

'With the shortage, these first few weeks of school officers have been working 12 to 14 hours a day with only one day off a week,' Rich said. Once school gets under way, Rich said they would return to a more routine schedule and students would see "a lot less of the campus police" than they are seeing now.

According to Rich, the force had a female candidate for one of the vacant positions cleared by the state police, but she subsequently failed the physical performance test and could not be taken on. Rich said, however, the vacant security office should be filled by the first of October.

Currently, there are only 15 police officers and 14 security officers. Among them they must patrol the parking lots, dormitories and other college facilities 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

In addition, Rich said the force has to deal with students who feel they are not needed on campus.

MSC Rathskeller to cater to under 21 crowd

By Lidia Willinberg
The Rathskeller, in response to the recent change in the legal drinking age, has a few new features designed to cater to all our MSC students. The area designated for non-drinkers has been expanded to 50% of the pub, blocked off at this time by blackboards.

Those who wish to drink will need proof of age to pass this point such as a driver's license, birth certificate, passport or military I.D.

The Rat will be serving a new non-alcoholic beer this semester called Mousse. It looks like beer and is sold in 12-ounce bottles, yet it doesn't contain any alcohol. This, along with other non-alcoholic beverages such as soda, Pina Colada, and Orange Whip will be served.

The Rat plans on featuring more live bands this year along with their regularly scheduled D.J. who plays every Tuesday through Thursday. All on-campus organizations are welcome to use the facilities, as well as small groups for parties if booked ahead with Karen Katt, Food Delivery Service from the Rat will resume and run from 8:00 p.m. - 11:00 p.m. According to Dan Cappa, Rat manager, the purchase of more televisions is presently under consideration.

As before, any student bringing outside guests must have them signed in at the door and will be charged $1.

Sixthomer status, but the question of his GPA still remains.

At the time of the election, Leon's GPA was above the required 2.5, however, this included two incompletes from the fall semester. Despina Katris, president of the SGA, is blocking Leon's attempt to assume the position of treasurer until it can be determined whether Leon's two incompletes must be averaged into his GPA at election time. If so, Leon's GPA would make him ineligible to be treasurer because upon completing the two incomplete courses, his GPA fell below 2.5.

According to Katris, the legislature assumed in May that the runner-up took the position as treasurer, provided he/she fulfilled the requirements.

Mark Spinelli, former SGA president, consulted the SGA attorney, who in turn checked with Trenton on proper election procedures. The attorney informed the SGA that a runner-up in this case was not automatically the winner.

According to Katris, a special election was needed. She feels the legislature ignored this and wrote a bill which allowed him to be recognized as treasurer. "Since the legislature brought him into office, I want the legislature to decide his status. I don't want Howard in or out. I just want the position filled by someone."

Leon said, "Despina won't let me assume office. She won't even give me the keys to my office. As far as I'm concerned, there is no question of me becoming treasurer. Because I was voted in and sworn in, I am legally the treasurer of the SGA."

Varied career opportunities available for liberal arts majors

By Marilyn Kind

Career Services recently received a letter from a worried English major who said, "I followed my convictions and majored in English, but now that I'm about to graduate, I'm feeling panicked. What organizations will want me?"

This student expressed the fears of many liberal arts majors unsure of what skills they have to offer the working world. We asked her first to consider which skills she would want to use on a job. As an English (French, art, history, etc.) major she has developed a number of transferable skills valued by many organizations: the ability to be organized, to perform research, to speak and write clearly, to analyze data, to generate new ways of looking at problems. These abilities can be put to use in insurance companies, in retail environments, in banking, in sales, in social service agencies, in fund raising, and in many other environments.

If, however, she wants to use her English background directly because she is fascinated by etymology and linguistics and loves modern writers, she might consider employment as a copy editor, proofreader, or copy writer for a publishing company. She could also think about work as a teacher or as a designer of educational media. A love of books and language could lead to work as a librarian, a technical writer, a lexicographer, crossword puzzle maker, word game creator, or writer for a company's in-house publications.

The study of English, like the study of French, history, art, etc., provides students with many skills—both those directly related to the world of language, literature and the arts as well as those skills which transfer to other areas. Our liberal arts alumni are proof that this is true. This year we are bringing campus to campus to talk about the skills they developed through their majors and how they applied those skills in a number of different work settings.

Career Conversations will be held once a month and will begin September 13 with David Anema, a 1981 English graduate who is employed by Western Electric as a methods writer.

