MSU's proposed scholarship to the children of World Trade Center victims has been put on hold said VP of Student Affairs, Karen Pennington.

President Susan Cole announced on Friday, September 21, the university was offering "scholarships to children of the World Trade Center victims to dependent students who are New Jersey Residents who lost their parents in the World Trade Center Disaster." According to Pennington, the scholarships have been put on hold "pending state legislation." Assemblyman Joseph Azzolina has introduced a bill that would provide tuition benefits on a statewide basis," said Pennington.

Assemblyman Joseph Azzolina introduced a bill on October 3, 2001 that provides any dependent child or surviving spouse of a person who was a New Jersey resident on September 11, 2001 and who was killed as a result of the terrorist attack on the United States on September 11, 2001, which included the.

Sexual Assault Examiner Now On Campus

By Valerie Harper
Assistant News Editor

Wellness Services, in collaboration with the University Police, has created a Sexual Assault Response Team (SART), which will be on call 24 hours a day to aid victims of sexual assault.

The team includes university police, psychologists from Counseling and Psychological Services, and nurses from the Wellness Center.

Donna Bany, a registered nurse and the Associate Director for Wellness Services, has just completed training that certifies her as a Sexual Assault Nurse Examiner. She has been trained to recognize signs of physical and sexual assault. She also has the power to collect forensic evidence using a standardized rape kit that will be admissible in court, if the victim decided to press charges.

Bany said that the decision to press charges does not have to be made when the evidence is collected. "Reporting an assault to campus police does not mean pressing charges," she said. "It does guarantee getting the medical treatment they need." Bany said that many victims do not make the decision to press charges until later, but having the forensic evidence is "invaluable in court." The evidence is kept for three months after it is collected.

Sexual Assault Nurse Examiners are available to help victims of sexual assault. They can help establish a forensic evidence kit that will be admissible in court, if the victim decides to press charges. "Without forensic evidence it's just he said, she said," Bany said.

Members of the Sexual Assault Response Team will serve as advocates for the victims, from the time they report the assault, through the court process if they victim decides to press charges.

Barry said this service is being offered as a support system for victims of sexual assault. They can get help directly on campus, without having to go to an unfamiliar emergency room. In the past, the wellness center could conduct examinations, treat for trauma, and offer counseling. But they were not authorized to collect forensic evidence. "Personally, I felt we were doing the students a disservice by not being able to offer full treatment here, in a familiar setting," Bany said.

In order to ensure fire safety on campus, Montclair State University has hired a full-time Fire Marshall with over 14 years of experience as a fire safety professional. Thomas Costello worked at the Clifton Fire Department as Fire Prevention Specialist, Inspector, and Investigator.

According to Patricia Hewitt, Vice President for Facilities and Business Operations, Costello was hired to "work with the Director of Environmental Health and Safety who is very busy with other environmental issues besides fire safety." Hewitt hired Costello because she feels the campus is "at sufficient size and complexity" and that a full-time professional was needed to "work with the University Community on fire safety issues."

Events such as the Seton Hall University fire, new legislation concerning sprinklers, and more comprehensive inspections by the state "clear the decks," Hewitt said.

Stolen Cars Lead to Beefed Up Security

By Valerie Harper
Assistant News Editor

The number of cars stolen from campus parking lots has increased this year. According to Chief of Police, Paul Cell, 22 cars have been reported missing from campus parking lots from January 2001, to the present. That is a dramatic increase when compared to the total number of car thefts from 2000. The Annual Security Report for 2000, which is prepared by the University Police and Security Dept., lists nine car thefts, including attempts, for all last year. This increase in car thefts.
10/8/01 - A male student was trimming his chest hair and accidentally cut off his nipple.

10/9/01 - A male student returned to find his car alarm sounding. He observed two males fleeing in a car. He chased them onto Rt. 3, but gave up the chase. He provided police with descriptions. Later it was determined that the suspect’s car was stolen.

10/7/01 - A male student was assaulted by several males after he asked them to leave a party in his room.

10/6/01 - MSU, Montclair and Little Falls police responded to a fight between two fraternity members.

10/3/01 - Little Falls responded to a fire in Finley Hall. It was determined that a small electrical fire occurred in a closet.

10/3/01 - A newly installed gas line was determined to be leaking near the Red Hawk Diner. MSU maintenance personnel and Little Falls police stopped the leak.

10/3/01 - A female student left her cell phone unattended in the Student Center and returned to find it missing.

10/3/01 - A maintenance worker found a computer damaged and the locking panel on the floor in a classroom on the second floor in Finley Hall.

Security

has led to increasing safety precautions by the police dept. The police have not caught any car thieves yet this year, but patrol in the parking lots has already been increased.

"We are trying to be proactive before the number of thefts increases further," Cell said.

The security and safety stops at each campus exit are one visible sign of heightened security. Officers are stationed at each exit and have been trained to look for signs of break-in and damage to every car leaving campus. In an effort to keep traffic flowing, students are being instructed to slow down as they leave campus, and only need to pull over if the officer asks.

The check-points are also being used as safety stops. During lighter traffic periods, officers are reminding students to buckle up, put their headlights on, or renew inspection. According to Cell, this is being done as an additional safety precaution, and no tickets have been issued as a result of these stops.

"The main concern is driver safety and personal property," Cell said. "We are not out there to write you a summons."

Other safety measures are also underway. The police department is planning on purchasing additional cameras in lots where there has been a high amount of car theft. They also intend to put more lighting in all the parking lots.

Cell said that all the lots have been affected by car theft, except the gated parking lots. There was one case in Lot 17 where a motorcycle was stolen, but in that case the vehicle could have been walked around the gate.

In the gated lots, a card must be swiped to get in and out.

Standard Parking, the new company that now handles all aspects of parking, is working in conjunction with the police department to fight the car theft problem.

John Zempare, Director of Parking Services, has instructed his three parking enforcers, two on foot and one in a patrol car, to be on the lookout for anything suspicious.

"They are equipped with walkie-talkies to communicate any problems back to parking headquarters," Zempare said. This radio communication is also heard at police headquarters.

Campus police were at one time responsible for both parking and security. Standard Parking now has responsibility for parking violations, leaving the police to concentrate on campus security.

Zempare said he hopes the new parking garage, which should be constructed in June, will aid in lighter security. People coming for events and seminars will be able to park in this lot," Zempare said. "We are hoping this will take the pressure off the other lots."

The police have also observed a number of cars appearing on campus that were stolen from other towns and left in a campus parking lot. Cell said this happens because the stolen cars are used to facilitate another crime. The thief may come to campus in a stolen car and leave that car in a campus parking lot in order to steal a car from here.

Cell said that MSU is faced with the same types of crimes and incidents that a small town is faced with, but as a whole the campus is safe.

"Most crime is crime against property, not against a person," Cell said.

Latin Pride Sweeps Through Campus
Latinos Make Their Mark With Annual Latin Pride Month Flag Raising

By Simona Kogan
Feature Editor

It was one of the many activities given the person in charge of events more breathing room and a chance to relax despite the stressful planning of the month. But this year's ceremony was slightly different from past ones. L.A.S.O. had extended the month's activities in light of the recent tragedies. It had given the person in charge of events more breathing room and a chance to relax despite the stressful planning that went into such a high-profile month. But last not least, by extending the month; L.A.S.O. celebrates the recent high numbers in the Latino population. The numbers have skyrocketed to 32.8 million.

The Latin Pride Month flag raising included the proclamation reading by President Cole, and a speech by L.A.S.O. advisor Carlos Ortiz. Father Al of the Newman Catholic Center, also gave a blessing and asked for a moment of silence for the victims of the Pentagon and World Trade Center attacks.

Latinismo head, Jesica Maceto, Sister Karla Mateo, Treasurer Sarah Bernal, and L.A.S.O. member Christian Gavina provided entertainment that afternoon, as they swayed to the beat of Cumbia, a folkloric style of dance from Columbia. All were from “Latinismo,” a program held Monday nights in the Student Center to teach different styles of Latin dance to eager students.

Sarah Bernal also displayed her pride with an unexpected, but extremely relevant poem. She read, “Hablemos El Idioma Lateral.”

Students Sarah Bernal, Jessica Mateo, and Karla Mateo dance to the sounds of Cumbia, a folkloric type of dance from Columbia. The three members of L.A.S.O. are also part of Latinismo, a program where interested students learn the latest dance steps from Argentina, Spain, Mexico, and other Latin American countries.

