Aiding In Disaster Relief

In an effort to assist with helping hands around the world, Yogi Berra Museum is assisting in the relief aid of the World Trade Center tragedy that occurred three weeks ago, September 11, 2001.

Yogi Berra Museum's month of September proceeds, which consists of every adult admission of $4.00 and child admission of $2.00, is being dedicated for the Disaster Relief Fund. Because of the moderate amount of money that was made during the month of September, President and Founder, Rose Call would not mention the amount of money that was made. She does state that "we are looking at MSU for guidance so the modest amount will make the biggest impact!"

Hockey Coach Dies Suddenly

Cause of Michele Polis' Death Remains Unknown

By Lillian M. Alman

A 35-year-old MSU hockey instructor and friend to many on campus passed away due to unknown reasons last Wednesday night, September 26, after collapsing at Floyd Arena. Michele Polis, a Glen Ridge resident arrived at Floyd Hall Arena to accompany the Quarry Cat's women's hockey team practice session, whom she acted as coach and coordinator.

At 9:54 p.m., a call was made to Campus Police from the arena requesting an EMS team. Four minutes later, the MSU EMS squad arrived at the scene to find Polis unconscious and a friend performing rescue breathing on her. According to Campus Police officer, Lt. Postaski, Polis had a right pulse when the ambulance arrived at the scene.

Polis was taken to Mountainside Hospital in Montclair. It is unknown at this time what caused her death and the case is still under investigation.

Public relation officials were unable to be reached for comment.

"She [Michele] meant the world to everyone. This is such an unfortunate loss to Floyd Arena," said Manager of the Floyd Arena and MSU alumni, Dan Murtha also expressed his sadness when stating, "She will be sadly missed, but her memory will go on. She meant a lot to everyone. This is such an unfortunate loss to the world to everyone. This is such an unfortunate loss to the world."

Yogi Berra Museum Donates Month's Funds

Online registration has become a nearly reality for the student body of MSU. Presently, the voice registration system handles forty-eight simultaneous telephone lines to register the over 12,000 students.

One student, reacted "Putting the funds into a scholarship for an educator sounds like a good idea, however, to make a better difference... we want to be sensitive," stated Cali. According to Cali, Yogi Berra Museum is in the midst of several ideas dealing with where the money should be invested. One idea involves setting up a scholarship fund for an educator who would like to pursue further studies in an area of tragic experience or some other area that could deal with management after terrorism attacks.

A Bernardoville woman testified yesterday that she had an eighth-month sexual relationship with a teenage boy because she feared his constant violent threats against her family. Sheryl VanDyke, 30, testified that she started having oral sex and later intercourse with the boy after he threatened the life of her young daughter. The boy said he contacted authorities because he learned VanDyke wanted to have a sexual relationship with his 12-year-old sister. A Montclair teenager is under police guard while he undergoes psychiatric evaluation after he held his girlfriend hostage at knife point Monday and threatened police during a three-hour standoff. The Montclair Community Response Team forced its way inside after Gibson cut off communication with negotiators. The woman was released unharmed. Although Gibson had threatened her with a 10-inch serrated kitchen knife held to her throat. With the notion now focusing on a war on terrorism, it should also up its war on drugs. Senator Jon Corzine (D-NJ) told about 50 people attending the Invictus Chamber of Commerce breakfast meeting at Don's Diner. He said the war on drugs has been a failure and that now is the time to use the resources created as a reaction to the terrorist attack to fight drugs in the U.S.

New Process of Dealing With Parking Ticket Appeals Angers SGA

Unlike previous years where the SGA handled parking appeals, students and staff members now have to file written appeals to the appropriate department, which is then forwarded to a private attorney.

By Inbal Kahanov
Production Editor

The Executive Council for the President, who wanted to have a consistent review of parking appeals, instituted a new procedure this summer in which the appeals are handled by the administration rather than by the SGA, which has upset many members of the SGA.

In the new policy, students file written parking ticket appeals to the Office of the Vice President for Student Development and Campus Life. Faculty and staff appeals are filed with the Office of the Vice President for Facilities and Business Operations.

All appeals received by these offices are then forwarded to a private attorney, who reviews and assesses all appeals. Previously, students wishing to appeal a parking ticket, completed a form provided by the SGA and submitted it along with a copy of the ticket to the Director of Services of the SGA, who decided whether to grant or deny the appeal.

Faculty and staff, who wished to file an appeal, did so with the University Senate committee, who reviewed those appeal requests.

"The issue was not so much a problem with the SGA as much as my belief in having one entity responsible for handling parking appeals," said Patricia Hewitt, Vice President of Facilities and Business Operations, who took over the responsibility of parking operation at MSU over the summer and recommended the change.

"For example, the University Senate committee who was responsible for reviewing faculty and staff appeals had appeals they had been holding onto for a year. Clearly, this was not satisfactory either."

Hewitt also claims that the handling of appeals by a lawyer is a procedure that is commonly used at universities, including many in New York and North Carolina.

Many members of the SGA have expressed frustration regarding the change, specifically the method in which they were notified.

In a meeting that was held in the summer between the SGA Executive Board and Karen Pennington, Vice President of Student Development and Campus Life, the changes in parking facilities were discussed.

According to members of SGA Executive Board, there was no discussion at this meeting that the SGA would no longer handle the parking ticket appeals.

"We didn’t know about the change in ticket appeals until very late," said George Mesias, Secretary of the SGA.