If you are interested in learning about careers in writing, product development, public relations and fundraising in the non-profit sector, Career Conversations can show you what you have to offer employers and help you learn more about the kind of work you might be doing.

Each conversation will be held at lunchtime, and students are encouraged to bring a bag lunch, a curious friend, and loads of questions. Career Conversations are being planned so that students will have time to ask whatever questions they may have about the work under discussion.

Career Conversations will be held in the Student Center Annex, Room 126 from 12 to 1:30 p.m. on September 13, October 11, November 8 and December 6.

Classes Cancelled for 75th Anniversary

This year is the 75th anniversary of MSC. A faculty convocation service will be held on Sept. 20 at Russ Hall. Dr. David W.D. Dickson, president of the college, has announced that classes from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. will be cancelled on that date.

Bicyclist Violators to be Ticketed

According to the NJ Division of Motor Vehicles, bicycle riders are subject to the same traffic violations as a motor vehicle drivers. A new law enacted this year allows law enforcement officials to levy fines on anyone committing one of these violations.

Chief Jayne Rich, of the MSC campus police, said that any person committing one of these violations will be subject to a $50 fine and the violation will be handled in a municipal court.

Rich said that the reason the campus police are enforcing this law is to protect the bicyclists and others from injury.

Campus police force reduced yet better protected with mace

The start of each semester is usually equated with lines...lines at the bookstore...late registration...lines of cars waiting to get into the parking lots. This semester proved to be no different. There are even more obstacles students and the campus police will have to tackle. Some of these are more humorous than others.

First, the bad news. The campus police are understaffed, seriously understaffed. Since the semester began, officers have been working 12 to 14 hours per day, six days per week. The number of campus police and campus security combined, totals 30. This is far from ideal, especially since they must patrol the campus, parking lots, dormitories and classrooms continuously.

But things are getting better. Although the campus police are fewer in number, they are better protected. Now they can carry mace. Yes, just like mallen. But don't worry, its use will be strictly monitored. Sergeants will even weigh the mace cans weekly to make sure that no officer has used them, or like most students, laugh at them.

The views expressed in this letter are of the author and do not necessarily reflect the opinion of The Montclarion.

Letter Policy: Letters to the editor must be typewritten and double spaced. The deadline for letters is 3 p.m. the Monday before Thursday publication. Letters must be signed, but names will be withheld upon request. Letters must include student's year and major in order to be printed. The Montclarion reserves the right to edit all letters for reasons of style and brevity.

Excuse me son, are you planning on leaving this in your room tonight? I don't believe I see an overnight decal on it. I'm gonna have to issue you a summons.

Did someone say reward?

At the end of the spring semester I left school very disgusted with the SGA, which for me is normal. I'm either mad at them, them, or like most students, laugh at them. The thing that I was mad about was the $4,000 the SGA had allotted to pay for the housing and credits of the four members of the SGA executive board for the summer session. Plus the $226 the students representatives on the board of trustees. Not a bad deal, getting your housing and school paid for the entire summer. I think I'll run for an executive board position in the next election. I wouldn't mind living in Cove for the summer.

I bring this up now because all of this transpired the night we were putting together the last edition of The Montclarion for the spring semester, so it was too late for me to voice my opinion then in the paper. I decided to let it slide until the end of the summer break. The SGA constitution (Article IV, Officer Compensation) states that "Officials of this Association and its subsidiary organizations shall not receive as a reward for performed duties, financial or material remuneration other than those expenses incurred in the performance of said duties as determined by the Statutes." Nowhere in the SGA statutes or constitution could I find where it said that the duties of the executive board include living in a Cove Road apartment, or having their summer classes and credits paid for by the students of MISC. On top of receiving money for housing and credits, the SGA president is paid $3.00 an hour for a 40-hour work week during the summer to act as a "Summer Director." To me the whole thing stinks of "financial remuneration."

The bill which allocated this money originally failed on the floor of the SGA legislature (for once they were doing the right thing), but after then SGA president Mark Spinelli consulted the SGA attorney, the bill was passed. The attorney said that in his opinion, the bill did not violate the spirit of the SGA constitution. Now, if I were an attorney being paid by Mark Spinelli, I would also say that the bill did not violate the "spirit" of the constitution. Why upset my boss and future boss (SGA president) by saying essentially that no, they can't pay for your housing or six credits. Besides, I've seen how Spinelli would consult with the SGA lawyer, which was usually in private and never in front of the legislature. I think that speaks for itself.