Peace is Possible for MSU Community
Interfaith Discussion on Violence Becomes Celebration for World Peace

By Cristin Curry
Staff Writer

Peace requires a communica tive understanding between different faiths, races, and peoples. This should be the case for the nation, but it is also the case for the MSU student body.

With that in mind, the Women's Center held an Interfaith Discussion and Peace Celebration on Wednesday, October 3 at the Student Center. The purpose of the event was to discuss the meanings of violence as well as how to create peace, both individually and socially.

The program was kicked off with a celebration of African American/Afro Caribbean culture with some traditional African drumming, along with a traditional dance to the ancestors.

Prior to the dance was a pouring of libation, which is the pouring of water in the honor of ancestors.

The dancers also explained that the entire act was not so much a religious tradition as it was a spiritual tradition.

The conclusion of the meeting consisted of a variety of representatives from different cultures and religious beliefs to discuss how they find peace within their individual lifestyles.

The representatives ranged from Christianity to Taoism. They were: Amal Benol, President of the Muslim Student Organization, Rev. Alan Wells, Unitarian Universalistic Consultant. Father Al Berner, Catholic Chaplain of the Newman Center, Carlos Ortiz, Asst. to the Dean of Humanities, and World Trade Center attacks.

Each representative was allotted five to ten minutes to explain a little about their culture and distribute their advice for finding peace.

Following each session the audience was asked to interject their feelings and ideas to the panel. Junior Fat Howard summed up her ideas with the advice to “try and talk to someone with an opposing view to make an effort to understand the other side of the story.”

The meeting ended with a moment of silence and a prayer ceremony.

The conclusion of the celebration was closed off with a rhythmic dance, led by Heather Ferrara, to attempt to bring one in touch with the Earth.

Ermilda Abreu, Director of the Women's Center, helped to put the program together. The purpose of the meeting was to discuss the meanings of violence as well as how to create peace, both individually and socially.
MSU Students Witness Mock Sexual Assault Trial

Club Aladdin

Location
Club Aladdin is located at 382 Main Street Hackensack, NJ in the heart of downtown Hackensack.

Mass Transportation
Club Aladdin is accessible from this campus from the NJ Transit Bus Lines 705 to Passaic Bus Terminal East Bound and from the NJ Transit Bus Line 780 north bound to Englewood Hospital stop in Hackensack. Deven, take route 3 east and Gile Norh to Exit 160, make a right at Passaic Street, and go for 3.5 miles until you reach Main Street. Make a left and the restaurant is on your left.

Price Range
The average cost of an appetizer is $3.95 (cold) and $4.95 (hot). The average cost of an entree is $14.95. The cost of drinks is around $1.50 and desserts are $0.00.

What’s On The Menu
The cuisine offered here is typical Arabic and Middle Eastern cuisine. Cold and hot appetizers include humus chickpea and sesame seed dip, as well as cheese, falafel, pale bread Syrian cheese melt spiked with red pepper and mint, Lebanese salads and kibob sandwiches. Entrees include the world famous Shish Kebab, grilled quails, and spicy scallop kibob. Desserts include Baklawa, a honey nut pastry, and Kunafa, a pastry covered in Cinnamon.

Ambiance
Upon entering, one sees the variety of Arabic cultural paraphernalia lining the window including swords, carpets, and pets. The restaurant looks like something out of the movie Arabian Nights. It also has a nightclub appeal because of the large Middle Eastern bands and belly dancers perform there. The restaurant plays host to visiting singers from the Middle East and many private parties. Arabic music is constantly played on the radio.

Thumbs Up, Thumbs Down
This is one of the most interesting restaurants that I have ever eaten at. Writers are friendly. The food tastes excellent. However, there is one small problem. It is closed to the public when they host large private parties on the weekends.

On a College Student’s Budget
This restaurant is very affordable to the college student. Try to visit Club Aladdin in the future, for the exotic appeal of this restaurant is well worth the trip.

But when Jaclyn’s lawyer asked Joseph if she’d ever verbally said she wanted to have sex that night, he quietly answered “no.” Joseph Marks was found guilty of date rape by every juror in the audience.

The first part of the program consisted of a one-act play about fictional MSU student Jaclyn Wilks, who accused her boyfriend Joseph Marks of raping her after a Clove Road Apartment party.

The scene was set in a courtroom and after hearing both sides of the story, the audience became the jury and was to decide whether or not Joseph was guilty of the accusation. Paula Meyers was the first to take the stand. An MSU student, she had decided to attend the party Jaclyn and Joseph had been at before the supposed incident occurred. She testified that she had seen Jaclyn consume a massive amount of alcohol at the party, and thus, not walking or talking straight.

She saw the couple leave the party shortly afterwards. Jaclyn then took the stand and testified that she had consumed a lot of alcohol that night, but most had been what her boyfriend had provided for her. She said she asked to leave the party because she was dizzy and tired. Joseph took her back to his residence and was to decide whether or not Joseph was guilty of the accusation.

She then said that he got on top of her, and although she told him “don’t!” and pushed on his shoulders to get off, he continued, and raped her.

When asked by Joseph’s Defense Attorney if they’d had sex before, Jaclyn admitted that they had, but that night, sex was absolutely not consensual.

When asked why she hadn’t screamed, she testified that she was caught off guard and extremely scared. She lowered argued that Jaclyn just regretted having sex with Joseph and used rape as an excuse to make up for her guilt.

When Joseph took the stand, he said that she was hanging all over him at the party and assumed she wanted to leave early so they could have sex. He said she didn’t have too much to drink so if she wanted to resist she could have been more violent about pushing him away when he got on top of her. He admitted they had intercourse, and that she only pushed him lightly on his shoulders, which was a sign of “foreplay,” not resistance.

According to a National Crime Survey, 38% of reported rapes were committed by someone the victim knew, including a spouse or a boyfriend. Because of having known the attacker, many victims won’t report the rape or even tell anyone because of the fear, guilt, and embarrassment they feel.

“Date rape significantly impacts a person’s... their future social and physical interactions with people,” stated Barry. It is important to tell someone, even if one doesn’t want to bring the case to trial. The victim can receive the right contacts like lawyers and counseling to start the healing process.

Rape is a serious and controversial issue because there are usually no witnesses around to tell what actually occurred. According to the definition, if a woman is sexually penetrated against her will, it is rape, and it is not her fault.

Rape is a federal crime. Although it may be painful to take a stand against it, it should be reported so one more rapist can be stopped from doing it again.
Imagine yourself in the black, expansive void of outer space conducting atmospheric studies, capturing satellites, and docking at the International Space Station. This is nothing for Dr. Ellen Ochoa, the first-ever Hispanic female astronaut.

Ochoa was born on May 10, 1958 in Los Angeles, California, though she considers La Mesa, California to be her hometown. She graduated from Grossmont High School, and went on to get a Bachelor of Science degree in physics from San Diego University, and a master of science degree and doctorate in electrical engineering from Stanford University.

As a student and researcher at Stanford, Ochoa studied optical systems for performing information technology. She is a co-inventor, as well as a researcher. Ochoa has co-invented three patents for an optical inspection system; an optical object recognition method, and a method for noise removal in images.

Ochoa has supervised 35 engineers and scientists as the Chief of the Intelligent Systems Technology Branch of Ames.

In 1990, Ochoa was selected by NASA to become the first Hispanic female astronaut in outer space. Since then, she has been on two space flights and spent more than 480 hours in the “other realm.” She has been on a 9-day mission where she studied atmospheric and solar effects on the Earth’s climate and environment. She has used the Remote Manipulator System (RMS) to capture the Spartan satellite. She has been on a 10-day mission, visiting the International Space Station along the way.

Ochoa has won countless scholarships and awards for her research. Her NASA awards include the Exceptional Service Medal, the Outstanding Leadership Award, and Women in Aerospace Outstanding Achievement Award. Other awards include the Hispanic Heritage Leadership Award and the Hispanic Engineer Albert Baez Award for Outstanding Technical Achievement.

Ochoa’s dream is to build a Space Station. She states that it is “critical... to human exploration in space, a transportation mode to new frontiers.” She is a prime example to the Latin community of what can occur when one works hard to achieve their goals.

Beware of the Credit Card Trap
It's Easy to Fail Your First Major Test in Financial Responsibility

The companies that issue credit cards are hungry for new customers, and college campuses are among their favorite hunting grounds. Beware. Credit card debt is one of the major causes of personal bankruptcies. The cost of borrowing money on a credit card is high, even when it doesn’t lead to serious financial trouble.