"I personally didn’t know until I saw it in the minutes [for the Board of Trustees meeting], and only when I realized what happened did I start making phone calls."

Pennington, on the other hand, says that the SGA was notified in advance.

"My recollection of the meeting that we had this summer is quite different. As I recall that I distinctly discussed the point that the appeals process would change."

Mesias does agree that the decisions of denying or accepting student ticket appeals should not be handled solely by one individual, but believes that it should not be taken away from the students entirely.

According to Mesias, he has proposed an idea to Pennington in which a committee comprised of faculty and students would handle the appeals, which she has denied.

"We were told there’s nothing we can do. It’s basically a mute cause."

functional by the end of the fall semester," said some. Students were enthusiastic about the possible online registration.

"I think it's great that students will have another alternative to registering besides waiting for the voice registrar," said Sophomore Communications Major, Laura Grissom.

Some students were not as optimistic such as Junior Psychology Major, Kendree Adien who stated, “We’ll have to wait and see because every time the school tries to do something new, something always finds a way to mess up.”

No specific date of completion has been set for the program though spring or summer registration appears to be intended goals.

Judgment one would have to know, what area of education would come into play,” when hearing the news of the possible scholarship fund.

Professors at MSU also commented on where the funds could possibly go, such as an anthropology professor who stated, “a course in Peace Studies or a study in understanding differences in cultures may be a good idea.”

The Yogi Berra Museum is open to ideas, with the mission in mind that the small funds will make a big difference for the future ahead.

Yogi Berra Museum is donating its entire September proceeds to the World Trade Center Tragedy Relief.
Sujo John, who moved to America from India one year ago, worked in a networking system company in World Trade Center Tower One on the eighty-first floor. On the morning of September 11th, he was working in his office at 8:00 a.m., going about his daily routine. Forty-five minutes later, when the first plane hit the tower, all he claimed he heard was an extremely loud noise. The office immediately blew up into flames. All that was audible were crumbling debris and bodies strewn all over the ground. They reached the lower levels, where debris and bodies were strewn everywhere. The office immediately blew up into flames, and the debris and bodies were strewn everywhere.

John knew he had made it out alive when he stood up, but the falling building had killed everyone else he had been taking to on the way down. Barely able to breathe or see, he made his way through the pure whiteness of the air and the rubble. He came across a FBI agent and they walked on together, scared and unsure of where to step next. Together, they put their faith in each other and God, and prayed until they came upon a third man in the rubble. They decided to look for more survivors.

At the bottom of the building, John saw an ambulance completely crushed to the ground. Between the destruction and the mass of crowds running, John said the scene looked like the end of the world. Finally, he was able to flee to safety. He stated that, "They will blame death for the fact that I am able to stand here in the midst of all of you," said John at the meeting. After having had "death share me in the face," he feels it is God's will to continue to share his story with others. He has done so on television, on the radio, and on the Internet. People from different countries have heard of his experience.

"His story and strong faith really inspired me to keep my own faith during these hard times," stated Sophomore Lyn Steeger, after John had finished speaking. Everyone was touched by John's story. For through one of America's worst days in history, here is a survivor who has seen and revealed to many the secrets with the rest of the group.

"He smartly used to disguise their mind control and manipulation in order to benefit the leaders. Cults express unethical behavior in order to reach their goals. These unethical ways include high pressure, harassment, dishonest friendships, and behavior modification." Fr. Stanley continued by expressing his concerns on how cults are seen as a cult and wouldn't be saved in the end, according to this cult. Ultimately she decided to leave the "bible group," the term the group had cleverly used to disguise their real intentions.

The session ended with questions and comments from the 35 students who gathered that evening. There was also a raffle at the end of the activity where a lucky student took home a goodie bag.

Silvia Ragusa, a sophomore, added, "This activity has opened my eyes to the possibilities of cults and wouldn't be saved in the end, according to this cult. It has heightened my awareness and further enhanced my knowledge of cults. If you feel that someone is just too persistent, they won't stop calling, and you are hiding from them around campus; they could just be part of a cult. It's your decision, do you want to run your own life or do you want someone to run it for you?"
There was Jimi Hendrix. There was the “British invasion.” But there was never anyone who could capture the electric guitar quite like Carlos Santana.

Santana was one of the first guitar players to fuse guitar riffs with traditional Latin sounds and Afro-Cuban beats to become one of the most recognizable musicians around.

Carlos Santana was born in Mexico in 1947. At the age of 5, his father, a mariachi violinist, introduced him to traditional music. He learned to play the guitar and played in several bands. In 1966, upon moving to San Francisco, Santana started the Santana Blues Band and played at the Woodstock Festival in 1969.

His background influenced much of his music, and his albums included a blend of these Latin sounds, combined with his expertise in guitar playing that set a popular trend many followed throughout the '70s.

Santana has participated in many humanitarian relief efforts, including “Blues for Salvador” for victims of the San Francisco earthquake and the rights of Indigenous Peoples.

In 1998, Santana was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame. When many felt Carlos Santana was on his way out of the spotlight, he released the album Supernatural in 1999. It earned him Grammys for “Record of the Year,” “Song of the Year,” (Smooth), and “Album of the Year.”

Santana is considered a legend among musicians everywhere. His creativity is well known, his music captivating. Carlos Santana is proclaimed for spreading Latin pride and passion through his music, his love, and his words.