Granted, the SGA executive board does spend a lot of time on campus during the summer, so living in Cove Road is convenient for them. I can understand that, but does the college have to charge the SGA for housing that is usually empty during the summer? More than the money for the housing, it is the money for the credits that gets to me. SGA executive board members should receive the same "financial remuneration" as the SGA. I'm saying that the SGA executive board members should not have the luxury of taking summer classes in order to have an easier work load during the rest of the school year. I know of Class I executive board members who have done the same thing. Why not give them the same treatment? Some (most) Class I executive board members work just as hard and even harder than some (most) SGA executive board members.

SGA executive board positions such as Class I, II, III and IV executive board positions are all volunteer. If you want the job, some sacrifices must be made, and one of them would be to take summer classes. It is extremely unfair that five students have their summer classes paid for by the student body's SGA fees, while dozens of other students who work just as hard and are just as dedicated receive nothing. I'm not saying that Class I executive board members should receive the same "financial remuneration" as the SGA. I'm saying that the SGA executive board members should not have the luxury of taking summer classes and credits paid for out of my SGA fees. What makes them so special? I know that this has been done in the past, but just because something has been done before doesn't make it right. Tradition has a way of keeping things that are usually corrupt.

I wouldn't complain about all this if the SGA didn't spend a good deal of last year crying over how tight the money was. While they turned down many legitimate requests for money, they then turned around at the end of the year and allocated $4,226 for the housing and credits of their executive board. When something such as this happens, it's hard to keep silent about it.

It's time that the SGA stop worrying about itself and its image and start taking a genuine interest in what the rest of the MSC students want, not only what a handful of 50 or 60 people want. Spend more time thinking of student needs, not an SGA slogan. Stop looking at yourselves and start looking out to the students.

The money for this past summer is already gone, but perhaps things will change if enough students let the SGA know that they are not happy having their SGA fees pay for the summer housing and credits of the SGA executive board.

Hopefully with this new SGA administration and legislature things will be different and change for the better, but knowing the SGA I somehow doubt it.

The trials of an editor

By Barbara Bell

Sometimes I want to give it up. I just want to take home my name plate which reads "Barbara Bell, Photo Editor." Actually, I would rather make a scene, where they would beg me to come back. "They" are the pseudo-photo editors/critics who recrop my, and other photographers', photos, print different negatives during paste-up night after I have gone home, and tell me to find new photographers.

I think it's a good idea. If someone attacks them, the police should have something to protect themselves with. However, they should not take advantage of the situation and use them whenever they feel like.

Pam Bates

It's a great idea. If someone tried to hurt them, at least they would have a means of defending themselves. It's a way of scaring people and making them think twice before doing anything wrong.

To the editor:

I watched 1,500 new students pack themselves into Memorial Auditorium for one of their first experiences at MSC. Although eagerness could be read on their faces, I'm sure (having been a freshman three years ago) there was still a lot of confusion in their minds.

The Orientation Workshop Leaders (OWLs) settled much of this confusion. The OWLs are members of the student body who graciously volunteered their times. I must congratulate all OWLs on the fantastic job they did during the orientation on August 30th and 31st! The OWLs acted as guides to show the freshmen and transfer students our campus and explain to them the college's policies and procedures. They also shared their experiences at MSC and tried to answer all of the new students' questions.

The OWLs were a vital backbone to the success of the orientation program. Thanks for the great job, OWLs!

Culture Club and flashy Boy George draw a crowd to Pier 84

By Michael Deverey

Where else could you see a group of teen-aged black girls dressed like rabbis and holding a sign proclaiming their love of an English transvestite?

Such was the spectacle at last Thursday's Culture Club performance on New York's Pier 84. This, the season finale for the Miller Time Concerts on the Pier, turned into one of the most rhythmic and culturally diverse shows of the summer.

The band, Culture Club, has caused quite a stir on both sides of the Atlantic Ocean. Originally from England, lead singer Boy George (George O'Dowd) has received attention from many unlikely sources because of his affection for make-up and cross-dressing.

On Thursday night, however, the crowd's attention was focused on the incredible voice coming from such an unlikely source.

Delineate and rather homely, Boy George sings with a vocal range reminiscent of many a Motown soul singer. While the Pier is acoustically less than adequate for many rock groups, Culture Club, driven by strong and resonant vocals, sounded almost as crisp as on their current hit album, "Kissing To Be Clever."