Credit card marketers are smart and sophisticated, looking for ways to get you to take their cards, go out, and spend. When well managed, a credit card can be convenient for daily living, essential for paying for things like Internet services, and a genuine lifesaver in real emergencies.

The financial planning experts at the New Jersey Society of Certified Public Accountants encourage students to study credit card use carefully. Your credit card knowledge could have a significant impact on your personal financial security. Learn how to use credit cards wisely.

Banks and other financial institutions that offer credit cards earn money in two ways. The fees and interest they charge consumers is the most obvious source of their income. But it's also important to realize that they also charge the businesses that accept credit card transactions. So even if you pay off your account every month, the credit card issuers are still making money on every transaction, explaining why the competition for credit card customers is so fierce.

That competition is good for you if you have a good credit history. Don't accept the first credit card offer that you receive. Choose wisely.

Credit card solicitations offer low introductory rates. You should ignore them. The rates extend for a limited time, and numerous restrictions may apply. When you’re choosing a credit card, look for one with a low regular rate.

When selecting a credit card, consider the annual percentage rate (APR). The APR is the rate of interest a bank charges on your credit card balance. Look for a card that uses the “adjusted balance method.” Here, the interest charge is based on the amount you owe after subtracting your payment from the previous balance. Thus, you don't pay any interest.

Another factor is the “grace period” allowed by the credit-card company. “Grace period” refers to the period when an item is posted to your account but you are not charged any interest. Some credit card companies may charge interest as soon as an item is posted to your account. You could be charged interest before you get a chance to pay your bill.

With competition among credit-card companies for your business, you will come across offers that promise “no annual fee.” Make sure the offer is real. Issuers promise “no annual fee” but still charge a transaction fee for each purchase you make.

Read all the fine print on the application and in the documents you receive when you get your card. Be aware of charges for over-limit transactions, late payments, special rules and charges for cash advances.

Many credit cards provide some type of reward for using their cards. The more you charge on the card, the more “rewards” you earn. In addition to demonstrating smarts about the card that you choose, also be smart about how you use it.

Pay your bill off every month. If you can’t pay your credit card bill at the end of a month, you are going into debt.

Use only one card. You’ll get attractive offers from lots of credit card issuers, but use one primarily and pay it off every month. Every credit card offer you accept shows up on your credit rating. If you continue to carry several cards, your credit report will make you look just like what you are - a person struggling to manage credit cards wisely. That won’t prevent credit card issues from offering, but it may prevent you from qualifying for some more important financial goal.
Heroes walk among us. Like giants, their footsteps fall heavy, imprinting the sand and hearts around them. They walk side-by-side, less solemn, less noble, and more like the ordinary man riding the subway next to you. These heroes are among us.

One figure, David Gluck, 39, could be mistaken for a giant of sorts. He stands at about 6'3", and looks to weigh around 250 pounds. He comes from Fairlawn, New Jersey where he lives with his wife and daughter. He takes the 7 train to New York where he works as the Vice President of Human Resources for the Bank of America.

On the morning of Sept. 11, he described his office as turning hard to the left, then to their right, and again to the left. He watched as the floor of the 11th floor office ceiling caved in, that's when he, and the 400 other workers in his company, decided it was time to flee the World Trade Center's first tower. This was the first building to be hit by a hijacked Boeing plane.

Gluck described his first reaction as stunned. He believed that there was an earthquake, and was only sure of the fact that he had to get out of there. When he reached the staircase to run down to the lobby, he found it filled with smoke. Water was running down the steps from sprinklers flooding the offices in a mower attempt to control the fire. He watched as New York City's firefighters ran up the stairs from sprinklers flooding the offices in an eager way to safety. He handed a stranger's cell phone, "Don't worry about me, I'm safe." Gluck called his wife at home with a stranger's cell phone, "Don't talk, just listen." He is safe.

Gluck called his wife at home with a stranger's cell phone, "Don't talk, just listen." He is safe.

At the time Gluck got to the lobby of his building, the water was covering his shoes. He noticed a woman in the middle of a severe asthma attack; and without thought, he lifted her into his arms and carried her to the way of safety. He handed her to a police office outside, and looked up to see the building burning above him.

"Some things you never want to see for yourself," Gluck said in a grim tone as he described the people jumping out of the building to escape the flames creeping below them. "There were...parts of people...a torso lying on the ground," Gluck said of the horror around him. While he was outside, he called his wife at home with a stranger's cell phone, "Don't talk, just listen," he said. "I'm alive, and I'm safe."

Gluck called his wife a second time when he was finally on a train back to Fairlawn. He told his wife what happened, and asked her to pick him up at the station. Gluck is not unaffected by the events of Sept. 11 though; he.confided, "I don’t sleep through the night every night. I think it was raining one night, and the plane outside were flying low. I heard them and jumped off the bed." Gluck is not a small man, or a coward by any means, but he fears what he knows he cannot control.

"People help people," explained Gluck. "We bonded together." Firefighters rush into a building that collapses, in a fervent attempt to save lives. Gluck carries an office worker up the steps to a waiting police officer. A dog leads a blind man down 78 flights of stairs. A man shields a woman from the explosive wave of dust at the collapse of a building. A man lends another his cell phone.

Heroes walk among us. Hand in hand and side-by-side, they walk the streets of New York City. A company gives, a man carries, a hand outstretches, in simple gestures, heroes are born.

By Wendy Tiburcio

As the days pass, the sounds of a phone call become less welcoming and more dreadful than usual. Alvin Mallette closes his eyes engaging in a thoughtful moment. Thinking about the call that may change his life forever.

"It's hard to go on with your everyday routine," he said, straightening his posture like a soldier. "When that routine may drastically change in a moment's notice."

At 23, Mallette has finished a will leaving all his possessions to his parents. And with his bags packed at the side of his bed, Mallette has just completed two steps in anticipation of his departure.

On Sept. 11, after the tragedy, in which four hijacked planes hit the World Trade Center and the Pentagon, was confirmed to be a result of terrorist attacks, military forces around the country were called to action.

Mallette is one of the thousands of men still waiting to be deployed. As a part of the National Guard Air Force, he must prepare for whatever is coming. Since day one, the McGuire Air Force base in Beale, Meade, NJ, had been preparing him and countless others to fight in the war that may come at any time.

"When I first heard about the attacks I was over come with disbelief," he said shaking his head, recalling the moment. "I didn't know what to believe, since no one had all the facts and everything was just speculation."

Thinking it would be just another day, Mallette drove from his part-time job as residential counselor at the usual barber shop back home, Picatowary, there he was shipped with news and information from the media, the barbers, and the customers as well.

"It's hard to describe what I felt as I was trying to process everything I was hearing," he said. "The magnitude of the day's events didn't sink in until later that night."

Although it was all still a blur, Mallette immediately called his base to receive any orders. The day had come. All those that were not being deployed at that moment, were on standby.

Mallette, who joined the National Guard in 1998, two years after graduating high school, soon realized that the day he has been training for is closer that he ever thought.

"This is something I decided to do and what I train for," he says straightening his collar, hugging his hands together. "But it's like the death of a loved one, You know there's that possibility, but you never expected."

A Montclair State University alumnus, Mallette faces being ranked any second from his Master's program at Columbia University, which he started this Fall. As an African-American Studies major, he aspires to be a history professor and possibly an author on African-American issues that affect society.

I worked very hard to get to where I am today," he said, "but it may all be taken away by that call."

Following in the footsteps of his great-grandfather, who served in World War I, and his father, who was deployed during the Vietnam War, was something Mallette always dreamed of. With the encouragement of his father, and some uncertainty from his mother, he decided to join the military for whatever is coming.

"Although we're in a time of crisis, it's a decision I will never regret," he reassured. "The most frustrating part of all is the inquiring phone calls you receive from your loved ones and the anticipation of when and where I will be sent to." Mallette has been overwhelmed with endless questions since the attacks. Friends, family, co-workers, constantly calling to find out what is going on. Waiting for an alert to become another, he cannot make plans for the month, or even for the weekend.

"I prefer that they call already than to play this waiting game," he said shaking his legs. "But despite this, I am proud to have the opportunity to serve my country in a time of great need."

You’re Going to Be OK...It Isn’t Your Fault
By Chantel Paul

As they stumbled off the ferry, he kept telling them over and over again that they would be OK. That it wasn’t their fault. That they should call anyone close to them who might be worried. But many of them just looked at him with glassy eyes, not even acknowledging the comments.