The Greek community is beginning to hum with excitement and activity. The word we are all hearing in the cafeteria, in the dorms, and as we walk to class, is “Homecoming.” Very soon, driving through the quarry at night will allow glimpses of various fraternity and sorority teams practicing their dances. And eventually, building their floats for the upcoming Homecoming celebration.

Homecoming brings together many of the various club, organizations, and interest groups on campus. Almost everyone participates in Homecoming in one way or another. But nobody gets into the spirit of Homecoming quite like the Greeks.

A top priority for the Greeks know who their partners for Homecoming will be for the next year, and have already begun preliminary preparations, like securing flat bed trucks on which to build their floats for the parade.

Once the theme is announced, the Greeks begin the brainstorming process. They begin to design their floats, their costumes, and their dances. Quite often, several designs are created before one is chosen and even then there are many revisions. It is all a work-in-progress right up until the parade. When school begins in the fall, preparations begin in earnest. Dedication to Homecoming is so strong that you'll find people practicing in their rooms at two o'clock in the morning. Even pledge events are juggled around in order to accommodate practice schedules right up until the night before Homecoming.

By the end of the spring semester, the Greeks know who their partners for Homecoming will be for the next year, and have already begun preliminary preparations, like securing flat bed trucks on which to build their floats for the parade.

When school begins in the fall, preparations begin in earnest. Dedication to Homecoming is so strong that you'll find people practicing in their rooms at two o'clock in the morning. Even pledge events are juggled around in order to accommodate practice schedules right up until the night before Homecoming.

Homecoming is a top priority for nearly every Greek organization participating in the celebration. The night prior to Homecoming is when the student body en masse will lend a hand to those building the float. Greek alumni come back to campus to help out and meet the new pledge class. This is the time to see old friends, and make new ones. Everyone has a good time.

There are several bands booked to perform during the night’s activities. They keep the enthusiasm of the crowd going. The Greeks need to keep up their energy because they will be building their floats and rehearsing their dances until the very early hours of the morning. All of this hard work culminates with the parade the next morning. Alumni, faculty, staff, current students, community members, and their families line the parade route to watch the colorful procession go by. Outside the President's home, each team performs their dance for which they are judged. The float, which they worked so hard on, is also judged.

Homecoming is a competition. Therefore, originality, creativity, and enthusiasm are some of the characteristics that judges look for. Every organization participating has the potential to win. Thus, the competition, although friendly, is still fierce. Winning Homecoming is an accomplishment one can be proud of. This is why the Greek community dedicates so much time and energy to it.

Homecoming's here. The excitement within the Greek community is almost tangible. Who's going to take home the trophy this year? The student who watches the parade will have just as much fun as the Greeks who have been preparing for it.
Protests Continue in Vieques

Bombing Exercises Continue Despite Outcries from Citizens

Vieques is a tiny island right off the eastern coast of the island of Puerto Rico. In 1898, the United States acquired Puerto Rico following the Spanish-American War. But in 1941 the U.S. Navy took over two thirds of Vieques, forcing the island's 10,000 inhabitants into one small portion of the island, displacing thousands of families from their farmland. The Navy has been using this land to conduct training and bombing exercises ever since.

When the Navy first arrived, they provided a boost to the island's economy by providing plenty of jobs for the people. They constructed military bases and other structures, but once the construction was finished it became evident that the people would need to find another way of stimulating the economy.

The people of Vieques tried establishing an agricultural economy in what was left of the residential area of the island, but with the Navy controlling two thirds of the island, they were unsuccessful. Then they turned to manufacturing with a General Electric plant, which provided most of the employment until this summer, when they ended their operations. The only viable industry left on the island is fishing and it is estimated that the current unemployment rate is over fifty percent.

In June 2001, the Bush administration announced that the Navy would pull out of the island in May 2003. Until then, the Navy will continue their bombing practices as usual. On July 29, 2001, the residents of Vieques voted by an overwhelming margin of 68 percent for the United States Navy to stop bombing exercises, clean up the land, and leave the island immediately. Some political and military leaders are resistant about moving out of Vieques, suggesting that it is vital for U.S. combat training.

The people of Vieques state that bombs have destroyed the delicate ecosystem of the island. There is scientific evidence suggesting that the air and soil of Vieques have unhealthy levels of mercury, iron, and other heavy metals. These metals are found in ordinances fired on the island.

The people of Vieques suffer from increased levels of cancer, a high infant mortality rate, and other serious health problems, such as asthma in children. There is also an increase in extremely rare diseases, such as lupus.

Since there are no factories in Vieques, it is believed that the Navy is the source of the pollution. The Navy denies harming the environment or the people, and claim that their presence is what is best for the island's economy.

In 1999, anti-military protests erupted when a bomb that missed its target on the firing range killed civilian David Sanes Rodriguez. The protests still continue, attracting high profiled individuals such as the Rev. Al Sharpton and Robert F. Kennedy Jr., both of whom have been jailed for their demonstrations.

As a result of the September 11 terrorist attacks, protesters pledged to stop their civil disobedience in favor of peaceful vigils. But on Sept. 24, when the bombing on the island resumed, so did the civil disobedience and it will continue until the Navy leaves for good.
Tenacious D will Rock Your Funny Bone

By Ryan Collins
Staff Writer

Tenacious D

I imagine this. You form a rock duo combining Beach Boys' harmonies, Dennis Leary's raunchy humor, Black Sabbath's attitude, and Andy Kaufman's odd brand of comedy. If you studied the results of this strange mix, you would probably find something not far from Tenacious D.