After a rather forgettable set by a thoroughly forgettable warm-up act, the Culture Club took the stage. Boy George was immediately besieged by excited fans hurling T-shirts and flowers. Opening the show with the feisty "I'm Afraid of Me," the Culture Club's rhythms brought the audience to a swaying and stepping frenzy.

Wearing an over-sized jump suit with numeral haphazardly scrambled on it, the band's frontman was in rare form. Reaching out to the crowd, he screamed "I want to touch you! Each and everyone of you!"

''On the road again, the roadie goes on forever

By Jim Benson

I admit I spent a lot of time this summer in bars and clubs, at least five to six nights a week. But I experienced a very different side of the bar scene.

A side that's often never seen, except by select individuals who choose to live a rather unconventional lifestyle centered around a rather unconventional job. I was a roadie, "the first to come and the last to leave," as Jackson Browne sings.

I worked on the road crew for a local North Jersey (unfortunately) new wave band. Life is oft' times cruel, and o f the Fountain Casino sum up how breaks, "and No one really likes playing in order to protect the guilty and the will remain classified and confidential new wave: " Every wave is new until it made it crueler working with new things."

I admit I spent a lot of time this circuit again as a roadie, I don't enjoy admitting that I worked for this band for two summers in a row. The road crew is the core of any band's production. The crew is the backbone of any band, without which no band could function for long. The crew is responsible for the technical "behind the scenes work," while the band covers the musical end of the production.

Our road crew consisted of three men, Bob, Marty and myself. Each person was responsible for a certain aspect of the total production. Marty set up and wire the lights as well as run the light show, and Bob would set up the stage gear and run the follow spotlight. My job involved setting up and wiring the P.A. system, the stage monitors, and setting up the microphones. I also acted as the band's guitar technician (a fancy title for tuning guitars and changing broken strings). Besides knowing his job, a roadie must also know the jobs of the other crew members as well. He has to intimately know every area of the production and the show just in case of emergencies. In addition to knowing all that, roadies must also have some knowledge of the musicians' instruments.

The life of a roadie can be a lot of fun, but it can also be tiring. It became a roadie's job to be at the venue at least an hour before anyone else, and sometimes two hours earlier. It was my job to make sure the Culture Club's gear was set up and ready to go by 8 p.m., the band would go on at 9:30 p.m.

The band's other hits were also well received. All three of Culture Club's pop hits were immediately picked up by dance-oriented radio stations all over the country. As was evident by the crowd at Thursday night's show, Culture Club's appeal cut across all age groups.

As Boy George, whose father is a boxing coach in England, stresses in his interviews, "I don't care what color people are, I'm only interested in whether they are nice."

And nice they were, calling Culture Club back twice for encores. The first song, "The Church of the Poisoned Mind," was sung as if a heavy rock song taken from a Krishna hair cut. The chants and stomp were loud enough to bring the Culture Club back for its encore, "White Boys."

And when it's all over, what does Boy George think of the crowd? "Nearly everyone who stays a constant and who is the real people in rock and roll... You'll probably see it in Bloomingdale's someday."

Next to the Flashdance fashions, no doubt...

Big Apple jobs are not easy pickin'

By Mona Selig

The beginnings of summer—that time of year for most people when life’s electricity takes charge and thought is burdened with yellow sun and green grass and golden beaches. So it is used to be for me until I had to spend this one looking for a job. Because I have always been partial to torture—being an editor for The Montclarion, for example—I decided to go out and look for summer employment in the most overheated, overcrowded, undersubsidized, insane, immoral, yet immortal city in the world—N.Y. Not only did I work in this hell away from home (or vice versa), but I was going to be living in this hell away from home (or vice versa)—in the world—N.Y. Not only did I work insensible, immoral yet immortal city on July first. I had about three summer in the city. In the city, THE CITY.

But, enough excitement. I had to face the reality of hunting for a job. My first step took me as far as procrastinating the hunt till the month of June. My optimistic nature kept reassuring me, “You’ll find a job. Don’t worry.” So I waited for a job to find me—a slight misunderstanding between my consciences. Well, June was approaching its middle. My optimistic nature kept reassuring me, “Well, it was just down the block so I would be there as well.” I was going to spend the summer in the city. I decided to look in the paper. The Village Voice, more specifically the Voice classifieds, became my companion—my friend. Every Wednesday when the paper came out with a new issue, I could be found sitting under a tree in Washington Square Park, half lost in a flute Waltz and half concentrating on the help wanteds.