They were the victims of the attacks on the World Trade Center’s Twin Towers on Sept. 11 and he was giving them on-the-spot trauma counseling.

Ahmet Dajlani, 50, is a Certified Alcohol and Drug Counselor (CADC) who specializes in adolescent and family counseling at the Bayonne Community Hospital on 29 Street in Bayonne, New Jersey. That Tuesday, his head was swimming with thoughts about the attacks only two hours into his shift.

“Then I vividly saw it. That’s when it became a surreal movie with the images and the fear,” said Dajlani about seeing the vent from his coworker’s window.

By 10 a.m., the hospital received a call that they should be expecting 600 victims and emergency crew as a result of the attacks. All the counselors were quickly brought together for a short meeting about trauma counseling and then dispersed throughout the hospital, based on their individual capabilities.

“I started off counseling in the emergency room,” said Dajlani.

He can even remember the first victim he counseled. It was a 35-year-old Hispanic woman covered from head to toe in white soot that stuck to her hair and face, giving her features a chalky outline. Dajlani recalled that instead of wanting to call her loved ones to reassure them, she refused to tell anyone about the tragedy.

In order to bring her out of that state of mind, he kept reassuring her that she was all right, but that her family needed to know she was safe. He stayed with her for half an hour before he had to attend to other victims being brought into the emergency room.

“She felt guilty and ashamed for surviving,” said Dajlani. “I was trying to make her connect emotionally.”

For two days the daily procedures of the hospital were halted, 90 percent of the operations were canceled, and every off-duty doctor reported to work voluntarily. But while the hospital had seemingly returned to normal by Wednesday, Dajlani will forever remember the images of hundreds who crossed his path in a time of devastating measures.

“You, human beings are incredible at times,” remarked Dajlani.
Tool Pushes the Envelope of Rock at MSG

By Jerome D’Angelo

October 11, 2001

Classifying Tool has always been difficult. In that way, they are not unlike Pink Floyd or the Grateful Dead in that they’re not so much any particular brand of music, but rather a truly unique set of individuals who just so happen to play music together. Listening to Tool has never been so much about listening to music as it has been about having an experience.

Tool’s previous Madison Square Garden concert earned them reviews saying the band “could not carry a venue as large as MSG.” Collins went on to say that it was not a show that you stand at because it lacked the energy to keep you on your feet. Almost anyone can agree that Tool is not a band that lacks energy, one wonders what this opinion is grounded on.

From the very moment the lights went down and the enormous Later­alus circle covered with eyes showed on the big display screen; and those first few chords to “The Grudge” were struck, any claims that Tool was a soft band, that Tool lacked energy, were completely squashed.

Tool’s pulsating energy and nerve­shattering style shook the Garden to its very foundations. Not only were the drums, guitars, and screaming lyrics enough to rattle the audience with its vivid display of awe inspiring sexually twisted and turned acrobatic maneuvers while Tool’s guitarist played a solo tune softly below them. The beautiful display was almost a half-hour long; giving the crowd a wizzy and yet stimulating meal all at once.

After the band had resumed playing, Keenan asked the crowd to focus their pent up energy for the purposes of good over the coming weeks and months, given the recent tragedy. The crowd roared in concurrence.

“Thank you for yourselves!” he said. The audience responded in kind. “Question author­ity!” he continued.

The rest of the day progressed with a raging performance of their song “Spiral Glow.”

Perhaps the most intriguing segment of the performance came when the band brought out two performers dressed in form-fit suits, and they climbed up parallel ropes in front of the big screen in back of the stage. With lavender shadows splashed over them, the two performers hung suspended upside down from their ankles, and twisted and turned in an acrobatic display of awe inspiring sexually suggestive maneuvers while Tool’s guitarist played a solo tune softly below them. The beautiful display was almost a half-hour long; giving the crowd a wozy and yet stimulat­ing meal all at once.

After the band had resumed playing, Keenan asked the crowd to focus their pent up energy for the purposes of good over the coming weeks and months, given the recent tragedy. The crowd roared in con­currence. Keenan then asked that the crowd repeat after him. “Think of yourself!” he said. The audience responded in kind. “Question author­ity!” he continued.

The rest of the day progressed with a raging performance of their song “Spiral Glow.”

Government Shuts Down 5,500

By James Topoleski
Staff Writer

This week we start off Cyberlife on a good note in the war against spam. On October 1st, John Zuccarini, of Andalusia, Pennsylvania, was forced to shut down his alleged 5,500 pornographic websites, pending investigation by the Federal Trade Commission. The FTC will be looking into whether or not the sites were created to lure people away from legitimate websites and then trap them with constant pop-up ads once the site is exited.

What prompted the investigation was the realization that many of Mr. Zuccarini's sites were misspellings or variations of names like Anna Kornakova, Britany Spears, or Cartoon Network apparently aimed at children. Whenever someone stumbled onto one of Mr. Zuccarini's sites they where immediately bombarded with spam ads for even more sites. Closing any of these ads or pressing the back button triggered the site is exited.

During the investigation the FTC is running against Mr. Zuccarini for the pop up ad attacks, the government is seeking 800,000 to 1 million dollars in damages and fees. Mr. Zuccarini is forced to shut down his alleged 5,500 sites.

What do you think about the shutting down of these sites? Was the FTC right to shut them down? Should all sites creating this kind of spam be shut down? What about the government's investment of time and money into shutting these sites down?
Players and PSE Use Laughs to Raise Cash

Finally, Possible Side Effects has come back to MSU. PSE, the long-form improvisation comedy troupe that in the past has performed at MSU, returned for a three night marathon with the help of Players, a class one organization of the S.G.A., and other comedic and musical friends.

Tickets for one night cost $5 for students and $10 for non-students. Three day passes cost $10 for students and $25 for non-students. So much talent for such a comparatively small price, the event raised approximately $1,200 to benefit the American Red Cross. Performers included Petrol, Joe Ross Tribe, Orange 'n' Pickles, Feature Feature, Suva, Kim Gatewood, Neutrino, Mr. ASS, Littleman, That Robert Matarazzo Thing Scarecrow Collection and Roberts and Roberts and The Swarm, who are both connected to the comedy group Upright Citizen's Brigade.

Players were a big hit at Saturday’s parade, performing a Broadway-inspired dance number.

The annual King and Queen Talent Show displayed the homecoming king and queen nominees doing what they knew to do best. SGA Vice President Chris Fitzpatrick, host of the night’s festivities, began by introducing the organizations that had plucked a member to dance, sing, recite a poem, or do an impersonation for the crowd. After each performance, a nominee was asked a question for which they would have to give an impromptu answer. Question included ones like, “If you were a television personality, who would you be?” to “Describe yourself in three words.” Each answer exhibited intelligence to the audience and judges and showed each nominee’s terrific response under pressure.

The crowd went wild for Theta Kappa Chi’s Kathleen Brennan, who showed the crowd she was “hardcore” with her impression of a female Vanilla Ice. The backwards cap and plastic sunglasses definitely did the trick.

L.A.S.O’s Steven Jameson recited a beautiful poem about the woman he loves, written especially for the talent show while Sean Jones from Theta Xi easily rapped to a Ruff Ryder’s song.

Jessica Caruso from Sigma Delta Phi brought her sisters on stage with her where they danced to Meatloaf’s “Paradise By The Dashboard Light.” In a skit during the song, one group standing on the left were boys and the other were girls. OSAU’s Monique Chadband impressed the crowd with an a capella performance of a gospel song that was both heartfelt and moving.

Two members of the theatre group Poyen were up for king and queen. Adam Piñero made the audience laugh and think with a monologue about eating a snake, while Amy Lakomnik played an Irish jig and the “Battle Hymn of the Republic” on her flute.

Shannon Flannery from Phi Sigma Sigma had some help from a friend on guitar as she belted out the words to “Leaving on a Jet Plane.” Sigma Delta Tau’s Angela Miranda, well known in the Greek community as Greek Council President, used her best Southern drawl to sing “Earl Had to Die” from the Dixie Chicks.

Phi Alpha Psi, “Senate,” nominated their brother Marcos, a student on a first name only basis. Marcos danced for the crowd and gave a comedic performance as ran back and forth on stage, waving an American flag, to a medley of songs including "Maniac," "Dancing with Myself," and "Star Wars."