The band, a rock duo consisting of Jack Black (lead vocals) and Kyle Gass (lead guitar), was the premise for a short ten-minute TV program on HBO. It aired after "Mr. Show" with Bob and David. The show was about their trials and tribulations as the self-proclaimed "greatest band on earth."

In reality, they are two overweight guys with acoustic guitars and no fashion sense, and their only gigs were open mic nights at the same, practically empty, club. In their minds, however, they are Gods of rock and God's gift to women. Their songs, which were performed as part of the show, were usually about how much "ass" they kicked and girls being the attractions. Also, their humor is grounded in song lyrics. Their songs, which are in song lyrics. Their songs, which are mostly about their own "greatness," are short and never draw the jokes out to the point of boredom. "Kyle Quit the Band" is pretty self-explanatory, and features some great metaphors about their "jubilant" reunion. "Rock Your Socks" is another humorous take on how "good" their band is, and "Double Team" is a joke about what happens when Kyle, Jack, and a woman are alone together in a room.

Some of the best moments on the record are actually on spoken dialogue tracks. This is where Jack Black's greatest sense of comedy really shines through. "Drive-Thru" and "One Note Song" will surely be listener favorites. His humor is not so much in what he says, but how he says it. His delivery, as an actor, is near perfect in the comedic sense. This can also be seen in a number of the films he has been in such as "High Fidelity" with Jon Cusack.

Overall, some listeners will certainly be turned off by the raunchy lyrics. The F-word is used in an infinite amount of times, and some of the sexual references are very graphic. Their best moments, however, are not found here. It is found in a much more subtle way. The funniest part of the album is the fact that it is an act. The whole thing is an act. Their attitude and arrogance, which is very reminiscent of '80s hair bands, is all an act. This is where their humor is grounded in song lyrics. Their songs, which are mostly about their own "greatness," are short and never draw the jokes out to the point of boredom. "Kyle Quit the Band" is pretty self-explanatory, and features some great metaphors about their "jubilant" reunion. "Rock Your Socks" is another humorous take on how "good" their band is, and "Double Team" is a joke about what happens when Kyle, Jack, and a woman are alone together in a room.

Some of the best moments on the record are actual...

How old are you now? How old are you now?

Self, a Model Magazine

By Anna Lawrence
Arts and Entertainment Editor

If every woman’s magazine were as well put together and as informative as the monthly magazine, Self, the world would be a much better place for females everywhere. Truly, this is the only magazine a woman would ever need to get. Self is the magazine for today’s independent woman. This isn’t a sex-crazed woman, as a magazine like Cosmopolitan might lead you to believe, and this isn’t a man-hating, feminist kind of woman. Self, on the other hand entirely, promotes total well-being including mind, body and spirit, but not in such a “new age” kind of way. SELF helps a woman grow and become strong, but real-les she is a beautiful creature as well.

The magazine is broken down into the following five sections: Beauty, Fitness, Health and Happiness, Nutrition, and Style. Each issue includes short one-page articles and features, like the “You. Only Better” column, which is a compilation of reader and editor suggestions on a specific topic each month in the Beauty section, and longer more in-depth articles, like “10 Healthiest (and Unhealthiest!) Places for Women,” which appears in the October 2001 issue. Each section includes a one-page wrap-up of short news headlines pertaining to that topic. On the “Happiness Flash” page, one could read about controlling your dreams, what it means if you choose wine over beer, light therapy as it relates to pregnant women, or how your busy schedule may affect your fertility.

Other regular features include a celebrity interview (this month, Elizabeth Hurley talks about breast cancer). Also, updates on the latest fitness and diet trends (letter grade ratings, from A+ to F), and a pull out section on exercises focused on a specific muscle group (abs), or focused on a specific goal (all over tone, better flexibility).

Of course, where would a woman’s magazine be in October but covering the latest on breast cancer? October’s issue breaks a 36-page handbook to covering breast cancer. Features include how for breast cancer research has come in the past ten years, interviews with breast cancer survivors, and the latest breakthroughs. Perhaps the most breathtaking are the pictures of four women, all survivors of breast cancer. The portraits are in startling black and white, and each survivor is completely topless. All had mastectomies, but treated them differently. Geralyn Lucas opted for a saline implant after her breast was removed, while Elena Comendador opted to leave hers as is. Jennie Noah had a mastectomy constructed from her own tissue, and Anne Stansell had a mastectomy and reconstruction, but kept both her saline implants removed. The images are startling, but are reminders of the strength that lies within us, and of the importance of getting regular mammograms.

Another promotion of good health each year is the Self-Challenge. This challenge is a three-month program, usually done in the spring of each year. Each month, a new challenge is set forth for participants that include changing the way you eat, live, and work-out. The challenges start out easy but get harder. Participants must take part in the Self Challenge through the Internet when they have met the challenge, and at the end of the three months, prizes are awarded just for finishing. Of course, if you’ve stuck with the plan for three months, you’ve gained much more than a fitness bag filled with exercise clothes, or a vacation to a spa, you’ve gained a better body and better habits. This year, the Self Challenge went year round; the plan can be found online at www.self.com, and smaller challenges are printed each month (this month, the challenge is to have a power snack (i.e., a banana, not a bag of cookies from a vending machine).