All that kept glaring at me were the two most dreaded words to a liberal arts student—Must Type. But, after some searching, I found:

“Activists Needed
No Experience Necessary
College Student Welcome”

I was definitely qualified. In that week, I answered a few similar ads. I got the jobs, but canvassing in the summer heat, collecting pledges for an organization I knew little about and working till late night in downtown N.Y., wasn’t my idea of summer fun in the city.

This time I was the rejector. It felt better but I was still without a job. June’s end was soon approaching. Depression, doubt, fear, anxiety made me their prisoner. I wandered aroundN.Y., went for more interviews, applied at employment agencies—but nothing happened.

Another Wednesday walked by. I was about to let it pass but decided to give it one more try. I arrived in the Village and purchased a familiar, by the end of June.

“A word from someone Who (now) knows! Don’t wait till June to find a summer job and learn how to type!”
The thrill of sports writing and the agony of being an editor

By Kathy Szorentini

The world of sports writing is something far from "Freshman Comp." or "Newswriting." It’s more like French or German, having a vocabulary and style all its own, known only by avid sports fans. I liked sports, watched sports, and sometimes followed a team or individual athletes, but when I became the The Montclarion’s sports editor, I felt like I didn’t know what a football was.

My rude awakening to my sports ignorance hit in November, while I was simply covering women’s cross-country and an occasional results summary on field hockey. At that time, the newspaper was functioning without a sports editor. The already-burdened editor-in-chief tried keeping sports alive in print. Therefore, I slowly and steadily took more off of his shoulders until I became the fall semester, unofficial, sports editor.

Now, this being my first semester at MSC, I barely knew where the gym was, never mind writing about the teams it contained. Resolved to my fate, I struggled through the rest of the semester and kept the sports pages alive. I chased writers, annoyed coaches, spent hours on the phone, or in a gym, or at Sports Information getting stats. I got callouses on my fingers from typing so much, and dark circles under my eyes from writing articles instead of sleeping. Going to class became an obstruction to getting the sports pages done, instead of it being the other way around.

Through it all I learned why I never read many articles about football’s finest, baseball heroes or basketball stars. I would get lost in all the sports lingo that entwined itself into the English language. Sports illustrated to me was like the Wall Street Journal to art majors. Yet I could watch any sport on the tube and know what was going on. When it came to writing up a game, however, I wasn’t fluent enough in the proper language of the sports world.

Despite the language barrier, I survived my first semester at MSC and The Montclarion. I looked forward to finals because it marked the end of the newspaper for the semester and I ended up with so much free time I didn’t know what to do. I could actually watch "Dynasty" again and go to sleep at a decent hour on Wednesday nights instead of spending the evening and a good part of Thursday morning in the office putting together another issue.

Unfortunately, the pressure of constant deadlines, late hours and large amounts of lousy cafeteria coffee warped my common sense to a point where I lost all touch with reality. I actually ran, volunteered, asked for the position of sports editor for 1983. I still knew little of the sports lingo and my grammar wasn’t so greatly improved that my writing style was accepted without the sports dialect—yet I still asked for it.

Of course I was voted in. I wasn’t even at the election to present my credentials, but no one else was crazy enough to run for the position so it didn’t matter. Supposedly, sports is the easiest editorial position because all of your news is pre-scheduled, so you never have to dig for story ideas. This is true. I never had a problem obtaining ideas for articles—my problem was having too much to cover. Basketball games every other day, gymnastic meets, swim meets, wrestling matches—with only myself and one other steady reporter handling it. When the baseball team started swinging, I started crying! Every day. Sundays also. They had a game every Saturday, every day because so many got rained out during the early part of that record-setting soggy spring. There was no one to cover them because my one steady writer quit. I had a full schedule of classes along with a part-time job at a sporting goods store (where else?), as well as a recreation team to coach three days a week and Sundays, so I had sub-zero time to cover games. Things started to get out of hand and entire teams were neglected. One other brave soul and a handful of staff members helped me keep my sanity and the back of the newspaper in print instead of turning it into a full-page ad or an SGA announcement.

Once again, finals came to my rescue. The Montclarion ended and for the first time since November, I had a vacation. Winter break didn’t count because that’s tournament time for the teams, and spring break was too short to even notice. So here was three months of peace facing my weary person. I still had my job pushing tennis rackets and camping equipment, and my team still had meets, but no lousy coffee, no more meeting the sunrise on Thursdays, no more pen pushing, finger-cramping typewriting, lay-out working, not sleeping, always smoking... NONE! Until now.