The performances ended with what would be the most memorable of the evening. Four sisters of Delta Phi Epsilon did a stirring remake of "Lady Marmalade." With nominee Erin Klein as one of the dancers, the four girls wore bright wigs and danced with chairs, doing their impersonation of Pink, Christina Aguilera, Lil' Kim, and Maya.

But this was only the first night of the Homecoming 2001 week and the best of the best was yet to come.

Tuesday and Wednesday October 2 and 3

Tuesday's events began with the wildly popular Gyroscope, a contraption made up of three rings where a person can sit and make themselves dizzy. Wax Hands and Mini Golf in the SC Quad also added to the festivities of the day. With wax hands, a student was able to make a wax model out of their hands after dipping it in cold water and wax.

That night, the sounds of students attempting to belt out their favorite hits were heard from all corners of the Student Center as Karaoke took place in the Rathskeller. C.L.U.B. Historian Libby Martinez hosted the event.

"Libby told me that it was like midnight and people just kept signing up and nobody wanted to leave," said C.L.U.B. President Jessica Jernick.

Later on that evening, the King and Queen finalists were announced. Homecoming chair Julie Fleming took to the stage and announced the five like an excited host from the Miss America Pageant. They were Kathleen Brennan, Jessica Caruso, Monique Chadband, Angela Murante, and Erin Pride for Queen and Joe Blumert, Pedro Guerra, Steve Jamieson, Sean Jones, and Jake Switzer for King.

FOAM PARTY

Wednesday marked by the annual Homecoming Foam Party held in the Student Center Ballrooms.

Spotlights shown on the giant foam pit in the center of the ballrooms. Bright neon lights surveyed the room as the DJ kept the crowd moving with a variety of music.

The crowd was enthusiastic, as were the members of C.L.U.B., who were excited about the popularity of this year's event.

"We had 241 people in the room at one time during this event! That's the most MSU has ever had at a foam party!"

This time, however, was different. MTV was in attendance.

The music television channel had been asked to come to the Homecoming football game that Saturday, but had canceled in light of the recent traumatic events. Instead, they decided to come to this year's Foam Party and other Homecoming events continuing during the day.

MTV is hoping to kick off a new MTV University (MTVU) network for college students. MSU was fortunate enough to be the first university chosen to display its diversity and vitality on the station. MTV had previously taped scenes at the Sigma Delta Phi house, as well as other places around campus so that they could get a feel for college life as it happens.

Although arriving later, camera crews soon appeared and set up to watch MSU have a great time. Foam bubbles quickly filled the air as MTV cameras and VJs sought to capture the vitality of the MSU campus. They were not disappointed as students continued to inundate the ballrooms. "We had so many people show up," added Jernick. "Everytime we have a foam party, it keeps getting bigger and better."

Thursday and Friday October 4 and 5

Students rolled into balls in bright yellow plastic contraptions begun Thursday's activities for Homecoming. Participating students were strapped into a ball while their partner rolled them down an alley, hoping to hit gigantic pins at the end. Human Bowling was alive and kicking at MSU.

Once again MTV arrived at MSU and students were eager to be interviewed by VJs. They commented on the activities going on around them and remarked on living or taking classes at MSU and what Homecoming was to them.

The VJs stood alongside the camera crews constantly taping the action MSU had to offer that day.

FLOAT BUILDING

Senate's "Marco" gave the most amusing performance of the evening with his comical antics, while Sean Jones of Theta Xi delighted the audience with his lyrical talent.
Friday was a chance for students to sleep late in preparation for the night's activities.

Float building commenced at 8:30p.m., Class One Concerts entertained the crowd with a concert featuring Spin the Bottle, a modern cover band that quickly won the crowd over.

The organizations look to building their floats and making them appear as professional as possible.

Although the float building activities ceased at 2:30a.m., an activity of another sort occurred that evening. A violent encounter erupted between members of Pi Kappa Alpha and Theta Xi fraternities, resulting in the disqualification of both fraternities as well as members of the Homecoming Court. But, as many would say, "the show must go on."

Saturday October 6

Rain was in store for Saturday morning. Floats were destroyed, knocked down by prevailing winds and pouring rain. Still, this didn't dampen the spirits of the organizations participating in the parade. In early morning, judges quickly went around to what was left of each float and judged what they could, paying special attention to the dedication put into making the float, rather then what it looked like because of the bad weather.

Although the actual outside parade on Valley Road was cancelled, students piled into Panzer Gym to show the crowd what they were made of. Each participating organization performed their number, sans the float, amasing the crowd of eager students, parents, alumni, and onlookers before them.

The "parade," which was more like a show then anything else, brought plenty of supplies along with it.

At the center of the room, a woman with a beautiful, studded crown appeared before the audience. Miss New Jersey, the representative for the state at the previously held Miss America pageant and an MSU alum, had made a spectacular and unexpected return to the university. She was the grand marshal of this year's parade.

Christopher Vidro and Paul Giarelino, the two policemen that had bravely entered NYC to help after the recent terrorist attacks, were introduced next and the cheering would not end.

The Presidential Leadership Program was also introduced and applauded for collecting $5000 in donations for "Project Give," a program designed to gather donations from the MSU community towards the recent disaster.

The time period theme quickly took effect as the Haitian Student Organization (HSA) took to the floor with aggressive dance moves that reflected the 1920s, HSA-styled Sigma Delta Tau was next in bright red, blue, and silver sequined tube tops and headbands that lit up the room. They shook to popular disco tunes of the 1970s. Nevertheless, Pi Kappa Alpha (Pike), the fraternity that had been collaborating with the sisters, were sorely missing.

That was not to be so, as Pike joined the sisters, moving on the Panzer Gym floor, as if it was were like any popular disco joint of the late '70s.

The two groups ended with arms around each other in a tribute to America and it's spirit with the song, "I'm Proud to be an American." Making their Homecoming Parade debut, Ployens did what they did best on stage, dance and singing to the Broadway hit, "All That Jazz" from the musical Chicago. With their black bowler hats and synchromized dance steps, the group looked like something out of a Bob Fosse choreographed number. The performance stood out, garnering the most applause from the audience that afternoon.

The brothers of Phi Sigma Pi brought out the "wild thing" in everybody with their performance, paying tribute to the wild fashion statements and big, teased hair of the '80s. In black hats and white and black jackets, the group performed a medley of songs including Michael Jackson's "Bad," Technotronic's "Pump Up The Jam," and Salt and Pepa's "Push it."

Frank Sinatra came to life with Tau Phi Beta (Bulls) and Sigma Delta Phi's interpretation of the 1930s, Complete with girls in black dresses with colored ribbons around their waists, and the boys in suits with dark hats and machine guns, the collaborative effort got the crowd moving as they performed to Cherry Poppin' Daddies' "Zoot Soot Riot."

In ripped jeans, plastic sunglasses, and high tops, Theta Kappa Chi and Tau Kappa Epsilon (TKE) used their time period, the '80s, to show off their creativity and originality. They per-
The sisters of Sigma Delta Tau performed with ease during the Homecoming Parade, unfazed by the growing audience filling up with proud parents and supportive fellow students.

Interfraternity Christian Fellowship quickly changed the scene as they came out in black dresses for the girls and white blouses with black pants for the boys in a performance with a 1960’s Motown theme. President Bill Kamps, as well as two other members of the Christian group acted as lead singers, taking turns to sing, “Higher and Higher,” “Say a Little Prayer,” and finally, “Stand By Me,” a fitting song to end the biggest Homecoming event of the week!

That night, the annual Homecoming football game brought a number of MSU students and their parents out to see MSU win against Kean University. Although the cheerleaders were sorely missed, the Red Hawk mascot kept the crowd entertained. At halftime, the fireworks had many looking up into the brightly lit sky as visions of bright pinks, greens, reds, and blues danced before their eyes.

At the end of the game, announcements of Homecoming King and Queen winners were made. Steven Jamieson of L.A.S.O. and Monique Chadband of O.S.A.U. took the crowns in a deserving win with Jake Switzer of the Rugby team and Erin Pride of Delta Phi Epsilon taking second place.

I t is not as if people are flocking to the theaters as of late. In fact, Broadway has been in a recession; producers have been forced to close shows early, initiate large pay cuts, and sever down the number of performances. Yet, the shows will go on, and though the masses have not been attending the shows, the cheap pseudo-starving artists have been taking advantage of ticket availability and low prices. Hell, I’ll die in New York City as long as I go out basking in the glory of a humanist art form.

Though, if the theater buffs were to look back into the past and contemplate the deeper meaning of the new shows they have recently seen, could they objectively prove a hidden spark of circumstantial evidence that human beings are indeed a higher life form?