A few features play on the word “self,” such as: a monthly column written by a reader called “Self-Expression,” the back page interview with a celebrity called “Self-Portrait” (where the interviewee must choose a self-word to describe themselves); this month Anaïs Lewit of MTV chose self-appreciating; month’s self-word I laid out on one page with quotes relating to that specific word.

If ever a magazine presented a positive image for women to live by, it would be SELF. The models shown and the diet and fitness plans are not unattainable. There are very few wall-like women, diets include real food you might actually enjoy, and exercises are reasonable for on-the-go female to get through. If we want our daughters to grow up with a positive self-image, we should be putting magazines like SELF into their hands, and leave magazines like Seventeen, Cosmopolitan or Cosmo Girl on the racks.

The Montclairian
Welcome to another installment of Cyberlife. As always, any sites you see here are linked to The Montclarion Website (themontclarion.com), so you don’t have to type out the URL.

Our first site is Live Journal, a great site that allows you to either post a journal on the web, or look at the journals of other people’s. Also with Halloween around the corner, we will be visting some sites that can either help with your upcoming halloween party, help you throw a last minute costume together or just learn about Halloween itself. This week we will look at decorating tips for the home.

Live Journal (www.livejournal.com)

Everyone’s looked at their siblings’ journal or diary, either you were looking for dirt to get on the good side of mom, or just looking for the hell out of it. But now that your grown up, what do you do now? You go to Live Journal.

Started as an open source project to make a journal/calender in Perl, what people do with their websites, Live Journal has now become a hugely popular site to go to for a lot of people’s ideas, from poetry to posting pictures and other weird images, to just posting of what happened during the day. Live Journal has managed to find a place in thousands of peoples hearts.

What attracts a lot of people to the site is you don’t have to be a member to view the journal entries (although you can set it up so that only people you know can view it.)

Many people use this as a easy-to-use link from their personal websites, to help with the hassle it can be to continuously upload a new web page from their site. It also has become a way to meet people that might think like you do.

The site itself is very easy to use. You start off with a free account that gives you access to everything you can do. There are paid accounts, but the only advantage is that you can put on a faster server with less people on it, and you can actually change the HTML code to make it look like the journal is part of your website. After starting an account, you just go to the Update Journal link, and that’s it. You can post both a simple update with just your post, or put in things like what music your listening to, or your mood at the moment. If that’s too hard for you, you can even download a client that allows you to update the journal without even going to the website.

The only con to the site so far has been it’s too popular. Over the summer there was a massive server break-down that caused it to be hard to get on to your journal, or even on to the website. While this was solved with the purchase of new servers and the limiting of journal search abilities (you can no long search for peoples journals by using their location in the US), it could crop up again.

Still, Live Journal manages to cater to large groups of people on the web. Both those who are exhibitionists and like to talk about their life, and those who like to watch.

Gothic Martha Stewart (www.foreaders.com/martha) This site manages to answer that age-old question, and answer it well. What if Martha Stewart listened to Bauhaus? (hey, they did write a song called “She’s in Parties.”) That’s right, if Martha Stewart was a goth, what would be her decorating tips be then? How about wedding tips? Tyrant L. Bass decided it was time to find out.

Being a frequenter of the goth fashion/limelight board, she realized many of Martha’s “good thing” projects could be readily made to cater to goths by just changing the color of the project to reflect a slightly darker taste. The items looked great, and where much cheaper to make than store bought, very similar to Martha’s own decorating style. Soon the idea of Gothic Martha Stewart was born.

The site, while being a bit minimalist, is full of great ideas that are very well planned and sorted out. They range from where to start, to motifs you can create depending on your feelings, to where to shop and what you should buy.

The tips themselves are often very well thought out, and describe step by step what you should do. While it would help if there were more pictures on the site to go along with this, you would have to be completely brain dead not to be able to get yourself through. There are also links to take you to other sites that can help you learn how to sew, paint, or just talk about the gothic lifestyle.

So whether your looking for decorating tips for you upcoming Halloween party, or just to scare of your dorm mate, check out Gothic Martha Stewart, you’ll be surprised at how great some of those ideas are.
Paranoia

phone was talking. Chanting incessantly was more like it. Then... I heard a fragment punctuated by a four-second pause. "Hello!" What was going on here? "Hello..." Cold k dictons of fear punctured my reality. "Hello!" Initiative was what was needed. "Yes, I am right here, sir." I said brightly, not wanting to hint that I was Crazy. "Oh, all right." was the reply. In the same drab tone, I strengthened my resolve and began the attack. "Do you want to know if we have a movie in stock," I began, ending not so much in a question as a demand, daring the caller to deny what I was proposing. There was a brief pause out of what surprise and annoyance? Or maybe it was just an attempt to psych me out. "Yes, that’s correct," was the reply, resplendent in its blandness. And do you need THE MANCHURIAN CANDIDATE? I continued, becoming energized by the sheer nature of what I was discovering. "No, that’s all." A long pause. Each second was rendering me apart like a fine-edged blade. "You’re planning a party late tonight?"

Parking on campus: Isn’t there anything else to talk about? It was an issue last week in this same forum; it’s been an issue countless times. At this point, everyone is tired of both the problem and the complaining. This week, however, there is an area of the issue that may never have been broached in the pages of The Montclarion: ticket appeals.

As with “real” tickets received from towns, MSU gives you the option to either suck it up and pay the fine or file for a ticket appeal, in which case your claim and reasoning as to why you did not deserve the ticket is reviewed. If the review is favorable, you pay no fine. If not, you suck it up.