It’s been ecstasy being away from Room 113 and Panzer Gym, but here I am again, ready to scrounge together more issues along with the rest of The Montclarion staff. I have a full year of experience behind me in both MSC info and graveyard shifts in the office, so this semester I shouldn’t crack up. My sports lingo hasn’t improved over the summer, but I can always tell you what football cleats number 32 is wearing and how much they sell for. I’m far from an accomplished sports editor, but there’s no one else looney enough to take the job. I can’t wait until finals.

Fall baseball

As to the effect Fred Hill’s departure has had on the team, Cooney offered, "The team has a ‘wait and see’ attitude but they can really handle themselves." Even though the fall team as a coach, there is still the question as to who will take over in the spring. Cooney intends to apply for the job, but the success of the fall season and time can only tell.

Giancola succeeds Hill as head football coach

By John Rivera

By now, everyone at MSC knows that the successful football and baseball coach, Fred Hill, has left his position at MSC to take the job as head baseball coach for Rutgers University in New Brunswick.

Hill, who first came to MSC in September of 1976, built strong programs in both sports he coached. In football, Hill had a career record of 8-0-2 last season and a trip to the Division III playoffs in 1981 when his team compiled a record of 10-2.

Hill found as much success in baseball as he did in football. During his seven years on the baseball field, Hill compiled a record of 148 wins, 91 losses and two ties for a .613 winning percentage.

His most memorable campaign came in the 1981 playoffs, and led the Indians in rushing yardage last year. Mike Brau, defensive captain, should be a leader on defense for the Indians.

Giancola said he would take each game as it comes, and looks to Saturday's season opener against arch-rival Wagner College as an important game for his team. In the past three seasons, the winner of this game has been chosen to go to the Division III playoffs, so Giancola looks for a very tough and physical game.

If both Wagner and MSC come to play at the same emotional level as last year, expect a close, high scoring game. Last year's game produced 80 points in a 40-40 tie, a that cost the Indians a berth in the NCAA Division III playoffs to Wagner. Right now, Wagner is ranked fourth in the national, and MSC faces this powerful team Saturday on Sprague Field. Kick-off is at 8 pm.

Fall baseball team is looking for successful season with new coach

By Rob Stevens

The MSC baseball team starts its fall season Tuesday against Ramapo College at Ramapo. The team is looking forward to a successful year, but start the campaign with a lot of mixed emotions. They seem to be caught in a bind between returning from last year's Division III World Series and the adjustment to a new baseball coach.

Kevin Cooney replaces Norm Schoering as baseball coach for the fall season, but with the departure of Fred Hill, it is still not known who will be at the helm this spring. Cooney, who has been an assistant coach at Mount Olive High School for seven years, has been an assistant coach under Gary Anderson, whose players include current Baltimore Orioles pitcher Paul Mirabella and Rich Wallace, a pitcher for the Boston Red Sox, Triple A Farm club. Cooney himself played for the Minnesota Twins organization.

This season includes a 25-game varsity schedule and 16 freshman games. The college does not recognize the fall season as official, but must play better if MSC is to have any chance of defeating Ramapo.

MSC golf team optimistic for fall season

As the fall term gets under way, the MSC golf team is looking forward to another productive and successful season. The Indians have three starters returning from last spring's outstanding squad that posted an 11-2 record. Charlie Cowell and senior co-captains Jerry Martino and Mark McCormick will lead the team this fall.

Cowell, a junior, returns for his second year after playing in the number two spot during the spring. The Wayne resident finished second in the Metropolitan Intercollegiate Tournament and first in the NJ State Athletic Conference tournament with a score of 73. Martino is a transfer student from North Carolina State and has played for MSC ever since. Being a business major has kept Jerry busy, but he still found time to average a 79 throughout the spring.

McCormick will be returning starter for his fourth time. Mark has been improving steadily since freshman year, but must play better if MSC is to have any chance of defeating Ramapo.

Returning team members Bob Perry and Chris Gibson each have a good chance to attain a starting position. Newcomers Chris Moran and Jeff O'Gorman will provide tough competition for the two opening spots.

As the fall season revolves around confrontations with Ramapo, if the Linksters can defeat the NJSAC champions at least once, MSC might finish the season with a trip to the Nationals. Anyone interested in trying out for the golf team should contact Peter Famiano this week at 731-0833 (day) or 325-2135 (night).