I am not to say that we as human beings, are incapable of vicissitude. Artistic endeavors, like many things, follow a pattern of good and bad. Of course, to put it in less black and white terminology, it is not as if people are flocking to the theaters as of late. In fact, Broadway has been in a recession; producers have engaged, but may not want to freely admit. Why does one see a play, or participate in Mexican folklore dancing? Does one necessarily always enjoy the experience? Audiences of today are obsessed with appearing “intellectual.” They delusion themselves into thinking that they are getting the real cultural experience, some real cultural intercourse. Cultural intercourse is the kind of meaningful artistic experience that human beings strive for; the total emotional intellectual experience that sets us apart from primitive beings. It is the afterglow of a fully delicious form of entertainment that leaves your heart aflutter, your chest heaving, and your taste buds consumed. One might feel this way after seeing a live adaptation of The Comedy of Errors. Granted, this is a cliched example, but hey, we’re taking Shakespeare here. It’s really difficult to bash Shakespeare, and one could certainly not label it cultural masturbation, seeing that his plays use the basis by which critics criticize.

I cannot say that the Allergist’s playwright, Charles Busch, effectively made my heart go pitter-pat. His objective as a playwright is to satirize New Yorkers who engage in guilty pleasures such as cultural masturbation. However, he is unsuccessful in doing so, and his attempts to mock an institution that he caters to, only make him appear hypocritical.

The Tale of the Allergist’s Wife ridicules a middle-aged Jewish woman coping with her midlife crisis. A woman, married to a retired doctor, has found that she has lost her zeal for life. Regardless of the originality of the character, Valerie Harper portrays her well, just as she has in her previous Jewish New York woman roles. She compensates by attending Irish storytelling sessions, museum exhibitions, and orchestral concerts, all of which are a play to pass her time and appear intellectual.

G o ahead - ask him about his business. You know you want to.

But don’t worry. This is one time when Francis Ford Coppola will be more than happy to let you inquire into his affairs.

Coppola provides three entertaining, enlightening commentary tracks in The Godfather - The DVD Collection that should leave all fans of the trilogy satisfied.

But some lingering questions remain, there’s still the 73-minute documentary, plus a discussion of his special Godfather notebook, plus screen tests, plus much, much more.

First, you have to understand that Coppola identifies strongly with Michael. Don’t ask why - just go with it. Second, he says that he created the role of Mike with his daughter in mind all at once.

“And indeed, just as in the story, it was Sofia they shot the bullets at, but they were really shooting them at me, and I know that,” he says. “And I’m thrilled to have captured the reality of the family by having Sofia play the part, despite really what was a conspiracy on many people’s behalf.”

And yeah, sure, that reeks of martyrdom, but keep in mind that this is Francis Ford Coppola, after all, the man who never met a film shoot that he couldn’t turn into an orgy of agony.

And as he reveals in his commentary, “The Godfather was no different.” He was constantly under threat of being fired, he says, to the point that Paramount had another director tagging along behind him, ready to take over once Coppola got canned.

Talk about keeping your enemies closer.

To hear him tell it, Paramount fought him every step of the way, from his desire to cast Al Pacino and Marlon Brando to his decision to film in New York rather than on a back lot.

But Coppola relates even the most painful memories with such casual good humor that it’s almost impossible not to sympathize with him. Besides, there are also plenty of great anecdotes, such as the tale of the horse’s head, and Marlon Brando’s stealth screen test.

So put on your Ivy League suit, fry the sausage, pour some wine in the gravy and settle back for a visit with the gangsters you know and love so well.

Oh yeah - and don’t forget to take the cannoli.

Paranoia

steps receded, fell almost silent, and then surged up again over mine, as though he were catching up with me.

A part of me wanted to spin around and face my pursuers. A rational, intelligent part that was being overwhelmed by absolute and inexorable fear. I kept repeating to myself that it was just some normal person, but I couldn’t bring myself to take that chance.

I pushed myself to the breaking point, running faster than I ever had in my life. A wave of relief came rushing over me when I realized that, not only was it on my front doorstep, but I had outrun my pursuers. My fingers trembled as I unlocked and let myself in.

I hung the post that night, rubbing my finger over the small, delicate part that was the tattoo on the door, and slid down, resting against the door, sweat clinging to my body, chest heaving heavily.

On yeah - and don’t forget to take the cannoli.

Where's the school spirit?

...and the crowd goes wild...

Don't all of you readers out there love the feeling of a crowded stadium or stand of bleachers, crunched in next to fellow MSU students, and maybe some faculty, watching with pride as your school's team rushes the defense of Rowan's football team, or scores a goal in hockey against the opposition? Don't you all love the thrill of a close game, coming down to the wire, not knowing if you'll go home elated that your team has won, or simply proud that at least your team gave it a good try? Don't you all love the half-time shows and wacky antics of both teams' mascots? Well, don't you?

No. You don't.

According to the results of the online poll (see full results below) conducted by The Montclarion this past week on our web site, www.themontclarion.com, approximately 60 percent of you readers never show up to an MSU sporting event to enjoy the fun of it all, not to mention to simply show support for your fellow student athletes. About another 25 percent of you only show up a few times a year. It is only a very small minority of students that show up to athletic events on a regular basis, either a few times a month or one or more times a week. Less than 10 percent in each category.

It's hard to say what these numbers mean. Not knowing how other schools compare, it's hard to come down too strongly on the majority of the student population that attends few to no games. There are other factors in this equation, even if other schools' events are better attended. One such factor, and perhaps the most weighty one of all, is the very large majority MSU has of commuter students who simply come to class and go home, with lives and jobs that do not easily permit a free block of time to be devoted to watching a bunch of sweaty people try to put a ball into a hole, a goal, or just plane whack it as hard as they can. Another issue is general student apathy and a lack of any sense of pride and school spirit. This can be seen at least a little in resident students that don't go to games, though maybe complain of there being little to do on campus. Despite all of this ultimately, things are as they are. The question is, is this a problem, and if it is, what should be done about it? Well, it certainly is a problem if MSU is having that much of a hard time making commuter students feel like MSU is more than an educational pit-stop along the travels of their day, as well as is it a problem that many students just could care less about athletics and many other things. What, then, is to be done?

Some of what can be done is simple, more promotion of games. This can come in a variety of forms, like posters or give-aways at games. In many towns, high school teams, both cheerleaders and athletes, drive through town with decorated cars and honking horns. It shouldn't be too hard to find comparable things for athletes at MSU to do to make their presence known.

For the immediate future, for any reader who falls into any category, if you do not go to games at all or much, try just a little harder. You'll enjoy it, and the athletes will appreciate the support. For those that already do attend games regularly, MSU is lucky to have such dedicated students, proud of their school.

Montclarion Question Of the Week:

What do you think could be done to improve school spirit?

In America We Trust:

Patriotism Unites American People Without Religious Assertion

W hen the twin towers fell, I was in America. When the Pentagon was struck, I trembled with the anger that flooded throughout America as I read the news. When it became known that terrorists were responsible for these acts of horror, I realized the gravity of terrorism and the anger that flooded throughout America on September 11. When patriotism became a way to mourn for those that were lost, and represent the unity that came out of the attacks, I put up my American flag and waved it all over this great land I call home. When the words "God Bless America" began to surface in light of this tragedy, in a song, on a t-shirt or a bumper sticker, I had to turn my track on America and all it claimed to be.

In a country renowned for its religious freedom, I could only stand there, watching and listening to the manage of church and nation. As a questioner of my own faith, I felt my country turn its back on the very first amendment of our Bill of Rights - that as Americans, we have the right to choose freely that which we believe in, if we choose to believe in anything at all. This religious freedom doesn't just span across the multitude of creeds, but includes atheists and agnostics as well. I feel that because we welcome such a diverse population into this country, we cannot draw conclusions about what people believe in, especially in a time of crisis.

Though we are all hurting as Americans, we all deal with situations in very different ways, and for many people, that may have nothing to do with religion. I believe that my God cannot Bless America if God does not mean the same thing to everyone who calls America their home. If we allow all of America to become the "one nation under God" that our "Pledge of Allegiance" proposes, it is infringing on our liberties as individuals, and America will be no different than the very countries we are at war with.

The reasons given to us for the terrorist attacks of September 11 alleged that the death of thousands of American lives was a "religious duty" on behalf of "all Muslims" according to statements made by Osama bin Laden and his terrorist network, Al-Qaeda. To them, this is a religious war, a "jihad" that will bring their people to a better way of life. Does that mean that the deaths of innocent people are more right...