Up until this year, student ticket appeals were handled by the SGA, specifically the Director of Services, and faculty appeals went through the University Senate. Now, all appeals are ultimately reviewed by a private attorney who makes the final decision, and many lament this change, but is it really a bad thing?

Ticket appeal by peer-review does not seem to be the most unbiased form of assessing the fairness of a fine leveled against a person. It would be an interesting study to conduct finding out how many SGA members ever paid a parking fine under the former system. There are other issues at hand here, however, than possible favoritism in the former appeals process, one of which is the manner in which this right of the SGA was taken from them.

Dr. Pennington claims that the SGA was given due notice concerning the change in parking appeals, but SGA executive board members tell a different story, stating that it was forced upon them with maybe minutes of advance notice. Further, when the SGA looked for a compromise in the situation, all offers were denied. The idea of a unified student/faculty review board was presented and denied at least in part on the grounds that an independent attorney reviewing appeals was a common practice, and according to Vice President Hewitt, a single body was needed and preferred to deal with the appeals. Why then could this not be accomplished with a private attorney overseeing the actions of some sort of unified group of students and faculty? (though the idea of a unified student and faculty review board may be oxymoronic in a more than two-word way, and even that in itself is paradoxical...)

Another consideration in all of this is the issue of whether or not students, or anyone, should be held accountable for parking practices that step slightly over the line. Ample parking is available only in the dreams of students forced to add MSU traffic and parking space scavenger hunts to their commute times. Boring practices like parking in fire lanes, handicap spots and so on, what really is wrong with a little creative parking? Finding a spot where none may be painted and causes no trouble to others parked in the vicinity? Why should anyone have to pay for a lack of ample facilities on the part of the university?

In any case, what’s done is done and will not be undone. All that can be done now is to comment on it with one more parking thought: The general feeling of many students towards MSU is not a good one. The administration is perceived as fallible, and at times oppressive. Little things like losing control of parking appeals changing hands only worsen this. To the extent that there is almost a sort of learned helplessness on the part of some students and their regard for the University. If we were given more control in little areas, like maintaining control of parking appeals, or maybe the menu in cafeterias and other such things, this could go a long way towards improving the general atmosphere on campus. It’s sort of like the patient in a hospital who’s in pain. When administered painkillers by doctors, there is a certain range of effectiveness, a range that almost always increases when the patient is given control over the medication in the form of a push-button device. Sometimes, that device is only a placebo, yet still the patient feels better having the illusion of control, and maybe that is what lies at the heart of this issue. With the ability to grant parking appeals, the SGA had some small illusion of power, and having it taken away is both discomforting and painful.
To the Students of Montclair State University:

As a cabinet member of the Student Government Association who deals with campus problems, I've worked on improving the campus in many ways. I have many concerns about the Red Hawk Diner.

First, I must say that I have serious doubts about our new diner. I'll mention the obvious fact that it should have been opened already, but I'd like to focus on other points. For instance, it was announced that one of the target audiences for the diner was to be off-campus students and visitors. A question to all of you: Since you could easily walk next to the Six Brothers Diner (they have their parking lots, which is always a plus) right next to the campus, why would you prefer to hike back to the MSU diner? Might I remind everyone that the Red Hawk Diner was built over one of our few visitor lots? Six Brothers is in the main competition of the Red Hawk, but I see little that they would have to do to keep up with us. Plus, they serve alcohol, which MSU will never do, so the Red Hawk Diner can kiss goodbye its 21 year old and up customers.

Another appalling truth is that the new establishment will not be accepting meal plans. The current plan is to allow you to use Red Hawk Dollars there, but no meal plans. Why one and not the other? They both can be swiped on the same meal. A great potential audience for the diner would be the resident community; yet they won't let you use your meals. Goodbye to the resident customers.

Yet another disturbing fact is that Sodexho seems to be slowly closing some of its food sources, to "nudge" everyone into the new diner. The Student Center cafeteria has already begun to close at 3 p.m. during the week. What is the student on the go, who grabs a fast meal between two close classes, to do? Bye bye to Late night at the Ratt is soon to follow. Late night has become very popular for hungry students with extra swipes on their meal card, and it is being canceled. It doesn't take a great thinker to see the administration trying to corral us like sheep into their diner.

I think it all boils down to publicity. Prospective new students and guests of the university are supposed to see the new diner and stare at it in awe. They should not ask questions like "where do I park?" or "how will I pay if I choose to live on campus?" This is marketing. This is the university trying (expensively I might add) to make the campus look better so they can keep interest up. And if they don't clean up some of these problems soon, then it will be a sad lost investment. Sorry, but I will be at Six Brothers.

By the end of the game, broken and defeated. Bard made a lonely trek back to their buses. For them there were no cheers, there were no fans, only a three hour ride back home and the bruises they had received courtesy of MSU Rugby.

Finally Luca "Guc" Piscatelli "The Beast of Bayonne" was able to take advantage of the horrible perfor­mance that Bard was putting on, and placed the ball in for the 2nd time of the game.

By this point in each of the scrum down the scrums of Bard College echoed in the heads of MSU's front row as they trampled over the Bard Rock. At one point the Bard captain approached the Revelers and said, "Listen mafos, why don't we just settle this scrum with a simple game of Rock, Scissors, Paper..." We were tired of losing."They were as good as their ball handling skills, and working as a team, they once again found themselves in front of the try zone. Prop Brian "Flounder" Cross took the ball and drove wide inside inches of the try area but with about half a dozen players trying to stop him, he couldn't com­plete the trek. The ball was fisted to eight man Mike "Meat" Hade who put the ball in to score the try.