Absolutely not. Yet, what we are now involved in is not a war to see whose God is better, or right. We are supposed to be engaged in a war on terrorism - a war to stop heinous acts of hatred when they happen again. But as Americans drift in remembrance of the September 11 attacks, and attempts to overcome the scars it has left in both our hearts and across the New York City skyline, the religious freedom that we once had to render its shadow with the words "God Bless America" is now silenced in the land of the free, and the home of the brave. While this country may have been founded on the basis of religious freedom, it does not condemn the United States to any "civic, non-denominational" God. By this, I am referring to the God in which our currency says, we trust, and the God that is used to bless people when they sneeze.

In a broader context, however, God is secularized, put at center stage, and indefinitely, religiously connotative. Put simply, the phrase "God Bless America" breaches the distinct division between church and state, and does not have an appropriate role in setting forth the central ideas of this country.

If we care to be examples of the liberated individuals of America, we should be free to demonstrate our religious freedoms in the faces of those who envy our way of life. I feel that by having a universal God "bless America," it merely shows the countries we are at war with that we are incapable governmentally of existing in a democracy without the inclusion of religion. I do not think we should give them the chance to challenge our freedoms.

What I struggle to understand is how these people believe it is their duty to kill Americans and we believe that it is our duty to have God "bless America" while we engage in a war that will likely kill thousands of innocent people. Our war is waged on terrorism, not the God to which bin Laden's duty is owed. There were no songs about God blessing America when Timothy McVeigh brought terrorism into Oklahoma City and killed many of the civilians in the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building.

No one started a war on terrorism then-why? Because he was American? Because there were no religious motivations behind the then-want terrorist attack in U.S. history? There seems to be an unhealthy confusion as to when and what we should render unto God. I believe it is a matter of choice. While I am no advocate of any particular faith, the aim of this article is not to criticize any one person believes, but to demonstrate the point of view we should have as Americans. There are many people who may who find the "God Bless America" slogan as a vaguely religious way of saying they are not Americans - the last thing we should want to do is oppress our own people. We need to learn to accept our differences and realize that our common ground is the very American soil upon which we walk. We can all have American spirit, but God does not have to be involved for us all to be unified.

Concerns about Parking, To MSU Administration

Please do not mistake the serious tone of this letter as rude or confrontational. I assure you that the purpose of this letter is to express our concerns as the elected representatives of the Students of Montclair State University. We feel as an independent corporation that deals very directly with student concerns that it is necessary for us to communicate with you as the new parking company on our campus.

When the parking change was brought to our attention over the summer by Dr. Karen Pennington and Dean Helen Matsuo-Ayres, we as an executive board were very skeptical of the new system, but supportive of a program that would bring about proactive and forward movement towards campus traffic and parking efficiency. What we have found has been almost the opposite - a detrimental addition to a campus already moving forward.

We also realize that this program will take time to be stabilized, since it is impossible for it to ever be perfected. However, when the SGA Executives and Board of Trustee representatives attempted to meet with your organization this summer, we felt that we were not taken seriously. We assure you that we are listening, very seriously. When the director was...

On the heels of the most horri able tragedy in American his try, it’s nice to know that there is one company out there who is not forgetting what really mat ters in a time of crisis: money.
Two weeks ago, after the WTC attack, many businesses around the New York area and also the rest of the nation were thrown into a state of economic turmoil. The stock market took a tremendous nosedive, and few industries were hit as hard as the airline industry. Even when flight schedules were resumed, there was understandable fear of flying. The UAL Corporation, the parent company of United Airlines, pleaded with the federal government that it would go bank rupt if it did not receive financial assistance.
And so, the fed eral government lightly bailed out by creating a bail out package for the airline industry of about $5 billion to aid in their recovery.
But according to an October 2 article in the New York Times, at the very same time that the bailout was being consid ered, United Airlines was taking over 30 brand new business jets from a company in France with an $11.25 million down payment. The jets are not passenger jets, mind you, but rather luxury class airplanes that:
...at $11.25 million apiece, are part of a newly owned fleet of United’s business jets, that is, for sale to business moguls and other wealthy individuals.*
*United’s business plan also entails the purchase of four new luxury jets at about $7 million to $40 million each, and reselling their shares for profit. These luxury jets are meant mainly for flying management to and from the poles.
In the meantime, United has already announced that it will lay off approximately 20,000 workers because of a drop in profits.
A drop in profits? Not only is the UAL Corporation unnecessarily letting go of working Americans who have families to care for, but as they are whining about how poor the recent tragedy has made them, they are still raking in an enormous amount of money. United is doing nothing more than trying to make a quick buck off a massacre. The top members of the corporation are in no danger of bankruptcy whatsoever. The only people who should be concerned are the hard working airline employees who are about to be told they have a new job in an already tight industry.

Dear Captain RibMan,

My friends and I play a game which is like football, but with no rules. The play doesn’t stop until one team scores. The scores go up one, and there aren’t any field goals. Also once one person is tackled, the ball goes to the other team. There is a kickoff, and the ball can be thrown, kicked or whatever. We need a name. Right now we call it Schmuck.

Road-Runner286,

I’d call it Rugby.
Good luck!

Dear Captain RibMan

My favorite color is purple, I have blue eyes, and I drive a Volkswagen Cabrio. Am I pregnant?

Thanks for your help!

Debby

Dear Debby,

Without further information and testing, it is difficult to say. But yes, definitely you are. You will have a healthy daughter within eight to 14 months. Her favorite color will be greenish-beige. You will name her Steve.

Good luck!

Brand New ’D,’ Same Old Result

Red Hawk Hockey Club Starts Season 2-0

By Mike Halper
Staff Writer

Two of last year’s toughest opponents skated into Floyd Hall Arena this weekend with different agendas, but the same goal in mind. The Penn State Nittany Lions wanted to make an impact in their first ACHA-2 Northeast Conference game, and the U.S. Naval Academy Midshipmen sought to avenge an embarrassing loss.

Both teams went home with their goals unfulfilled after the new-look Red Hawks pulled, out a pair of gritty, tooth-and-nail victories; 7-3 over Penn State and 6-3 over Navy.

Last year’s game with Navy, an 11-9 Red Hawk victory, was an end-to-end shootout, with neither team able to control the puck effectively in their own end. Saturday night, it looked like two different teams on the ice, with plenty of tough, grinding defensive play.

“We’re more of a defensive team as far as being physical,” Robbie Martinez said after spending his weekend between the pipes for MSU. “I feel a lot more comfortable in net this year.”

That new defensive unit, a mix of old faces and new, isn’t just the two players guarding the blue line, but a coordinated effort by the entire team. In the first period of both of this weekend’s games, the defense, led by veterans Anthony Rossillo, Vinnie Vulcano, Eddie Caldwell, and Adam Lepore, completely shut down the opposing offenses by cutting off passing lanes and challenging every shot, limiting Navy and Penn State to a minimal number of quality scoring chances.

The change couldn’t have been more evident than in the rebound situation. Last year a good number of the goals that Martinez gave up came second, third, and even fourth chances. This past weekend, it seemed that every time Martinez couldn’t control the puck, a defender swept it out to the sides, out of harm’s way.

“Every rebound I left that should have been in the net was gone,” Martinez said after the Navy game. “That makes my job a whole lot easier.” After the stellar season he put up last year, Martinez having an easier job could spell disaster for his opponents.

Against Penn State, one of only three teams to best MSU last year, the Red Hawks came out gunning after the first intermission. The top line put the first point of the season on the board 1:28 in when sophomore Dave Rossillo added a backhand pass from Kevin Mick and rushed the net on a breakaway, faking to his forehand before tapping the puck past Brian Gratz, the diving Lion goalie.

After Penn State evened the score just 30 seconds later, Bodson and Micek struck again. This time, Bodson backhanded a perfect centers pass for a rushing Micek, who slammed the puck home a split-second before slamming into the goal himself. Devin Riley, Tim Dybus, and Eddie Caldwell would add goals before Micek notched another pair to pick up the hat trick in the season’s first contest.

Against Navy, the defense held up again, frustrating the Midshipmen into a number of stupid mistakes. Bodson opened up the scoring 14 minutes into the game by blazing a Frank Barone drop-pass past Navy goaltender Jared Wilhelm.