At half time the score was 28 to 0, putting the MSU RFC with a hefty lead and a good position in the game. They quickly took some water, discussed several strategies on how they could embarrass Bard a little more and took the field once again for their best half in a game ever.

The Revelers wing performed superbly on Sunday when they made short work of the Barb wing. Other MSU veterans like Jason "Tommy Tough Guy" Trabb who hasn't been seen since the last season so far, with eight man Mike "Meat" Hade who put the ball in to score the try. One of the big points during the game the ref would stop both teams could drink water, (especially MSU, surprisingly, beating a team within inches of their life can take a lot out of you). The ref could stop the game to try and keep count of how many times the Revelers had scored.

VOLUNTEER NURSES IN KING

The Horoscope Never Lies...

Aries (March 21 - April 20): That flaming pyre in the shape of a heart outside Blanton Hall at 3 in the morning this week is all for you, baby. Apparently that restraining order means nothing to your stalker.

Taurus (April 21 - May 20): This week you will find great joy and amusement in playing practical jokes on all of your friends and acquaintances. Mom will think you have gone completely insane. The jokes on them, you've been completely insane for a very, very long time.

Gemini (May 21 - June 21): Make things up down at the office. Clear absolutely everything from everyone's desk, leaving it all in a pile in the middle of the room. Hang things from the ceiling, like phones and co-workers paper weights. Work on your put with a baseball bat and full peanut butter jar. Chase people out of the office with said baseball bat. Nearly a conga line, or work on the limbo, macarena and electric slide. When all else fails, get on your desk and sing "Everybody Hurts," while ripping pages out of your computer programming manual.

Cancer (June 22 - July 22): Don't believe the mail you find along with your ATE student accounts mail. The Health and Wellness Center really doesn't think you're carrying a rare strain of the Ebola virus.

Leo (July 23 - August 23): Peanut Butter.

Virgo (August 24 - September 23): The "play fighting" you engage in with your girlfriend turns scary this week when you accidentally impale her on one of those bots near the Student Center that prevents cars from driving up on campus.

Libra (September 24 - October 23): As a special addition to your birthday celebration this week, we here at the Humour section have delivered special candles to top that monstrous cake of yours. Not only do they explode, they'll be laced with Angel Dust.

Scorpio (October 24 - November 22): If you live with a cancer, beware, they're carrying a rare strain of the Ebola virus. Unless you want to turn into mush from the inside out and die, avoid your roommate at all costs.

Sagittarius (November 23 - December 21): Everybody hates you, including your mom. Move to Montana and start herding sheep.

Capricorn (December 22 - January 19): Remember this morning when your roommate gave you a great big hug. The "Scissors" has been undefeated against America by getting all dressed up in a blue body suit, carrying around a shield and forcing everyone to address you as "Captain America."

Aquarius (January 21 - February 19): Remember this week in predicting the future, after a tough week in scoring six times this weekend. He had a shot at the goal which would have gone in, if the Red player hadn't cheated and put his hand in front of the goal.

Pisces (February 20 - March 20): The secret to eternal life is within your grasp, usually three or four times a day and while you're reading dirty magazines.

"The Rock" has been undefeated against the "Scissors" for years. Recently, Christine Sikora got to sit shotgun next to her good friend, Susan Oprendek because she beat her friend Dana in a friendly game of "Rock, Scissors, Paper" after opting to choose "the Rock."

The Magic 8 ball

The 8 ball remained undefeated this week in predicting the future, after a tough week of being used to determine one's sex life. However, it performed excellent this week predicting "The Man with the Fro" to be crowned Homecoming King.

Super East: Here Come the Red Hawks

Upcoming Season to Challenge Hockey Team in New Division

By Mike Halper
Staff Writer

The Red Hawks Hockey club is finally back on the ice to defend their Mid-Atlantic Collegiate Hockey Association (M-ACHA) title and prove to the American Collegiate Hockey Association Division Two (ACHA-2) that they are the best.

After being snubbed by the rankings committee last year and finishing fourth in the league, the Red Hawks will have a chance to showcase their talent against the Northeast Pennsylvania teams this season.

The Super East Collegiate Hockey League, the home of all four of the region's representatives in last year's ACHA National Tournament, is finally back on the ice to defend their title against the State representatives in last year's ACHA National Tournament.

The third line for the Red Hawks, currently the home of the State University of New York-Albany (SUNY)-Albany, New York University (NYU) Violets, Siena College Saints, SUNY- Stony Brook Sea Wolves, and current league champion, Central Connecticut State University (CCSU).

In the M-ACHA, there have been a few cosmetic changes as well. The Montclair State University Ice Hawks have been disbanded, and the Temple University team left the league. The Seton Hall Pirates joined the M-ACHA, rounding out the eight teams. Jersey City, MU, the Rider Broncos, Millersville Marauders, University of Maryland, and Baltimore County Retriever, University of Pennsylvania Quakers, Princeton Tigers, and the William Paterson Fighting Scots have all been added.

The Red Hawks have undergone some changes themselves, adding a number of new recruits to the core unit of last year's dominating team. Kevin Micek, David Bodson, and Co-Captain Frank Barone have re-emerged as the team's top line, and will provide plenty of offensive fireworks if the team can stay healthy. The trio played together for a short time last year before injuries hit the team and the lines were switched around.

Co-Captain Jim Latham will spend his final year with the club centering for scrappy wingers Ryan Taitt and Tim Dybus. The trio began playing together last year, and showed such chemistry as a unit that the coaching staff didn't touch the line for the entire season.

While the first two lines are easily recognizable, the third line is brand new. John Baumgartner and Devin Riley, who emerged as a talented duo last year, were expected to anchor a solid third line until Baumgartner unexpectedly left the team for personal reasons. Currently slated to step up and form the third line are Lenny Luciano, a transfer from Seton Hall, Michael Grey from Xavier High School, and Ryan Pfeiffer, a transfer from West Virginia University, an ACHA-1 school.

Riley will be centering a fourth line alongside Eric Englerath, a transfer from Bergen County College and a former member of the junior B junior Red Hawks, and Eric Humber of Montclair High School. The third and fourth lines will most likely be shaken up a bit to see which groupings are more effective. Should any of the players falter, Keith Grauman and Robert Giallombardo are waiting in the wings to show they're worthy of getting some playing time.

Defensively is where the Red Hawks have really improved. Adding three solid defenders. Chris Poli transferred from ACHA-1 Towson State and will be pairing up with Robby Heyrich, a standout at Montclair High School last year. Anthony Rossillo will spend his final year along­ side Justin Conigliaro from Xaverian, and Eddie Caldwell and Adam Leopone who will be playing together for a second straight year. Vinny Vulcano, a fiery competitor, who has been improving steadily, and will be the first defender off the bench for the time being.

Robbie Martinez returns as the top goaltender with Justin McDonald, of Morris Hills High, and Mike Mikdor, of West Orange High, backing him up. With the most offensive depth and the best defensive unit in the three-year history of the hockey club, this could be their biggest year yet. The year will kick off with a pair of tests this weekend, with the Red Hawks taking on Penn State tomorrow night at 8:30 p.m., at Royal Oak Ice Arena, and then facing off against ACHA-1 Navy Saturday night at the same time. Last year, the Red Hawks lost to Penn State on the road, and narrowly defeated Navy, 1-9, in Annapolis.

important to examine: "The Shot's" place in American history.

"It's baseball's greatest moment and we wanted to approach it from a different perspective, a cultural and historical context," said Kaplan.

"As you can see from the discussion, this is a moment that still resonates and will still be talked about 50 years from now," Kaplan, who moderated the discussion, went on to connect that moment to today.

"The role of sports and baseball in people's lives is very applicable today because of baseball being such a great diversion," said Kaplan. "What baseball was very important to the morale of the American people (during and after World War II)," said Kaplan.

The trio played together for a short time last year before injuries hit the lineup for the entire season.

The museum also featured vintage photos, newspaper coverage, and original artwork commemorating "The Shot Heard 'Round the World." One picture is of Iranca sitting in the Dodger dressing room with his head down. Another is of exuberant Giants' fans gathered outside the Polo Grounds clubhouse steps waiting for Thomson to make a curtain call. To contrast the two is to understand just how different the emotions were for fans depending upon which team they cheered for. So after 50 years, one question still remains unanswered for Dodger fans. Had the Dodgers defeated the Giants that day, would they have beaten the Yankees?

"We beat them a lot of times," said former Yankees' catcher and Hall-of-Famer Yogi Berra who attended the game, but left after winning the World Series.

"In a short series, you never know what's going to happen," just as no one watching, listening, or playing on October 3, 1951 knew they would witness a piece of history that will live forever.

"As you can see [from the discussion] that will live forever.

"I burst into tears and ran out of my house to look for a friend of mine. We were both crying in disbelief," said Chuck Linfante, a member of the audience for the event. He and the rest of the Dodger faithful will never forget that day.

The museum also had a display of pictures and news coverage of that memorable day.

"That [Hodges' call] over the newsmen's footage has left a legacy for the ages," said Prager. "For some, like Chuck Linfante, the heartbeat is there like it was yesterday."

Dodger fans still cringe at the sight and sound of 'The Shot.' For some, like Chuck Linfante, the heartbeat is there like it was yesterday.
Soccer Drops Third Straight
Half-Way Through What Has Become a Long Season

Historic Baseball Moment Remembered
50 Years Later Thomson’s Shot Still Heard Round the World
By Eli Gelman
Assistant Sports Editor

For many, it was one of the worst days of their lives. When Bobby Thomson hit that fateful ninth inning home run off Ralph Branca on October 3, 1951 to clinch the pennant for the New York Giants, he broke the hearts of Brooklyn Dodger fans across America. Today, 50 years after that historical day, Dodger fans still remember it like it was yesterday.

But Thomson’s “Shot Heard ‘Round the World” transcended sports, and over the years has etched a place in American history.

“You have to list it with John F. Kennedy’s assassina

dramatic moment in baseball history on October 3, 1951.

Robinson joined Wall Street Journal reporter Joshua Prager at a roundtab discussion entitled “Why the Shot Heard ‘Round the World Still Resonates” at the Yogi Berra Museum and Learning Center on September 25.

Prager, 30, wasn’t born when Thomson hit the home run. He couldn’t have been a Dodger fans who attended the game. But Thomson’s “Shot Heard ‘Round the World” transcended sports, and over the years has etched a place in American history.