At the start of the second period, the Red Hawks defense again locked back after allowing Richard Hayes to put back his own rebound and knot the game at 1. But once again, the defense picked itself back up, not allowing another goal for the remainder of the period. Jim Latham, Michael Grey, and Anthony Rossillo added goals for the Red Hawks, who took a 4-1 lead into the final frame.

Each team picked up a pair of goals in the third period, including an empty-netter by rookie winger Ryan Pfeiffer in the game’s final seconds.

The two wins are a huge confidence booster to the Red Hawks, especially coming this early in the season. Penn State, who is playing its first year in the Northeast Conference of the ACHA-2, may be one of the teams that the rankings committee looks at when choosing who to send to the National Tournament. Navy is a member of the ACHA-1, and a solid victory against them should do nothing but good things for MSU’s own conference ranking. “It feels like this (weekend) set the tone for the rest of the season,” said Martinez. “This gets our foot in the door for Nationals, coming off these two big games.

While these two wins will indeed be a bonus, the Red Hawks still have to get through their two league schedules. Both will begin on the road this weekend, with MSU traveling to Princeton tomorrow night for their M-ACHA and then heading up to Central Connecticut State University on Saturday for the Super East opener. In CCSU, the Red Hawks face another of the teams that they lost to last season, as well as the defending Super East Champions and the Northeast's second-ranked team overall last season.

Men's Soccer

The MSU men's soccer team continued their inconsistent play by being shutout in the third time and collecting their first shutout win this past week.

Kean University, the top-ranked team in the conference, beat our men's team, 4-0. The loss to KU continued a losing streak that fell to four in a row. The win pushed Kean's overall record to an incredible 13-0 and 5-0 in the conference.

With the loss, MSU fell to ninth place with a 4-7-1 overall record and 0-3-1 in the conference.

Next up for the Red Hawks was USMMA (King's Point), who was 7-3-1 coming into the match up. MSU rebounded and ended their losing skid with a 2-0 win. Goals were scored by Matt Caswell, which was his only shot on goal, and Leo Caraballo, on his only shot on goal as well.

In collecting his first shutout of the season, goalie Alex Luna made seven saves. In the coming week for the Red Hawks, the team hits the road for three straight games.

On Saturday, they travel to Rutgers-Camden; then Monday, the 15th, they face off against Richard Stockton; and next Saturday, the 20th, against Ramapo. The match against Cooper Union was postponed. for touchdown passes with 21. Also Rowan's seniors set very high standards and have lived up to expectations.

Senior wide receivers Scott "Real Deal" Lipford and Al Beverly have been outstanding for the Profs as they have been throughout their careers, but two players who did not see much action last season have made great contributions. Michael Osbourn and Michael Wade have stepped in and played tremendously," said Keeler.

And perhaps Rowan's most important contribution has come from their offensive line, which has given a new meaning to the term "pass protection. The offensive line has only given up one sack in 183 passing attempts.

But not everything is going according to plan for Rowan. They have not played well with leads and must play better defensively.

"After a lead we have a tendency to get a little soft. Our defense needs to be as aggressive when we have the lead," said Keeler.

TCNJ 3-2, 2-1 NJAC

Other than Rowan and MSU, TCNJ had given the NJAC Championship a run until their meeting with Rowan and self-destructed against Union last week. Their playoff hopes are now remote at best, although they do still have three conference games left to play. We've taken two losses in the past two weeks," said TCNJ Head Coach Eric Hamilton of losing to Rowan. "We know where we want to go and are trying to figure out what changes we have to make.

TCNJ also lost two of their best for most likely the rest of the year. Offensive linemen Michael Gregorio and defensive lineman Chet King were both injured at Union.

TCNJ was 3-0 when they took to the road on September 28, and now stand at 0-3. They head to Salisbury this weekend. Since TCNJ doesn't return home until October 27 to face Rowan, this is critical. "We have to circle the wagons, pull them in close, and Salisbury is going to tell us where we're going to get their defense together and allow just over 400 yards per game."

NJC 0-4, 0-2 NJAC

Finally, New Jersey City University may also be better than their record indicates. But, their defense hasn't played up to expectations and it took them until last weekend to find their offense.

"We've taken two losses in a row and are trying to figure out what we want to be better defensively," said TCNJ Head Coach Arnold Jeter. "Defensively, we may improve on the pass rush and the secondary."

On a positive note, senior tailback Frank Siciliano and freshman receiver Wiley Williams are coming off career games. Sinclair rushed for 140 yards and Williams caught seven against Cortland.

NJCU's immediate goal is to win a warm-up which will help them to build for the rest of the year, So we're halfway there. Rowan is still getting better and better while the rest of the NJAC builds for next year.

Kean, Cortland and TCNJ return most of their players next season so the conference will be that much more competitive. Until then, cancel your plans for November 10 or you might miss a game for the ages when MSU and Rowan battle for the NJAC Championship.

Kean 2-2, 1-1 NJAC

Kean may be the other team that has played up to expectations. At 2-2, Kean has already won the most games since 1976.

"We're where we should be record-wise, and are pretty excited," said Kean Head Coach Joe Loh." Most impressive for Kean has been quarterback James Holloway, who has had a breakout year.

"He may not be the best quarterback in the conference yet, but he's the most athletic," said Loh.

While Kean will not be contending this year, 16 of their 22 starters are sophomores so they'll be returning almost everyone for two more years. If their players continue to get better and learn to win, the Cougars could be very competitive next season.

Cortland 2-3, 1-2 NJAC

The team that was supposed to be better this season is Cortland. But after struggling to find their offense against Seton Hall and TCNJ, the Red Dragons sit at 2-3 overall and 0-2 in the NJAC.

"The first half is disappointing," said Cortland Head Coach Dan Loth. "Looking ahead, we have to look to close the season on a positive note and that's a winning season."

"The kids have seen growth and want to show people that we're a better team than our record shows."

For those disappointed, the performances of senior wide receiver Brian Babot and junior defensive lineman John Lomag, Babot is third in the NJAC in receiving with 25 catches and Lomaga, who may be the most undersized defensive lineman in the NJAC, has played hard every game. Also, quarterback J.J. Fultz has gotten better each game and as he gets better so will Cortland, said Loth.

WPU 1-4, 0-2 NJAC

William Paterson has also underachieved. WPU has lost the last four games after beating Salisbury in the first week of the season. The Profs have the third best offense in the conference, but they can't seem to get their defense together and allow just over 400 yards per game."

Senior Quarterback
Hometown: Union, NJ

Collins was named NJAC Offensive Player of the Week after throwing a single-game school record of 5 touchdown passes in MSU's 63-7 win over Kean.

Honorable Mention

- Eric Magrini
  Junior Wide Receiver
  Hometown: Wayne, NJ

  Magrini had 7 receptions for 179 yards and 2 touchdowns against Kean. He currently leads the NJAC in receptions with 37 and receiving yards with 622.

- Danielle Malyska
  Senior Midfielder
  Hometown: South Brunswick, NJ

  Malyska was named “NJAC Offensive Player of the Week” after tallying 4 goals and 1 assist in 3 games. She scored the winning goal with 1:21 remaining in MSU’s 1-0 win over Kean.

- Laura Popes
  Senior Midfielder
  Hometown: West Long Branch, NJ

  Popes scored 3 goals and also added 2 assists as MSU extended their winning streak to 9 with wins over Kean, Eastern, and FDU-Madison.

- Leo Caraballo
  Freshman Forward
  Hometown: Totowa, NJ

  Caraballo tallied his first career goal as MSU ended their 4-game winless streak with a 2-0 win over USMMA (Kings Point).
The battle lines have been drawn. If you haven’t already circled November 10 on your calendar, grab that marker. That’s the last day of the season when MSU heads to Rowan to defend their NJAC Championship. Both teams are 5-0 over all, 2-0 in NJAC, and have dominated their opponents in all but one game.

Rowan came out on top with a 63-7 victory against the Cougars in New Jersey. MSU had finally played a complete game, and Kean never stood a chance. Collins set a single-game school record throwing five touchdowns passes in the game, hitting tight end Jason DeVigile from three yards out to start the scoring on the first drive. He then went on to find wide receivers Eric Magrini, Mike Orlando, and James Dwyer to round out the scoring in the first half. Magrini finished with a game-high seven receptions for 120 yards on the night including touchdown catches of 45 and 54 yards. “Tonight we were very crisp, solid and consistent throughout the whole,” said Collins, who finished the game completing 19 of 28 passes for 269 yards.
